[Excerpts] According to XINJIAN RIBAO, the region has scored very great success in striking at serious economic crime. From January to October, 27 percent of the economic cases brought to court were concluded. Large amounts of ill-gotten goods and money were recovered and effective blows were dealt at economic crime.

After the central authorities issued an urgent circular last January on striking at serious economic crime, the regional CPC committee promptly looked into and made arrangements for this work and set up a work group headed by principal leading comrades. The party committees at all levels have attached great importance to this struggle and assigned it an important place on their agenda.

The struggle against serious economic crime has been actively supported by the masses of all nationalities. They have reported and exposed economic crime to the party organizations at all levels and conducted ideological and political work on people with economic problems. Under the power of party policy, 182 people in the region have voluntarily given themselves up, made restitution and confessed and exposed their problems.

Apart from frightening economic criminals, the struggle against serious economic crime has also saved a number of cadres and played a stimulating role in inspecting financial discipline and straightening out the enterprises. It has also promoted turns for the better in party work style, popular mood and social order.

BRIEFS

SHAANXI SCIENCE ASSOCIATION MEETING -- Lasting for 5 days, the 2d session of the 2d committee of the provincial science and technology association concluded yesterday morning. The session adopted a resolution calling on science and technology associations at all levels and their subordinate bodies and members to make their contributions to fulfilling the goal of quadrupling the province's total industrial and agricultural output value. Zhang Ze, exectuive secretary of the provincial CPC committee, delivered an important speech to the session, emphasizing the role of science and technology in serving economic construction; calling for strengthening studies in applied sciences and social sciences; and encouraging comprehensive research and cooperation between different disciplines. He urged the science and technology associations at the prefectural and county levels to play active roles in popularizing scientific knowledge. During the session, specialists, professors and scientific researchers presented their opinions and submitted their proposals on certain existing practical problems. TA KUNG PAO ON PRC CONSTITUTION, HONG KONG

HK090701 Hong Kong TA KUNG PAO in English 9 Dec 82 p 2

["The Past Week" column]

[Text] Over a Hundred Alterations

Comparing the draft (published April this year) and the final version of the constitution adopted by the NPC, one finds that most of the 100-odd alterations made in the course of public and congress discussions are aimed at setting the present political trends more firmly on course. Here we can only cite a few examples.

Article 20 in the draft has been split into a number of articles, each taking care of one of the cultural tasks listed in the original article. Thus the new articles are able to go into more details on each of the items.

For example, the state is also made responsible for the provision of educational facilities for state and government workers, apart from those for people in general. This legalizes the periodical training of cadres in rotation for improving their capability and professionalism. To supplement the state, the collectives, state enterprises, and other social organizations and individuals are also called upon to set up educational institutions of various types. This was once suggested by Liu Shaoqi and other leaders, but was never written into law. Pre-school education is also to be developed.

In Article 25 (draft Article 23), the clause "The state advocates and encourages family planning" seems to have been made more binding on the people by deleting the words "advocates and." In fact, Article 49 stipulates that married couples have the duty to practise family planning.

A system for the appraising of the government functionaries has for the first time been written into law.

Special Administrative Regions

Article 31 (draft Article 30) stipulates: "The state may establish special administrative regions when necessary. The systems to be instituted in special administrative regions shall be prescribed by law enacted by the National People's Congress in the light of the specific conditions."

This has been interpreted by some observers in Hong Kong as if the NPC would be drawing a whole set of laws for such regions. A careful reading of the text will show that the NPC is only called upon to enact or give lasting legal authority to whatever final settlements that would be reached on maintaining the present systems, but not to draw up and enact a whole set of statutes for such regions.

This provision certainly does not contradict Liao Chengzhi's views that the laws in Hong Kong, for example, will remain basically unchanged.

A complete new provision is found under Article 32 which stipulates that "The People's Republic of China protects the lawful rights and interests of foreigners within Chinese territory, and while on Chinese territory foreigners must abide by the law of the People's Republic of China." This is obviously made necessary by the open-door policy. Writing it into the constitution gives more lasting force to that policy.

Attached to this a completely reworded clause on political asylum. It stipulates unequivocally:

"The People's Republic of China may grant asylum to foreigners who request it for political reasons."

Individual Economy

Individual economy of the urban and rural working people, which had almost completely disappeared from China's economic scene, has been revived and encouraged to develop. It is now put under the protection of the constitution.

A change in the Article (11) on individual economy is, however, interesting. In the draft it is stated: "The state guides, helps and supervises the individual economy by means of administrative measures and through the economic links of the state and collective economy with the individual economy."

In the final version, this whole sentence has been contracted into: "The state guides, helps and supervises the individual economy by exercising administrative control." The public and collective sectors have been left out of the controlling setup. Here the legislators obviously try to protect the individual economy from unnecessary constraints it might come under if it were in any way controlled by the public sector.

In Article 62, a clause has been added to give the NPC the power "to supervise the enforcement of the constitution."

This shows a genuine concern over the enforcement of the constitution. The PEOPLE'S DAILY editorial published on the day after the promulgation of the constitution called upon the nation to study the constitution in order to observe, apply, and have it fully enforced. The editorial deplores the days when "little attention was paid to the rule of law; when the law, though it existed, was ignored; and when people were encouraged "to defy laws and heaven.'" This, the editorial says, "only benefited bad people."

Freedom and Rights

Of course, the constitution cannot be put into practice in its entirety overnight. For example, the constitution accords to every citizen the right, as well as the duty, to work. But unemployment and under-employment will certainly not disappear at a stroke. Economy has to be greatly developed before every able-bodied man and woman will be productively employed, or self-employed.

The constitution stipulates, "The exercise by citizens of the People's Republic of China of their freedoms and rights may not infringe upon the interests of the state, of society and of the collective, or upon the lawful freedoms and rights of other citizens." To be able to abide by this provision without abusing it, both the cadres and people have to be educated. On the question of freedom of speech and the related freedom of publication, how far can people go without infringing upon the interests mentioned above? This limit can only be clearly defined in the future practice of such freedoms and rights as related laws are being perfected. In the meantime the abuse of power by law-officers or arbitrary officials must be guarded against. Furthermore freedom of publication is bound to be limited by the printing facilities available, and can only expand with the expansion of the latter.

A good omen is the publication early this year of two novels by Dai Houying. The first, "The Death of a Poet," was first written by this woman author in 1978 and rewritten in 1979. Probably because of its content and its author being a renegade Cultural Revolution activist, it had not been accepted for publication. The second, "Man O Man!" was first published in 1980 to become an instant best-seller. But after severe criticism in the Shanghai newspaper WEN HUI BAO, the book was withdrawn. Now they are even distributed here.

PRC 'ANGRY' AT JAPAN MINISTRY ON TEXTBOOK ISSUE

HK090813 Hong Kong HSIN WAN PAO in Chinese 9 Dec 82 p 4

[Special dispatch: "Japanese Education Ministry Goes Back on Its Word; People in Beijing Feel Angry"]

[Text] Beijing, 9 Dec -- Many people in informed circles in Beijing are angry over an "Education Ministry circular" recently published by the Japanese Education Ministry, and the textbook issue involving this ministry may compel the Chinese people to again register a strong protest.

The Japanese textbook issue caused an uproar in the countries and regions of Southeast Asia some time ago. The clamor was pacified when Japan stated that a correction would be made, in the wake of former Premier Suzuki's visit to China. However, the Japanese Education Ministry recently went back on its word; its "circular" states that "there were no errors in the screening" of the textbooks, and it would continue to entrust to each teacher the handling of the issues of aggression," "marching in" and so on.

People in Beijing concerned with the Japanese Education Ministry textbook issue say that this is perfidious behaviour on the part of the Japanese. The Chinese side may react strongly to this. For this reason the Japanese Education Minister's visit to China may come to nothing.

U.S., USSR IN 'NEW ROUND' OF ARMS RACE

HK100559 Beijing BEIJING REVIEW in English No 48, 29 Nov 82 pp 11, 12

[Article by Fang Ming: "Soviet-U.S. Disarmament Talks Lead Nowhere"]

[Text] Fact: Ninety-six per cent of the world's 50,000 stockpiled nuclear warheads are owned by the Soviet Union and the United States. The two superpowers' enormous nuclear arsenals are a constant threat to international security and peace.

Fact: Despite their talk about disarmament, both Moscow and Washington are expanding, and not reducing, their military buildup.

In face of mounting world-wide protest, the two superpowers apparently feel compelled to make some gestures towards disarmament. During the current UN General Assembly session, three disarmament negotiations were resumed -- the Warsaw Pact-NATO talks on Mutual Reduction of Forces in Central Europe, the talks on Limitation of Nuclear Arms in Europe and the Strategic Arms Reduction Talks (START). All this glib talk may create the impression that the two superpowers are enthusiastic about reducing their nuclear forces, but reality shows that their words and their deeds are poles apart.

Talks on Arms Reduction in Central Europe

The talks have been on and off for nine years now, and the current round is the 28th.

Both the Warsaw Pact and NATO have frequently expressed a desire to reduce the level of military presence in Central Europe, where they deploy 2 million conventional forces. But so far, the talks are still bogged down in old controversies about the scope of the reductions, the manner of implementation and the base figures from which the reductions are to be counted. The Soviets have stressed all along that the two blocs have roughly equal strength of ground and air forces in the area and, therefore, their armed forces should be reduced by an equal percentage. The Americans insist that the strength of the Warsaw Pact forces is greater than NATO estimates by a margin of 150,000 to 170,000 troops and that reductions must be made proportionately.

Earlier this year, each of the two sides put forward a new proposal. The Warsaw alliance proposed that Moscow and Washington should first cut their ground forces by 20,000 and 13,000 respectively, then hold further talks and finally reduce their strength to an equal level of 700,000 ground and 200,000 air forces for each side. Washington proposed the same final ceiling of the two blocs' armed forces in Central Europe, but, according to its calculation, it demanded that Warsaw Treaty Organization withdraw 280,000 troops in seven years. The two sides have wrangled incressantly over these issues without any real progress in the talks.

Nuclear Arms Cut Talks

The Vienna Talks on Limitation of Intermediate-Range Nuclear Weapons in Europe and the START also are deadlocked because both the Kremlin and the White House simply do not want to reduce their nuclear strength, but instead each hopes to bargain for something from the other. The basic U.S. policy towards either the limitation of intermediate-range nuclear weapons in Europe or the reduction of strategic nuclear forces is to pare down the Soviet superiority in land-based missiles. On the contrary, the Soviet principle is to try by every means to maintain such superiority and prevent the United States from further improving its nuclear technology. Their intentions can be clearly seen in their disarmament proposals.

On the issue of intermediate-range nuclear weapons in Europe, President Reagan's "zero plan" was designed to diminish Soviet land-based missiles in the area, including SS-20, SS-4 and SS-5.

It proposed that Moscow dismount these missiles in exchange for Washington's non-deployment of Pershing II and cruise missiles. The Soviet proposal was aimed at freezing the NATO forces at their present level by obstructing Washington from deploying new types of missiles in Europe and to reduce the area's nuclear forces, including British and French nuclear forces on their own soils. Under this proposal, the powerful Soviet SS-20 missiles would be untouched. On strategic nuclear forces, according to Reagan's plan, Soviet land-based missiles and the number and payload of nuclear warheads would be slashed considerably while the U.S. nuclear forces would not be much affected. Obviously, Washington wants to maintain its strength by reducing Soviet superiority. In contrast, the Kremlin insists that the primary target should be to freeze existing nuclear arsenals at their present level and to prevent them from being modernized. The aim of the Soviet proposal is to keep its superiority in land-based missiles and curtail the U.S. drive for nuclear armament improvement.

Both Washington and Moscow are sticking to their propositions and waiting for opportunities to force their opponent to make concessions. Meanwhile, they continue to develop or improve new implements of war to strengthen their bargaining position in the negotiations. According to rough estimates, between January and September this year the United States conducted 16 underground nuclear tests and the Soviet Union ran 13. Washington is going ahead with its six-year plan to reinforce its nuclear arsenal. The United States reportedly is in the process of manufacturing MX-missiles and researching B-1 long-distance bombers. The second U.S. Trident submarine already is in service, with six others planned. The U.S. space-based cruise missile test launching finished in October and the missile will soon be put to use.

The Soviet Union is not lagging behind. Apart from speeding up the replacement of old missiles with new ones, Moscow is trial-manufacturing Typhoon-class nuclear submarines equivalent to the Tridents, and will soon commission them. The new SSNX-20 warheads for the submarines are being test-launched. In addition, a new Soviet strategic bomber, similar to the U.S. B-1, is under research. All indications show that Moscow and Washington are locked in a new round of the arms race, not disarmament.

DELEGATES ADDRESS SEA LAW TREATY CONFERENCE

U.S., USSR Positions Noted

OW100324 Beijing XINHUA in English 0233 GMT 10 Dec 82

[Text] Montego Bay, Jamaica, December 9 (XINHUA) -- The United States declared here today that it would not change its position on not to sign the new sea law convention.

Addressing the final session of the conference, U.S. representative Thomas Clingan declared that "the deep seabed mining regime that would be established by the convention is unacceptable," though he admitted that "certain aspects of the convention represent positive accomplishments."

The Soviet Union announced at today's plenary session that it would sign the convention. Soviet Minister of Mercantile Marine Timofey B. Guzhenko criticized the United States for seeking "to torpedo the convention." The conference concluded hearing statements by governments on the convention today. A signing ceremony would be held at the Rose Hall Beach Hotel here tomorrow. A special representative of the U.N. secretary-general announced yesterday evening that 110 countries would sign the convention.

Han Xu: PRC To Sign Treaty

[Text] Montego Bay, Jamaica, December 9 (XINHUA) -- China has decided to formally sign the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea. This commitment was declared here today by Han Xu, Chinese deputy foreign minister and chairman of the Chinese delegation to the third U.N. sea law conference.

Speaking at the final session of the Third U.N. Conference on the Law of the Sea, Han Xu said that China, as a member of the Third World, has always supported the Third World countries in their struggle against maritime hegemonism, stood for the formulation of new convention on the law of the sea which ensures the legitimate rights of states and actively participated in the work of drafting the convention. Comparing with the old convention on the law of the sea, Han Xu noted that the new convention is quite an improvement on the old one. He said that the new convention has laid down a number of important legal principles and regimes for safeguarding the common heritage of mankind and the legitimate maritime rights and interests of all states and brought about a change in the situation in which the old law of the sea only served the interests of a few big powers. However, he pointed out, there are still shortcomings and even serious defects in the provisions of quite a few articles in the convention. He pointed out that in the articles of the convention relating to the innocent passage through territorial sea there were no clear provisions regarding the regime of the passage of foreign warships through territorial sea. In addition, the relevant provisions in the convention also contain shortcomings as regards the definition of the continental shelf and the principle of delimitation of the exclusive economic zones and continental shelf between opposite and adjacent states. The Chinese delegation had stated its principled position on this matter. He noted that the "resolution II governing preparatory investment in pioneer activities relating to polymetallic nodules" of the conference has done too much in the way of meeting the demands of a few industrial nations and given them and their companies some privileges and priorities. "China considers that inappropriate," he said. He stressed that any acts concerning the exploitation in the international sea-bed beyond the limits of the convention on the law of the sea, such an unilateral legislation or the so-called "minitreaty", are "illegal and null and void."

GEORGE SHULTZ DISCUSSES TRADE WITH BELGIUM

OW091626 Beijing XINHUA in English 1559 GMT 9 Dec 82

[Text] Brussels, December 8 (XINHUA) -- The United States and Belgium today reaffirmed their support for free trade and the unity between the United States and the European Economic Community (EEC) to avoid a trade war.

U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz, who arrived here to attend a formal session of the NATO council of ministers, spoke this afternoon with Prime Minister Wilfried Martens and Minister of Foreign Relations Leo Tindem s on the EEC and trade issues.

A Foreign Relations Ministry spokesman said Tindemans suggested a West summit to discuss the problems between the United States and the European Community. Shultz supported the idea.

The two sides also discussed U.S.-Soviet negotiations in Geneva over nuclear missiles. The Belgian Government will continue to support the 1979 NATO dual decision on deployment of nuclear missiles, the spokesman said.

UN RESOLUTION URGES ERADICATION OF COLONIALISM

OW241043 Beijing XINHUA in English 0722 GMT 24 Nov 82

[Text] United Nations, November 23 (XINHUA) -- The U.N. General Assembly today called for all necessary steps to eradicate colonialism completely and speedily.

In a resolution adopted this afternoon the General Assembly called upon the administering powers to take all necessary steps to enable the peoples of the colonial territories to exercise fully and without further delay their inalienable right to self-determination and independence. The General Assembly reaffirmed that the continuation of colonialism in all its forms and manifestations -- including racism, apartheid, the exploitation by foreign and other interests of economic and human resources, and the waging of colonial wars to supress national liberation movements -- "is incompatible with the U.N. Charter" and "poses a serious threat to international peace and security."

The assembly condemned the continuing activities of foreign economic and other interests which are impeding the implementation of the declaration with respect to the colonial territories, particularly Namibia. It requested all states to withhold assistance of any kind from the Government of South Africa until the Namibian people's inalienable right to self-determination and independence has been restored. It called upon the colonial powers to withdraw immediately and unconditionally their military bases and installations from colonial territories and to refrain from establishing new ones.

In another resolution adopted today, the General Assembly called for concrete measures through all the media to disseminate information on the evils and dangers of colonialism and on the determined efforts of the colonial peoples to achieve self-determination, freedom and independence. The specific territories the special committee of the General Assembly has recommended to grant independence include: Gibraltar, Brunei, the Cocos (Keeling) Islands, the Tokelau Islands, Pitcairn, St. Helena, the American Samoa, Guam, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, Bermuda, the British Virgin Islands, the Turks and Caicos Islands, the United States Virgin Islands, St. Kitts-Nevis, Anguilla and Montserrat.

U.S. SETS UP MILITARY COMMAND TO COVER MIDEAST

OW091850 Beijing XINHUA in English 1935 GMT 9 Dec 82

[Text] Washington, December 8 (XINHUA) -- The U.S. Department of Defense today announced the formation of a new military command to safeguard U.S. interests in the oil-rich Middle East and Gulf region and the Indian Ocean. The department said the command will be empowered to direct, in case of emergency, 250,000-member rapidly deployable force consisting of army, air force, navy and marine troops, based mainly in the United States. The region encompassed by the command covers 19 countries from Pakistan in the east to Egypt in the west, and from Iran in the north to Kenya in the south. The command, to be put under direct leadership of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, will begin operation January 1. Headquarters will be opened at MacDill Air Force Base, Tampa, Florida, where the rapid deployment planning force is located. A U.S. official said it is the hope of the United States to have "a forward headquarters element" in the area covered by the central command. In peacetime, the central command will plan for possible wartime operations, function as a "peacetime military liaison" with leaders in the area and assume supervision of military aid programs. Defense Department officials said this move will demonstrate to the Soviet Union that the United States is "serious" about safeguarding its interests in the area.

U.S. ASTRONAUTS VISIT, DISCUSS SPACE TECHNOLOGY

[Text] Beijing, December 9 (XINHUA) -- Zhang Jun, Chinese minister of astronautics, gave a dinner for the American astronauts Col Jack R. Lousma and Col Charles G. Fullerton of the Columbia Space Shuttle this evening. Lousma, commander, and Fullerton, pilot, guided Columbia on its third flight beginning March 22 and ending eight days later. The delegation they are leading is from the U.S. National Aeronautics and Space Administration (N.A.S.A.). Zhang Jun congratulated the astronauts on their successful mission. Hosts and guests proposed toasts to the continuing development of the friendship between the Chinese and U.S. peoples, and cooperation in space science and technology between the two countries. During their weeklong stay in the Chinese capital, the two astronauts saw the Beijing engineering environment test center where China's 12 satellites were tested before launch. In a scientific instrument plant, they inspected duplicates of three Chinese satellites including the nation's first, which plays "The East Is Red." The Americans inquired about the application and operation of the satellites and praised Chinese scientists and technicians for their achievements.

Lousma and Fullerton also visited a space medical engineering research institute for space biology and space medicine. During the visit, they answered questions about Sky Lab, the shuttle mission and their personal feelings in the initial state of flight.

The visitors also had a technical discussion with Chinese officials and experts in space science and technology, at which Zhang Jiqing, deputy secretary-general of the Chinese Society of Astronautics, briefed the guests on the development of China's space science and technology. Outlining future activities, he said China will launch its first experimental communications satellite in 1983 or 1984.

The delegation will leave Beijing tomorrow for Xian, Shanghai and Hangzhou before returning home. They are guests of the Chinese Society of Astronautics.

JAPAN'S FOREIGN, DOMESTIC POLICIES OUTLINED

Nakasone at Diet

OW091910 Beijing XINHUA in English 1849 GMT 9 Dec 82

[Text] Tokyo, December 9 (XINHUA) -- Japanese Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone said Japan's fundamental principle for foreign affairs is to cooperate for world peace and prosperity to become a trustworthy country. Answering questions on domestic and foreign policies at a plenary session of the House of Representatives here yesterday, Nakasone reaffirmed that Japan and the United States are most important partners. He added when he visits the United States in January he will speak with President Ronald Reagan about the international situation, U.S.-Japanese politics, economy and defense, to strengthen their mutual trust.

On Japanese-Soviet relations, Nakasone said Japan will continue talks with the Soviet Union to settle the northern territories problem and then conclude a peace treaty for long-term stable relations.

Japan and China have built a foundation for stable relations during the past decade, he said, pledging to continue cooperation in the political, economic and culteral fields.

He said Japan would upgrade its defense capabilities as needed while paying due heed to the war-renouncing constitution, the policy of arming solely for defense purposes and the government's three anti-nuclear principles. There is no need, at present, to lift the 1 percent ceiling for defense expenditure in the gross national product, he added. Speaking on the question of constitutional amendments, Nakasone said the constitution will be reevaluated, but for now this issue will not be placed on the political agenda.

Relations With USSR Cited

["International Jottings" by Xiang Guang [6272 0342]: "Sunlight in the Midst of Cold Air"]

[Text] Someone in Soviet press circles said recently: "The strength of warm sunlight is stronger than that of the north wind. This fable is also applicable to Soviet-Japanese relations."

Several days later, the Soviet ambassador to Japan paid an official visit to the Japanese foreign minister. He placed great hopes on the Japanese economic delegation, which is scheduled to visit the Soviet Union next year. He held that relations between the two countries must be improved through economic and cultural exchanges, but at the same time, he kept to the Soviet stand on the question of returning the northern territories to Japan.

It seems that the Soviet Union is regarding the development of Soviet-Japanese economic relations as the sunlight and the demands of Japan for the return of the four northern islands as the north wind. In other words, the Soviet Union thinks that in order to develop its economic relations with the Soviet Union, Japan will, sooner or later, give up its claims for recovering the northern territories.

However, a fable is not reality. In order to deal with the worldwide economic recession, Japan certainly would like to get into the Soviet Union's market. However, it is no less than playing the bully to think that Japan would submissively surrender its northern territories to the Soviet Union just for some economic gains. Yoshio Sakurauchi, Japanese foreign minister, solemnly pointed out in the presence of the Soviet ambassador that the good neighborly relations and the mere improvement of economic relations regardless of the territory issue are incredible. This remark gets to the heart of the matter.

Sunlight is really lovely, and cold wind is hard to bear. When the Siberian cold air attacks the Japanese islands, where can people find the warmth of sunlight?

Trade With PRC Noted

[By CHINA DAILY staff reporter]

[Text] Trade between China and Japan hinges on both oil and machinery.

While oil-rich China can export more energy resources to Japan, she can also introduce more investment from Japan to speed up her construction, says Shigeichi Koga, vice-chairman of the Association for the Promotion of International Trade, Japan (APITJ).

Koga, who is in Beijing for an APITJ exhibition of Japanese consumer goods, told CHINA DAILY in an interview that he is impressed by China's Sixth Five-Year Plan.

China, unlike Japan, whose commodity sales rely completely on the overseas market, produces goods which are sold mainly in her domestic market, so she is less affected by the worldwide fluctuations. This is most favourable to China for carrying out her Sixth Five-Year Plan, Koga said.

In order to quadruple her gross industrial and agricultural production value (in real terms) by the end of this century, China's steel production must be expanded, he said.

Shanghai's Baoshan Iron and Steel Complex, for example, is still in its initial stages of production with only one blast furnace.

It is far from completion, Koga said.

"To take a human as an example, only a man who has two lungs deserves to be called complete. The present Baoshan is only a one-lung project. When the second stage is finished, the project will be able to fulfill its economic potential," he said.

During his first visit to China, Koga said, he had a long talk with Premier Zhou Enlai.

He said: "Zhou had realistic views on China's economic situation but China lacked funds at the time."

"Shortly after the gang of four was smashed, China began to speed up her modernization efforts by building a few petrochemical bases the size of Daqing and a few steel works as big as Baoshan. We thought at the time that China was too radical and impulsive.

"It is quite different now, compared with a few years ago. The current China seems to have solid strength, and this (the Sixth Five-Year) Plan looks to be a reliable and dependable one," he said.

There are broad vistas for the development of light industry which China has taken a lot of measures to improve, he said.

But he said, China now entered a new era one of diversification, in which only quality commodities can be sold.

Thus, manufacturers and suppliers must adapt themselves otherwise it will lead to a inflation.

"I have frankly put forward this question to Premier Zhao Ziyang," Koga said.

Koga and his party arrived in Beijing on November 29 and leave for home on Friday. In Shanghai, they plan to visit the Baoshan Iraon and Steel Complex.

Increase in Trade Foreseen

OW091216 Beijing XINHUA in English 1117 GMT 9 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 9 (XINHUA) -- Japan is willing to strengthen cooperation with China in its development of energy, communications and transportation and technical transformation of existing enterprises, a Japanese trade official said. "I am sure the economic and trade relations between the two countries will develop further," said Teiji Hagihara, vice-president of the Japan Association for the Promotion of International Trade, in an interview with XINHUA. Hagihara is in China to oversee the Japanese light industrial machinery and technology exhibition, which will close tomorrow.

China plans to quadruple its gross annual industrial and agricultural output value by the end of the century and has made agriculture, energy, communications and transportation the key points for development. "This is in accordance with China's conditions and the goal will surely be realized," he said. "Not only are the Chinese people full of confidence in China's modernization, Japanese economic circles also place much hope in this," he said.

In the last few years, China reduced the import of complete sets of equipment from Japan to readjust the national economy. This for a time had affected somewhat the enthusiasm of the Japanese business people to invest in China, Hagihara said. However, since July their confidence has begun to grow once again, he said. The prospects for the development of the economic and trade relations between the two countries are bright, he said. This is because, on the part of China, its readjustment of the national economy has been successful, its internal situation is stable, finances are better, foreign exchange reserves have increased, he said.

The reform of the administrative organs will greatly raise work efficiency, Hagihara said. "China has summed up its experience in developing the economy and drawn necessary lessons and has placed its plans on a firmer ground. Its import plans are also more reliable," he said. On the part of Japan, he said, although it now faces a worldwide economic recession, the country always needs China's raw materials and its market. "China's economic development will surely provide more opportunities for the development of the economic and trade relations between the two countries," he said.

The vice-president predicted that the total value of trade between the two countries this year will reach around 9,000 million U.S. dollars, which will be 13 percent lower than that of last year. Since more contracts have been signed between the two sides since July, the trade value between the two countries will rise to around 10,000 million U.S. dollars by 1984, he said. Hagihara recalled the history of the development of Japan-China trade. He said that due to efforts made by both sides in surmounting difficulties, the trade between the two countries has developed very fast in little more than two decades. While total trade value between the two countries in 1956 was only 150 million U.S. dollars, the figure rose to 1,100 million U.S. dollars by 1972, the year when Japan-China diplomatic relations were normalized. By 1981, the figure rose sharply to 10,400 million U.S. dollars, almost 10 times that of 1972, he said. Hagihara said that during this period, each side has sponsored exhibitions on many occasions in the other country. Trade delegations and study groups have been exchanged and technical discussions held. "These have played a good role in promoting trade and economic and technical exchanges between the two countries," he said.

JAPAN CONCLUDES TRADE TALKS WITH UNITED STATES

[Text] Tokyo, December 7 (XINHUA) -- The two-day Japan-U.S. trade talks which ended here today showed that Japan has to "draw up a new package of measures to open its market dramatically to American imports, especially agricultural products," according to a KYODO report. The U.S. delegation to the fifth bilateral subcabinet meeting was led by W. Allen Wallis, under-secretary of state for economic affairs, and the Japanese side was headed by Nobuo Matsunaga, deputy foreign minister.

"Subjected to strong U.S. pressure at the talks -- which included a meeting of the Japan-U.S. trade subcommittee Friday and Saturday and high working-level Japan-U.S. consultations Monday and Tuesday, the Japanese side all but pledged to draft a new market-opening package before Japanese Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone visits Washington in mid-January for talks with President Ronald Reagan," KYODO quoted observers here as saying.

During a joint press conference today, Allen Wallis said "we noted the growing protectionism in the United States and how critical it is for Japan to open its market to more produce, particularly agricultural...."

At a cabinet meeting earlier today, Japanese Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone called on his cabinet to work out new market-opening measures to help ease the strained trade relations with the United States. "Resolving trade friction with the U.S. and European countries is the government's greatest concern," he said.

However, KYODO in another report today said, Japanese Agriculture, Forestry and Fisheries Minister Iwazo Kaneko told reporters after the cabinet meeting that his ministry has no intention to accept either quota expansion or liberalization as demanded by the United States".

JAPAN'S SUZUKI MEETS SHANGHAI DELEGATION 7 DEC

[Text] Tokyo, December 7 (XINHUA) -- Former Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki said here today the new cabinet of Yasuhiro Nakasone will surely carry on the line of the former cabinet to pursue unswervingly the policy of Japan-China friendship. While meeting the Shanghai Municipal People's Government delegation, Suzuki stressed that to develop the Japan-China friendly ties, it is necessary to further increase people-to-people contacts and exchanges between local governments of the two countries.

Wang Daohan, head of the Chinese delegation, told Suzuki the three-point principle of peace and friendship, equality and mutual benefit, and long standing stability put forward by Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang when he visited Japan is not only a principle guiding bilateral relations at national level, it also applies to the development of friendly ties between the local governments of the two countries.

Suzuki asked Wang Daohan to convey his warm regards to Premier Zhao, party General Secretary Hu Yaobang and Chairman Deng Xiaoping of the Central Advisory Commission of the Communist Party of China.

JAPAN'S KOMEI PARTY ENDS NATIONAL CONGRESS

[Text] Tokyo, December 4 (XINHUA) -- Komei Party concluded its 20th national congress today with five resolutions passed and the party's new leading body elected. Yoshikatsu Takeiri retained his chairmanship.

A guideline for the party's work next year passed during the three-day congress points out that the current world situation is unstable and full of tensions. The arms race between the United States and the Soviet Union has far surpassed what is needed to safeguard their security, and the danger of resorting to force is increasing. The grave economic recession in Western countries and the increasingly intensified trade frictions have resulted in the aggravated relations between different countries.

The resolution on the party's basic policy maintains that Japan should work earnestly to cultivate peaceful and friendly relations with all countries, and "to contribute to peace and development of the international community." The resolution says: "The maintenance and strengthening of the Japan-U.S. relations of peace and friendship is a prerequisite and foundation of Japan's diplomatic policy." It stresses that Japan will truly implement all the principles specified in the Japan-China joint statement and the Japan-China peace and friendship treaty by contributing to peace and stability in both Japan and China as well as in the whole Asia. The resolution points out that Japan and China will further expand and develop the enduring relations of peace and friendship between them in the economic, cultural, educational and other fields.

About the Japan-Soviet relations, the resolution says that it is the view of the Komei Party that the Soviet Union must return the Japanese inherent territory, the four northern islands, and that only then can a Japan-Soviet peace and friendship treaty be concluded.

The resolution also stresses that Japan should establish and develop peaceful and friendly relations with all the countries in Asia, the Pacific region, the Middle East, Africa and Central and South America.

The national party congress also expounded its views and policies on the political, economic, defense and other issues at home.

BEIJING REVIEW CALLS FOR KOREAN REUNIFICATION

HK100539 Beijing BEIJING REVIEW in English No 48, 29 Nov 82 p 11

[Article by Ming Ming: "An End to Korea's Division"]

[Text] Seven years have elapsed since the resolution to "create conditions favourable to the independence and peaceful reunification of Korea, to convert armistice into permanent peace" was adopted by the 30th UN General Assembly.

During these seven years, the Government and people of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) have worked unremittingly for the realization of the UN resolution promoting the peaceful renification of Korea. The DPRK first proposed holding north-south talks in the hope that the dialogue would expand contacts between north and south and pave the way for the country's reunification.

However, U.S. interference and the insincerity of South Korea's Chon Tu-hwan clique have prevented implementation of the UN resolution on Korea's reunification. Nearly 30 years after the end of the Korean War, U.S. troops remain in South Korea in defiance of the UN resolution. The Reagan administration has not only gone back on its predecessor's commitment to partial troop withdrawal but has further strengthened U.S. military forces in South Korea while continuing the attempt to create "two Koreas." The U.S.-backed Chon Tu-hwan clique, while paying lip service to preparing for negotiations with the north, has been intensifying its suppression and persecution of patriots. The United States and the Chon Tu-hwan clique are chiefly responsible for obstructing the peaceful reunification of Korea.

The division of the Korean Peninsula should end. The Chinese people strongly demand the implementation of the U.N. resolution on Korea, the withdrawal of U.S. troops and arms from South Korea, and an end to the Chon Tu-hwan clique's sabotage of Korea's peaceful reunification. China firmly supports the great cause of Korea's peaceful reunification and is convinced that no force on earth can prevent its realization.

RENMIN RIBAO DELEGATION VISIT TO DPRK REPORTED

[Article by Gao Liang [7559 4752]: "20 Days After 30 Years -- Random Notes on a Visit to Korea"]

[Text] The RENMIN RIBAO delegation stayed for 20 days in Korea -- our fraternal neighboring country. Because of the Korean comrades' meticulous arrangements we were able to visit many places in a short time.

From 1950 to 1953 I was a member of the volunteers resisting the United States and assisting Korea. For 3 years I led a fighting life in Korea. In those days I saw personally the destruction done by the U.S. aggressors. Many Korean cities and villages were turned into ruins. After 30 years I returned to Korea. Wherever I went in these 20 days I found no trace of war scars; instead, I saw many newly built cities and villages and a new Korea full of vigor and prosperity.

Great Changes in Pyongyang

Pyongyang is a heroic city. During the 3-year Korean Liberation War, it was bombed wantonly and indiscriminately more than 1,400 times. In those days Pyongyang had a population of only 400,000, yet the U.S. aggressors dropped more than 428,000 bombs on the city. Pyongyang as a whole was thus reduced to rubble.

Today not a trace of the old war scars can be found in Pyongyang. The new buildings' magnificence is even greater than in prewar times. In the urban area there are many tidy boulevards dotted with fountains and sculptures. Inside various huge buildings, there are all kinds of large and varied facilities. Colorful flowers are planted on all balconies. In fact Pyongyang has become a garden city.

At the center of Pyongyang city there is a new building that looks like a palace. It is the people's great study hall and has a total floor area of nearly 100,000 square meters. Inside the building there is a multistory library with a capacity for 30 million books and more than 600 rooms for other purposes -- including lectures, reading, recording, reporting, and collecting information. Modern scientific and technological facilities are installed in lecture rooms and reading rooms so that readers can enjoy maximum convenience. Everyday an average of 12,000 people come to this hall to read and listen to lectures. It is not merely a library, it is rather a comprehensive university with advanced facilities.

Pyongyang now has developed into a productive city with modern industry and a cultural city with a highly concentrated cultural and educational life. Pyongyang's metro lines are reasonably designed. On holidays residents can use the metro and easily reach the Kim Il-song square, the Mansodae Art Theatre, the Korean Revolution Museum, the Moran-bong Stadium and the Taesong-san Recreation Ground. All metro stations are decorated with pictures and paintings showing the achievements of the Korean people in their revolution and construction under the leadership of Comrade Kim Il-song. All these stations resemble artistic palaces.

Remembrance in Wonsan

Wonsan, a picturesque city, is the capital of Kangwon-do. Because it borders on the sea on the east and is close to the 38th parallel line, this city more than 30 years ago became a battlefield that was intensely fought for by our forces and the enemy. In those days, not only were all the buildings in Wonsan destroyed, also the city's ground was blasted with innumerable deep craters. In the face of frenzied behavior by the U.S. aggressors, the people of Wonsan did not yield. They buried their beloved people's bodies and then moved into mountain valleys, continuing to help their troops resist the enemy. In those hard days the volunteer troops that I was part of fought side by side with the Kangwon-do people on this land for 3 years. We went through thick and thin together with the people here and were helped and cared for by the Korean people. Therefore we cherish special feelings toward everything here.

On the evening of 25 October, the 32d anniversary of the Chinese People's Volunteers' entering Korea to take part in the fighting, Kangwon-do's Party Secretary Comrade (Kim Chong-son) gave a banquet in honor of our delegation. At the end of the banquet two young woman attendants brought two plates of red apples. This sight at once reminded me of the war-ridden years more than 30 years ago. Then, we were stationed in mountainous Changdo north to Kumsongri. On one occasion, Kangwon-do people came to show solicitude for the volunteers. Two Korean girls, after singing the "song of spring," brought a big basket of apples to us. Since that was a most difficult period for Kangwon-do's people, how could we accept the apples? When we declined their gifts, the two girls said with tears on their faces: "Uncles, please accept them! Our mother was killed by Americans; we want you to avenge us!"

The command at last decided to accept these apples. The girls' request was repeated in leaflets sent to the companies along with the apples. The companies then used these apples as teaching material for frontline mobilization during the enemy's autumn offensive. The slogan of "Avenging the Young Girls!" echoed in our positions for time to time. The fighting was extremely furious and lasted for 6 days and nights. It was in these battles that famous battle hero Liu Dongwu ended his life along with more than 50 American soldiers by detonating a Bangalore torpedo after he was badly wounded. We annihilated a total of 58,000 U.S. and Rhee troops. When we cleared the battlefields and collected our martyrs" remains, we found the apples presented by the Korean girls just where they had been placed -- but they looked redder than before because they were dyed with the martyrs' blood. When cherishing the memory of the unforgettable years, the apples in the banquet seemed to have become the apples in the battle positions. Where are those two girls now?

Aspirations in Kaesong

Kaesong is the ancient Korean capital. Because it is situated south of the 38th parallel line it was once under the control of the South Korean authorities after Japan surrendered. The Korean People's Army liberated this city in the Liberation War. Since then, Kaesong all along has stood firmly in our frontline position through fighting and negotiation.

After arriving at Kaesong, a natural thing was to visit Panmunjom which is located on the Military Demarcation Line. A senior captain of the Korean People's Army told us the story about the negotiations in those days and the situation since armistice was put into effect. Now, 29 years have passed since the armistice agreement was signed but the U.S. aggressors still violate it continually and carry out military provocations against us. The South Korean authorities even have built a barrier of reinforced concrete along the Military Demarcation Line to separate North and South Korea. After briefing us about this situation, the Korean comrade showed us the meeting place of the Military Armistice Commission. Pointing at a flag on the other side of the table he told us that this was the U.N. flag. In the past, it was by hoisting this flag that the U.S. aggressors mustered some other countries to assist in the aggression toward Korea. Now, many countries have stated their withdrawal and the United Nations has also passed a resolution to disbanding the so-called U.S. troops. However, the U.S. aggressors still hoist this flag and continue in Korea, refusing to clear out. While the Korean comrade was sternly condemning U.S. behaviour, three U.S. soldiers outside the room leaned on the windows and listened carefully. I woundered what they were feeling.

Chung, Kaesong's party secretary, is an old comrade-in-arms of ours, who in those days fought with us. He told us there are now 300,000 people in Kaesong and 70 percent of them have relatives in South Korea. Many people often look tearfully to the south and hope that their relatives will return. However, people's aspirations for reunion have been thwarted by the military demarcation line. For nearly 30 years many people have missed their parents, brothers and spouses but they cannot reunite with their beloved people. Comrade Kim Il-song, the great leader of the Korean people, announced a 10-point administrative principle for reunification of the motherland which was heartly supported by the people. We hope all separated families in Kaesong may be reunited and that North and South Korea will soon be reunified, peacefully.

I. 10 Dec 82

This time we revisited many familiar places in Korea. In this short 20-day visit we found a sharp contrast between the new and the old and gained a deeper impression of the great achievements scored by the Korean people. All this was very touching and won our admiration.

Lord Belstead will chair a meeting in Bangkok on Monday for heads of British missions in Southeast Asia and the Far East. Sir Percy who will also attend the Bangkok meeting will leave on Sunday.

KHIEU SAMPHAN ON DK UNITY, RESISTING SRV ATTACKS

OW091920 Beijing XINHUA in English 1901 GMT 9 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 9 (XINHUA) -- Khieu Samphan, vice-president of Democratic Kampuchea, has said that as long as the Kampuchean people intensify their struggle, the Vietnamese aggressors can be driven out of Kampuchea, according to Radio Peking. Khieu Samphan made the remarks when he met Chinese broadcasting and television correspondents in a Democratic Kampuchea-controlled area on December 6.

Due to the good cooperation of the three resistance forces of Kampuchea, Khieu Samphan said, the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea scored a great victory at the 37th session of the U.N. General Assembly. He stressed that "we will continue to consolidate and develop the national united forces and fight the Vietnamese aggressors till all of them are driven out of the Kampuchean territory." Khieu Samphan said Vietnam has met with tremendous difficulties not only on the battleground in Kampuchea but also at home. However, he added, there is no sign till now that Vietnam will pull out its troops from Kampuchea.

On the dry season offensive launched by Vietnam, Khieu Samphan said, "we see clearly that the Vietnamese are attacking us in a planned way. But we are taking the initiative in unremittingly wearing down the enemy by guerrilla warfare. We are cutting off the enemy transportation lines and wiping out enemy strongholds to enlarge the areas under our control. If we persist in doing so we can put the enemy in a passive position."

RENMIN RIBAO CRITICIZES NHAN DAN 2 DEC ARTICLE

["International Jottings" by He Jiang [0149 3068]: "Just This Much Meaning"]

[Text] Recently, the Vietnamese authorities have been recklessly singing their hackneyed anti-Chinese songs even louder. One example of this is the article entitled "Who Is the Aggressor and Who Is the Expansionist?" in the December 2 edition of Vietnam's NHAN DAN.

This lengthy article basically comes out with all the lies it has told so many times before, slandering China for its "hegemonism," "Han chauvinism," and "bourgeois racism." It uses these lies as proof that Vietnamese forces remain in Kampuchea in order to deal with China's "invasion" and "expansion," and are "entirely lawful." It claims that only when the "threat" from China is "eliminated" will "Vietnamese forces withdraw back to their country." Before this happens, "there is no question of Vietnam withdrawing its troops."

This is just harping on the same old theme. With the passing for the fourth time of the resolution by an overwhelming majority at the UN General Assembly, demanding the withdrawal of Vietnamese troops from Kampuchea, the question of who was invading and who was expanding was made clear. Does the NHAN DAN article, loaded with rumors and calumnies, really have the magical power to persuade the world that Vietnam's invasion of Kampuchea was "lawful" and that its troops did not need to withdraw from that country?

The article's so-called "great reasoning," "great truth," and "great righteousness," cooked up out of all the old anti-China themes, is in fact utterly worthless. All it does is to reflect the fact that Vietnam, having failed in its invasion of Kampuchea, and having no way to back down, finding itself in even more dangerous domestic and international circumstances, has no choice but to hoist the battered anti-Chinese flag again in an attempt to hold its ground. From this point of view, the article has little meaning.

BEIJING HITS HANOI DENIAL OF KAMPUCHEA OFFENSIVE

OW060227 Beijing in Vietnamese to Vietnam 1130 GMT 3 Dec 82

["Short commentary": "Who Is Telling Lies?"]

[Text] Faced with the world public's glaring exposure of the Vietnamese aggressors' preparations for a new dry-season offensive in Kampuchea, the Hanoi propaganda machine has tried, in vain, to fend off the attack. It, therefore, has recklessly said that the accusation is all lies.

Who, in fact, is telling lies? Let us try to find out the truth. Over the past several months, the Le Duan clique has sent more troops and Soviet-built tanks and artillery pieces to Kampuchea. Hundreds of thousands of Vietnamese troops, massed in western Kampuchea, are ready for action. A few days ago, 5,000 Vietnamese troops, supported by heavy weapons, launched fierce attacks against the Democratic Kampuchean forces in the Pailin area.

How can the Vietnamese authorities hope, with a simple statement, to refute the so-called fabrication, to conceal the flames of war along the Kampuchean-Thai border? The Le Duan clique is used to making black white and resorting to the "thief crying stop thief" trick. A rule can be deduced from what the clique has said and done over the past many years: What it tries hard to deny is the very thing it schemes to do. The so-called rejection of fabrications by the Hanoi propaganda machine is the latest example.

PAKISTAN'S ZIAUL HAQ CONTINUES VISIT TO U.S.

Comments on PRC Relations

OW100256 Beijing XINHUA in English 0236 GMT 10 Dec 82

[Text] New York, December 9 (XINHUA) -- "Pakistan's ties with China have withstood the vicissitudes of time," said Pakistan President General Mohammed Ziaul Haq here today. Speaking at a luncheon given by the Foreign Policy Association, Ziaul Haq said Pakistan's relationship with China "has proved its strength and durability and has remained constant despite the changes that have occurred in the external and internal environments of the two countries."

He pointed out: "Whether in the purely bilateral or in the international context, China has stood by us as a dependable friend." "This enviable relationship has been facilitated by our shared commitment to principles and our consistent adherence to the universally acknowledged norms of inter-state conduct," he added. On his visit to China last October, he said his discussions with Chinese leaders "served the useful purpose of reaffirming the desire of the two countries for a sustained growth in our relations."

Views USSR Invasion of DRA

[Text] Washington, December 8 (XINHUA) -- Pakistani President Mohammad Ziaul Haq said here today the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan consitutes a "grave threat" to Pakistan's national security and well-being of the region.

Speaking at a luncheon given by the U.S. National Press Club in his honor, the visiting president also praised the Afghan people for their "unsurpassed courage...in an epic struggle against foreign domination." Ziaul Haq said as Afghanistan is an important strategic point not far from the warm waters of the Indian Ocean, he does not believe the Soviet troops will withdraw from that Asian country in the near future. He said Afghan resistance needs political, material and moral help and it will last as long as the spirit of freedom continues.

On the Middle East, Ziaul Haq believed today is the right moment to find a solution to that issue and both the Arab plan adopted at Fes and Reagan's September 1 initiative have many positive aspects. But he said the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination and "their inherent right of finding a homeland" are "the basic ingredients" of a solucion to the Middle East problem.

Ziaul Haq was confident that the U.S. Government will honor its commitment to Pakistan with regard to economic and military assistance. He said he has come here for "reaffirmation," and he is "quite satisfied" with his mission. The United States has promised a five-year aid package of 3.2 billion U.S. dollars to Pakistan beginning 1983.

Remarks on USSR Relations

[Text] New York, December 9 (XINHUA) -- The situation in Afghanistan is a "major problem which continues to cause the deepest concern" to Pakistan, said President of Pakistan Ziaul Haq here today.

Speaking at a luncheon given by the Foreign Policy Association in his honor, Ziaul Haq said the situation in Afghanistan resulted "from the Soviet military intervention and continued presence in that country."

"This move on the part of a superpower to seek a unilateral strategic advantage has not merely violated the independence and integrity of a small, non-aligned country but has far-reaching implications for the region as a whole," he added.

He noted that the USSR's intervention has effectively eliminated Afghanistan as a buffer between South Asia and the Soviet Union and brought its military might from across the Oxus right up to the gates of the Khyber Pass, which has witnessed, over centuries, the march of a host of foreign armies." The Oxus is a river separating the USSR and Afghanistan, and the Khyber Pass is a famous defile between Afghanistan and Pakistan. He called for a settlement on the basis of the withdrawal of Soviet forces from Afghanistan, respect for the independence and non-aligned status of that country, the right of the Afghan people to determine their own future in keeping with their national aspirations and the creation of conditions in Afghanistan conducive to the voluntary return of the Afghan refugees to their homes in safety and honor. However, he said, "there is no occasion to believe that a solution to this grave problem is at hand."

Referring to the relations between Pakistan and the USSR, he said: "The crisis in Afghanistan has, in fact, exercised an overriding influence in our relations with the USSR. Pakistan's principled and steadfast opposition to the Soviet military intervention and continued presence in Afghanistan and the fact that in all international forums Pakistan has remained in the vanguard of efforts directed towards ensuring the restoration of Afghanistan's freedom, has raised the Soviet Union's ire against us."

"While we have not been overwhemed by the shadow of Soviet power, one hopes that the USSR has also realized that it cannot always gain from ill-advised and precipitated actions as in Afghanistan," he noted. On the relations between Pakistan and the United States, the president of Pakistan said that the Reagan administration agreed to a meaningful economic assistance and military sales package with Pakistan on the basis of sovereign equality and mutual respect. "This agreement has laid the foundation for a credible and enduring relationship between the two countries," he stated.

ACTIVITIES OF AFGHAN FREEDOM FIGHTERS REPORTED

[Text] Islamabad, December 8 (XINHUA) -- The Afghan freedom fighters have since mid-November tightened their pressure on Soviet-controlled cities and are conducting urban guerrilla warfare, according to AAP reports. The resistance forces — the Mojahedin -- captured four enemy trucks loaded with flour, sugar and other foodstuff traveling from Ghazni to the airport on the evening of Nov. 22. They also frustrated a Soviet-Karmal attack in the northeastern part of the city after destroying three tanks.

On Nov. 25, the Soviet troops lost three more tanks and 14 soldiers somewhere near Jamal Khel village along the Ghazni-Qandahar highway. At least a dozen government supply trucks were destroyed by rocket fire and mine blasts.

The guerrillas in Qandahar ambushed a Soviet jeep Nov. 26, killing all seven Soviets. In clashes Nov. 22 and Nov. 23 along the Qandahar-Herat highway, a Soviet tank, two armored personnel carriers and an oil tank were destroyed by the Mojahedin.

Two Karmal soldiers joined the Mojahedin in Qandahar Nov. 23, bringing with them a Soviet-made 'Dashka' anti-aircraft gun of which the guerrillas are in dire need. On Nov. 20, the freedom fighters launched a successful attack on Soviet-Karmal troops at Baisood Bridge near Jalalabad town, killing more than 50 Soviet-Karmal troops.

Resistance Leader Comments

OW091908 Beijing XINHUA in English 1839 GMT 9 Dec 82

[Text] Islamabad, December 9 (XINHUA) -- An Afghan resistance leader today called on the Afghan masses to intensify their attacks on the Soviet aggressor troops in Afghanistan to prove that the superpower can never subjugate the Afghan people. The call was made by engineer Gulbudin Hikmatyar, vice-president of the Islamic alliance of Afghan Mojahedin, shortly before the third anniversary of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan which occurred on December 27, 1979.

In a press interview in Islamabad, he said: "The Soviet Union had intruded into the homeland of Afghans without any justification," The resistance movement would continue unabated unless the Soviet aggression was undone by withdrawal from Afghanistan, he pointed out.

Earlier in Peshawar, the vice-president told reporters that the Soviet Union has made a great mistake in Afghanistan, saying that "though powerful in strength, the Soviet occupation troops are gripped in a sagging morale and war-weariness. The Afghan people will never subdue to their aggression and the superpower cannot possibly maintain a lasting occupation of Afghanistan."

SRI LANKA ORDERS U.S. DIPLOMAT TO LEAVE

[Text] Colombo, December 8 (XINHUA) -- A United States diplomat in Sri Lanka who had been asked to leave the island by the Sri Lanka Foreign Ministry for his attempt to interfere in its internal affairs, left here last night, DAILY NEWS reported today.

Kenneth Munro Scott, U.S. Embassy's first secretary in Sri Lanka, was reported to have "attempted in some way to interfere in the internal political affairs of Sri Lanka" and "spoken out of turn," authoritative sources said.

An ultimatum that he leave the country within a week's time was given after last Wednesday's cabinet meeting.

A U.S. Government request that Scott be allowed to complete his stay here which was to end next July, has not been agreed to by the Sri Lanka Government.

BEIJING REVIEW DENIES WEAPONS SOLD TO IRAQ

HK100513 Beijing BEIJING REVIEW in English No 48, 29 Nov 82 p 3

[From the "Notes From the Editors" column by international editor Mu Youlin: "About Weapons Sales"]

[Text] Is it true that, as one foreign journal alleged, one-fourth of the weapons purchased from abroad by Iraq came from China?

No, it is not true. China has not sold any weapons to Iraq because this is incompatible with our principled stand on the war between Iraq and Iran.

China maintains friendly diplomatic relations with both countries and strict neutrality regarding the war between them. This is well known. It is our sincere hope that the two countries will settle their disputes through peaceful negotiations. China will not change its stand; this has been so in the past and will be so in the future.

The Iranian-Iraqi war is catastrophic for both countries. In the present turbulent world situation, Third World countries need to rally together against hegemonism. Both Iran and Iraq are Islamic countries. For them to stop fighting and live in peace is not only in the interests of the people of the two countries, but will help ease the tensions in the Middle East. This also conforms to the common wishes of the peoples of all countries.

PDRY REACTS TO U.S. EXERCISE ALONG OMANI COAST

[Text] Aden, December 8 (XINHUA) -- Democratic Yemen in a statement today expressed resentment over the U.S. maneuver being carried out along the Omani coast close to Yemen's territory.

The statement pointed out that the maneuver, beginning Dec. 2 with the participation of the U.S. aircraft carrier Enterprise, B-52 aircraft and marines, would hurt the positive results of negotiations between Democratic Yemen and the Sultanate of Oman.

Objecting to the U.S. action, the statement said the maneuver showed the United States was a source of both danger to world peace and tension in the region, and Yemen would adopt all measures essential to protect its security and sovereignty.

ANGOLA, SOUTH AFRICA HOLD DIRECT TALKS 8 DEC

[Text] Beijing, December 9 (XINHUA) -- Angola and South Africa held direct talks on the Namibia issue in Cape Verde yesterday, their first since Angola's independence in 1975, according to reports from Praia, capital of Cape Verde.

The meeting, announced by the Cape Verdean state radio, involved Foreign Minister Roelof Botha and Defense Minister Magnus Malan of South Africa and Interior Minister Alexandre Rodrigues of Angola. They returned home after the talks yesterday.

No details about the talks were disclosed, but a REUTER report quoted diplomatic sources in Johannesburg as saying that the two sides agreed to meet again at a place and on a date to be decided later. The sources said Pretoria agreed to return the bodies of Angolan soldiers killed in southern Angola where South African forces have staged frequent raids.

South Africa, supported by the United States, has insisted on a pull-out of Cuban troops from Angola before agreeing to grant independence to Namibia which it rules in defiance of U.N. resolutions. Angola has rejected such a linkage. Thousands of Cuban troops were flown to Angola with Soviet support during Angola's 1975-76 civil war.

The talks took place against the backdrop of a visit to Washington late last month by South African Foreign Minister Botha and a recent tour of several black African states, including some front-line states, by U.S. Vice-President George Bush.

U.S. State Department spokesman Alan Romberg Wednesday described the talks as "a positive development" which could enhance prospects for a resolution of regional problems.

WU XIEQIAN ATTENDS UGANDAN EMBASSY RECEPTION

OW081912 Beijing XINHUA in English 1600 GMT 8 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 8 (XINHUA) -- Ugandan Ambassador to China George Paliel Ufoyuru gave a cocktail reception at the embassy this afternoon to mark the 20th anniversary of the establishment of diplomatic relations between Uganda and China.

Present were Wu Xueqian, minister of foreign affairs, Gong Dafei, vice foreign minister, Lu Xuejian, vice-minister of foreign economic relations and trade, and other government leaders.

Ufoyuru said "since the establishment of diplomatic relations between our two countries, Ugandan-Chinese relations have achieved fruitful results. We share identical views on many important issues and have cooperated in the economic, technological and scientific, and cultural fields."

He said Uganda follows China's modernization efforts with great interests, and that his country expects to cooperate still closer with China in the future.

Wu Xueqian said: "The past 20 years have proved the friendship between China and Uganda. We sympathized with and supported each other in the struggle to defend national independence and state sovereignty and develop our national economies. Sino-Ugandan cooperation has yielded satisfactory results."

He said the Chinese Government treasures the friendship between the two nations, which accords with the fundamental interests of the two peoples. Wu Xueqian said he is convinced the friendship between the people of China and Uganda will continue to grow.

XINHUA VIEWS MEXICO'S ECONOMIC PROBLEMS, FUTURE

OW030423 Beijing XINHUA in English 0243 GMT 3 Dec 82

["Commentary: Mexico's New President Faces Up To Difficulties -- by Correspondent Mu Guangren" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Mexico City, December 2 (XINHUA) -- Mexico's new President Miguel de la Madrid, in his inaugural speech yesterday, faced up to the economic difficulties besetting his country, explored their causes and put forward measures for a prompt readjustment of the economy. His courageous stand in face of the crisis leaves a deep impression on the audience.

Inflation in the country is expected to rise 100 percent this year. Government deficits have hit an all-time high. Economic growth rate has sunk to zero. And foreign debts are the heaviest in the world. To a new president, to tell the congress and the people such a grave situation needs courage and insight, which constitute one of the conditions for tiding over difficulties.

De la Madrid spoke of the adverse effects on his country by the Western world's economic recession. He cited the trade wars among developed nations, protectionism under the cover of free trade, the imposition of high interest-rates, preference for short-term loans, forcing down of raw material prices, and higher prices for manufactured goods. All this constitutes a means of shifting their economic crisis to the Third World nations.

Mexico, being endowed with rich natural resources and the fourth biggest oil producer of the world, had registered an annual growth rate of more than eight percent over the last few years. Now that this more prosperous of the developing countries is finding itself in such dire straits, it would not be difficult to imagine how the other Third World countries, with less resources and more difficulties, are suffering under the economic crisis shifted on to them by the developed nations.

Naturally, Mexico's present economic difficulties have their internal causes. According to a high government official, economic growth "increased too fast" in the past two years, and there should have been a readjustment last year which did not take place.

The ten-point program put forward by the new president in his inaugural speech is highlighted by a slowing down of the development program. This is aimed at a realistic readjustment. He gave priority in investment to all urgent projects, reduced investment in unessential ones, and killed all high-cost unnecessary projects. The president's readjustment program also includes plans of public spending cuts, control over government debts, strict limits on imports and anti-corruption measures. Another important decision is de-centralization of "state life", meaning delegation of power to lower levels to arouse enthusiasm in running economic affairs.

Timely readjustment in economic development requires courage and determination and will inevitably come up against difficulties. Establishment of a new international economic order to shake off the economic burden forced upon the Third World countries by the big powers, depends on unity and coordination among the developing nations. But hope is placed on the new president to bring Mexico out of its economic difficulties.

FIFTH SESSION OF FIFTH NPC CONCLUDES 10 DEC

OW100907 Beijing XINHUA in English 0845 GMT 10 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 10 (XINHUA) -- The 15-day-long Fifth Session of the Fifth National People's Congress was brought to a successful conclusion at the Great Hall of the People here this afternoon.

The congress calls on the people of all nationalities in the country to display the revolutionary spirit of building the country through hard struggle and strive for an all-round fulfilment of the Sixth Five-Year Plan and for creating a new situation in socialist modernization.

This is the last session of the Fifth National People's Congress whose term of office expires next February.

This session endorsed the fourth Constitution of the People's Republic of China and the Sixth Five-Year Plan, thus accomplishing its historic tasks.

When the executive chairman declared the session closed, the 3,040 deputies present rose and sang the national anthem -- the "March of the Volunteers." At the end of the song, all lights in the huge auditorium were turned on amid prolonged, stormy applause.

Today's final meeting was presided over by Yang Shangkun, executive chairman of the session and vice-chairman of the N.P.C. Standing Committee.

In a speech at the closing ceremony, Ye Jianying, chairman of the N.P.C. Standing Committee, said: "In a period of historic change for our motherland, the present National People's Congress, living up to the trust and expectations of our people, has done an enormous amount of work in the performance of its duties and played its role as the highest organ of state power."

He said the new constitution adopted at this session is the best since the founding of the People's Republic. He expressed the conviction that its promulgation and implementation will usher in a new stage of development for China's socialist democracy and legal system and for its socialist modernization.

Premier Zhao Ziyang's report on the Sixth Five-Year Plan, he added, is the first blueprint for attaining China's strategic objective between 1981 and the end of this century. He expressed hope that "all fellow deputies will unite with our people throughout the country and together we will bestir ourselves and work arduously with one heart and one mind to ensure the realization of our goal."

Ye Jianying called for joint efforts to make a success of the preparatory work for the convening of the next National People's Congress and see to it that outstanding young and middle-aged cadres are elected to posts of leadership. He urged veteran and young cadres to work in unity and create a new situation for China's socialist cause. "We people of the older generation will then feel gratified from the bottom of our hearts and will have no more worries," he said. Ye Jianying's speech drew a round of warm ovation.

The congress adopted a resolution ratifying Premier Zhao Ziyang's report on the Sixth Five-Year Plan, the Sixth Five-Year Plan for national economic and social development and the plan for national economic and social development in 1983.

The resolution points out that the Sixth Five-Year Plan is a major step toward achieving the magnificent goal of quadrupling gross value of annual industrial and agricultural production by the year 2000 as well as a program of action for China's current socialist economic construction.

Premier Zhao Ziyang's report and the tasks set forth in the Sixth Five-Year Plan for national economic and social development are forward-looking and realistic and can be fulfilled through hard work, the resolution says.

The congress also adopted a resolution ratifying the State Council report on the implementation of the 1982 state budget and the state budget for 1983. It says the carrying out of the 1982 state budget has been satisfactory and the arrangements in the state budget for 1983 are appropriate.

The following resolutions were also adopted:

-- The resolution endorsing the report on the work of the N.P.C. Standing Committee.

-- The resolution endorsing the report on the work of the Supreme People's Court and the report on the work of the Supreme People's Procuratorate.

-- The resolution determining the number of deputies to the Sixth National People's Congress and their election.

The congress adopted the rewritten organic law of the National People's Congress and organic law of the State Council, and the resolutions on the revision of the organic law of the local people's congresses and governments and the electoral law for the National People's Congress and the local people's congresses.

The congress also approved the report made by the Motions Committee on the examination of motions.

There was one abstention each when two organic laws and the Motions Committee report were put to vote. Two deputies abstained from voting on the resolution approving the revision of the electoral law.

Other executive chairmen present at the closing ceremony were Peng Zhen, Deng Yingchao, Ulanhu, Wei Guoqing, Tan Zhenlin, Li Jingquan, Peng Chong, Seypidin, Liao Chengzhi, Nagpoi Ngawang-Jigme, Xu Deheng, Hu Juewen, Xiao Jingguang, Shi Liang, Xi Zhongxun and Bainqen Erdini Qoigyi Gyaincain.

Delegates to the Fifth Session of the Fifth National Committee of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference attended the ceremony as observers.

Foreign diplomatic envoys to China and foreign correspondents in Beijing were present as guests.

Ye Jianying Addresses Closing

OW100819 Beijing XINHUA in English 0806 GMT 10 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 10 (XINHUA) -- Chairman Ye Jianying of the National People's Congress Standing Committee said here today that the promulgation and implementation of China's new constitution will usher in a new stage of development for the country's socialist democracy and legal system and its modernization drive.

He called on all fellow deputies to unite with people throughout the country and work hard to achieve the country's strategic goal by the end of this century.

He also called for earnest preparations for the convocation of the next National People's Congress and election of outstanding young and middle-aged people to leading positions. Ye Jianying made these remarks in a speech at the closing session of the Fifth National People's Congress this afternoon.

He said: "Our present session is an important one, and I am glad that it has been fruitful."

"The new constitution adopted at this session is the best we have ever had since the founding of our People's Republic. It crystallizes both the positive and negative experiences gained in the past three decades or more and the wisdom of the people of all our nationalities. I am deeply convinced that its promulgation and implementation will usher in a new stage of development for our socialist democracy and legal system and for the socialist modernization of our country."

"Premier Zhao Ziyang's report on the Sixth Five-Year Plan is a good one with which I fully agree, as the first blueprint for attaining our strategic objective between 1981 and the end of this century, it sets out a clear and inspiring aim along with practical and effective measures. I hope that all fellow deputies will unite with our people throughout the country and together we will bestir ourselves and work arduously with one heart and one mind to ensure the realization of our goal.

"The term of office of the current National People's Congress will expire in February 1983. These five years have been an unusual period in which we have won major victories in setting things to rights. In a period of historic change for our motherland, the present National People's Congress, living up to the trust and expectations of our people, has done an enormous amount of work in the performance of its duties and played its role as the highest organ of state power.

"The recent Twelfth National Congress of the Chinese Communist Party has brought about fairly satisfactory cooperation between old and new cadres and succession of the new to the old. This fully demonstrates that our socialist cause is thriving and that competent people are coming to the fore in large numbers. The party's twelfth national congress has set an example in solving the problem of this co-operation and succession. According to the provisions of the new constitution, the system of the people's congress will be strengthened and the functions and powers of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress extended as both an organ of power and a working body. We face new and heavier tasks. I hope that, through our joint efforts, we will make a success of our preparatory work for the convening of the next National People's Congress. When considering the formation of the new National People's Congress and its leading bodies, we should see to it that outstanding young and middle-aged cadres are elected to posts of leadership, so that veteran and young cadres will be able to work in unity and close cooperation to create a new situation for our socialist cause. We people of the older generation will then feel gratified from the bottom of our hearts and will have no more worries."

Resolution on 5-Year Plan

OW100743 Beijing XINHUA in English 0727 GMT 10 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 10 (XINHUA) -- China's Sixth Five-Year Plan (1981-1985) drafted by the State Council is an important step toward achieving the magnificent target of quadrupling gross annual industrial and agricultural output value by the end of this century.

This is stated in a resolution adopted today at the Fifth Session of the Fifth National People's Congress.

As a fairly comprehensive blueprint, the resolution points out, the five-year plan is a program of action guiding China's present socialist economic construction.

Realistic as well as forward-looking, the tasks for economic and social development set forth in Premier Zhao Ziyang's report and the Sixth Five-Year Plan can be fulfilled through hard work, the resolution says, adding that the principal measures proposed are practical, effective and feasible.

The realization of the Sixth Five-Year Plan, the resolution says, will enable China to achieve a decisive victory in bringing about a fundamental change for the better in the financial and economic situation. This will also prepare better conditions for the economic development during the Seventh Five-Year Plan period and for a tremendous growth of the economy in the decade following the year 1990.

The resolution says that the N.P.C. session hereby approves Premier Zhao Ziyang's report on the Sixth Five-Year Plan, the Sixth Five-Year plan for the national economic and social development of the People's Republic of China, and the 1983 plan for economic and social development which is based on the Sixth Five-Year Plan.

Implementation of the Sixth Five-Year Plan has been satisfactory in its first two years, the resolution says. The national economy has followed a path of healthy growth.

Agricultural production is experiencing an all-round upsurge and the rural economy is gaining increasing prosperity. Production of light industry has been growing rapidly and heavy industry has improved its orientation of service and product mix.

A basic balance has been maintained between revenue and expenditure. Commodity supplies on the market are increasingly plentiful and prices remain stable by and large. New progress has been made in the educational, scientific and cultural fields.

The session expresses its satisfaction with the work of the State Council in the last two years, the resolution says.

The session calls on the workers, peasants and intellectuals of all nationalities in China, and all other working people and patriots who support the socialist motherland, to implement resolutely the strategic plan mapped out at the 12th National Congress of the Communist Party of China, carry on the revolutionary spirit of building the country through hard work and the down-to-earth style of work, and strive to fulfil in an all-round way the various tasks specified in the Sixth Five-Year Plan and the plan for 1983 and to create a new situation in the country's socialist modernization.

Resolution on State Budgets

OW100749 Beijing XINHUA in English 0736 GMT 10 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 10 (XINHUA) -- A resolution ratifying the State Council report on the implementation of the 1982 state budget and the state budget for 1983 was adopted at the Fifth Session of the Fifth National People's Congress today.

The session deems the carrying out of the 1982 state budget satisfactory, the resolution says. The state financial department has made great efforts this year in promoting the economic readjustment, supporting the development of production, expanding cultural, educational, scientific and public health facilities, and further improving the life of the people, while continuing a basic balance between revenue and expenditure.

This is a success achieved by the people of all nationalities under the leadership of the Communist Party of China and the people's government in the struggle for a fundamental turn for the better in the country's financial and economic situation, the resolution says.

Having examined the draft state budget for 1983, the resolution says, the session holds that the remarkable growth of revenue and expenditure over 1982, as arranged in the draft budget, reflects the demand for continued readjustment, restructuring, consolidation and improvement of the national economy, the need to guarantee the key projects in national reconstruction by concentrating funds on the basis of improving economic results, and the requirement to improve the people's livelihood, while maintaining a basic balance between revenue and expenditure. Such arrangements are appropriate, the resolution says.

The session decides, the resolution says, to approve the state budget for 1983 and the State Council report on the implementation of the state budget for 1982 and the draft state budget for 1983. [Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese at 0848 GMT on 10 December in a similar items adds the following: The session holds that while the state financial situation has clearly begun to improve, we must conscientiously and strictly implement the budget in order to maintain the steady improvement and further solve financial problems.]

The congress calls on the people of all nationalities throughout the country, who are guided and inspired by the spirit of the 12th National Congress of the Chinese Communist Party, to work hard to expand production, practise strict economy, combat waste and improve economic results so as to guarantee the increase of revenues and retrenchment of expenditures and strive for a successful implementation of the state budget for 1983 and a fundamental turn for the better in the country's financial and economic situation, the resolution says.

Resolution on Committee Report

OW101216 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0919 GMT 10 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, 10 Dec (XINHUA) -- The resolution of the Fifth Session of the Fifth National People's Congress of the People's Republic of China on the work report of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress was adopted by the Fifth Session of the Fifth National People's Congress on 10 December 1982.

The Fifth Session of the Fifth National People's Congress of the People's Republic of China approved the work report of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress made by Yang Shangkun, vice chairman and secretary general, and expressed satisfaction with the Standing Committee's work.

The session maintained that since the "Constitution of the People's Republic of China" adopted by this session has endowed the Standing Committee with important functions and powers including the supervision of the implementation of the constitution, the Standing Committee should bring into full play its role as a permanent part of the organization with supreme state power in strengthening the socialist legal system and consolidating the people's democratic dictatorship to safeguard and promote the smooth progress of socialist modernization.

Presidium Adopts Four Laws

OW091732 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0805 GMT 9 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, 9 Dec (XINHUA) -- At its fourth meeting held at the Great Hall of the People this morning, the Presidium of the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC adopted the drafts of some resolutions to be voted on at the NPC session.

Peng Zhen, executive [chang wu 1603 0523] chairman of the Presidium, chaired today's meeting.

At the meeting Xi Zhongxun, another executive chairman, made an explanation on opinions raised by deputies in the course of examining four draft laws.

The bills committee of the Fifth NPC submitted a report on the examination of the four draft laws to the Presidium meeting. The report says: All deputies attending the current NPC session examined the four draft laws: the draft organic law of the National People's Congress, the draft law of the State Council, the draft resolution on some regulations governing the revision of the organic law of the local people's congresses and people's governments and the draft resolution on some regulations governing the revision of the electoral law for the National People's Congress and the local people's congresses. They also examined the explanations on the four draft laws and raised many good opinions. The bills committee held three meetings on 7 and 8 December to conscientiously examine the four draft laws article by article according to the opinions raised by the deputies. The bills committee holds that the four laws will be the first to be enacted following the adoption of the constitution and will play an important role in developing socialist democracy and strengthening the socialist legal system.

The report says: The bills committee considers the four draft laws generally feasible. At the same time, it suggests that the four draft laws be submitted to the NPC session for approval after making some revisions in light of the opinions raised by the deputies.

The meeting adopted the report by the bills committee and decided to submit the four draft laws to the NPC session for voting.

Today's Presidium meeting also adopted a draft resolution on the report on the work of the NPC Standing Committee, a draft resolution on the reports on the work of the Supreme People's Court and the Supreme People's Procuratorate, and a draft resolution on the number of deputies to the Sixth NPC and their election, and decided to submit them to the NPC session for voting.

After hearing a report on the examination of motions by Chairman Luo Qingchang of the Motions Examination Committee of the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC, the meeting adopted the report and decided to submit it to the NPC session for voting.

Other executive chairmen of the Presidium attending today's meeting were Ulanhu, Wei Guoqing, Li Jingquan, Peng Chong, Seypidin, Ngapoi Ngawang-Jigme, Xu Deheng, Shi Liang and Yang Shangkun.

ZHANG AIPING ON NEED FOR ECONOMIC SUCCESS

OW091246 Beijing XINHUA in English 1222 GMT 9 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 9 (XINHUA) -- Success in economic construction is the material basis for strengthening national defence capabilities, Chinese Defence Minister Zhang Aiping said in an interview carried in today's LIBERATION ARMY DAILY. It is essential, he said, to retrench defence expenditure in peace time to ensure a rapid development of the national economy, and a powerful economy will, in turn, fortify national defence against the eventuality of aggression.

At the same time, the defence minister said, it is also necessary to reside [as received] the resources of defence departments in various sectors of the national economy so it will be able to change over smoothly from a peace-time to a war-time basis when the need arises.

The armed forces should participate in national reconstruction not only in terms of personnel but also in terms of science and technology, Zhang Aiping said. Breakthroughs in science and technology often originate in the military area and their application will promote the economic growth, he added.

The defence minister, who is attending the fifth session of the fifth national congress, said that the new constitution explicitly provides for the revolutionization, modernization and regularization of the People's Liberation Army and the strengthening of national defence.

In the present-day world, he said, peace can be preserved only when the most thorough-going preparations are made against aggression. Preparedness against war, the minister said, not only concerns the armed forces but the whole nation as well. Defence of the country and resistance against aggression is the sacred duty of every citizen of the People's Republic of China as stipulated in the constitution, he added.

In time of peace, he emphasized, continued efforts must be made to educate the people to be vigilant against a possible war of aggression.

The mobilization of the armed forces in the event of war is not only a matter of mobilization of personnel. A more important and complicated job is the mobilization of logistic support.

Minister Zhang, who commanded the P.L.A.'s first combined ground-sea-air operation in the mid-50's in liberating several offshore islands, stressed the modernization of logistics.

It is imperative, he said, to raise the scientific and technical level of logistic personnel, improve the technical equipment of the logistic services, and get industrial, commercial, medical and transport departments involved in preparedness against war so they can be quickly mobilized to aid the logistic services in time of war.

While carrying on its glorious revolutionary traditions, Zhang Aiping said, the People's Liberation Army must press forward and adapt itself to the new circumstances.

ZHAO, OTHER LEADERS MEET ASIAN GAMES GROUP 9 DEC

OW091536 Beijing XINHUA in English 1508 GMT 9 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 9 (XINHUA) -- Zhao Ziyang, Wan Li and other party and state leaders met with the Chinese Asian games sports delegation, which recently returned from New Delhi, at the Great Hall of the People this afternoon.

Zhao Ziyang said "The Chinese athletes did very well at the Asian games and won honor for our country. This is an encouragement to all the Chinese peoples."

"The sports front has made good progress in recent years. The achievements have spilled over from the sphere of physical culture and boosted the people's confidence in the four-modernizations program. If the sports front can scale high peaks why couldn't other fronts? It all depends on human effort," he said. "We must analyze the progress in sports and promote it further. Chinese athletes must make still harder efforts, thus displaying their full skills to the world," he said.

Wan Li said "The Chinese athletes achieved excellent results at the Asian games. This is not a small thing. It will play a big part in encouraging our nation's fighting will. We should thank you. Ours is a socialist country. At the Asian games, our athletes demonstrated good manners, discipline and sportsmanship. This is our country's honor and is very valuable," he said.

Also present were other party and state leaders Fang Yi, Yang Shangkun, Yu Qiuli, Song Renqiong, Liao Chengzhi, Peng Chong and Ngapoi Ngawang Jigme; Vice-Chairmen of the National Committee of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference Liu Lantao, Xiao Ke and Qian Changzhao; leading members of the departments concerned; leaders from across the nation who are attending the Fifth Session of the Fifth National People's Congress, and Lin Liyun, head of the Taiwan delegation to the congress.

After the meeting, party and state leaders were photographed with both the athletes and the representatives of the national Wushu (Chinese martial art) work meeting being held here.

Wan Li and others also attended a tea party for the delegation given by the Chinese Physical Culture and Sports Commission and the All-China Sports Federation.

RENMIN RIBAO RECALLS BIRTH OF NEW CONSTITUTION

HK100726 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 7 Dec 82 p 3

[Article by Jin Feng [6855 7685]: "All Power Belongs to the People -- Notes on the Solemn Passage of the New Constitution at the 5th Session of the 5th NPC"]

[Text] It was 4 December, 1982. The sky was clear and the wind was piercingly cold in Beijing's early winter. But it was warm as spring and bright and splendid inside the grand and magnificent Great Hall of the People. Under the high oval ceiling, several hundreds of lights were shining like the bright stars in the sky. Mercury vapor lamps on both sides of the hall emitted a brilliant radiance. More than 3,000 deputies to the NPC, full of joy and in high spirits, calmly entered the Great Hall of the People. They came, on behalf of 1 billion people, to exercise the supreme power of the state and vote on the adoption of the 4th Constitution of the PRC.

More than 3,000 pink voting slips in 6 languages, Chinese, Mongolian, Tibetan, Uyghur, Kazakh and Korean were sent to the delegates. They earnestly wrote down their opinions on the slips and then solemnly passed through the conference hall of the NPC, casting their votes into 30 red ballot boxes sealed with the national emblem.

Yuan Xuefen, deputy from Shanghai and a famous Yueju opera actress, was suffering from illness, but she came, propped up by two people, to cast her vote. Shiliang who is over 80 came in wheelchair to cast his vote. Some elderly and ailing deputies cast their votes seperately at home or in the hospital. This was not an ordinary vote but a vote representing the sacred will of the people all over the country concerning the future of the motherland and the destiny of the nation. The delegates delightedly said that this was a vote for the prosperity of the motherland and for the happy life of the people all over the country.

This was a historic moment. Time almost stood still. The delegates could not refrain from thinking of the revision, examination and discussion of the new constitution.

The revision of the constitution received active, meticulous, cautious and attentive work over 2 years and 2 months. The draft constitution promulgated by the Standing Committee of the NPC in April this year was discussed by the broad masses of 29 provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions, Taiwanese compatriots, compatriots of Hong Kong and Macao and overseas Chinese. According to estimates, about 80 percent of the citizens of the country participated in the discussion. This is a precious practice of 1 billion people directly administering state affairs, which is perhaps unprecedented in Chinese history and in the history of the world. It fully shows that all powers of the PRC belong to the people and that people are the main force of state power. NPC deputies from Guizhou disclosed that in their remote province alone, 2,286 discussion meetings were held, attended by some 46,000 experts, scholars and people from all walks of life. Similarly, numerous meetings were held all over the country to discuss the constitution. Thousands and thousands of valuable suggestions reached the constitution revision committee and the members of the committee made an overall revision of the draft constitution to be submitted to the NPC for examination and approval.

The 3,000-odd delegates attending seriously observed the duty of the organization of the supreme state power and they, on behalf of the 1 billion people, exercised the power of administering state affairs, examining, approving and formulating the fundamental law of the state.

Workers, peasants, PLA officers and soldiers, intellectuals, minority nationalities, overseas Chinese, and delegates from Taiwan, Hong Kong and Macao all actively delivered speeches at the conference and, from different angles, talked about how the new constitution guarantees the interests of different areas, nationalities, levels and organizations which they represent and the expansion of the rights of the people to be their own masters in state affairs. They deeply felt that it is the essence of the new constitution that all powers belong to the people. This is decided by the state nature and social system of our country which has the public ownership of means of production as its base.

How can we ensure that all powers belong to the people? Hu Sheng, a delegate from Shanghai and also a famous historian who took part in the work of the constitution's revision, stressed that this can be accomplished through the system of the people's congress as stipulated by constitution. He said that the new constitution has enlarged the power held by the NPC, the Standing Committee of the NPC in particular. When the Standing Committee of the NPC genuinely becomes the resident representative, it can effectively exercise legislative and suprevisory power on behalf of the people. That all powers belong to the people, also means people may, in accordance with laws, run state, economic, cultural and social affairs through various channels and in various forms. The constitution also stipulates that state-run enterprises practice democratic management through the congress of workers and staff and other means and in collective economic organizations, all laborers elect and discuss the management personnel and make decisions on the important problems in business operation and management.

In addition, people's delegates below the county level should be directly elected by the electorate. The neighborhood urban committees and village committees in rural areas are the autonomous organizations of masses, handling public affairs and public welfare in localities. All these stipulations in the new constitution ensure the rights of the broad masses to be masters of their own affairs.

Hu Sheng also said that being a delegate to a people's congress must not be an honorable post only. A delegate must be a people's statesman, know state affairs, be well versed in law and be capable of exercising legislative power and playing the role of the organ of state power on behalf of the people of the whole country. A delegate from Beijing, Hi Helin, and many other delegates called for the strengthening of the activities of the delegates to people's congress and the strengthening of the connections between the delegates and electorate, thus bringing into full play the role of the system of the people's congress and genuinely ensuring that all power belongs to the people.

After the formulation of the constitution, the delegates, on the grounds of the historical experince, have paid much attention to the implementation and stability of the constitution. Some delegates wished to have an authoritative organization to supervise the implementation of the constitution. Comrade Peng Zhen, vice-chairman of the Standing Committee of the NPC, spoke at the meeting of the Presidium, saying that the constitution has stipulated that the NPC is the organization of supreme state power and the Standing Committee of the NPC, the chairman of the state, the State Council, the Central Military Commission, the Supreme People's Court and the Supreme People's Procuratorate all spring from and are supervised by it. It is hard to imagine the existence of a more authoritative organization. As the NPC holds one session every year, the power of the Standing Committee of the NPC must, therefore, be strengthened and both the NPC and the Standing Committee of the NPC have the power to supervise the implementation of the constitution. Six special committees have been established within the NPC and its Standing Committee in accordance with the constitution. Any problems which the NPC and its Standing Committee deem to violate the constitution may be submitted to relevant special committees for study. Members of the Standing Committee of the NPC may expose any deeds violating the constitution and all delegates, citizens and units may report offences and submit them to the special committees of the Standing Committee of the NPC for study. Meanwhile, the standing committees of the people's congresses at all local levels must also bear such responsibilities. If the Standing Committee of the NPC fails to properly exercise the supervisory power on the constitution, the NPC may cancel, change and recall all personnel of the Standing Committee of the NPC. At the same time, the delegates to the NPC must be supervised by the units from which they are elected and the original units may recall one or two disqualified delegates. In short, all deeds violating the constitution must be severely dealt with.

As for the stability of the constitution, Han Feizi, a famous representative of Legalists in ancient China, said: "The best legal system is a stable one." And "if we frequently change laws in administering a large country, people will suffer." Even ancient people 2,000 years ago sensibly realized the importance of the stability of law. Delegates from Beijing remembered many important suggestions made by Peng Zhen, the vice-chairman of the Standing Committee of the NPC, while they were discussing and examining the draft constitution in groups. Comrade Peng Zhen said: "The stable implementation of the constitution depends on whether the content is correct or not. The constitution of 1975 cannot be stabilized because some of its contents were wrong and people did not approve of it. The constitution of 1978 did not conform to objective reality either and needs to be revised.

"The constitution formulated this time after summing up both the positive and negative experiences in the past 30-odd years since the founding of the PRC, the serious revision lasting 2 years and 2 months, the discussion of people all over the country, and the examination and approval of the NPC, conform to reality and the people's will and interests, hence proving to be a more stable one. Of course, with the development of objective reality, certain provisions might be revised or added, but the essence would not be denied. For example, we cannot change the provision that 'all power of the PRC belongs to the people.' Neither can we change the provision that all citizens are equal before the law, and the provision that all parties, organizations, members of the armed forces, cadres and masses must carry out their activities within the scope of the constitution and laws and all organizations and individuals cannot enjoy privileges beyond the constitution and laws. This being the case, as people consider the constitution a good one and demand it to be stabilized, who would then overthrow it? I believe that it will be everlasting and on the whole stable." Some comrades, out of fear of the appearance of disturbance and a tortuous road in the future, wished that it could be implemented without a hitch. With a smile, Comrade Peng Zhen said: "It is impossible that there will be no disturbances at all. There are of course some black sheep among the 1 billion people in China. Things develop all along in the process of eliminating disturbance and overcoming difficulties. It will be all right if no violent disturbance appears in the future. Where is its guarantee? The best guarantee is in the fact that the constitution is mastered by 1 billion people. Through the rigorous tests of the 'Cultural Revolution,' the 1 billion people have raised their political vigilance and abilities to distinguish things and obtained experience to deal with bad people and deeds. As the power of the constitution is in the hands of the 1 billion people, it is possible to avoid violent disturbances such as the 'Cultural Revolution.'"

Some delegates also said that what they feared was the appearance of a situation where the constitution of 1954 was actually abrogated. As a ruling party, it is very important for the CPC to maintain the authority of the constitution. Comrade Peng Zhen said: "While drafting the constitution, we took this point into consideration. The constitution explicitly stipulates that all organizations including the Communist Party and all individuals including leading cadres of the Communist Party must not enjoy privileges beyond the constitution. There was no such a provision in previous constitutions and it is due to the lessons drawn from the 'Cultural Revolution' that this provision is stipulated in the new constitution. The party constitution adopted by the 12th CPC Congress also stipulates that the party must carry out its activities within the scope of the constitution and law. The spirit of both the party constitution and the PRC Constitution are identical. Provided that all Communist Party members establish a habit of genuinely becoming models in observing the constitution, it will become easier to handle state affairs. In the final analysis, it is the will of the people that decides the process of the life of the state. The Tiananmen Square incident is the best illustration of this. Consequently, the 1 billion people formulate the constitution and the constitution arms them. When the constitution is mastered by the people, it will become enormous material strength. All conspirators who intend to usurp the supreme power of the state will certainly break their necks."

Zheng Tianxiang, a deputy from Beijing and member of the Central Advisory Commission of the CPC, also said that if a ruling party refuses to observe the constitution, the constitution will become a mere scrap of paper. This is a bitter lessen we have drawn from the "Cultural Revolution." If a Communist Party member observes the constitution, it means he acts in unison with the party's Central Committee.

If he violates the constitution, it means he runs counter to the party's Central Committee. If he opposes the constitution, it means he opposes the party. That Communist Party members must observe the constitution is absolutely identical with the fact that the whole party must submit to the party Central Committee. Because the constitution represents the fundamental interests of the people and the policies and ideas of the party's Central Committee, it is precisely the constitution that integrates the party's ideas with the people's will.

Many delegates also said that after the formulation of the constitution, a propaganda movement should be vigorously carried out all over the country to make every household and individual understand it. In this way, the broad masses of the people will learn how to use the constitution as a powerful weapon in safeguarding their own interests, master the destiny of their own country and resolutely struggle against all deeds and behavior violating the constitution. In future, we must do everything, including administering the state, according to law, thus bringing about prolonged stability in our country and fully guaranteeing the happy life of the people.

The new constitution is the result of hard work. Whenever the delegates now recall the process of formulating the new constitution and the examination, discussion and approval of it, they really feel an upsurge of emotion and are very excited.

After the delegates cast their votes, the scrutineer opened the ballot box in public. Then the person in charge of the calculation counted the secret ballots of the delegates to the NPC and reported it to the presiding chairman.

The presiding chairman of the congress, Xi Zhongxun, solemnly disclosed: the number of delegates who should be present is 3,141; those who actually were number 3,040. The result of the vote was 3,037 in favour of the new constitution and 3 abstentions. According to the procedure of the revision of the constitution, with an adoption by over two thirds of the delegates, the new constitution went into effect legally and was to be promulgated by the Presidium of the congress after the conference. At that time, the conference hall burst into thunderous applause. This historical scene was immediately caught by photographers and television cameras.

After a protracted and tortuous struggle, the Chinese people have finally formulated and adopted a general program for stabilizing the country and administering the state. People all over the country may believe and feel relieved that our country will certainly march forward victoriously along the course of the new constitution.

RENMIN RIBAO STRESSES ROLE OF MAJOR ENTERPRISES

[Editorial: "Seriously Grasp Major Enterprises"]

[Text] Recently, Comrade Zhao Ziyang pointed out that in order to attain better economic results and accelerate economic construction, it is imperative to seriously grasp the major enterprises, which are of vital importance to the national economy as a whole. The major enterprises are the base for invigorating the national economy. Grasping the major enterprises is of great significance in attaining the great objective set forth by the 12th CPC National Congress.

According to statistics for 1980 supplied by the State Statistics Bureau, there are 380,000 industrial enterprises in the country, of which 1,020 are major enterprises, each submitting more than 10 million yuan of taxes and profits to the state annually.

These major enterprises account for only .27 percent of the total number of industrial enterprises but their total output value accounts for 31.2 percent of the total output value of the industry as a whole, and the amount of their taxes and profits submitted to the state account for 51.7 percent of the total amount of taxes and profits submitted by the industry as a whole. These major enterprises are the lifeblood of the national economy. They have great potential. They can make still greater contributions to the state if the socialist enthusiasm of their workers and staff can be fully aroused. Around these major enterprises are a large number of well-coordinated small- and medium-sized enterprises. The technical improvement and production development of the major enterprises will bring about the technical improvement and production development of the small- and medium-sized enterprises and subsequently motivate the quick development of the national economy as a whole.

To bring the role of the major enterprises into full play, it is necessary to consolidate them in accordance with the directives of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council on the all-round consolidation of state-run industrial enterprises. The key to consolidating the enterprises is to build their leading groups in such a way that they will be more revolutionary, younger in average age, better educated and more professionally competent. A summary of the experience over the past years shows that two basic conditions are required to run an enterprise well. First, it is necessary to carry out the principles and policies of the CPC Central Committee. Second, there must be a good leading group. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the CPC Central Committee has formulated a number of correct principles and policies. Different enterprises may score different results in implementing these principles and policies because their leading groups are in different conditions. For this reason, as in selecting the best cadres to grasp the 156 engineering projects years ago, a number of outstanding cadres versed in the trade and capable of creating a new situation should be posted as secretaries of party committees or directors of major enterprises. With their leading groups established and consolidated, the enterprises will consciously consolidate themselves according to state requirements. The major enterprises should consolidate themselves better, prove themselves advanced in the level of leadership and management and technical level and in scoring economic results, turn out beautiful, cheap and salable products and render good service to the users' satisfaction, so that they may set examples for small- and medium-sized enterprises of the whole country to follow.

It is necessary to continuously raise the business management level of major enterprises and gradually modernize their management. Management is a branch of study. It is necessary to seriously sum up our country's experience of business management in the past three decades and more, take in foreign experience useful to us and gradually set up a management system suited to the characteristics of various enterprises of different trades. It is necessary to further strengthen democratic management by the staff and workers and to improve all-round planned management, all-round quality control and all-round economic accounting. To attain better economic results and combine production with business management, it is necessary to proceed from reality to make corresponding changes in the ideology guiding enterprise management, in the way of doing business, and in organizational structure, management system and methods of work.

The series of reform measures, including giving enterprises greater decisionmaking power, adopted by the CPC Central Committee and the State Council in the past few years have played a major role in developing the national economy. The purpose of these measures is to institute the economic responsibility system in enterprises, whereby responsibility, power and profits are combined and assumption of responsibility is put in the first position. The fundamental aim is to make the staff and workers cherish the sense of being masters of their country and enterprises and fully display their initiative and creativeness in building socialism.

With the economic responsibility instituted, an enterprise will assign the state's economic responsibility to its various sections and offices and to every workshop, workers and staff member, so that all will join efforts in carrying the heavy load. The results of enterprise management are linked with the material interests of every worker and staff member. By creating an extra bit of wealth for the state, the workers and staff members will earn extra income and their collective welfare will be a little better. It is not easy for major enterprises to combine responsibility, power and profits together, to strictly follow the state plan and at the same time to keep the initiative in their own hands. To attain this goal, we should improve the economic responsibility system on the basis of summing up experience.

The major enterprises should gradually shift their production to the base of advanced technology. It will not do just to build new factories with advanced technology without carrying out technical innovation in the old factories. If so, when a few hundred new factories are established, the machines of the old factories will stop. Our major enterprises should work hard for a period of time and strive to extensively adopt the advanced production technologies that were universally adopted by economically developed countries during the 1970's or the early 1980's and are suitable to our country's needs. To achieve modernization and technical progress, major enterprises require a plan for developing their production and carrying out technical innovation. On the basis of arousing all its workers and staff members to penetratingly discuss problems, the Shoudu Iron and Steel Company developed a plan to carry out 12 items of major technical innovation in 3 years. The funds needed were obtained through internal accumulation and profits gained from technical innovation. It also formulated a plan for improving the well-being of its workers and staff members. Thus, the workers and staff members can see to what extent production can be developed and their livelihood improved through their own efforts. The road paced by the Shoudu Iron and Steel Company is the new road that we have been advocating for developing the economy.

The major enterprises are the focus of our economic work. It is proposed that various localities and departments will first of all concentrate forces to grasp one or two major enterprises through to the end and with good results.

DEVELOPMENT OF INDIVIDUAL ECONOMY STAGNATES

HK100223 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 10 Dec 82 p 4

[From CHINA FINANCE AND TRADE JOURNAL: "Individual Traders Held Back by Wrong Ideas"]

[Text] In recent months, the development of the individual economy has stagnated in both cities and countryside. The primary reason is that long-standing "leftist" ideology has not yet been entirely liquidated.

Some comrades have a poor understanding of the role of the individual economy during socialist construction. Others are still wary of it. Therefore, they frequently discriminate against it.

In some places, applications for business licenses must be approved by many units. In some districts, individual dealers are forced to move from place to place because there is an over-emphasis on keeping the city tidy.

Some individual dealers have met restrictions on their sources of goods, compelling some to stop their dealings.

Some licenses have been rescinded and some have to pay high charges or fines under all sorts of pretexts.

Unless these things are corrected, it will be difficult to invigorate the urban and rural economy.

Developing the individual economy is a long-term policy of our party and state.

It is not an expedient. Although there has been some revival of the individual economy in various degrees throughout the country over the past few years, it has been inadequate, however, for invigorating the economy, making life more convenient and creating more job opportunities.

CHINA DAILY CARRIES ARTICLE ON PORT EXPANSION

["Opinion" column by Jiao Xuan: "Growing Economy Spurs Expsnsion of China's Ports"]

[Text] In order to keep up with the rapid development of our country's economy and foreign trade, priority has been given to the reconstruction of the ports that dot China's 18,000-kilometre coast line and 108,000-kilometre of navigable rivers.

In 1980 and 1981 many old harbours were upgraded and 11 10,000-ton-class berths were built or expanded for handling containers, coal, ore, grain and general goods.

Advanced loading and unloading facilities and modern management have been introduced at these harbours, of which some have installed electronic piloting equipment.

These harbours are mainly located at the principle seaports, such as Tianjin in northern China, Nantong in the east and Huangpu in the south.

The yearly handling capacity of China's seaports has soared from under 10 million tons in the early 1950's to over 200 million tons.

Shanghai, the country's biggest harbour, has built seven new berths since 1980. Out of its some 100 berths, 50 are deep-water berths of 10,000 tons. With the introduction of programmed belt conveyors, electronic remote control and television monitoring, the harbour handled more than 83 million tons of cargo last year.

The country's first modern specialized wharf for containers was completed and put into operation in Tianjin Harbour last year.

In the same year two wharves each with an annual handling capacity of 670,000 tons of sundry goods were also built.

Tianjin now has altogether 20 deep-water berths of 10,000-ton-class, and the harbour's annual handling capacity has increased to 11.75 million tons.

The nation's major foreign trade ports had a total of 141 deep-water berths of 10,000 tons by the end of 1981.

Seaport construction, hwoever, cannot meet the need of the rapid development of the country's foreign trade. There are often jams and crowding at the harbours.

To augment the handling capacity, plans have been made by the communication departments to build deep-water berths at 15 major seaports, such as Dalian, Qinhuangdao, Tianjin, Qingdao, Shijiugang, Lianyungang, Shanghai, Huangpu, and so on.

Coal Export

In the near future stress will be given to the construction of wharves for coal export.

At Qinhuangdao Harbour the first-phase project of a 50,000-ton berth and a 20,000-ton berth will be completed next year, and the second-phase project of two 50,000-ton berths will be finished in 1984.

When this programme is completed Qinhuangdao will be the biggest port for coal export.

At Shijiugang, the newly-built port in Shangdong Province, the first-stage programme is a 100,000-ton berth and a 50,000-ton berth, in addition to a 300-kilometre railway from the port to Yanzhou coal mine.

The completion of the Qinhuangdao and Shijiugang programmes by 1985 will increase the country's coal export capacity by 35 million tons a year.

Another emphasis for port construction is to expand container transportation. China's six major ports including Shanghai and Tianjin handled more than 100,000 standard containers in 1981. Among the 50 deep-water berths under construction now, seven are specialized container wharves, which, when completed, will help boost the country's total handling capacity to 700,000 containers.

River transport development is focused on the Yangtze, and the Grand Canal between Beijing and Hangzhou.

More 10,000-ton-class berths for ocean-going ships will be built at the harbours of Nanjing, Zhenjiang, Zhangjiagang and Nantong. And the major coal wharves at the ports of Pujiang, Hankou and Zhicheng will be expanded.

The Grand Canal between Xuzhou and Yanghou will be developed to raise the capacity of coal transport.

OIL DEPOSIT DISCOVERED IN SOUTH CHINA SEA

HK031026 Guangzhou Guangdong Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 2 Dec 82

[Text] After the sinking of a high-yielding oil well in the Baibu Gulf of the South China Sea in a joint Sino-French operation, good news has again come from the Sino-French cooperative area in the Baibu Gulf. A well jointly drilled by the branch of the South China Sea Petroleum Company and the (Daotaer) [0451 6671 1422] petroleum company of France poured forth fine-quality industrial oil and gas [words indistinct]. It was a high-yielding well.

The designed depth for this well was 2,600 meters. The actual depth reached was 2,269 meters. The No 4 Nanhai drilling platform of the branch of the South China Sea Petroleum Company had undertaken this drilling. Only 36 days were spent from the beginning of drilling to access to the targeted layer. Of several layers probed [words indistinct], only one emitted a daily output of 240 pounds of crude oil and 27,000 pounds of natural gas.

CHEN MUHUA INSPECTS SHANGHAI ISLAND 'RECENTLY'

OW031407 Shanghai City Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 29 Nov 82

[Text] According to WEN HUI BAO, entrusted by Premier Zhao Ziyang, Chen Muhua, state councillor and minister of foreign economic relations and trade, recently inspected Chongming Island and had discussions with the leading comrades in Shanghai on the feasibility of developing Chongming Island's foreign trade.

It has now been planned that preparations will be carried out for building a large corporation for dismantling old ships and producing rolled steel on the island. On the morning of 27 November, the departments concerned participating in the preparatory work held their first joint session to discuss specific details.

LIAO CHENGZHI ADDRESSES OVERSEAS CHINESE MEETING

OW090900 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1703 GMT 8 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, 8 Dec (XINHUA) -- At the invitation of the State Council Overseas Chinese Affairs Office and the All-China Federation of Returned Overseas Chinese, NPC deputies and CPPCC members representing returned overseas Chinese at the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC and the Fifth Session of the Fifth CPPCC National Committee attended a meeting held at the Great Hall of the People tonight to discuss how to further improve overseas Chinese affairs.

NPC deputies and CPPCC members representing returned overseas Chinese in Guangdong and Fujian pointed out in their speeches: Great accomplishments have been achieved in the field of overseas Chinese affairs since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. The new constitution adopted by the current NPC session has immensely encouraged overseas Chinese and returned overseas Chinese because it has prescribed, in the form of law, that the legitimate rights and interests of overseas Chinese and the lawful rights and interests of returned overseas Chinese and the relatives of Chinese nationals living abroad will be protected. They indicated that they would carry forward the patriotic tradition and contribute their efforts to the motherland's socialist modernization.

During the meeting, they also presented many constructive opinions on improving the federations of overseas Chinese, implementing the overseas Chinese affairs policies, bringing the returned overseas Chinese role into fuller play, and so forth.

Liao Chengzhi, vice chairman of the NPC Standing Committee and director of the State Council Overseas Chinese Affairs Office, attended the meeting. In his speech, he reviewed the situation of overseas Chinese affairs during the 33 years since the founding of the republic. He said: It is highly significant that the policies governing overseas Chinese affairs have been written into the state's fundamental law. Overseas Chinese affairs are very promising. Under the new situation, we must work in close coordination with departments concerned, handle our overseas Chinese affairs well in a down-to-earth manner, and bring the enthusiasm of the broad masses of overseas Chinese and relatives of Chinese nationals living abroad into fuller play. He also urged those who are engaged in managing overseas Chinese affairs not to seek false reputation, do more solid work and be willing to be unknown heroes.

Zhuang Xiquan, vice chairman of the CPPCC National Committee and chairman of the All-China Federation of Returned Overseas Chinese, and leading members of departments concerned, Chuang Mingli, Hong Sisi, Lin Yixin, Lin Xiude, Lian Guang, Peng Guanghan, Zhuang Yanlin, Huang Dingchen and others attended tonight's meeting.

LABOR MINISTER VIEWS NEW FIVE-YEAR PLAN

OW031902 Beijing XINHUA in English 1642 GMT 3 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 3 (XINHUA) -- Zhao Shouyi, minister of labor and personnel, has described China's Sixth Five-Year Plan as a program to promote the country's modernization and improve the people's living standards.

In an interview with XINHUA, Zhao Shouyi said it is necessary to raise living standards on the basis of increased production, particularly by increasing labor productivity, and not by cutting back necessary construction funds.

Therefore, he said, the increase in average wages will necessarily be lower than that of productivity.

According to the Sixth Five-Year Plan outlined by Premier Zhao Ziyang at the current session of the National People's Congress, the average annual increase of the peasant's per-capita income will be six percent and that of the total payroll for workers and staff, 4.9 percent.

Zhao Shouyi said the present wage system must be reformed step by step to overcome the influence of equalitarianism.

On the question of employment, Zhao Shouyi stressed the expansion of the urban collective and cooperative economy as a major measure to help provide 29 million people with jobs, as required by the Sixth Five-Year Plan.

The minister recalled that from 1978 to 1981, the government spent 140 billion yuan on raising the purchasing prices of farm and side-line produce, increasing wages and creating job opportunities for urban youngsters.

In less than four years, 26 million job-seekers were employed in urban China, he said Out of the 29 provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions, 24 have give jobs to all 1980 and earlier school leavers. Unemployment has become a question of the past for more than 20 medium-sized cities.

ACADEMY OF SCIENCES HEAD ON FUTURE TASKS

OW060851 Beijing XINHUA in English 1224 GMT 5 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 5 (XINHUA) -- Lu Jiaxi, president of the Chinese Academy of Sciences, said today he expects science to play a major role in realizing China's goal for the year 2000.

A deputy to the National People's Congress, the renowned physicochemist said scientific work must be geared to the needs of economic development if China is to quadruple its gross industrial and agricultural output by the end of the century.

"Half of the success would depend on science," he said in an interview with XINHUA.

Chinese scientists are encouraged that Premier Zhao Ziyang, in his report on China's Sixth Five-Year Plan, listed education and science as one of the three strategic factors making for attainment of the goal, he said.

Lu Jiaxi welcomed the increase in government spending on education, science, culture, public health and physical culture, which will account for 15.9 percent of the total expenditure during the Sixth Five-Year Plan period, as against the 11 percent under the Fifth Five-Year Plan. "This also means an increase in our responsibility as scientists," he said.

Lu Jiaxi cited some of the major subjects to be studied by the academy to meet the needs of economic development. They include integrated circuitry, computer technology and software, genetic engineering, new materials, laser and optical instruments, and remote sensing technology.

Emphasizing the importance of computers for technological progress and better economic performance, he said: "China has a fairly strong contingent of scientists and technicians. We need not follow in the footsteps of the West and concentrate on large-scale computers. We may produce smaller ones with new designs."

China also has favorable conditions in developing software, he said.

"Our students generally are given a sound mathematics training all the years from primary school to college," he said. "We can develop software entirely through our own efforts."

With regard to remote sensing and optical technology, Lu Jiaxi said Chinese scientists have done much work in this field, the results of which have been reflected in pre-construction studies for hydro-electric power stations, the detection of the sources pollution in Beijing, Tianjin and the Bohai Bay, and in other projects.

"Theodolites made by our Changchun Precision Optical Instruments Institute are among the best in the world," he said. "We are going to set up two research service centers, one for the development of optical instruments and the other for that of remote sensing technology."

He expected China's spending on scientific research to increase further with the development of the national economy.

"This will make greater demands on us scientists," he said, "but we are happy about that."

NATIONAL AGRICULTURAL ZONING FORUM HELD

OW080009 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0048 GMT 2 Dec 82

Huaihua County has only 372,000 mu of farmland, 130,000 mu of water area but 2.29 million mu of hilly land. The per-capita hilly land for the farming population averages 8 mu. On the basis of in-depth investigation on the resources and on agricultural zoning, this county decided, in its agricultural development plan, that it will engage in diversified undertakings with emphasis on afforestation in the days to come.

Ji County in Shanxi Province on the other hand also included forestry, animal husbandry and capital construction in its responsibility system under the agricultural development plan. Under the responsibility system, a contract will run through a connected sequence covering the cultivation of saplings, soil preparation, planting and management in afforestation with one or several households taking care of the above tasks totally.

Another form is contracting by jobs such as cultivation of saplings, soil preparation, planting and management in afforestation which are to be taken care by a number of households separately. Hilly land can also be contracted for specific purposes.

At the forum, the participants held that, while it is a good way to let household and individuals meet the demands of an agricultural development plan by dint of the responsibility system of contracting based on output, it is essential to pay attention to the scientific character and practicality, if it is to be effectively implemented and accepted by the masses.

FARM MACHINERY INDUSTRY FULFILLS ANNUAL TARGET

OW030926 Beijing XINHUA in English 0820 GMT 3 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 3 (XINHUA) -- China's farm machinery industry fulfilled its 1982 quota two months ahead of schedule, the farm machinery bureau of the Ministry of Machine-Building Industry announced here today.

By the end of October, the industry had produced 236,800 tractors under 20 horse power, 576,000 water pumps and 7.72 million hand-operated sprayers, increasing 45.9 percent, 47.1 percent and 39 percent, respectively from the same 1981 period. The state output balue target of 5,930 million yuan was also met, the bureau said.

Output of farm machinery in the first 10 months of 1982 in Hebei, Jiangsu, Zhejiang, Liaoning, Shandong and Guizhou Provinces, the Inner Mongolia Autonomous Region and Shanghai Municipality all increased more than 16 percent.

Output of large and medium-sized machines and implements was less than last year, while that of smaller machines increased sharply. The smaller ones consume less oil and are light and durable. They have proven popular and affordable with peasants, who operate on household basis.

The bureau said farm machine production still fell short of demand, especially for hand tractors, water pumps and rubber tyre carts.

At a recent national meeting held in Changsha, Hunan Province, for plancing orders for farm machines next year, the total orders almost doubled that at last year's meeting at Changzhou in Jiangsu Province, reaching 890 million yuan. The biggest orders for small machines came from Jiangsu, Shanghai, Henan, Shandong, Liaoning and Jilin, the bureau said.

HEILONGJIANG'S YANG YICHEN ON CONSTITUTION STUDY

OW100845 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 2230 GMT 5 Dec 82

[Text] In an interview with station reporters, Yang Yichen, first secretary of the Heilongjiang Provincial CPC Committee, said that the provincial CPC committee must take the lead in studying, publicizing, implementing and safeguarding the constitution. He also stressed that party committees at all levels and every party member must also take the lead accordingly.

Han Ningfu, second secretary of the Hubei Provincial CPC Committee, said we must adopt various measures to energetically publicize and intensively study the new constitution. Party members and cadres must be models in implementing and safeguarding the constitution and in waging struggles against all acts detrimental to the constitution, he stressed.

SHENYANG PLA UNITS DISCUSS NEW CONSTITUTION

SK090731 Shenyang Liaoning Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 8 Dec

[Excerpt] According to our sources, over the past few days, large numbers of commanders and fighters of the Shenyang PLA units have warmly studied the new constitution and, one after another, pledged to guard it.

(Wang Gongyi), a national fighting hero, said: That the state has established the Central Military Commission to lead the national armed forces in line with the stipulations of the constitution is an important strategic decision. It reflects the fact that the state and the people show concern for and pay attention to the army. As the fundamental law of the state, the constitution clearly defines the army's position in the state system. This totally conforms to the Marxism and Leninism viewpoint that the army is a major part of the state. This also reflects the actual situation and demands of the army since the PRC's founding and is thus conducive to the revolutionization, modernization and regularization of the armed forces. We will certainly carry forward the glorious tradition and accomplish with concrete actions the glorious mission entrusted to the army by the new constitution.

(Zhu Chenghan), a 68-year-old intellectual and the second chief of the eye, ear, nose and throat section of the general hospital of the Shenyang PLA units, had been subjected to persecution during the 10-year turmoil. After the 3d plenary session of the 11th party Central Committee, he was liberated politically, his professional speciality was restored and he joined the party in June 1981. After reviewing these experiences, he said with feeling: That the new constitution regards, in a legal form, intellectuals, together with workers and peasants, as the backbone force in socialist construction shows that the state and the people are concerned with and have confidence in intellectuals. I will make the best use of my remaining life to help create a new situation in medical work.

SEA LAW CONFERENCE CONCLUDES IN JAMAICA

117 States Sign Convention

OW110744 Beijing XINHUA in English 0736 GMT 11 Dec 82

[Text] Montego Bay, Jamaica, December 10 (XINHUA) -- One hundred and seventeen sovereign states signed the new sea law convention at a ceremony held at the Rose Hall Beach Hotel here today, an official source of the conference announced. This is the largest number of states ever to sign a convention in the history of international law.

China is among the 117 signatures.

Cook Islands, a New Zealand dependency, and the U.N. Council for Namibia, also signed the convention.

The United States, Britain, West Germany, Italy, Belgium and Japan were among those which declined to sign.

The convention will remain open for two years and will enter into force one year after it has been ratified by 60 states.

One hundred and fifty states and organizations signed the final act, a non-binding account of what has been accomplished.

Only Turkey which has a long-running dispute with Greece over the Aegean Sea declined to sign any document.

The preparatory commission will hold its first session in Kingston, Jamaica, next March, to draft a detailed mining code and arrange for the establishment of the sea-bed authority. All signatories to the convention are to participate in the commission's work, while governments that signed the final act only may send non-voting observers.

Final Session Closes

OW111150 Beijing XINHUA in English 1137 GMT 11 Dec 82

[Text] Montego Bay, Jamaica, December 10 (XINHUA) -- Tommy Koh, president of U.N. Conference on the Law of the Sea, today urged all signatory states to ratify the new Convention of the Law of the Sea as soon as possible.

While declaring the successful conclusion of the eight-year-long sea law conference at the closing session here this afternoon, the president indirectly appealed to the United States to reconsider its position on the new convention. The United States, Britain, West Germany, Italy, Belgium and Japan were among the countries which declined to sign it.

He warned that any attempt by any state to mine the resources of the deep sea-bed outside the convention, "will earn the universal condemnation of the international community and will incur grave political and legal consequences."

Speaking at the closing meeting, U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar said that the new law of the sea "is not simply the result of actions and reactions on the part of the most powerful countries but the fruit of the determination of an overwhelming majority of nations, situated in every corner of the world and having levels of development and diverse geographical features in relations to the oceans, which came together bringing a 'wind of change' at the universal level."

Hugh L. Shearer, deputy prime minister and minister of foreign affairs of Jamaica said that the convention is undoubtedly the most far-reaching international document negotiated since the United Nations Charter.

However, he pointed out, the task has not yet ended. There is still the need to get the requisite ratifications to bring the convention into force. "We must always bear in mind that although we have come a long way we still have a long way to go," he noted.

XINHUA Reviews Session

OW121549 Beijing XINHUA in English 1501 GMT 12 Dec 82

[Text] Montego Bay, Jamaica, December 11 (XINHUA correspondent) -- The Rose Hall Beach Hotel here witnessed a victory of the Third World countries when 119 [as received] countries signed the new Convention of the Law of the Sea yesterday.

Applause and cheers lasted minutes after the sea law conference chairman Tommy T.B. Koh of Singapore announced the birth of the new sea law convention signed by the largest number of states ever in the history of international law.

Participants in the conference were gratified with the success considering their 8-year-long arduous efforts for the convention.

At the first meeting of the Third Conference on the Law of the Sea held in Caracas of Venezuela in 1974, many Third World countries demanded rewriting the old sea convention, chiefly the four passed in Geneva in 1957, which benefited major world marine powers.

The demands included:

Territorial seas running 12 nautical miles off shore from coastal states and an exclusive economic zone up to 200 nautical miles out to sea. Beyond that the sea is the common heritage of mankind.

The ocean's minerals and other riches, which are worth trillions of dollars but the Third World was deprived the right of exploitation for various reasons, should be shared among the countries signing the new convention.

However, certain marine powers, particularly the United States and the Soviet Union, have since put up stubborn resistance against the demands on the pretext of freedoms of navigation, fishing and the high seas.

Even up to date when the majority of countries favored the new convention, a small number of countries proposed a "mini-treaty" as an alternative legal regime to the convention.

Among those countries that declined to sign the new convention were the United States, Britain, West Germany, Italy, Belgium and Japan.

Although the convention has shortcomings and limitations, it basically embodies the common aspirations and interests of most countries of the world in the exploitation of marine resources and the use of sea by mankind.

The convention will remain open for two years and will enter into force one year after it has been ratified by 60 states. There is sufficient reason to believe that the aim of the new convention will be realized so long as the signatories continue to work in the spirit of understanding, cooperation and consultation, and that the sea will be finally turned into a real asset of mankind.

RENMIN RIBAO Commentary

HK120822 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 12 Dec 82 p 6

["Short Commentary": "Congratulations on the Birth of the New 'Law of the Sea'"]

[Text] After 9 years of arduous sessions, the third UN law of the sea meeting finally concluded in victory with the birth of the new "Law of the Sea."

This important event marks the increasing growth and maturity of the Third World countries in the complicated and constantly changing political struggles and has shown that these countries already have become a force that cannot be neglected in the international political arena. These countries have paid attention to their strategy, worked to unite the majority, won over the most universal support and finally overcome obstruction by the superpowers and achieved a historic victory.

As a member of the Third World, China always has supported the Third World countries' struggle against marine hegemony. It always has advocated the formulation of a new law of the sea that would safeguard the proper rights of all countries and has taken an active part in formulating this new law. There are still some shortcomings in this new law, but basically it reflects the common wish and interests of most of the countries in the world concerning the exploitation of marine resources and the problems of man's exploitation of the sea. This law is the outcome of the prolonged struggle and efforts of a large number of Third World countries. Therefore, the government of our country has decided to sign the "UN Treaty on the Law of the Sea," and at the same time it has also pointed out its shortcomings and explained China's stand.

In implementing and enforcing the new "Law of the Sea," we undoubtedly will meet many kinds of resistance. This requires that all the countries that have attended this meeting, especially the Third World countries, carry out a resolute and unswerving struggle to safeguard what they have achieved and really to turn the seas into the common wealth of man.

RENMIN RIBAO Hails 'Victory'

HK120757 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 12 Dec 82 p 6

[Article by Wang Shifang (3769 1102 5364): "The Struggle Around the 'Law of the Sea'"]

[Text] The "UN Treaty of the Law of the Sea" finally has been signed after 9 years had been spent and many twists and turns undergone before agreement could be reached. As many as 119 [as published] nations and organizations signed, much more than the 60 needed to ratify a treaty. This is a tremendous victory for the member nations, especially the Third World countries, in repeated trial of strength with the two superpowers.

The New and the Old Treaties Are Utterly Different

The current "UN Treaty on the Law of the Sea" is different in essence from the four law of the sea pacts adopted by the first conference on the law of the sea in 1958. Only 80 countries attended that meeting, and due to the limitations imposed by historical conditions, only half of them were from Asia, Africa and Latin America. The four pacts drawn up under the manipulation of the major powers fully benefitted the superpowers in their pursuit of marine hegemonism but did not benefit the developing countries in defending their national sovereignty and preserving their national economic interests. The new treaty expresses the demands and principles long maintained by their world: Coastal states possess 12 nautical miles of territorial waters and establish outside those waters a 200-nautical-mile exclusive economic zone, and it is affirmed that "the international seabed and its resources are the commonly-inherited property of mankind." The treaty takes care of the interests of developing countries and also looks after the interests of developed countries and of both coastal and landlocked countries. Hence, this is a relatively rational treaty acceptable to the majority of countries. UN Deputy Secretary General Bernardo Suraita announced jubilantly: This "historic document" is "the first affirmation in history that the seas and their resources are the common property of man."

Of course this treaty is not absolutely perfect.

As China's delegate pointed out at the meeting: "The treaty's clause on innocent passage of territorial waters has not made clear-cut stipulations regarding the system for the passage of warships through territorial waters," and "there are also defects in the treaty's clauses regarding the definition of the continental shelf and the demarcation of exclusive economic zones and continental shelves between the neighboring and bordering states." Therefore, many clauses in the treaty will need to be perfected in the process of implementation.

Many Twists and Turns, No Easy Outcome

The new treaty was concluced only after clearing away all kinds of difficulties and obstacles.

At the strong urging of the developing countries, a second law of the sea conference was held in Geneva in 1960 specifically to discuss the questions of extent of territorial waters and scope of fishing zones. Although many medium and small countries waged a struggle at this meeting against the superpowers' marine hegemonism, the meeting was unable to reach agreement on these issues. By the early 1970's, in the changes in the international political situation, the number of independent Asian, African and Latin American states increased, and the voice of the developing countries became louder on the international scene. Due to their common efforts, the 25th UN General Assembly session in 1970 passed a "Declaration of Principles Regarding the Seabed and the Undersea Layers Outside Tettitorial Waters." This clearly stipulated: The international seabed and its resources are the commonly inherited property of man. This laid the foundation for the new treaty of today. The Assembly also adopted a resolution on deciding to convene a third UN Law of the Sea Conference to draw up a new all-embracing law of the sea.

This third conference was formally convened at UN Headquarters in December 1973. The meeting was held in stages. After many years of revision and drafting, a unified "unofficial comprehensive negotiating text" was adopted in April 1980 (this was the embryo of the new treaty). The official treaty draft then was gradually formulated on the basis of this text. The 10th session of the conference, held in August 1981, passed a revised "comprehensive text" which paved the way for the formal "Treaty on the Law of the Sea."

The contents of this draft covered a broad scope, including: Systems for the exploration and exploitation of the international seabed, the 12-nautical-mile territorial waters, the 200-nautical-mile exclusive economic zone, continental shelf boundaries, and marine environmental protection, together with free passage in international straits and so on. The first of these issues was the crux of the argument at every session of the conference. It actually reflected two diametrically opposed viewpoints: The Third World countries headed by the "Group of 77," together with relatively small developed countries, upheld the principle that "The international seabed and its resources are the commonly inherited property of man" and stressed that every country -- large and small -- had the right to share in the international seabed resources; and a few developed countries headed by the United States insisted on following the so-called "freedom of the seas" principle and would accept no restraints on their exploitation of deep sea seabed resources in an attempt to monopolize all of it for themselves. Both sides waged a tit-for-tat struggle. However, no matter how much the United States opposed it, the 10th session still passed the draft treaty.

The Struggle Is Not Yet Over

After the 10th session the United States roped in a number of developed countries to agree on a "little treaty" to counteract the Law of the Sea Treaty. Giving as its reason the fact that the treaty's provisions regarding exploitation of seabed minerals did not accord with U.S. interests, the United States announced that it would refuse to sign the treaty. Under U.S. manipulation the United States, Britain, France and West Germany signed a so-called agreement on exploitation of seabed minerals (the "little treaty"). This was aimed at taking advantage of the capital and technology they possessed privately to carve up the resources of the sea, which are the common property of man.

At this Montego Bay meeting the United States not only refused to sign the treaty but also exerted itself to "advise as many more countries as possible not to sign." This U.S. stand provoked extensive criticism from Third World countries. Premier Edward Seaga of Jamaica, the host nation, pointed out: The "little treaty" signed by the United States and a number of West European countries has no legality and "violates the provisions of the Treaty on the Law of the Sea." In fact, at this meeting on the law of the sea, even France -- one of the participants in the "little treaty" -- signed the new treaty. This shows that the United States certainly finds it difficult to influence others to cling obstinately to its course of boycotting the law of the sea.

Now the new "UN Treaty on the Law of the Sea," the focus of world attention, has been passed. Its birth is a hallmark of tremendous changes that have taken place in the balance of forces on the international political scene. Although all kinds of obstacles yet may be encountered on the way ahead, the floodgates have now been opened and an enormous flood is inevitable.

NATO FOREIGN MINISTERS' SESSION HELD IN BRUSSELS

Opening Session Held

OW101940 Beijing XINHUA in English 1913 GMT 10 Dec 82

[Text] Brussels, December 9 (XINHUA) -- The NATO foreign ministers' session today mainly discussed East-West relations and reaffirmed their determination to deploy medium-range nuclear weapons in Western Europe.

In his opening speech for the two-day session, honorary president of the session and Danish Foreign Minister Uffe Ellemann-Jensen said NATO's approach to East-West relations would be one of "firmness in policy and openness in approach."

He said that "further we should stress our willingness to pursue and improve the dialogue and to develop substantial and balanced East-West relations aimed at genuine detente."

He also called on new Soviet leader Yuriy V. Andropov to make the necessary contributions to improving relations between East and West.

The foreign ministers agreed that a political solution of the Afghan crisis would make an important contribution to improving East-West relations.

The foreign ministers reaffirmed support for the U.S. position of insisting on its "zero option" proposal at the Geneva talks on the limitation of medium-range nuclear weapons.

The alliance also once again showed its determinatioan to go ahead with the deployment in Western Europe late next year of 572 intermediate-range Pershing-2 and cruise missiles unless the Soviet Union agrees to dismantle its 333 SS-20 missiles which have been already deployed.

Ellemann-Jensen also called for better consultations between NATO member countries.

He said that only through consultations can NATO "maintain political solidarity" and "develop co-ordinated policies which can be expected to hold."

Final Communique Issued

OW110758 Beijing XINHUA in English 0746 HMT 11 Dec 82

[Text] Brussels, December 10 (XINHUA) -- NATO's foreign ministers conclude their two-day winter conference here today with a call to the Soviet Union for substantial actions to improve its relations with the West.

A final communique issued by the 16 foreign ministers said the participants "desire to improve relations with the member states of the Warsaw Pact and to extend areas of cooperation to their mutual benefit."

But the allies also "look to the Soviet leadership for tangible evidence that it shares their readiness to act in this spirit," the communique said.

It said the allies are "open to all opportunities for dialogue, will welcome any positive move to reduce tension, and desire, if Soviet attitudes allow, to cooperate in re-building international trust."

Speaking at a press conference after the meeting, NATO Secretary-General Joseph Luns also said, "NATO will reply positively to all chances, to all suggestions for a better understanding with the Soviet Union on the basis of reciprocity."

"In the face of the continuing and massive Soviet arms buildup," the communique said, "the legitimate security concerns of the allies remain and must be recognized."

The participants restated NATO's 1979 decision to begin the deployment in Europe next year of 572 cruise and Pershing 2 missiles homed in on Moscow, unless the Soviet Union dismantles its SS-20 missiles pointed at Western Europe.

The communique said that the allies agreed to maintain conventional and nuclear forces adequate to deter aggression and intimidation.

It said the allies call upon the Soviet Union "to accept a political solution which would bring an end to the sufferings of the Afghan people and allow the return to their homeland of over 3 million refugees."

However, this solution must be based "on the withdrawal of Soviet forces and respect for the independence and sovereignty of Afghanistan," it added.

The communique said the foreign ministers reaffirm "their readiness to cooperate with Third World countries on the basis of equal partnership" and call upon all states to make an effective contribution to the struggle against under-development and to refrain from exploiting those nations' economic and social problems for political gains.

Referring to the economic and trade relations with the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe, it said these relations must be consistent with the NATO states' broad security concerns which include the avoidance of contributing to Soviet military strength.

During the meeting, the foreign ministers also discussed the differences among the allies.

Secretary of State George Shultz told reporters after the meeting that problems exist between the United States and its NATO allies. But, "they have not spilled over, this meeting was a strong, determined meeting, a meeting of unity," he added.

Conventional Arms To Expand

OW122017 Beijing XINHUA in English 1839 GMT 12 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 11 (XINHUA) -- An NATO defense ministers' meeting, which ended on December 2 in Brussels, decided to expand NATO's conventional armament. It adopted a "six-year program" aimed at a large purchase of weapons and a modernization of its military equipment to counter the Soviet and Warsaw Pact armament.

U.S. President Ronald Reagan stressed at NATO summit held in Bonn last June that the security of the alliance depends on the supply of enough conventional armament by all the allies and that a strong conventional forces can move conventional or nuclear conflicts further away.

General Bernard W. Rogers, supreme allied commander, Europe, repeatedly called for the buildup of conventional forces. The Western press said that this is a new idea in NATO's strategies.

The change in NATO's strategies resulted from the development of the world situation in recent years, especially the change in the balance of forces between the United States and the Soviet Union and between NATO and the Warsaw Pact organization.

With the strengtheneing of the Soviet nuclear forces and the waning of the U.S. nuclear supremacy, the two superpowers have found their rivalry in a nuclear deadlock. In these circumstances, Western Europe has become more and more suspicious of the U.S. nuclear power. Even some U.S. Government officials are not very confident of their own nuclear deterrent.

According to a survey by the NATO general headquarters in May, the conventional force of the Warsaw Pact organization is twice as strong as that of NATO's.

In recent years, calls against weapons and nuclear war have become louder and louder in Europe, exerting a strong pressure on West European governments.

If NATO's member countries in Europe strengthen their conventional arms, the United States would be able to shift its forces to deal with the Soviets in other regions of the world.

Therefore, the member countries of NATO have supported Rogers's appeal to build up conventional forces and increase military spending.

However, that is not an easy job. As NATO countries are in a deep economic recession, they cannot afford to expand their conventional armament.

What is more, NATO is facing the controversial question of where it is going to place its orders for the huge amounts of conventional armament. Manfred Woerner, minister of defense of Federal Germany, suggested at a recent NATO meeting that the job should be divided in a fair way between the United States and West European countries so that each of the latter could play its role in developing more advanced conventional weapons.

Meanwhile, the West European allies are worried that the United States might disengage itself from West European defense.

Although all NATO countries wish to expand their conventional armament, they have different ideas and domestic difficulties and contradictions. NATO still has a long way to go before reaching its goal.

East-West Relations Examined

["Special Dispatch" by Reporter Yao Li [1202 4539]: "NATO Foreign Minister Conference Discusses Relationship Between East and West"]

[Text] Brussels, 10 Dec -- A 2-day NATO foreign minister conference concluded here today. A communique issued after the conference disclosed that the NATO countries are willing genuinely to relax the relationship between the West and the East, and reiterated that NATO will start deploying Pershing II and cruise missiles at the end of next year if the Geneva talks between the United States and the Soviet Union on the limitation of medium-range nuclear missiles ends in failure.

The final communique of the conference said that NATO wishes to improve the relationship with the Warsaw Pact countries and to expand the fields of cooperation. It also wishes that the new leaders of the Soviet Union will uphold the same spirit. The communique also admitted that mutually beneficial exchanges with the East will promote the establishment of a constructive relationship between the West and the East. Meanwhile it pointed out that the development of economic and trade relations with the Soviet Union and East European countries must serve the interests of security in the West and must not increase the military power of the Soviet Union. The communique reiterated NATO's support for the "zero option" raised by the United States at the Geneva talks and condemned the Soviet Union for its continuing occupation of Afghanistan and its use of chemical weapons in Southeast Asia and in the Afghanistan war.

Foreign Minister Moran of Spain's new government attended the NATO conference for the first time but did not sign on the final communique. He issued a statement saying that the Spanish Government of the Socialist Workers' Party holds that cooperation among the Western countries does not necessitate Spain's joining of NATO. He criticized the previous government for its failure to consult with the people on the issue of joining NATO. Moran's attitude caused much disturbance among the participants.

Greece also adopted a reserved attitude toward the deployment of missiles and other issues.

Claud Cheysson, the French minister of external relations, held that 1983 will be the hardest year for NATO since the end of World War II. This is due partly to the economic crisis in the West and partly to the implementation of NATO's plan to deploy missiles in Europe. On the eve of the conference, the U.S. House of Representatives rejected Reagan's proposal to manufacture the first batch of MX missiles and Denmark also temporarily froze the funds required for the deployment of medium-range missiles. As a result, the Western media fear that some new difference will appear in 1983 between the United States and Europe and it will not be easy to persuade the Western public to understand the necessity of deploying medium-range missiles.

U.S.-EEC TALKS DO 'LITTLE' TO SOLVE DIFFERENCES

OW110810 Beijing XINHUA in English 0749 GMT 11 Dec 82

[Text] Brussels, December 10 (XINHUA) -- The high-level talks between the United States and the European Economic Community (EEC) here today seemed to have done little to solve their differences over farm subsidies.

However, both sides attached importance to the alliance and expressed their will to seek a negotiated solution.

At a joint press conference this evening following the three-hour talks, Gaston Thorn, president of the EEC Commission, said, "We had a frank and excellent exchange of views on various issues including agricultural trade problem and East-West relations."

He stressed that the EEC's common agricultural policy is not negotiable and only specific problems can be negotiated.

U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz told reporters that "we don't comment on the EEC common agricultural policy. We only talk about the problems which the EEC's common agricultural policy caused."

The United States has long complained that the Common Market's exports of food produced by government-subsidized farmers are unfairly robbing American farmers of world markets. It has been pushing for some time to have the subsidies reduced, but the EEC has refused.

At the conference of General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) held in Geneva last month and after, the United States threatened to take retaliatory actions by considering giving U.S. subsidies to agricultural products to counter the EEC subsidies.

At today's press conference, U.S. Agriculture Secretary John Block held open options for the U.S. to retaliate against EEC farm subsidies. "We have not changed our views and we cannot specify actions to be taken," he stated.

Participating in the talks on the U.S. side were State Secretary George Shultz, Treasury Secretary Donald Regan, Agriculture Secretary John Block, Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige and United States Trade Representative William Brock. It is the largest delegation of senior U.S. Cabinet officials to join the EEC Commission this year in a bid to find a mutually agreeable path away from an agricultural trade war.

The EEC delegation was composed of its President Gaston Thorn, Vice-Presidents Francois-Xavier Ortoli, Wilhelm Haferkamp, Etienne Davignon, commissioner Poul Dalsager.

The talks also covered East-West relations and international monetary system. But the two sides differed on export credits and transfer of high technology.

U.S., NETHERLANDS CONCUR ON NUCLEAR ARMS

OW121637 Beijing XINHUA in English 1623 GMT 12 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 12 (XINHUA) -- U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz discussed nuclear arms with Netherlands Prime Minister Ruud Lubbers and Foreign Secretary Hans van den Broek yesterday on the third leg of his seven-country European tour.

Shultz said at the end of the talks that the United States and the Netherlands have no differences over nuclear arms policy and the Netherlands Government will prepare for the deployment of cruise missiles if the U.S.-Soviet Geneva talks on nuclear arms reduction fail.

Netherlands Foreign Secretary van den Broek told reporters after the talks that his government supports the "zero option" proposed by U.S. President Ronald Reagan and will decide whether to deploy intermediate range missiles in the Netherlands next fall.

Reports say the two countries have had disputes over the position of the United States on Nicaragua and El Salvador. Shultz defended the U.S. position saying the region's stability is upset by the Soviet Union's provision of arms to Cuba and Nicaragua.

U.S.-ASEAN MILITARY COOPERATION REVIEWED

OW101217 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1131 GMT 3 Dec 82

["United States Strengthens Military Cooperation With ASEAN (exclusively for TIANJIN RIBAO)" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, 3 Dec (XINHUA) -- Roundup by Ji Zonghua (1323 1350 5478), The United States Strengthens Military Cooperation with ASEAN:

Military cooperation between the United States and the ASEAN countries has been strengthened noticeably over the past year. This has been reflected mainly in the close strategic relations between the United States and ASEAN, the strengthening of joint military exercises and the increased military aid to ASEAN.

Southeast Asia is situated at a point where the Pacific and Indian Oceans converge; countries along the Strait of Malacca -- which connects the two oceans -- are ASEAN members. For this reason, in the struggle with the Soviet Union for control of the sealane the United States has paid special attention to strengthening military cooperation with the ASEAN countries.

With Soviet military forces moving southward -- especially with Cam Ranh Bay being used by the Soviet Navy and Air Force -- the Reagan administration has changed its policy of ignoring Asia following the Vietnam War. As soon as he assumed office Reagan declared that "The United States will support its Asian allies in the same way it supports its European counterparts."

The ASEAN countries hold that their own armed forces are weak and are no match for Vietnam even if the five countries join forces. Only by relying on the United States can they contend with Soviet and Vietnamese expansion in Southeast Asia. The five ASEAN countries ardently have hoped that the United States would enhance its security responsibility in the region.

Six months ago the Reagan administration formulated a set of new global military strategies with the strengthening of Asian defense as the key point, stipulating that in time of crisis the United States would redeploy its military forces from Northeast Asia to Southeast Asia and important navigation routes to the Persian Gulf.

In recent years the fighting strength of the 7th Fleet, the key U.S. defense force in the western Pacific, has been increased by 20 percent. This fleet has 175 large and small vessels. The number of Army personnel in the Asian-Pacific region has increased by 11,000.

The U.S. Pacific Fleet has been modernized. This year the United States has equipped the 7th Fleet with cruise missiles, and the first U.S. Trident nuclear submarine also joined the Pacific Fleet on 1 October. The United States also plans to deploy cruise missiles with conventional warheads in the Far East this year and to switch to nuclear warheads in 1984. In June next year, the large 58,000-ton warship "U.S.S. New Jersey" will be stationed in the western Pacific.

The United States also has decided to form a united command on 1 January next year to lead a rapid deployment force of over 200,000 men "to check Soviet aggression in Southeast Asia": It has an operational periphery that includes 20 countries in the Persian Gulf, the Horn of Africa and the Southeast Asian region. The headquarters will be in Florida.

Both the frequency and scale of mutual visits between the United States and ASEAN countries during the Reagan administration are far greater than in past administrations. The mutual visits have cemented strategic relations between the two sides.

The United States and Thailand started joint logistical operations in May last year to improve Thailand's logistical supplies and simplify the current security aid procedure to cope with any future crisis. In September last year, the United States and Thailand reached an agreement on the establishment of a command emphasizing defensive more than offensive missions.

During his visit to Thailand in November, Weinberger said that the United States has agreed to increase U.S. military loans to Thailand from U.S. $9.9 million to U.S. $12.5 million, making the military loan for fiscal 1982 total over U.S. $80 million. He also promised to speed up delivery of the weapons purchased by Thailand. The United States has also agreed to sell "Harpoon" missiles and "Red Eye" air-to-air missiles to Thailand this year.

The United States also drew up a joint defense plan with the Philippines in May this year. During Marcos' visit to the United States in September, the United States and the Philippines agreed to increase the contacts between the defense secretaries of the two countries and to discuss how the United States would help modernize the Philippine Armed Forces. The United States held that in view of Soviet activities in the region, the time was ripe to set up a joint military committee with the Philippines; the United States decided to establish such a strategic relationship with the Philippines.

During the 5-year period beginning 1979, the United States will provide U.S. $500 million in military aid in the form of rent for its bases in the Philippines. The Philippines has demanded higher rent, and the United States has agreed to discuss the issue ahead of time before April next year when the lease contract is due for renewal. The United States has sold U.S. $64 million worth of weapons to the Philippines this year.

The United States and Indonesia have strengthened strategic relations greatly since Suharto's visit to the United States in October and Weinberger's visit to Indonesia in November. This is especially true since the two countries decided to carry out a certain kind of "unofficial cooperation" in defense of the security of the territorial waters of Indonesia -- the "country with a thousand islands" -- particularly the security of the three major straits. Shortly thereafter the Indonesian defense minister again visited the United States to discuss U.S. help in modernizing the Indonesian forces.

Weinberger disclosed during his visit to Indonesia that the United States had provided U.S. $40 million in loans to Indonesia for purchasing weapons in 1982 and will provide another U.S. $50 million for fiscal 1983.

The United States also has established relations of military cooperation with Malaysia and Singapore. This year Malaysia spent U.S. $351 million to purchase 88 A-4L Skyhawk fighter planes to be used in 1984. Singapore has purchased position-finding radar systems for mortars from the United States.

Since the beginning of this year joint military exercises between the United States and ASEAN countries have increased noticeably. In September this year the U.S. 7th Fleet and the Singapore Air Force staged their first openly declared joint air exercise over the Strait of Malacca followed by a regular joint military exercise in the South China Sea in October. Joint military exercises between the United States and Thailand have become more frequent, increasing from twice in 1975 to 12 times this year. Similar joint military exercises also were held in late May between the United States and the Philippines.

The U.S. 7th Fleet constantly stages joint exercises in telecommunications and tactics with the ASEAN forces in the form of "visits." It is reported that the U.S. 7th Fleet spends half of each year cruising around ASEAN countries. These activities will help raise the fighting capability of the ASEAN countries and also lay the groundwork for future joint operations.

COMMENTARY ON U.S.-GREECE MILITARY BASES TALKS

OW101307 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 6 Dec 82

[Commentary by (Zhang Qihua) from the "International Current Events" program entitled "The Talks Between the United States and Greece on Military Bases"]

[Excerpts] After World War II, the United States set up dozens of military bases in Southern Europe including Greece, Spain and Portugal and stationed thousands of troops there. In recent years the situation in the region has become unstable and the governments of some of the countries have changed. U.S. military bases have become a troublesome and sensitive issue between the United States and South European countries. Therefore the United States is compelled to hold talks with these countries on the issue of military bases.

The resumption of talks between the United States and Greece is a conspicuous example. The current talks between the United States and Greece started at the end of October. The purpose of the talks is to discuss the future status of the four U.S. military bases in Greece. These U.S. military bases are in fact the component part of the Southern Military Command of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. Accordingly, the success or failure of the talks not only will influence the bilateral relations between the United States and Greece but also will have a bearing on NATO's southern defense.

In 1974 the Greek military regime instigated a coup d'etat in Cyprus which prompted Turkey to send troops to Cyprus. This caused serious antagonism between Greece and Turkey. In this particular incident, Greece complained that the United States did not stand on Greece's side and decided to pull out from NATO's military system. At the same time Greece objected to the use of military bases in Greece by the United States and asked the United States to review the status of its military bases. As a result, formal talks on the issue of military bases were held between Greece and the United States in 1975. Two new defense cooperation agreements were signed by the two countries in 1976 and 1977.

In 1976 the United States and Turkey signed a new defense treaty. Two years later the United States cancelled its ban on the shipment of weapons to Turkey. These two developments evoked unhappy sentiments in Greece. Greece viewed the U.S. action as an indication that the United States was paying more attention to Turkey than to Greece. As a result, Greece again challenged the United States on the issue of military bases and postponed the defense agreement signed earlier.

In October last year, when the Greek Socialist Party took power, relations between Greece and the United States faced a new test. The socialist government warned the United States that it would not be allowed to use Greek military bases if it did not guarantee that Greece would not be invaded by its neighboring countries. The socialist government also warned that Greece would pull out from NATO.

The growing disagreement between the United States and Greece delayed the resumption of talks between the two countries. Since 1975 Greece and the United States held talks off and on with many setbacks. During that period, owing to the strong demands made by Greece, the United States was forced to reduce its original seven bases to only four. In addition the United States ended its troops' extraterritoriality. Meanwhile the United States increased its military aid to Greece. However, both sides have not been satisfied with the results and disagreements still exist. There are still many disputes. The three main points are:

1. In contending for sovereignty over the Aegean Sea between Greece and Turkey, Greece wants the United States to guarantee that Turkey will not invade Greece. The United States, however, holds that it cannot give any guarantees since both Greece and Turkey are members of NATO.

2. On military aid, Greece wants the United States to maintain the ratio of 10 to 7 in its aid to Turkey and Greece in order to ensure the balance of power of the two countries in the Aegean Sea. However, the United States holds that military aid should be based on the balance between NATO and the Warsaw Pact and has refused to meet the Greek demand.

3. On the question of the use of these military bases, Greece insists that they should serve only NATO's purposes and opposes their use for any other purposes, much less their use against friendly countries. However the United States, in order to meet the challenge of Soviet expansion, wants to use these military bases in its strategy covering the Persian Gulf and the Mideast. Besides, Greece wants actual command power over these military bases and to have Greek military officers as commanders. The United States, however, suggests that both sides assign commanders and jointly control the bases.

The resumption of talks between Greece and the United States on military bases has been realized following a year of Greek Socialist Party rule. At the beginning the new government stressed that it would push an independent foreign policy and oppose the two major military groups. It even wanted to get rid of the U.S. military bases. The socialist government also claimed that Turkey was its main threat. However, based on actual developments during the past year, the present Greek Government's attitude toward the U.S. military bases has softened. It has said that Greece will not take any unilateral action and has hinted that Greece will let the United States extend the duration of its use of military bases. It hopes that the disputes between the United States and Greece will be solved through talks.

Western analysts are convinced that the change in the Greek attitude is due to its concern over the possibility that its excessive demands might cause the United States to tilt further toward Turkey and bring about unfavorable results for itself. On the other hand, in order to strengthen its military strength and consider its own best interests, the United States is also eager to resume the talks with Greece. Therefore the United States' initial reaction has been to promise to increase its military aid to Greece. The talks between Greece and the United States on military bases have now resumed following the deadlock in 1981. This can be interpreted as a result of concessions made by both sides. At present the talks have just begun. It is estimated that the talks may take more than half a year. Owing to the many contradictions there certainly will be some sharp bargaining in the talks. It is still hard to predict whether the two parties will sign a new defense agreement.

RENMIN RIBAO VIEWS NEW U.S. MILITARY COMMAND

HK110756 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 11 Dec 82 p 7

["Short commentary": "A Step in Intensifying Rivalry"]

[Text] The United States has announced that it will formally establish a new military command -- the central command -- on 1 January to exercise unified command over 230,000 men in the army, navy and air force in the Rapid Deployment Force. The broad scope of this command extends in an arc, centered on the U.S. base at Diego Garcia in the Indian Ocean, from Pakistan in the east to Kenya in the west. It is very obvious that this U.S. decision is aimed at strengthening its military forces in the Middle East, the Gulf and the Indian Ocean region, so as to contend with the other superpower in this region.

The situation has long been turbulent in this region, where contradictions are complex and fighting is breaking out all the time. This is the key post for the West's oil supply and its oil routes; it is a vital area for Western interests. When the Soviet Union invaded Afghanistan and pushed its forces southward, the Carter administration immediately prepared plans to set up a Rapid Deployment Force in the Middle East and openly announced it would not shrink from using force to defend the region. The Reagan administration has greatly speeded up the organization and formation of the Middle East Rapid Deployment Force. This latest U.S. decision shows that U.S. deployments have now been made specific and have reached the stage where they can be used in actual combat. This is bound to intensify U.S.-Soviet military confrontation and rivalry in the Middle East and the Indian Ocean region. The struggle of the peoples of the whole world and of this region to preserve peace and security in the Middle East will become still more arduous and complex.

XI ZHONGXUN MEETS LOS ANGELES GOOD-WILL MISSION

RENMIN RIBAO EXAMINES U.S. UNEMPLOYMENT PROBLEM

[Commentary by reporter Yuan Xianlu [5913 0341 4389]: "Increasingly Serious Unemployment Problem in the United States"]

[Text] The unemployment rate in the United States rose further to 10.8 percent in November. When the Labor Department issued this figure on 3 December, even those economists who had issued pessimistic forecasts were surprised.

The mid-term elections held not long ago showed that unemployment has become the number one concern of the American public. According to official statistics, the number of unemployed throughout the country in November was 12 million. However, a number of private institutions have pointed out in their investigation reports in recent months that the actual total of unemployed exceeds 20 million and that the proportion of adult unemployed workers with families to support is increasing rapidly. At the same time the government has cut unemployment relief drastically. In such circumstances, millions upon millions of families have fallen into a quagmire. Workers who are still employed are extremely worried about losing their jobs. Continued unemployment, in turn, adversely affects the economy. As a result, social consumption drops and industrial and commercial markets shrink. It is more difficult to effect economic recovery. Discontent among the unemployed leads to urban disturbances. Such things have happened in the past. It is not unrealistic that some people regard the unemployment problem in the United States as a "dangerous time bomb."

Will the present serious unemployment problem in the United States take a turn for the better? It is obvious that, in the foreseeable future, the prospects remain gloomy. Not long ago, Martin Feldstein, the newly appointed chief economic adviser to the President, predicted that the unemployment rate in 1983 would be 9 percent. This means 10 million people will still be unemployed. Some economists believe that next year's unemployment rate will be as high as 11 or even 12 percent.

The unemployment rate in the United States in July of last year was 7 percent. Since August of last year, the situation has worsened. In March of this year, the unemployment rate was 9 percent, the highest since the great depression in 1930's. The rate has continued to rise since then. This was caused by continued depression. President Reagan promised time and again that economic prosperity would come soon and that the unemployment situation would improve. However, there has as yet been no sign of improvement. In recent months, government officials have changed their tune and refrained from making any optimistic predictions. They stress that it is not easy to achieve rapid results in changing a difficult situation which has existed for several decades.

While talking about the problem of unemployment, Martin Feldstein also said that the unemployment rate would not drop to 6 or 7 percent in 5 or 6 years. Reportedly, the main reason is that the U.S. economy is undergoing a great reorganization. This will inevitably cause structural unemployment. He believed that the situation would improve after the completion of the reorganization.

In recent years, as the entire capitalist world has suffered through an economic crisis, U.S. economists have held the view that the present temporary difficulties occurring in the process of reorganization have resulted from scientific and technological development.

According to their view, at present, the United States and the West are undergoing a transition from the previous economy to a new one. Traditional industrial items such as iron and steel, textiles and so forth have declined, and new industrial items such as the computer industry and others based on advanced technology are emerging. In the process of the new replacing the old, problems occur. After the new industry is established, greater economic prosperity will occur. Some economists in the United States disagree with such a viewpoint. They point out that science and technology develop continuously. Naturally, productive forces in human society are constantly enhanced. However, this does not solve basic contradictions in the Western economy. They maintain that the problem which the Western economy faces is not the low level of productive capability or its failure to meet demands. The situation is exactly the reverse. In recent decades, governments of various Western countries have expanded demands artificially, according to the Keynesian theory. This has given rise to long-term inflation. Various countries are compelled to adopt "retrenched measures" to deal with economic difficulties. The occurrence of new industry will stimulate investments within a certain period of time so that economy improves. However, contradictions between supply and demand remain unsolved. On the contrary, they are aggravated. The debate is now going on. However, judging from the history of the United States and other Western countries, one thing is certain: The idea that scientific and technological progress and the occurrence of new industry will bring profits to capitalists and help workers avoid the calamity of unemployment is untenable.

USSR TO CONDUCT PACIFIC BOOSTER ROCKET TESTS

OW100306 Beijing XINHUA in English 0239 GMT 10 Dec 82

[Text] Moscow, December 9 (XINHUA) -- The Soviet Union will test-fire booster rockets from Dec. 12 to 22 in two areas of the Pacific Ocean and warned ships and aircraft to stay away, the Soviet news agency TASS reported today.

TASS said the firing will be in a radius of 60 nautical miles of two locations with these coordinates:

29 degrees 20 minutes north latitude and 176 degrees 00 minutes east longitude, and 23 degrees and 50 minutes north latitude and 177 degrees 00 minutes east longitude.

Planes and ships are asked to avoid the two areas from 12:00 to 16:00 local time during the 11-day test period.

Observers here noticed the Soviet test takes place at a time when the Soviet-U.S. strategic arms race is being stepped up.

SOVIET COSMONAUTS RETURN AFTER 211 DAYS IN SPACE

OW110754 Beijing XINHUA in English 0720 GMT 11 Dec 82

[Text] Moscow, December 10 (XINHUA) -- Two Soviet astronauts returned safely to earth Friday night after a record space flight of 211 days aboard the Salyut-7 orbital station, TASS reported.

The Soyuz-T-7 space ship carried Lieutenant-Colonel Anatoliy Berezovoy and Flight Engineer Valentin Lebedev home at 10:03 p.m. Moscow time, the report said. Berezovoy and Lebedev, both 40, spent nearly seven months in space, exceeding by almost a month the 185-day space endurance record set in 1980 by their countrymen Leonid Popov and Valery Ryumin.

The descent module landed in the "designated area" in the Soviet central Asian Republic of Kazakhstan and a medical checkup on landing showed the spacemen were "feeling well."

During the flight, they carried out some 300 scientific experiments including stellar constellations study, smelting semiconductors, medical biological experiments and some 20,000 photos of the earth's surface, the report said.

The crew mothballed the Salyut-7 station earlier Friday before uncoupling their space vehicle some two and a half hours before the landing.

The medical checkup on the spot showed that "they withstood well the long period of weightlessness," the report said.

The descent module floated down under a parachute and a special retrorocket was fired just before touchdown to cushion the landing. The capsule took ten minutes to touch down at night not far from the Baikonur space center in Kazakhstan where they were fired into space last May 13.

Weather conditions were good when the module reached the landing site. The temperature was minus 15 celsius, with high thin clouds and a light wind, the report said.

A special lighthouse equipped with a strong beam was installed at the site to guide helicopters with ground crews to assist the astronauts.

The Soviets began their space age on Oct. 4, 1957 when they for the first time in human history launched into space the artificial satellite "Sputnik-1." The Soviet program has been shrouded in secrecy since its inception although joint flights have been carried out with East Europeans and even Americans.

French Test Pilot Jean-Loup Chretien joined two Soviets last June in a space visit to Berezovoy and Lebedev who last August also received Svetlana Savitskava, the second spacewoman after the 1963 orbital flight of her countrywoman Valentina Tereshkova.

More than 100 satellites of different kinds are launched in the world each year, and U.N. data revealed two out of three are for military purposes.

TIKHONOV CONCLUDES VISIT TO FINLAND 11 DEC

OW111915 Beijing XINHUA in English 1839 GMT 11 Dec 82

[Text] Helsinki, December 11 (XINHUA) -- Chairman of the Council of Ministers of the Soviet Union N.A. Tikhonov ended his three-day visit to Finland and left for home today.

According to a communique issued at the end of the official visit, he and the Finnish president had talks over international situation and bilateral relations.

The communique said that the two sides made known their deep concern over the aggravation of the world situation, the increase in the danger of a nuclear war, and the continuing arms build-up.

Finland and the Soviet Union stressed the significance of the United Nations as an instrument for maintaining international peace and security and developing peaceful cooperation among all nations. They held that the United Nations' effectiveness should be increased, the communique said.

The communique adds that the Soviet Union and Finland noted the historical importance of the decree signed by V.I. Lenin which recognized Finland's independence and has formed the foundation for good neighborly relations between the two countries.

Both parties expressed their desire to develop their economic, scientific and technological cooperations and maintain high-level official contacts between the two countries.

SRV BEGINS DRY SEASON OFFENSIVE IN KAMPUCHEA

OW112020 Beijing XINHUA in English 1500 GMT 11 Dec 82

[Text] Bangkok, December 11 (XINHUA) -- A Thai woman became the first victim of the Vietnamese dry-season offensive against the Kampuchean resistance forces during fierce fighting in western Kampuchea yesterday.

Riem Mayotha was killed by shrapnel when two mortar shells slammed into her house in Aranya Prathet District, Prachin Buri Province.

Today's BANGKOK WORLD quoted an informed source as saying the two forces engaged in fierce artillery, mortar and rocket fire at Sihanoukville about five kilometers from the Kampuchean-Thai border, throughout yesterday afternoon. This battle was one of the biggest between the two sides during the past two months, he said.

Yesterday, a Thai patrol unit found about 30 unidentified armed troops about 500 meters inside Thailand at Kok Sabaeng village. The Thai soldiers fired machineguns forcing them to flee into Kampuchea.

Thai troop reinforcements have been sent to the area and put on alert to prevent any skirmishes inside Thailand.

RENMIN RIBAO Report

["International Jottings" by Tong Chang [6639 2490]: "Changing Trades"]

[Text] Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach denied that the Vietnamese troops invading Kampuchea would launch a dry season offensive against the Kampuchean patriotic armed forces. He said: "It is not worth it. There is no need to cast a big net for small fish."

Nguyen Co Thach knows best whether the Kampuchean patriotic armed forces are "small fish," or bones that stick in the Vietnamese authorities' throat. It is this very man who has cast a net all the way from Southeast Asia and West Europe to the United Nations, in order to catch these so-called "small fish." He has ended up by failing to catch these "small fish." Instead, these small fish have become bigger and bigger. Under these circumstances, the Vietnamese authorities are deploying troops and generals to launch a new dry season offensive against the patriotic armed forces. Nguyen Co Thach is also changing trades -- from casting nets to laying smokescreens -- in order to support this action. So long as the Vietnamese aggressor troops do not withdraw from Kampuchea, no one knows how many times the "versatile" Nguyen Co Thach will have to switch trades.

'DEADLINE' WILL NOT HAMPER HONG KONG ECONOMY

["Special Dispatch from Hong Kong": "Wang Kuan-cheng says the 'deadline' question has no substantive effect on Hong Kong's economy, saying it is necessary to have a correct understanding of the socialist motherland"]

[Text] In speaking about internal and external causes of Hong Kong's current economic difficulties at a party to mark the appointment of new members of the 33d Executive Board held on 17 November, chairman of the Hong Kong Chinese General Chamber of Commerce Wang Kuan-cheng said that he believed that after a short period of economic readjustment, a new stable and prosperous situation would be created.

He said: The temporary economic difficulties in Hong Kong at present are caused by the influence of the global economic recession. He also emphasized in his analysis the undesirable effects brought about by Hong Kong authorities' past policies of excessive land prices, excessive inflation and excessive social welfare -- the "three excessive policies". He pointed out, however, that many people have attributed Hong Kong's current economic difficulties to the 1977 "deadline". As a matter of fact, this question has no substantive effect on Hong Kong's economy. Some people have exaggerated it unduly and others have taken advantage of this kind of publicity to indulge in speculation and profiteering.

Wang Kuan-cheng stressed: Hong Kong and Macao compatriots must have correct understanding of the socialist motherland. At preseht, the modernization program is being carried out in the interior and the economic situation there is stable. This is the greatest guarantee for maintaining Hong Kong's stability and prosperity.

SOUTH AFRICA'S ATTACK ON LESOTHO CONDEMNED

[Text] Before dawn on 9 December, the South African racist regime sent its forces to outrageously attack Maseru, capital of Lesotho. They attacked the residential areas in the city and killed more than 30 residents including women and children. This was yet another bloody crime of invasion of a neighboring country committed by the reactionary South African authorities.

The reactionary South African authorities have time and again brazenly invaded and carried out armed provocation against Angola, Mozambique, Zambia, Zimbabwe and other neighboring countries. This shows that on the one hand the South African racist regime has already become a serious threat to peace and security in southern Africa and on the other hand that this reactionary regime has already got into an extremely isolated position of being besieged from all sides. The aggressive activities of the South African authorities cannot but arouse the strong condemnation of the African people and the peace-loving people throughout the world. The UN Security Council has already decided to discuss the question of the South African authorities' aggression against Lesotho. The Chinese people resolutely demand that the international community apply severe sanctions against the South African authorities and put an end to their aggressive activities.

In carrying out their atrocious activities, the South African authorities are supported by and conniving with the United States. On the very day they invaded Lesotho, 10 resolutions were passed by an overwhelming majority in a session of the UN General Assembly denouncing South Africa's apartheid policy and its aggressive activities against its neighbors. However, the United States voted against 9 of the 10 resolutions. By standing on the side of such a reactionary racist regime and acting as the enemy of the African people and the people of all the world's countries that uphold justice and love peace, the United States will surely reap the fruit of the trouble it has sown.

["'South African Racist Regime Commits New Crime' -- Commentary by XINHUA Correspondent" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, December 11 (XINHUA) -- The South African racist regime has committed another serious crime against the African people by attacking Lesotho's capital -- Maseru -- Thursday morning after months of armed provocations against it.

Backed by its military strength, South Africa always ignores the basic principles governing international relations. Its aggressor troops have raided Mozambique, invaded Angola and Botswana and carried out harassing and subversive activities against Zimbabwe and other countries. Their acts have posed grave threats to these countries' independence and sovereignty and aggravated the tensions in southern Africa. All this shows the South African racist regime has been a major source of trouble in that region.

South Africa's repeated acts of aggression against its neighboring countries are obviously aimed at destabilizing their society and discouraging their support for the just struggle of the Namibian people so as to weaken the liberation movements in southern Africa as a whole. But as Kenyan President Arap Moi pointed out, it can never succeed in its attempt.

It is only logical that the South African authorities' barbarous acts have been condemned by African countries and the public in the world. The U.N. General Assembly, for instance, adopted by an over-whelming majority ten resolutions on Thursday condemning South Africa's "ever escalating aggression" and calling for effective actions by the international community to eliminate the apartheid policy.

However, the United States voted against nine of the ten resolutions. This is added proof of its partiality for the South African racist regime.

ISRAELI AGGRESSION RESULTS IN SOCIAL CRISIS

["International Jottings" by Xi Zuo [5045 0146]: "Outwardly Strong But Inwardly Weak"]

[Text] On 7 December, 400,000 government functionaries in Israel went on strike for higher wages. As a result, government offices, schools and hospitals all stopped working, television and radio broadcasts were suspended, and even overseas embassies halted their business. A desolate scene prevailed on all sides.

Propped up by the United States, the Israeli authorities have, over the past years, wantonly engaged in military aggression for territorial expansion. However, "a country which maintains large forces for a long time depletes its treasury."

In Israel today, the economy is depressed, prices are soaring, the people are boiling with resentment, and strikes are being staged one after another. Now, even government functionaries throughout the country have come out on strike. This fully shows that the social crisis in Israel is extensive and deep. The Israeli authorities have already laid bare their true nature of outward strength but inward weakness, though they are still adopting a swashbuckling posture. As a matter of fact, Israel could not possibly carry on if the United States did not continuously give her shots in the arm.

The new ambassador arrived here on December 10 and met Egyptian Minister of Foreign Affairs Kamal Hasan 'Ali the following day.

FURTHER COVERAGE OF FIFTH SESSION OF FIFTH NPC

RENMIN RIBAO 11 Dec Editorial

OW102102 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1607 GMT 10 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, 10 Dec (XINHUA) -- The 11 December RENMIN RIBAO carries an editorial entitled "The Most Effective Guarantee -- Written at the Conclusion of the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC."

The Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC has come to a close. This session discussed and adopted "The Constitution of the People's Republic of China" and the Sixth 5-Year Plan for the development of the national economy. In the struggle to bring about a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization, the people of our country now have a new constitution suited to our country's conditions and conforming to the people's will that gives consideration to both the present realities and the prospects for development, as well as a positive and comparatively safe and reliable 5-year plan that can be carried out through effort. These are two major events. We warmly congratulate the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC on its successful conclusion and express our warm congratulations on the promulgation of the new constitution and the birth of the Sixth 5-Year Plan.

The new constitution is one the people of all nationalities throughout the country have achieved after decades of struggle, a constitution that fully reflects the aspirations and will of the workers, peasants, intellectuals and patriotic personages in various circles. The Sixth 5-Year Plan is an inspiring and very realistic plan. Now, the people are most concerned with how to ensure the implementation of the constitution and the realization of the plan. The constitution and the plan, no matter how well they are written or worked out, would be a mere scrap of paper if they were not implemented. How to ensure the implementation of the good constitution and the good plan is a very important question indeed.

At the NPC session, people's deputies discussed extensively the question of how to ensure the implementation of the constitution and the realization of the Sixth 5-Year Plan, and raised many valuable opinions in these regards. Their common understanding is that the most effective of all guarantees is the people. The constitution stipulates: "All power in the People's Republic of China belongs to the people." "The people administer the affairs of the country and its economic, cultural and social affairs according to the provisions of the law, through various channels and in various forms." The most effective guarantee for the implementation of the constitution and the realization of the 5-year plan is to hand the constitution and the plan over to the 1 billion people. The people, and the people alone, are a motive force in the development of history. This is an irrefutable truth. Ours is a socialist country of the people's democratic dictatorship. The nature of such a country determines that only the people are the masters of the country and society. Our plan for the development of the national economy and society is a socialist construction plan for the well-being of the broad masses of people. The nature of this plan determines that it can mobilize the enthusiasm of the people and rely on their efforts to carry it out. The will of the poeple is irresistible, and their power is invincible. History, no matter how many twists and turns it goes through, will eventually subordinate to the will of the people and develop by relying on their strength. In those years, the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary cliques ran wild and forgot themselves in their excitement. However, they were doomed to defeat because their perverse acts went against the will of the people. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, our various undertakings have been going ahead by leaps and bounds. This has resulted from the fact that the party's lines, principles and policies have reflected the will of the people and that the people of all nationalities throughout the country, under the party's leadership, have exercised their right as the masters of the country and have brought their initiative, enthusiasm and creativity into full play.

Now that all the powers of our country are in the hands of the people, our constitution will not be pigeonholed and our 5-year plan will not be a mere scrap of paper.

Tempered in a protracted revolutionary struggle under the leadership of the CPC, the people of all nationalities throughout the country are politically conscious, courageous, resourceful and have a sense of historical responsibility. They are worthy of being called a great people. "The Great Cultural Revolution" educated the people by negative example, and numerous facts since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee have educated the people in a positive way. Now, the people fully understand the effects of their strength and the importance of taking their destiny into their hands. The people demonstrated their extremely great, historic initiative in revising the constitution. While the draft revised constitution was being discussed by the whole people, the Committee for the Revision of the Constitution and the just concluded NPC session, the people expressed their opinions in various forms. It is precisely for this reason that the new constitution fully reflects the will of the people and includes comprehensive and explicit stipulations on how the people's congresses and their standing committees should effectively exercise their state powers, on the fundamental rights and duties of citizens and on questions of immediate concern to the people of all nationalities. The leading position of the working class has been reaffirmed. Peasants have noticed that various forms of the production responsibility system, which they regard as a magic weapon for them to become better-off, have been written into the fundamental law of the state. Thus, they no longer need to worry lest such forms of the responsibility system are changed. Intellectuals have noticed that they are mentioned in the constitution as are the workers and peasants. Thus, they are no longer listed in the other register as the "stinking ninth category." Minority nationalities have noticed that upholding the unity of nationalities and implementing the system of regional national autonomy are further and fully reflected in the new constitution. Individual working people in urban and rural areas have noticed that the constitution stipulates the protection by the state of their lawful economic activities as a complement to the socialist sector of the economy owned by the public. Taiwan compatriots can see that the constitution has opened the door wide for the return of Taiwan to the motherland. All this fully shows that this constitution deserves to be called a constitution of the people. The constitution which has been formulated by the people under the leadership of the CPC is the people's constitution. The people have formulated this constitution and they can certainly ensure its implementation through their own supervision, through the supervision of deputies elected by themselves and through the supervision of the people's congresses and various organs of state power elected by the people's congresses.

Likewise, it is necessary to rely on the efforts of the people to carry out the Sixth 5-Year Plan. This is a plan for steady development in the course of readjustment. To achieve our objective for the next 2 decades, we must take the following two steps: In the first decade, we aim mainly at laying a solid foundation and creating the necessary conditions for ushering in a period of vigorous economic development in the second decade. The Sixth 5-Year Plan is the first 5-year plan in the first decade during which time the growth rate will not be too fast. However, this does not mean that it is an easy job to fulfill the Sixth 5-Year Plan. A fundamental turn for the better in our country's financial and economic situation has not yet taken place. We are implementing the Sixth 5-Year Plan without sufficient financial and material resources. The state has made the greatest possible efforts to maintain the same level of capital construction in the Sixth 5-Year Plan period as that during the Fifth 5-Year Plan. In allocating investment funds, the state has given priority to what should be given priority, such as the development of energy resources and communications, and the equipment renewal and technical transformation of existing enterprises.

The state has made proper arrangements for projects for which such arrangements should be made, such as arrangements for construction projects in agriculture, the light and textile industry, metallurgical industry, and chemical industry, as well as in education, science, culture, public health, public utilities in urban areas, commerce and foreign trade. The safest way for all enterprises and departments to increase production and the variety of their products, improve product quality and start collective welfare projects is to rely on the masses of people, mobilize their strength effectively, achieve better economic results by improving management and making technical progress and do more work with the financial and material resources and manpower they have. The CPC's experiences over the past several decades show that to do anything it is necessary to mobilize the masses of people to work together. We must focus our eyes on the masses and rely on them. All of us at both higher and lower levels must make concerted efforts. Only thus can we accelerate our constitution. This is a strategic concept. This is also a problem not only to be solved in industrial and agricultural production and capital construction, but also in afforestation, urban construction, the building of bridges and highways, environmental sanitation and scientific, cultural and educational undertakings. As long as we bring the enthusiasm and creativity of the masses of people into full play, we can certainly accomplish the tasks set in the Sixth 5-Year Plan.

The CPC is the vanguard of the Chinese working class and CPC members are the advanced elements among the people. Party organizations at various levels and the broad masses of party members should play an exemplary role in observing the constitution and strive to fulfill the Sixth 5-Year Plan. The party, as did the people, suffered poignantly from the damages caused by lawlessness and constant changes in policy. The party and people share identical feelings and common interests on this and other major questions. It is precisely because of the past suffering that the party has regarded the improvement of socialist democracy and the legal system as a matter of prime importance and stressed the necessity to conduct investigation and study while formulating a plan. We trust that, after summing up the historical experience of the party since the founding of the country at the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the party will never again make an error such as the "Great Leap Forward" in willfully changing the state plan on the basis of subjective wish, still less allow a repeat of the tragedy of the "Great Cultural Revolution."

We cannot say for certain that violations of the constitution and state plan by individual party members or organizations will never occur. If violations do occur, violators must, of course, be punished by law. Party organizations at various levels must strengthen the education on the legal system and the concept of planning among party members and include the upholding of the dignity of the constitution, the guarantee for its enactment and the fulfillment of the Sixth 5-Year Plan as an important agenda.

The one billion people are the greatest power and most reliable guarantee for enforcing the constitution and fulfilling the Sixth 5-Year Plan. We must extensively and penetratingly publicize the new constitution so that it can be known to every household and so every Chinese citizen can foster the habit of observing and upholding the constitution and dare to struggle against any violator of the constitution. We must also extensively and penetratingly publicize the Sixth 5-Year Plan so that it can strike root in the hearts of the people and so that the one billion people can also know our resources and fighting goal and make their share of contributions to the fulfillment of the Sixth 5-Year Plan.

Resolution on Local Law

OW102150 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0855 GMT 10 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, 10 Dec (XINHUA) -- The resolution of the Fifth Session of the Fifth National People's Congress of the People's Republic of China on revising certain stipulations of the "Organic Law of the Local People's Republic of China at Various Levels" -- adopted at the Fifth Session of the Fifth National People's Congress on 10 December 1982:

The Fifth Session of the Fifth National People's Congress of the People's Republic of China has decided to make the following revision to the "Organic Law of the Local People's Congresses and Local People's Governments of the People's Republic of China" adopted at the Second Session of the Fifth National People's Congress in 1979:

1. "People's communes" in various articles should be changed to "townships, nationality townships," "the people's communes' chairmen, vice chairmen and committee members" should be changed to "heads of townships and deputy heads of townships" and "the basic accounting units of the people's communes" should be changed to "rural collective economic organizations." Appropriate revisions should be made to related articles of this law.

2. Article 5 should be revised to read: "The people's congresses of provinces, autonomous regions and municipalities directly under the central government, autonomous prefectures and cities divided into districts are elected for a term of 5 years. The people's congresses of counties, autonomous countries, cities not divided into districts, municipal districts, townships, nationality townships and towns are elected for a term of 3 years."

Article 34 should be revised to read: "The people's governments of provinces, autonomous regions, municipalities directly under the central government, autonomous prefectures and cities divided into districts are appointed for a term of 5 years. The people's governments of counties, autonomous counties, cities not divided into districts, districts under the jurisdiction of municipalities, townships, autonomous townships and towns are appointed for a term of 3 years."

3. The first paragraph of Article 16 should be revised to read: "The candidates for provincial governors and deputy governors, autonomous regional chairmen and vice chairmen, mayors and deputy mayors, prefecture heads and deputy heads, county heads and deputy heads, town heads and deputy heads, the personnel forming the standing committes of local people's congresses at and above the county level, presidents of people's courts and chief procurators of people's procuratorates shall be recommended by the presidiums of or recommended jointly by deputies of the congresses at the same level. Elections may be conducted by the method that the number of candidates are greater than the number of people to be elected, or preliminary elections may be held first to determine the namelists of formal candidates and then the formal elections are to be conducted."

4. Make paragraph 2 of Article 26 read as follows: "The members of the standing committees may not concurrently assume posts at the organs of state administration, people's courts and people's procuratorates. Anyone assuming the above concurrent posts must resign from the standing committees."

5. Add an additional paragraph to Article 27 and make it the second paragraph: "The standing committees of the people's congresses of the municipalities where the provincial and autonomous regional people's governments are located and of the comparatively large municipalities authorized by the State Council may draw up drafts of local statutes in accordance with the actual needs of their respective municipalities to be submitted for examination and formulation by the standing committees of the people's congresses of the respective provinces and autonomous regions, and report to the NPC Standing Committee and the State Council for the record."

6. Make item 8 of Article 28 read as follows: "To make decisions on appointments and dismissals of secretaries general, department heads, bureau chiefs, directors and section chiefs of the respective people's governments and to submit them to the people's governments at the next higher level for the record."

7. Add an additional paragraph to Article 29 and make it the third paragraph: "The chairman and vice chairmen of the standing committees organize conferences to handle the important, routine daily work."

8. Add the following at the end of item 1 of Article 35: "The people's governments of the provinces, autonomous regions and municipalities directly under the central government, as well as municipalities where the provincial and autonomous regional people's governments are located and the comparatively large municipalities authorized by the State Council, may also formulate regulations according to the relevent laws and the State Council's administrative laws and regulations."

9. Add an additional paragraph to article 37 and make it the first paragraph: "Practice the responsibility system of the people's governments at various levels by delegating responsibility onto the governors of provinces, the chairmen of autonomous regions, the mayors of municipalities and the heads of prefectures, counties, districts and towns."

Make the former first paragraph the second paragraph.

"The organic law of the local people's congresses and local people's governments of the People's Republic of China" adopted by the Second Session of the Fifth National People's Congress should make corresponding revisions according to this resolution and should be promulgated anew.

Resolution on Electoral Law

OW110636 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0908 GMT 10 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, 10 Dec (XINHUA) -- The resolution of the Fifth Session of the Fifth National People's Congress of the People's Republic of China on revising certain stipulations of the "Electoral Law of the People's Republic of China for the National People's Congress and the Local People's Congresses at Various Levels" adopted at the Fifth Session of the Fifth National People's Congress on 10 December 1982:

With regard to the "Electoral Law of the People's Republic of China for the National People's Congress and the Local People's Congresses at Various Levels," adopted by the Second Session of the Fifth National People's Congress in 1979, the Fifth Session of the Fifth National People's Congress has decided to make the following revisions:

1. The term "people's commune" in articles be revised as "township or nationality township," the term "people's commune administrative committee" be revised as "township or nationality township people's government."

2. Article 6 be revised as: "Returned overseas Chinese should be properly represented in the National People's Congress and in the local people's congresses in districts where there are a fairly large number of returned overseas Chinese."

3. One more section be added in Article 1 to become section 2, which reads: "When a town in a county's or autonomous county's administrative district has an exceptionally large population, or the number of workers and staff members of an enterprise or undertaking not under the leadership of the people's government at and above the county level makes up a fairly large percentage of the total population of the entire county, the ratio between the number of people represented by one deputy in a rural area and the number of people represented by such a town or enterprise or undertaking may be smaller than 4:1 until this ratio reaches 1:1 if the standing committee of the people's congress of a province, autonomous region or municipality directly under the central government so decides."

4. Sections 2 and 3 of Article 16 be revised separately as: "Where the population of a national minority exceeds 15 percent of the total population of all national minorities in areas where national minorities live in compact communities, the number of people represented by each of its deputies shall be equivalent to the number of people represented by each deputy to the local people's congress". "Where the population of a national minority is less than 15 percent of the total population of all national minorities living in the area, the number of people represented by each of its deputies may be 50 percent less than the number of people represented by each deputy to the local people's congress. In an autonomous county where regional self-government is excercised and the population of a national minority is exceptionally small, the number of people represented by each of its deputies may be less than 50 percent if the standing committee of the people's congress of a province or autonomous region so decides. A national minority with an exceptionally small population should be represented by at least one deputy."

5. Article 30 be revised as: "The electoral committee should introduce the candidates for deputies to the voters. The parties, organizations or voters that recommend the candidates for deputies may introduce the candidates they recommend at the voters groups meetings, but they must not wait and introduce the deputy candidates on the day of election."

6. Section 3 of Article 38 be revised as: "When the number of deputy candidates who have obtained more than half of the ballots falls below the number of deputies to be elected, another election shall be held among those who have not been elected. Those who obtain the majority of votes are considered elected. However, the number of ballots they have won should not be less than 1/3 of the total number of ballots."

7. One section be added to Article 42 as section 2 which reads: "When a deputy to the local people's congress is transferred or moves out of the administrative district during his tenure of office, he is automatically disqualified as a deputy in that district. A by-election will be held to fill the vacancy.

The original section 2 be revised as section 3.

The "Electoral Law of the People's Republic of China for the National People's Congress and the Local People's Congresses at Various Levels" adopted by the Second Session of the Fifth National People's Congress will be duly revised on the basis of this current resolution and promulgated again.

Resolution on 6th NPC Election

[Text] Beijing, 10 Dec (XINHUA) -- The resolution of the Fifth Session of the Fifth National People's Congress of the People's Republic of China on the number and election of deputies to the Sixth National People's Congress -- adopted at the Fifth Session of the Fifth National People's Congress on 10 December 1982:

In accordance with the relevant provisions of the Constitution of the People's Republic of China and the electoral law of the People's Republic of China for the National People's Congress and the local people's congresses, the Fifth Session of the Fifth National People's Congress made the following resolution on the number and election of deputies to the Sixth National People's Congress:

1. Regarding the number of deputies to the National People's Congress to be elected from various provinces, autonomous regions and municipalities in the rural areas, 1 deputy is to be elected for every 1.04 million people; in the cities and towns, 1 for every 130,000.

The number of deputies shall not be less than 15 in sparsely populated provinces and autonomous regions.

For the time being, 13 deputies representing Taiwan Province shall be elected from people of Taiwan origin in the various provinces, autonomous regions and municipalities as well as from the Chinese People's Liberation Army. The remaining number of deputies to be elected in accordance with the law shall be retained.

2. Two hundred and sixty-five deputies to the National People's Congress shall be elected from the Chinese People's Liberation Army.

3. The number of deputies representing China's minority nationalities shall account for around 12 percent of the total number of deputies to the National People's Congress.

At least 1 deputy shall be elected to the National People's Congress from a nationality with only a small number of people.

4. Thirty-five deputies to the National People's Congress representing overseas Chinese shall be elected from returned overseas Chinese.

5. To ensure that sparsely populated areas, nationalities with only a small number of people and areas where people representing all walks of life live in fairly compact communities have appropriate numbers of deputies to represent them, the National People's Congress Standing Committee shall, in light of the actual conditions, assign a fixed quota to the relevant provinces, autonomous regions and municipalities for the election of such deputies from the total number of deputies to the National People's Congress.

6. The term of the Fifth National People's Congress expires in February, 1983. In light of the fact that a certain period of time is required for the preparation of the election of deputies to the Sixth National People's Congress in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution of the People's Republic of China and the resolutions adopted at the current session on revising several provisions of the electoral law of the People's Republic of China for the National People's Congress and the local people's congresses, the term of the Fifth National People's Congress shall be extended to the beginning of the First Session of the Sixth National People's Congress. The election of deputies to the Sixth National People's Congress shall be completed by the end of April, 1983. New people's congresses shall be held in various provinces, autonomous regions and municipalities to elect deputies to the Sixth National People's Congress before the end of April, 1983.

Resolution on Supreme Court

[Text] Beijing, 10 Dec (XINHUA) -- The resolution of the Fifth Session of the Fifth National People's Congress of the People's Republic of China on the work reports by the Supreme People's Court and the Supreme People's Procuratorate adopted by the Fifth Session of the Fifth National People's Congress on 10 December 1982.

The Fifth Session of the Fifth National People's Congress of the People's Republic of China approves the work report of the Supreme People's Court made by President Jiang Hua and the work report of the Supreme People's Procuratorate made by Chief Procurator Huang Huoqing. The session maintains that the people's court and the people's procuratorate should, in accordance with the functions and powers vested in them by the "Constitution of the People's Republic of China," adopted by this session, bring into full play the functions of judicial organs and legal supervisory organs and, in the course of their work, persist in ensuring that laws are observed, that law enforcement is strict and that lawbreakers are dealt with. They should protect the rights and interests of the state and the people and safeguard the successful development of socialist modernization.

Group Meetings on 5-Year Plan

[Excerpts] At today's group discussions, deputies to the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC held that the primary tasks and major measures set forth in Premier Zhao Ziyang's report on the Sixth 5-Year Plan are realistic, practical and reliable and can be accomplished if we work hard.

Han Zheyi, NPC deputy and secretary of the Shanghai Municipal CPC Committee, held that the Sixth 5-Year Plan has set forth definite tasks and effective measures. He said: In view of Shanghai's experience in implementing the Sixth 5-Year Plan in 1981 and 1982, we are confident that the plan can be accomplished despite all difficulties. As one of China's most important industrial bases, Shanghai is charged with heavy tasks during the Sixth 5-Year Plan period. What should Shanghai rely on in boosting its economy? It should rely on progress in science and technology.

Yin Fatang, NPC deputy and first secretary of the Xizang Autonomous Regional CPC Committee, held that the Sixth 5-Year Plan has given expression to the unity and firm will of the people of various nationalities in accomplishing the immediate and long-term objectives. He said: The 5-year plan has appropriated special funds for supporting economic development in the minority nationality areas. It has also paid special attention to cultural development in these areas. The party and the state have shown much concern for the minority nationalities. Although Xizang differs from others parts of China in various aspects, the autonomous region must not differ from the rest of the country in creating a new situation by strenuous efforts.

The NPC deputies have seriously examined the primary tasks set forth in the Sixth 5-Year Plan. The deputies of various areas and various departments have fully expressed their views in light of the conditions of respective areas and units. State Councillor Chen Muhua, NPC deputy from Zhejiang Province and minister of foreign economic relations and trade, pointed out that the objectives for foreign economic relations and trade as presented by Premier Zhao Ziyang's report are realistic and can be accomplished by making efforts. She said: China's exports have been growing at a faster rate than growth for industry and agriculture in the past years. China's current exports only make up a small percentage of the total world exports and we still have a broad international market for expansion.

Although the current world economic recession has eroded the demand for capital goods, the demand for daily necessities continues to grow. China has a wide range of daily commodities for export and also has strong potential for the export of machinery, industrial chemicals and building materials. Thus, we can see that China still has a broad prospect in developing its foreign economic relations and trade.

Ma Xingyuan, NPC deputy and governor of Fujian Province, said that Premier Zhao has called for special attention to bringing into play the role of the coastal cities in expanding economic and technological exchanges with foreign countries. We are particularly encouraged at hearing this. Personally, I consider this is a policy decision with strategic significance and will give impetus to promoting immediate economic construction and to achieving long-term strategic objectives. We must, therefore, seriously study and utilize Fujian Province's superior conditions. We must also further emancipate our minds ideologically and make still greater efforts in our work so as to accelerate our economic construction.

On education work, He Dongchang, NPC deputy from Beijing and minister of education, said that some comrades have only paid attention to higher education and have not attached due importance to secondary and particularly primary education. The particular attention given by the Sixth 5-Year Plan to secondary and primary education is entirely correct, he stressed. The minister of education has proposed the following for improving educational work: In the first place, it is necessary to mobilize all the people to support the popularization of primary education as set forth in the Sixth 5-Year Plan. Popularization of primary education must be regarded as an important task that bears on the future of the nation. Secondly, it is important to pay attention to restructuring the secondary educational system and strengthening vocational education. Thirdly, it is essential to strengthen and reform education in the rural areas to catch up with the rapid changes there and ensure that the 800 million peasants will become well-to-do as soon as possible.

Railway Minister at Meeting

[Excerpts] Beijing, 6 Dec (XINHUA) -- Chen Puru, NPC deputy and minister of railway, said at the group meeting of the Liaoning provincial delegation examining Premier Zhao Ziyang's report: In his report, Premier Zhao Ziyang clearly pointed out that the Sixth 5-Year Plan should concentrate funds on key projects to ensure that requirements are met for the development of energy resources and transport services and for the technical transformation of existing enterprises, and that the improvement and strengthening of energy and transport, the two weakest links, is necessary for the entire national economy to seize the initiative. This shows that railway work has entered a new period.

Chen Puru said: Since the 3d plenary session of the 11th party Central Committee, remarkable achievements have been made in railway work. At present, railways account for 70 percent of the freight transport and more than 60 percent of the passenger transport of the country. Railway freight and passenger transport in 1982 increased by 12 percent and 37 percent respectively over 1978. However, because of too many problems which have remained unsolved for a long time, the railways at present fall far behind the requirements of national economic development and the increasing demands of the people.

To make railways meet requirements in achieving the strategic goals, Chen Puru made a seven-point suggestion: 1) really foster the idea of focusing on increasing economic results; 2) shift emphasis from simply fulfilling production tasks to paying special attention to management and administration; 3) rely on progress in science and technology rather than on past experience; 4) fully implement the economic responsibility system and consolidate enterprises; 5) speed up construction of new lines and pay attention to the technical transformation of old lines; 6) set up a strict responsibility system at every level from the leadership of the ministry to railway sections and to each worker and staff member, fostering a strong sense of responsibility and a strict sense of discipline; and 7) foster a good railway work style, providing high-quality services, respecting passengers, taking good care of freight and ensuring safety and punctuality of trains.

He said: In addition to these things, it is imperative to strengthen political and ideological work, and it is also necessary to have the concern and support of governments at various levels in the provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions.

He believed that if the seven-point suggestion is put into effect, the conditions of the railways assuredly will take a turn for the better within a short period of time.

Television Coverage of Closing

HK112352 [Editorial Report] Beijing Domestic Television Service in Mandarin at 1100 GMT on 10 December carries at the beginning of the evening's newscast an 11-minute filmed report on the 10 December closing session of the Fifth Session of the Fifth National People's Congress which is being held in the main auditorium of the Great Hall of the People in Beijing.

The film opens with a close-up shot of the central ceiling of the main auditorium of the hall. This is followed by several long shots of many people in the auditorium and on the rostrum attending the closing session on the afternoon of 10 December. During these shots, a very large national emblem of the PRC is seen hanging on the heavy curtain behind the back row of the rostrum.

The camera then cuts to show Yang Shangkun (wearing glasses) sitting on the right-hand side of Ye Jianying in the first row of the rostrum, leaning toward Ye Jianying (wearing glasses) and turning over several white papers in front of Ye, in a medium shot. During this shot, Ye Jianying is seen sitting at the center of the front row of the rostrum and is also looking at the papers which are being turned over by Yang Shangkun; Peng Zhen is seen sitting on the left-hand side of Ye Jianying; Zhao Ziyang and Wan Li are seen sitting in the second row of the rostrum; and Hu Yaobang and Deng Xiaoping are seen sitting in the third row of the rostrum. At this point, the announcer begins to read the following namelist: ..."Executive chairmen of today's meeting are: Ye Jianying, Peng Zhen, Deng Yingchao, Ulanhu, Wei Guoqing, Tan Zhenlin, Li Jingquan, Peng Chong, Seypidin, Liao Chengzhi, Ngapoi Ngawang Jigme, Xu Deheng, Hu Juewen, Xiao Jingguang, Shi Liang, Xi Zhongxun, Yang Shangkun and Bainqen Erdini Qoigyi Gyaincain."...

While the announcer is reading the namelist, the film gives its first close-up shot which is of Ye Jianying who is seen wearing an audiophone, and holding and looking at a white paper. During this shot, Zhao Ziyang is seen sitting in the second row and Deng Xiaoping is seen sitting in the third row of the rostrum. After this, the announcer is still heard reading the namelist, and the camera first pans to show those executive chairmen who are seated on the left-hand side of Ye Jianying and then pans to show those executive chairmen who are seated on his right, in several medium shots.

Sitting on the left-hand side of Ye are: Peng Zhen (holding and looking at a white paper), Ulanhu (facing the camera), Tan Zhenlin (holding and looking at a white paper), Peng Chong (holding and looking at a white paper), Liao Chengzhi (looking at a paper in front of him), Xu Deheng (holding and looking at a white paper), Xiao Jingguang (holding and looking at a white paper), Xi Xhongxun (looking at a paper in front of him) and Bainqen Erdini Qgogyi Gyaincain (looking at a paper in front of him), in this order. Sitting on the right-hand side of Ye are: Yang Shangkun (holding a pen and looking at a paper), Deng Yingchao (looking at a paper), Wei Guoqing (holding and looking at a white paper), Li Jingquan (looking at a paper in front of him, Seypidin (holding and looking at a paper), Ngapoi Ngawang Jigme (holding and looking at a paper), Hu Juewen (looking at a paper in front of him) and Shi Liang (looking at a paper in front of her), in this order. During these medium shots, Zhao Ziyang, Wan Li, Yao Yilin, Yu Qiuli, Fang Yi, Gu Mu and Chen Muhua are shown sitting in the second row of the rostrum; Deng Ziaoping is seen looking at a paper in front of him in the third row of the rostrum.

Next, the film gives its second close-up shot, which is of Yang Shangkun, who is identified by the announcer as executive chairman of the session and vice chairman and secretary general of the NPC Standing Committee, and who is also seen and heard addressing the session: "A total of 3,140 deputies checked in at the session. A total of 100 deputies asked for leave of absence. A total of 3,040 deputies are present at today's meeting. We have a quorum now. Now let us adopt various resolutions and laws. The first item on the agenda is to adopt a resolution to ratify the State Council report on the Sixth 5-Year Plan." During this close-up shot of Yang Shangkun, which lasts more than half a minute, Hu Yaobang is seen drinking tea in the third row of the rostrum; and Chen Xilian (in PLA uniform) is seen sitting behind Hu Yaobang in the fourth row of the rostrum; he is first seen taking off his glasses and then putting them on. The close-up is followed by two long shots of many people in the auditorium and on the rostrum raising their hands, and a medium shot of Hu Yaobang and Deng Xiaoping raising their hands to adopt the resolution.

After that, the film gives a long shot of many people in the auditorium and on the rostrum. This is followed by a medium shot of Zhao Ziyang, Wan Li and Yao Yilin sitting in the second row of the rostrum. During this shot, Nie Rongzhen, Wang Zhen, Li Desheng and Yang Dezhi are shown sitting in the third row of the rostrum. Next, Nie Rongzhen (wearing an audiophone), Wang Zhen, Li Desheng (in PLA uniform), Yang Dezhi (in PLA uniform) and Song Renqiong are shown sitting in the third row, in a medium shot. The camera then pans to show other people on the rostrum and many people in the auditorium.

The film then gives another close-up shot of Yang Shangkun addressing the session. This is followed by a medium shot of Yang Shangkun, Deng Yingzhao, Wei Guoqing, Li Jingquan and many other people raising their hands on the rostrum. As this point, the announcer is heard saying that the session is adopting a resolution ratifying the State Council report on the implementation of the 1982 state budget and the draft state budget for 1983. The camera then cuts to show many people in the auditorium. This is followed by a long shot of many NPC deputies in the auditorium raising their hands to adopt the rewritten organic law of the NPC and the organic law of the State Council. The following segment shows many deputies in the auditorium raising their hands to adopt the resolutions on the revision of the organic law of the local people's congresses and governments and the electoral law for the NPC and the local people's congresses. Next, the camera pans to show many deputies sitting in the auditorium. At this point, the announcer is heard saying that the session has adopted the resolution endorsing the report on the work of the NPC Standing Committee.

While the announcer is heard giving a summary of this resolution, the film gives a medium shot of Ye Jianying, Peng Zhen, Yang Shangkun, Ulanhu, Deng Yingchao, Wei Guoqing and Li Jingquan raising their hands on the rostrum. The camera then pans once again to show many deputies sitting in the auditorium. At this point, the announcer is heard saying that the session has adopted the resolution endorsing the report on the work of the Supreme People's Court and the report on the work of the Supreme People's Procuratorate. While the announcer is heard reading a summary of this resolution, the film gives several medium shots of many deputies in the auditorium raising their hands and a long shot of many people on the rostrum. The announcer then says that the session has adopted the resolution determining the number of deputies to the Sixth NPC and their election, and the film shows Yu Qiuli, Fang Yi, Gu Mu and Chen Muhua sitting in the second row of the rostrum. Next while the announcer is heard reading a summary of this resolution, the film gives a long shot of many deputies raising their hands in the auditorium; a medium shot of Hu Yaobang and Deng Xiaoping applauding on the rostrum; several medium and long shots of other people on the rostrum applauding; and finally a medium shot of Ye Jianying, Yang Shangkun, Deng Yingchao, Wei Guoqing, and Li Jingquan applauding on the rostrum. After that, while the announcer is saying that the session has approved the report made by the motions committee on the examination of motions, the film gives a close-up shot of Yang Shangkun who is seen and heard saying in a soft voice: "We now ask NPC Standing Committee Chairman Ye Jianying to deliver a speech." After this, Yang Shangkun, Hu Yaobang and Zhao Ziyang are seen applauding. The film then gives a close-up shot of Ye Jianying sitting in the first row of the rostrum. During this close-up shot, Yang Shangkun is seen speaking with Ye and using his left hand to point at a sheet of paper among several papers in front of Ye; and Ye is then seen and heard reading only the first sentence of his speech: "Fellow deputies, our present session is a very important one, and I am very glad that it has been very successful." While Ye is seen and heard reading this sentence in the close-up shot, Zhao Ziyang is seen listening to Ye in the second row, and Deng Xiaoping is seen listening in the third row of the rostrum. This close-up shot of Ye, which lasts 40 seconds, does not end with Ye reading this sentence. After Ye completes this first sentence, the close-up shot of him continues for another 12 seconds. During these 12 seconds, Ye Jianying is seen taking out a piece of paper from several pieees in front of him; and Zhao Ziyang sitting in the second row and Deng Xiaoping sitting in the third row of the rostrum are seen looking at Ye after Ye stops reading his speech; and the announcer is heard reading an excerpt of Ye's speech.

Next the film gives a medium shot of Yang Shangkun holding a piece of paper, leaning toward Ye Jianying and speaking with him. During this shot, Zhao Ziyang is seen looking at a paper in the second row of the rostrum; Hu Yaobang is seen looking at a paper in the third row of the rostrum; and Deng Xiaoping is seen sitting on the left-hand side of Hu Yaobang. The camera then pans to show other leaders on the rostrum including Chen Xilian, Deng Yingchao, Wei Guoqing and Li Jingquan. This segment ends with a medium shot showing Ye Jianying taking off his glasses and holding up a piece of paper.

The film then gives many medium and long shots of NPC deputies sitting in the auditorium and of the aforementioned NPC, party and state leaders sitting on the rostrum. During these shots, the announcer is heard reading excerpts of Ye's speech, and Bo Yibo and Huang Hua are shown sitting in the second row of the rostrum. When the announcer finishes reading excerpts of Ye's speech, the film gives a long shot of many deputies in the auditorium applauding.

The following segment begins with a medium shot of Ye Jianying, Peng Zhen, Yang Shangkun, Deng Yingchao, Wei Guoqing and Li Jingquan sitting in the front row of the rostrum. During this shot, a female and a male attendants are seen standing behind Ye Jianying; a female attendant is seen standing behind Deng Yingchao; and a male attendant is seen standing behind Li Jingquan. This is followed by a close-up shot of Yang Shangkun who is seen and heard declaring the NPC session closed. Yang is then seen and heard in a close-up shot asking all those present to rise and sing the national anthem -- the "March of the Volunteers." After this, a military band is seen and heard playing the national anthem. This is followed by a close-up of the national emblem of the PRC hanging on the heavy curtain behind the back row seats of the rostrum; and a medium shot of Yang Shangkun, Deng Yingchao, Wei Guoqing, Li Jingquan (being assisted by a male attendant), Seypidin and Ngapoi Ngawang Jigme standing on the rostrum. During this shot, a female attendant is seen standing behind Deng Yingchao. The camera then cuts to show many deputies standing and singing the national anthem in the auditorium. The film then ends with a long shot of many deputies standing in the auditorium.

COVERAGE OF SIXTH 5-YEAR PLAN MADE PUBLIC 12 DEC

Construction Projects Outlined

OW120128 Beijing XINHUA in English 0101 GMT 12 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 12 (XINHUA) -- China will complete 400 big and medium-sized capital construction projects in 1981-1985, according to its Sixth Five-Year Plan which was made public today.

The plan gives priority for capital investment to energy, transport and communications. A due proportion of the investment will go to agriculture and the light and textile, metallurgical, chemical and building materials industries, and to education, science, culture, public health and urban construction.

The 400 projects to be completed and put into operation in the sixth five-year plan period include:

-- coal mines with an annual coal-cutting capacity of 80 million tons;

-- 10 hydro-electrical power stations, 27 thermal power plants and part of the generating sets of other projects, with a total generating capacity of 12.9 million kw, of which 3.2 million kw are generated by water power;

-- oil extraction facilities with an annual capacity of 35 million tons of crude oil;

-- new railways (2,067 kilometers), electrification of railways (2,511 kilometers), and double-tracking of railways (1,689 kilometers);

-- 54 deep-water berths with an annual cargo handling capacity of one hundred million tons;

-- 25 cement plants with an annual production capacity of 12.4 million tons;

-- timber felling and transporting facilities with an annual capacity of 3.2 million cubic meters;

-- 12 chemical fiber projects with an annual production capacity of 380,000 tons; six cotton mills (300,000 spindles); six woolen mills (200,000 spindles); and replenishment, improvement and addition of 4.4 million cotton spindles and 270,000 woolen spindles in other mills;

-- new installations with an annual sugar-refining capacity of 500,000 tons, paper-making capacity of 310,000 tons and salt-refining capacity of 1.03 million tons. (In addition, the capacity of existing sugar refineries, paper mills and salt fields will increase by 1.48 million tons, 750,000 tons and 340,000 tons respectively through replenishment and technical transformation);

-- blast furnaces and other installations for the first phase of the Baoshan iron and steel complex, a key project of China's metallurgical industry, with an initial annual production capacity of three million tons of iron, three million tons of steel and 500,000 tons of seamless steel tubes; and

-- new installations for the chemical industry with an annual production capacity of 1,525,000 tons of synthetic ammonia, 46,000 tons of phosphate fertilizer and 115,000 tons of ethylene.

Under the Sixth Five-Year Plan, the government will also allocate funds to facilitate the work of pre-construction scientific research, technoeconomic studies, surveying and designing for 279 other projects to prepare conditions for future development.

1985 Goal: 1.03 Trillion Yuan

[Text] Beijing, December 12 (XINHUA) -- China's Sixth Five-Year Plan sets the goal of gross social product for 1985 at 1,030 billion yuan, exceeding the 1980 figure by 180 billion or growing at an average annual rate of four percent.

The gross social product, calculated in terms of the prices of 1980, includes all social products from the industrial, agricultural, building, transport and commercial departments.

The plan also sets the total output value of industry and agriculture in 1985 at 21.7 percent above that of 1980, or growing at an average annual rate of four percent.

According to the plan, that part of total output which goes into the national income will reach 445 billion yuan in 1985, or 78.3 billion yuan more than in 1980. The average annual rate of increase will be four percent.

The part of the national income for 1985 which goes into consumption will account for 71 percent of the total. The accumulation fund will make up the balance.

The rate of growth of both the gross social product and the national income, as stipulated in the Sixth Five-Year Plan, depends primarily on the improvement of economic performance.

As provided in the plan, state revenues for 1985 are expected to reach 127.4 billion yuan, or 18.9 billion yuan more than in 1980, increasing at an average annual rate of 3.8 billion yuan or 3.3 percent. Total state revenues for the five years (1981-1985) are set at 595.3 billion yuan.

State expenditures for 1985 will be 130.4 billion yuan, or 9.2 billion yuan more than in 1980. Total state expenditures for the five years will be 609.8 billion yuan. A breakdown shows:

-- Allocations for capital construction (including foreign loans): 170 billion yuan, averaging 34 billion yuan a year, or 27.9 percent of total expenditures;

-- Funds for education, science, culture and public health: 96.7 billion yuan, averaging 19.3 billion yuan a year, or 15.9 percent of the total;

-- Aid to agriculture: 38.7 billion yuan, averaging 7.7 billion yuan a year, or 6.3 percent of the total, and roughly the same as during the Fifth Five-Year Plan period; and

-- Appropriations for national defence and preparations against war: 88.3 billion yuan, averaging 17.7 billion yuan a year, or 14.5 percent of the total, and proportionately two percent lower than the 16.5 percent during the Fifth Five-Year Plan period.

Income from credit fund will increase by 192.5 billion yuan and use of credit fund will increase by 217 billion yuan. An additional amount of currency will be issued according to actual needs.

Two Major Economic Zones

OW120144 Beijing XINHUA in English 0117 GMT 12 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 12 (XINHUA) -- China is planning to build two major economic zones, one on the Yangtze River Delta in east China and the other around Shanxi Province in north China.

Programs for the development of the two zones shall be ready before 1985, according to the Sixth Five-Year Plan (1981-1985) which was promulgated today.

The Yangtze Delta economic zone will center around Shanghai, China's biggest industrial city, while Shanxi will be the center of the other zone which will include the western part of Inner Mongolia, the northern part of Shaanxi, the whole of Ningxia and the western part of Henan, and will concentrate on the development of the coal, chemical and other heavy industries.

According to the Sixth Five-Year Plan, China's coastal areas will tap their existing scientific, technical and management potential to develop high-grade, precision, advanced and new industrial products and promote foreign trade.

Inland areas will quicken the development of energy resources, transport and raw materials industries, increase consumer goods production in a planned way, and tap agricultural potential to expand the production of grain and other crops.

The state will continue to help the areas where minority nationalities live in compact community develop agriculture and animal husbandry, and expand such industries as are feasible under local conditions. Financial subsidies to the minority areas will grow by 10 percent annually. At the same time, the state will allocate a special fund of 500 million yuan each year to help the minority areas and other underdeveloped areas.

The Sixth Five-Year Plan calls for inter-regional economic cooperation through the exchange of goods, materials and technologies and through other forms.

Development Plans Charted

[Text] Beijing, December 12 (XINHUA) -- All Chinese cities are expected to map out their urban development plans by the end of 1983.

According to the Sixth Five-Year plan endorsed by the Fifth Session of the Fifth National People's Congress, China will strictly control the growth of large cities, appropriately expand medium-sized cities and actively develop small cities.

The plan also stipulates that, in principle, large and medium-sized industrial projects should be built in small and medium-sized cities or suburbs of large cities. Town planning should incorporate technical transformation of local industries.

Super-large cities and some of the large cities, where conditions permit, should develop satellite towns systematically. Urban construction should be guided by the principle of all-round development.

The national program of development for rural towns is to be completed by stages by 1985. Management in the construction of towns should be strengthened and stricter control and economy exercised over the use of land. Peasants should mainly rely on themselves in building houses whereas collective economic undertakings should mainly concern themselves with financing public utilities in rural towns.

The five-year plan envisages the construction of housing with a total floor space of 310 million square meters in cities and towns and peasant homes with a combined space of 2.5 billion square meters. It calls for the construction of more highrise apartment buildings in big cities and more multi-storey houses in small and medium-sized cities and industrial and mining districts.

China will also encourage individuals to own houses and several cities will be selected to try out the sale of houses.

The plan urges transformation and construction of urban public utilities systematically according to their order of priority. The projects include water, electricity, heat and gas supply systems, flood prevention facilities, roads, bridges, public transport services, sewage systems, parks and woods, and environmental hygiene.

A number of sanatoria and rest resorts will be built and arrangements made for workers and functionaries to use these facilities.

The plan also provides for the allocation of 12.67 billion yuan for social relief and subsidies to the disabled and families of the deceased in the five-year period.

15,000 To Study Abroad

OW120200 Beijing XINHUA in English 0129 GMT 12 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 12 (XINHUA) -- China is to send 15,000 students to study abroad during the Sixth Five-Year Plan period (1981-1985), averaging 3,000 a year. According to the plan, which was made public today, these students shall mainly study natural sciences and technology, particularly those specialties which are lacking or not sufficiently developed in China.

But there will also be a certain number of students majoring in politics, economics, law, education and languages.

The Sixth Five-Year Plan calls for the formulation of training programs for senior and secondary personnel, based on a 10-year and a 20-year forecast of the needs of China's socialist modernization.

It says that in the five years, the government will spend 700 million yuan to improve laboratory facilities for a number of major universities and colleges. These will include computer centers, analyzing and testing centers, and electronics, dynamics and bio-chemistry experimental centers.

During the 1981-1985 period, 1.5 million students are expected to graduate from colleges and 45,000 from post-graduate schools.

Planning and education departments should organize schools, research institutes and other organizations concerned to work together in drawing up plans for enrolling and and training post-graduate students.

Secondary vocational schools should enroll more students of finance, economics, political science and law, management, and specialties relating to the light, textile and building industries to meet the needs of China's economic and social development. During the 1981-1985 period, 2.3 million students will graduate from secondary vocational schools.

Cadres, workers and staff members shall receive training by rotation, the plan says. Managerial personnel of enterprises must be organized to study management and other professional skills so that they will gradually become experts in economic work. Directors of big and medium-sized factories should be given further training, so that they will at least attain the cultural and scientific level of a secondary school graduate, know their jobs well and be familiar with the laws and regulations relating to their business.

Engineers and technicians should be encouraged to increase their expertise and keep abreast of the latest developments in science and technology both in China and abroad.

FURTHER COVERAGE OF FIFTH SESSION OF FIFTH CPPCC

Session Closes 11 Dec

OW111234 Beijing XINHUA in English 1214 GMT 11 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 11 (XINHUA) -- The Fifth Session of the Fifth National Committee of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference (C.P.P.C.C.) closed at the Great Hall of the People here this afternoon.

A political resolution endorsed at the closing ceremony calls on C.P.P.C.C. committees at all levels, the democratic parties and the people's organizations to set an example in implementing the national constitution, to consolidate and develop the patriotic united front, help the Chinese Communist Party and the people's government improve their work, and together do a good job of running state affairs.

Deng Xiaoping, chairman of the C.P.P.C.C. National Committee, declared the meeting open at 3:30 p.m. and Vice-Chairman Ulanhu officiated at the ceremony.

The meeting endorsed a new C.P.P.C.C. constitution which came into force as of today. The old one was endorsed at the First Session of the Fifth C.P.P.C.C. National Committee in 1978.

The new C.P.P.C.C. constitution stipulates in explicit terms the nature, tasks, functions, and general principles governing the work and organization of the C.P.P.C.C.

Today's meeting endorsed a resolution on the report on the work of the Standing Committee of the C.P.P.C.C. National Committee.

While expressing satisfaction with the Standing Committee's work over the past year, the resolution enjoined the Standing Committee to make a good summary of the experience of the C.P.P.C.C. and take specific steps to handle the suggestions and criticisms put forward at the session.

The meeting endorsed a report submitted by the Motions Committee. A total of 539 motions were tabled at the session between November 24 and December 8, and the 390 motions that have been examined will be referred to departments concerned for handling. The committee will continue to process those left over after the conference is over.

MaBi (Maa Bih), former director of the monthly POLITICAL REVIEW in Taiwan, and Fan Shoukang, former professor at Taiwan University and curator of its library, were elected at today's meeting as members of the Standing Committee, making the total number 292. Ma Bi came back from Taiwan to settle on the mainland last year and Fan Shoukang returned from the United States in April this year.

During the 18-day session, the C.P.P.C.C. Members attended the Fifth Session of the Fifth National People's Congress and observers, discussed the draft revised national constitution, heard Premier Zhao Ziyang's report on the Sixth Five-Year Plan and other reports.

In his closing speech, Ulanhu said that the C.P.P.C.C. members, with a strong sense of responsibility as masters of the state, held conscientious discussions on major affairs of the state and the C.P.P.C.C. in a democratic atmosphere.

He called on C.P.P.C.C. committees and their members at all levels to carry forward their important role in building socialist spiritual and material civilization.

When Deng Xiaoping declared the session closed at 5 p.m., all present rose and sang the national anthem.

Foreign diplomatic envoys in China and Beijing-based foreign correspondents were present at today's closing ceremony as guests.

Constitution Adopted

OW110924 Beijing XINHUA in English 0854 GMT 11 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 11 (XINHUA) -- The Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference will play a still greater role in the future in the country's socialist modernization and in the struggle for the reunification of the motherland including Taiwan, against hegemonism and in defence of world peace.

This is stated in the new constitution of the C.P.P.C.C. adopted at the closing ceremony of the Fifth Session of its Fifth National Committee today.

The new C.P.P.C.C. constitution consists of 50 articles in 5 chapters.

The C.P.P.C.C., the constitution says, is an organization of the patriotic united front of the Chinese people.

This broad united front was formed by the Chinese people in the course of revolution and construction over a long period. Led by the Communist Party of China, it consists of the democratic parties, non-party democrats, the people's organizations, public figures of national minorities, all other people working for socialism, and patriots who uphold socialism and the reunification of the motherland, as well as compatriots in Taiwan, Hong Kong and Macao and Chinese nationals residing abroad.

The C.P.P.C.C. constitution points out that, in the past 30 years or more, the Chinese people, under the leadership of the Chinese Communist Party, have abolished the system of exploitation and built a socialist system, effecting a fundamental change in social classification.

The worker-peasant alliance is more consolidated than ever and the intellectuals, like workers and peasants, are a force underpinning the cause of socialism.

Most of those who belonged to the exploiting classes have become working people who earn their own living.

The democratic parties founded by bourgeois and petty-bourgeois intellectuals have become political alliances of those people working for socialism and patriots upholding socialism who maintain close ties with these parties. The democratic parties are therefore playing an increasingly important role.

After reviewing the part the C.P.P.C.C. has played in the country's political and social life and in its own friendly exchanges with foreign countries since its inception in September 1949, the constitution says that, in the new historical stage of today, the Chinese people's patriotic united front remains an important instrument for their united struggle to build and reunify the motherland. It will be further consolidated and developed.

The constitution explicitly stipulates that the C.P.P.C.C. is an important vehicle for promoting socialist democracy in the country's political life.

In line with the principles of "long-term coexistence and mutual supervision" and "treating each other with all sincerity and sharing weal or woe" between the Chinese Communist Party and the democratic parties and non-party democrats, the C.P.P.C.C. conducts political consultations on major policies of the state and key issues concerning the well-being of the people, and exercises democratic supervision over the work of the Chinese Communist Party, the people's government and other state organs through proposals and criticisms.

In all its activities, the C.P.P.C.C. takes the Constitution of the People's Republic of China as the basic norm of conduct.

The constitution defines the general principles guiding the work of the C.P.P.C.C. national and local committees as:

-- Participate in varous ways in discussing important issues concerning state and local affairs;

-- Encourage social forces to take an active part in building socialist material and spiritual civilization;

-- Maintain close contact with people of all walks of life, reflect their views and demands and those of the people who keep in touch with them, make proposals or critidsms on the work of state organs and their functionaries, help state organs improve their work and efficiency and overcome bureaucracy;

-- Actively spread progressive ideas in a variety of ways, and carry out education in the moral code of love for the motherland, the people, labor, science and socialism as well as in revolutionary ideals, morality and discipline;

-- Organize inspection tours, visits and investigations for C.P.P.C.C. members so they can keep abreast of the developments, study key issues concerning various undertakings and the well-being of the people, and make suggestions or criticisms to state organs and other related organizations;

-- Work actively to contact compatriots of various circles in Taiwan and promote the great cause of reunifying the country; strengthen ties and unity with compatriots in Hong Kong and Macao and encourage them to work for the construction and reunification of the motherland;

-- Publicize and help implement the state policy towards the intellectuals so as to bring into fuller play their role in socialist modernization;

-- Publicize and help implement the state policy on nationalities, and contribute to the cause of developing the economy and culture in areas inhabited by minority nationalities, safeguarding their lawful rights and interests, improving and developing the socialist relations among various nationalities, enhancing the great unity of the people of all nationalities and safeguarding the unification of the motherland;

-- Publicize and help implement the state policy on religion and unite with noted religious figures and religious believers in working for the construction and reunification of the country;

-- Strengthen ties and unity with Chinese nationals residing abroad and encourage them to work for the great cause of building and reunifying the country; and

-- Actively carry out people-to-people diplomacy and strengthen friendly exchange and cooperation with the people of other countries.

On organic matters, the new C.P.P.C.C. constitution stipulates:

-- The C.P.P.C.C. National Committee is composed of representatives from the Chinese Communist Party, the various democratic parties, non-party democrats, the people's organizations, various minority nationalities, all walks of life, compatriots from Taiwan, Hong Kong and Macao, and returned overseas Chinese as well as specially invited figures;

-- The units participating in each National Committee and the number of members and their (?selection) are to be decided by the Standing Committee of the outgoing National Committee by way of consultations;

-- Each National Committee serves for a term of five years and holds a plenary session each year;

-- The National Committee is composed of the chairman, vice-chairmen and secretary-general; its Standing Committee is responsible for routine affairs;

-- All provinces, autonomous regions, municipalities, autonomous (?zones), cities, counties, autonomous counties and districts of big cities may set up local C.P.P.C.C. committees where conditions permit, and their composition is to be decided with reference to that of the National Committee.

This new constitution is the third since the founding of the C.P.P.C.C. in 1949. The first one was adopted in 1954 and the second in 1978.

The present constitution was drafted by a committee headed by Deng Xiaoping over a period of two years.

Political Resolution Adopted

OW111228 Beijing XINHUA in English 1204 GMT 11 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 11 (XINHUA) -- The Fifth Session of the Fifth National Committee of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference, which closed here today, pledged to implement China's new constitution, the Sixth Five-Year Plan and the new constitution of the C.P.P.C.C.

A political resolution adopted at the session points out that China's new constitution, which is a scientific summing-up of the positive and negative experience since the founding of the People's Republic, serves the maximum interests of the Chinese people.

The resolution says that earnest implementation of the new national constitution will enhance political stability and unity in the country and forcefully promote the progress of socialist modernization.

The political resolution calls on all C.P.P.C.C. members to set an example in abiding by the new national constitution, which is the basic norm of conduct for all activities of the C.P.P.C.C.

The C.P.P.C.C. should exercise its function of democratic supervision, wage a resolute struggle against violation or sabotage of the national constitution and make due contributions to its enforcement.

Thanks to the united struggle waged by the people of all nationalities under the leadership of the Chinese Communist Party and the people's government, the resolution says, the national economy has embarked on a sound path of steady development and the economic situation has improved continuously over the last two years. The session holds that the Sixth Five-Year Plan is a forward-looking plan which seeks a healthy growth of the economy in the course of readjustment.

While plenty of favorable conditions exist for meeting the targets set in the five-year plan, the resolution notes, there are also many difficulties and obstacles ahead. It is imperative to carry forward the revolutionary tradition of building the country through hard work, thrift and diligence.

The resolution stresses that the C.P.P.C.C. national and local committees should conscientiously carry out the principles of "long-term coexistence and mutual supervision between the Chinese Communist Party and the democratic parties and non-party people and "treating each other with all sincerity and sharing weal or woe", and consolidate and expand the patriotic united front.

They should canvass views from all quarters, open broad avenues for able people to use their talent, bring into full play the initiative, enthusiasm and creativeness of their members, help the Chinese Communist Party and the people's government improve their work and efficiency, and together with them do a good job of running the state.

Various forms should be adopted to conduct political consultation and democratic supervision in an effort to bring into better play the important role of the C.P.P.C.C. in building socialist material and spiritual civilization.

The resolution says that the C.P.P.C.C. should pay attention to the intellectuals, especially the middle-aged ones, and do its best to help all concerned carry out the policy for the intellectuals.

The First Session of the Sixth National Committee of the C.P.P.C.C. is to be held next year, the resolution adds. After the present session, the Standing Committee will concentrate on making preparations for that meeting.

[Editorial: "Great Future, Vast Prospects -- Warmly Hailing the Victorious Conclusion of the Fifth Session of the Fifth CPPCC"]

[Text] The Fifth Session of the Fifth CPPCC National Committee closed in triumph. This session was held under the guidance of the spirit of the 12th party congress. The session participants conscientiously discussed with a great sense of responsibility the major issues related to the major administrative principles and policies of the state and the CPPCC. This has fully reflected their love for the motherland and the socialist cause. The session was a very satisfactory one and marked the further development of the patriotic united front and the great unity between all nationalities. The publication and implementation of the various resolutions of the session will surely have an important bearing on the magnificent cause of building and unifying our motherland and will blaze a broad path for the creation of a new situation in the work of the CPPCC.

Since the smashing of the Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary clique, and particularly since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, great progress has been made in the work related to the united front and the CPPCC. As Comrade Deng Xiaoping said at the opening of this session, a vigorous situation has emerged. Ahead of us is a great future and vast prospects. The scope of our country's united front will become increasingly great and the number of people whom it intends to include will become increasingly large. Now this united front has already become a broad patriotic united front joined by all the democratic parties, nonparty democrats, mass bodies, minority nationality personages and patriots in all circles, a united front of all the socialist laborers and all the patriots who support socialism and the reunification of the motherland including Taiwan, Hong Kong and Macao compatriots and overseas Chinese. It is more greatly consolidated and developed than any period in the past and is becoming increasingly active.

During the prolonged struggle for the new democratic revolution the united front was one of the three magic weapons with which we achieved our victory. During the new historic period of building socialism, the united front continues to expand and strengthen. This shows that it still imbues a strong vitality and remains one of the major magic weapons of our party. We can safely say that as long as our state and the CPC exist, the united front led by our party will exist. Therefore, satisfactorily doing united front work is a long-term strategic task for our party. The new party constitution has already included the frequent discussion and inspection of the united front work in the duties of our party's central, local and basic-level organizations. The united front needs the leadership of the CPC and the CPC needs the development of the united front. This was, is and will be true. This is something that all our cadres and masses, particularly party members, must clearly understand.

The CPPCC is an organization of the patriotic united front that is led by our party and represents a vast section of the community. Under the guidance of the policy of "long-term coexistence and mutual supervision" and the principle of "treating each other with all sincerity and sharing weal and woe," the CPPCC will increasingly develop its work and organization. At present the number of the organizations of the CPPCC ranging from the central level to the county level already exceeds 1,600 and their members have increased to more than 100,000. Most of the CPPCC members are the representative personalities of the democratic parties, mass bodies, the various nationalities and the various circles. Quite a lot of them are specialists, scholars and people of talent and are widely connected with the community. The CPPCC organizations at all levels pay attention to performing political consultation and democratic supervision functions and to giving play to the role and professional competence of their members. They have done a large amount of work and have played a positive role in the political, economic and cultural lives of the state.

Political consultation within the united front is an important form for developing socialist democracy among our people under the leadership of the party. It is also a fine tradition in our country's political life. A conscientious consultation and a comprehensive collection of all the beneficial ideas from all circles will help our party and government to satisfactorily do their work and correct their mistakes. It facilitates the satisfactory readjustment of the relationships of all the sectors of the united front and gives full play to the initiative of all these sectors. It also helps the masses to master the principles and policies of the state and enables them to make concerted efforts to satisfactorily do all the jobs of the state.

Democratic supervision within the united front is also a fine tradition in our country's political life. The application of this method in putting forward suggestions and carrying out criticism is a basic way to carry out democratic supervision. Assisting the state organs to improve their work, raise their work efficiency and overcome bureaucracy is the aim of democratic supervision. During the past few years, the channels of democratic supervision have gradually increased and the content of democratic supervision has been much more enriched than before. This kind of supervision performed by the CPPCC does not have any legal binding force. In this respect, it differs from the supervision of the people's congress over state power. However these two different kinds of supervision supplement one another in building up a high degree of socialist democracy. We hope that the CPPCC will be able to systematically sum up its experiences and conscientiously promote the performance of all those roles. Thus it will surely be able to continue to play a conducive role in building a high degree of material and socialist spiritual civilizations in our country.

The new CPPCC regulations that were examined and approved in the session were significant achievements of the Fifth Session of the Fifth CPPCC. These regulations were formulated by summing up, under the guidance of the spirit of the 12th party congress, the experiences and lessons in the work of the CPPCC since the founding of the PRC and by eliminating the impact of the "leftist" guiding ideology of the "Great Cultural Revolution." More than 2 years were spent in widely soliciting opinions, studying and discussing the draft constitution before it was finally formulated. This is the third set of regulations for the CPPCC and it clearly stipulates the nature, position, tasks and roles of the CPPCC. It is a correct program for the CPPCC for the creation of a new situation in its work in the new historical period. We believe that all participating units and individuals of the CPPCC, including CPC members, will surely conscientiously observe and implement these new regulations and satisfactorily perform their duties.

Naturally, in doing their work, the CPPCC organizations at all levels must get the active support of the CPC committees at all levels. Under the present situation, we should continue to strengthen the propaganda on the importance of the united front work and the work of the CPPCC in the new period. For quite a few comrades the problem of how they are to understand the importance of these works has not yet been solved. This is an obstacle to the continuous development of the united front work and the work of the CPPCC. Therefore, it is imperative for us to publicize and explain the theory about the united front on a large scale in order to make these comrades' understanding conform with the theory and policies of the CPC Central Committee. In particular, the comrades in our united front work departments and other relevant departments must even more conscientiously study the party's united front principle and policies formulated since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, study Comrade Mao Zedong's exposition on the problems related to the united front, deepen their understanding through combining theory with practice and thus lay the ideological foundation for satisfactorily doing united front work.

We should adopt actual measures to give full play to the initiative of all the CPPCC members from the various democratic parties, mass bodies and the patriotic democrats in all circles in doing the work of the CPPCC and enabling them to pool their strength and wisdom to make common efforts to create a new situation in the work of the united front and the CPPCC. We must continue to eliminate the influence of "leftism" and prevent and overcome the tendency of closed-doorism. Furthermore, we should provide conditions for the CPPCC organizations at all levels in order to facilitate the development of their work. This is very necessary.

The people's CPPCC was personally founded by Comrades Mao Zedong and Zhou Enlai and has a glorious history under their leadership. Since our country entered into a new historical period, it has continued to make vigorous progress in carrying out the cause of building socialism. We believe that under the leadership of the CPC, the people's CPPCC will surely earnestly implement its new regulations in light of the actual conditions and make greater contributions to the fulfillment of the three major tasks for the 1980's and the general task for the new period!

CORRECTION TO HONG XUEZHI ON MILITARY SPENDING

The following correction should be made to the article entitled "Hong Xuezhi Discusses Military Spending Cuts" published on page K 12 of the 9 December China DAILY REPORT:

Page K 14, paragraph 2, line 10 should read: "...leading authorities have the resolve, there is no reason why the staff of the administrative organs cannot be sent to work at the grassroots units.

This veteran general's firm and forceful remarks were indeed thought-provoking. Facts indicate that, to streamline the logistics service, investigation and study must be energetically intensified. The 10 combined investigation groups formed by the General Logistics Department visited all the border defense divisions, regiments, battalions, companies, platoons, squads and posts, as well as the offshore islands, to study the situation. Their investigation and study led to the solution of over 5,000 problems involving the armymen's shelter, water supply, illumination, transport, communications, medical and health service for the border and coastal defense units with nonbudgetary funds appropriated by the General Logistics Department and approved by the Military Commission of the CPC Central Committee. This accomplishment was hailed by the armymen and acclaimed by the leading comrades of the Military Commission.

Comrade Hong Xuezhi pointed out: Now the 12th CPC National Congress has put forward...."

[Excerpts] Fuzhou, 8 Dec (XINHUA) -- The Fuzhou PLA units recently held a meeting of advanced representatives in studying science and culture. After summing up experiences gained by these units in carrying out scientific and cultural education, the meeting emphatically pointed out that only by constantly eliminating the influence of "left" ideas and smashing the bonds of the concept of small-scale production can education in science and culture be placed in a strategic position.

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, Fuzhou PLA units have exerted vigorous efforts to carry out scientific and cultural education and set up more than 10,000 teaching and self-study classes. They have made headway in this drive by establishing an educational system commensurate with the PLA units' scientific and cultural levels. An examining and evaluating program has been completed by Fuzhou PLA units and more than 35,000 cadres and fighters have received certificates of graduation from similar junior middle schools or of completion of courses at the same educational levels.

The meeting studied and put forward the following proposals for carrying out better education in science and culture:

1. While studying the 12th party congress' documents, all units should conscientiously sum up experiences in scientific and cultural education, gain a comprehensive understanding of the strategic principles for building a socialist spiritual civilization and exert utmost efforts to promote cultural education in the same way they carry out military and political training.

2. All units should promote study programs for cadres and, beginning by the end of this year, initiate cultural training courses for cadres at and below the regimental level who have not reached the age of 40. Efforts should be made to help these cadres attain an educational level similar to that of secondary professional school or college.

3. Leading cadres at all levels, particularly those in charge of cultural education, should display a creative spirit, conduct investigations and study at grassroots units and take the initiative in exercising leadership over cultural education while promoting work in an effort to produce quick results.

JIANGSU HOLDS MEETING ON AIR DEFENSE WORK

OW120838 Nanjing Jiangsu Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 7 Dec 82

[Text] The Jiangsu provincial government and the provincial military district held a commendation meeting for the advanced collectives and individuals in the people's air defense work on the morning of 7 December. The meeting was held at the newly built auditorium of people's air defense in Nanjing Municipality.

Attending the meeting were representatives of 103 advanced collectives and 159 advanced workers who had made outstanding contributions to people's air defense work, as well as responsible leading comrades of the concerned departments. Responsible comrades of the provincial people's government, the provincial military district and the provincial air defense committee Zhou Ze, Li Zhizhong, Lin Yousheng, Dong Changyun, (Li Guohou), and (Wang Zibo), deputy commander of the Nanjing PLA units, and (Qu Zhigeng), responsible comrade of the Nanjing Municipal People's Government, attended the opening ceremony.

Deputy Commander (Wang Zibo) extended congratulations to the meeting and greetings to the cadres and workers on the air defense front on behalf of the party committee of the Nanjing PLA units and the air defense committee.

Zhou Ze, secretary of the provincial CPC committee, vice provincial governor and director of the provincial air defense committee, delivered a work report. He said: Under the guidance of the guidelines of the 12th CPC National Congress, the commendation meeting must seriously sum up the province's air defense work since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, exchange experiences and commend the advanced. The meeting must also mobilize the cadres and the masses in key cities and towns to make efforts in creating a new situation in the people's air defense work.

NANJING PLA DUAL-PURPOSE TRAINING CITED

[Report by Wu Dongfeng [0702 2639 1496]: "Make Efforts To Train Dual-Purpose Personnel To Defend and Build the Motherland -- Yu Qiuli [0151 4428 6849] Says the Experience of a Certain Unit of the Nanjing PLA Units Ought To Be Popularized Throughout the Army"]

[Text] Hearing the report on the experience of a certain unit of the Nanjing PLA units in training dual-purpose personnel to defend and build the motherland, Yu Qiuli, director of the PLA General Political Department, said: "The PLA fighters have settled down to serve in the Army because of the measure of training dual-purpose personnel, and after they are demobilized their parents, they themselves, the localities and the army will be satisfied with this measure. This is a good thing. This experience ought to be popularized throughout the army. At the same time, this shows that the proposal put forward by Deng Xiaoping in 1977 to train 'dual-purpose personnel' in the army is correct."

Since the end of 1980, a certain unit of the Nanjing PLA units, apart from military and political training, has been running various professional training courses and arranging for young fighters to study professional sciences needed in society so that they are able to acquire dual skills in defending the motherland and in building the four modernizations. For the past 2 years the unit has run various training courses such as photography, arts and crafts, radio operations, gardening, sewing and cooking. Some 90 percent of the soldiers have attended training courses. To date, 1,380 PLA fighters have acquired one or two professional skills. They have raised their cultural and technical levels. They are fully confident about their future life in the event they are demobilized so they feel at ease during their term of military service.

According to initial statistics, since 1980, of the demobilized soldiers of peasant origin of a certain regiment, 55 persons have been employed in radio stations, newspaper offices, painting and calligraphy units, hospitals and agricultural science research units; 31 persons have become self-employed by running watch repairing shops, photo studios, barber shops and small restaurants; and 5 have been admitted to universities.

JIANGXI PLA ARMY SCHOOL STUDIES CONSTITUTION

OW121050 Nanchang Jiangxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 7 Dec 82

[Text] Commanders and fighters of the PLA army school in Nanchang have conscientiously studied and discussed the country's new constitution adopted by the Fifth NPC at its Fifth Session.

They are striving to fulfill the glorious task of the people's army as prescribed in the new constitution; they are determined, together with the people, to be loyal fighters safeguarding the new constitution while earnestly deferding the interests of the motherland and the masses.

This army derives from the people and serves them, and adhering to the constitution embodies this army's purpose of wholeheartedly serving the people, said Commandant (Wang Mingde).

Recalling 1943 when he was a guard at the Eighth Route Army headquarters in the Taihang Shan, Vice Commandant (Hong Guoxi) said: During the war years, Commander-in-Chief Zhu De exhorted us to keep the people's interests in mind at all times. An article pledging to support the decrees of the local governments and demanding every commander and fighter strictly adhere to the government's rules and decrees was always included in the convention on supporting the government and cherishing the people. We should carry forward the fine traditions of the people's army, resolutely support the new constitution and take the lead in implementing it.

Comrade (Yang Zuoxin), a veteran Red Army fighter and deputy political commissar of the (?cadet department), who is currently on convalescence leave, said at a session to study the new constitution: To win final victory in the Chinese revolution, numerous revolutionary martyrs, one stepping into the breach as another fell, heroically laid down their lives. On the Long March, on the battlefields in the war against Japanese aggression and in the war for liberation, they yearned for the establishment of a new adn glorious China, longing for a cardinal law of the state protecting the people's status as masters of the country and safeguarding their interests. The new constitution is that law, dreamed of by the people. It is a law that will lead our four modernizations to success. We should defend it with our lives and our blood.

During their sessions to discuss the new constitution, cadres, fighters and cadets of the PLA army school in Nanchang linked their discussion to present realities and expressed their determination to conscientiously study and enthusiastically publicize the new constitution. Each and every one of the 107 cadets of the school's 11th group wrote a letter home to disseminate the new constitution, propagating its significance among his parents and relatives and urging them to act as models in adhering to the constitution and to take the lead in implementing it.

SHANGHAI GARRISON LEADERS AT MEETINGS OF ADVANCED

[Excerpts] PLA Unit No 83302 and PLA Unit No 83304 stationed in Shanghai held separate congresses of advanced collectives and advanced individuals in developing socialist spiritual civilization from 1 to 4 December. These two units achieved gratifying results in developing socialist spiritual civilization in the past year with more than 300 advanced collectives and over 2,100 advanced individuals coming to fore. The CPC committees of these two units commended the advanced at the congresses and singled out a number of pacesetters.

Representatives at the meetings earnestly studied the documents of the 12th CPC National Congress, exchanged experience and discussed plans for creating a new situation for army building.

Zhang Chen and Wang Jingkun, political commissar and deputy political commissar, respectively, of the Shanghai Garrison command, addressed the congresses urging the representatives to continue to play an exemplary role and to create a new situation for army building with great enthusiasm and fighting spirit.

ZHEJIANG NUCLEAR POWERPLANT PREPARATIONS BEGIN

[Unattributed report: "Curtain Lifts for the Start of the Construction and Engineering Work for China's First Nuclear Powerplant"]

[Text] Special dispatch from Haiyan by Chen Qingmei [7115 1987 2812]: "The curtain was officially lifted here on 4 December for the start of the construction work for China's first nuclear powerplant. Personnel from the Ministry of Nuclear Industry, headed by secretary of the CPC committee and director of the plant, who are making preparations for the powerplant's construction, moved into the construction site on 3 and 4 December. Now, work is being stepped up for roadbuilding, electricity and water supply so as to make full preparations for breaking ground in starting the project in the first quarter of next year.

The Qinshan nuclear powerplant will be equipped with a nuclear pressurized water reactor with capacity for generating 300,000 kilowatts of electricity, which is completely of Chinese design. After a long-term survey and following various comparisons, the State Economic Commission finally approved on 2 November the placing of the project site at Qinshan in Haiyan County of Zhejiang Province and decided that it would be included in the key projects to be built during the Sixth 5-Year Plan. The Qinshan nuclear powerplant is located about 10 kilometers south of the county town of Haiyan along Hangzhou Bay and at the foot of the Qinshan Mountains. With hills behind and the East China Sea in front, the plant also has convenient communications and a good geological structure. Comrade Zhang Aiping recently paid an inspection visit to the construction site and put forward some important suggestions on the project.

Comrades of the office for preparatory work told this reporter: We need more than 1,200 mu of land for building the whole project, but we will wrest most of the land from the sea and will only use 30 mu of farmland and woodland. The local people said with applause: "Nuclear power will benefit the people, it is safe and cheap, and only a small part of farmland will be used."

In making preparations for the powerplant, great support and assistance were rendered by various departments of the State Council and from Shanghai Municipality and Zhejiang Province in various respects such as selection of blueprints, manufacutre of equipment, choice of location of the plant and engineering work. In order to ensure progress of the project, the departments concerned have set up their command and coordination headquarters. The Ministry of Nuclear Industry has placed the building of the project as one of its most important tasks and dispatched its personnel to the construction side to give a hand to the office for preparatory work for the project. The major sets of equipment for this powerplant have been prepared by China herself and most of them will be manufactured in Shanghai.

According to the state plan, this nuclear powerplant will go into operation by 1988. A responsible person told this reporter at the construction site: Building this plant is really a very tough job. It must be finished and put into operation within 6 years. We must fulfill high quality requirements. He also asked this reporter to convey to the people of the country: "All technical staff, workers and cadres are resolved to carry on and develop the hard working spirit in buidling China's first group of nuclear devices. They pledge themselves to fulfilling the task on time, or ahead of time, so as to supply a greater energy source for the four modernizations.

GUANGDONG MUNICIPAL BUREAU HEAD RELIEVED OF POST

HK100910 Guangzhou Guangdong Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 9 Dec 82

[Text] Jiang Weiping, secretary of the leading party group and director of the Maoming municipal industrial and commercial administrative and management bureau, obstructed and undermined the implementation of the party's policies formulated since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, seriously damaged the reputation of the party and infringed upon the interests of the people, thus creating an extremely bad impression inside and outside the party.

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, our party has repeatedly stressed the importance of setting things to rights, calling on all units to realistically redress unjust, false and wrong cases, handle issues left over from the past and rectify unhealthy work style. Jiang Weiping, however, adopted a method of opposition and procrastination with respect to the unjust, framed and wrong cases in the industrial and commercial bureau. Even after stalling for a long time, he refused to organize forces to reexamine the cases and to rectify them promptly, thus arousing the strong dissatisfaction of the masses. Early last year the letter and reception section of the Maoming municipal government and the procuratorate made a spot check of the 26 cases which were claimed to have been reexamined. About 50 percent of the cases that were spot checked had not been reexamined, had not been rectified although they were wrong and had not been wound up or handled properly. In May last year, Zhang Yutian, deputy secretary of the municipal CPC committee and mayor, personally called together responsible persons of the departments concerned. Together with Jiang Weiping, they studied 10 of the cases 1 by 1, determining the nature of each case and formulating the methods of rectification. Zhang Yutian also instructed Jaing Weiping to rectify them within the specified time and to report the results to the higher authorities. However, Jiang Weiping still refused to follow this instruction. Later, after repeated pressure from the leaders of the municipal CPC committee and government, he reluctantly handled two of the cases.

As the director of the industrial and commercial bureau, Jiang Weiping refused to follow the instructions of the State Council on strengthening the market management and on striking at profiteering and smuggling activities. On two occasions early last year, he sent cadres and cars to Zhongshan and Wuchuan Counties to purchase nylon cloth, shirts and trousers which had been smuggled into the country. He then handed this contraband over to youths awaiting jobs in the bureau for resale at a high profit in the Maoming markets. In September 1980 Jiang Weiping also printed, without the approval of the municipal tax bureau, Maoming municipal certificates for the reimbursement of farm produce and sideline products bought in the rural markets and then distributed them to various centers of the bureau and other industrial and commercial offices. These certificates were used not only as invoices for the purchase of farm produce and sideline products, but also for the maintenance of machinery, repair and construction of projects, the purchase of industrial products and service work. According to statistics from the departments concerned, the amount of certificates used as invoices amounted to more than 38,000 yuan. Of this, more than 7,200 yuan was for the purchase of products subjected to tax payment. In this way he disrupted the state invoice management system and created a serious effect in tax evasion.

Furthermore, under the control of Jiang Weiping, the Maoming municipal industrial and commercial administrative management bureau frequently acted in its own way in implementing the state's financial system.

It willfully retained fines that should have been delivered to the state, embezzled or exaggerated funds for various expenditures in the market and refused to deliver cash surplus to the state at the end of the year. Consequently, the state suffered huge economic losses.

In the past couple of years the central, provincial and Maoming Municipal People's Governments have promulgated a series of documents on checking indiscriminate distribution of bonuses. In the first place, the Maoming municipal industrial and commercial administrative and management bureau distributed an average of 508 yuan of bonuses to each person last year, including bonuses in kind. This exceeded by a big margin the bonus limit prescribed by the policy and made it a unit within the municipality distributing bonuses in a fairly serious manner. However, Jiang Weiping did not restrain himself at this. At the end of last year he submitted a report under the name of the bureau to the leading group of the municipality for striking at profiteering activities with the aim of drawing from the bank more than 19,000 yuan as bonuses. Later, the municipal CPC committee and people's government decided to distribute 70 yuan to each of the 19 full-time cadres who worked in the offices of the leading group for striking at profiteering activities and who rendered great service in handing over the balance of the money to the financial bureau. Jiang Weiping refused to execute this order. At a meeting of the bureau's leading party group in February this year, he acted in his own way by formulating a plan for the distribution of bonuses. As this act ran counter to the financial management system, it was impossible to draw the cash from the bank. Therefore, he again instructed the persons in charge of this work to resort to deception. By concocting various pretexts, such as drawing funds for striking at profiteering activities and for reserve funds, they managed to collect more than 14,000 yuan of cash and distributed the money as a bonus, each person in the bureau receiving an average of 180 yuan.

In view of the fact that Jiang Weiping had committed the above-mentioned serious errors, the Maoming Municipal CPC Committee made a decision in early March to temporarily relieve Jiang Weiping of this post for self-examination and circulated this decision throughout the municipality. In accordance with the demands of the masses, the municipal CPC committee also sent an investigation group to conduct an overall investigation of his problems and strictly deal with him.

HUNAN PARTY HOLDS DISCIPLINE INSPECTION MEETING

HK130255 Changsha Hunan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2310 GMT 12 Dec 82

[Text] The 6-day provincial party discipline inspection meeting concluded yesterday afternoon in Changsha. At yesterday's meeting, provincial party committee Secretary Zhao Chuqi gave a speech on three aspects of the problem of striving for a fundamental turn for the better in the party's style: 1) rectifying the party's style is a matter of importance involving the whole party. Party committees at all levels must pay close attention to it and make good preparations for next year's movement of consolidating the party; 2) the most important thing in striving for a fundamental improvement in the party's style is to strengthen the education of party members and enhance their ideological consciousness and political quality; 3) party committees at all levels should strengthen their leadership over discipline inspection work and give more support to this work so as to make discipline inspection department a powerful strength.

Comrade (Shi Jinshan), member of the standing committee of the provincial CPC committee and secretary of the provincial commission for discipline inspection, also gave a speech at the meeting.

KUNMING PLA CADRES STUDY NEW CONSTITUTION 9 DEC

HK130313 Kunming Yunnan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2305 GMT 12 Dec 82

[Text] The leaders of the Kunming PLA units CPC Committee and organs have conscientiously studied and discussed the new constitution and have made up their minds to take the lead in studying, publicizing, observing and safeguarding the new constitution and striving to fulfill the sacred tasks that the new constitution assigns to the people's army.

On the afternoon of 9 December, the leading comrades of the Kunming PLA units CPC Committee held a forum to discuss the new constitution with some of the responsible comrades of the organs of the units after they had conscientiously read and studied the constitution on their own. During the forum, they talked freely about the great significance of the promulgation of the new constitution and praised it as the most perfect constitution we have formulated since the founding of the PRC. They also praised it because it pays great attention to, shows great concern for and treasures the people's armed forces. They unanimously expressed their will to set examples in studying, publicizing, observing and safeguarding the new constitution.

Zhang Zhixiu, commander of the units, said in the discussion that the new constitution is the guiding principle for the actions of the people throughout the country and is the general program for running the country well and bringing about peace and stability. It is the legal guarantee for the modernization. It is suited to our national conditions and conforms with the will of the people, the party and the army. We will warmly support and resolutely observe it.

(Xie Zhenhua), political commissar of the units, pointed out that it was our historical experience that we must enforce and observe the law we had promulgated and that if the law were not enforced there were bound to be turmoils in our country which would ruin our country. Now that we have a new constitution, our country's long-term good rule and stability are therefore guaranteed and so is the realization of the strategic goal of quadrupling our industrial and agricultural output value. We must treasure and defend this new constitution.

In their speeches, the other leading comrades of the units expressed their will to lead the units to satisfactorily study, publicize, observe and enforce the new constitution and strive to fulfill the sacred task that the new constitution assigns to the people's armed forces.

At the conclusion of the forum, Comrades Zhang Zhixiu and Xie Zhenhua proposed to adopt diverse methods such as inviting the deputies to the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC and the comrades from the local judicial organs to the units to give guidance lectures in organizing the cadres and fighters to conscientiously study the new constitution while studying the new party constitution and thus make them resolutely support, vigorously publicize, consciously observe and bravely defend the new constitution.

NEI MONGGOL MEETING TO STUDY CONSTITUTION HELD

SK120400 Hohhot Nei Monggol Regional Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 11 Dec 82

Comrade Kong Fei said: The new constitution, formulated by taking the four basic principles as its general guiding ideology, is the general law for running the country well and for maintaining the state's stability. The constitution clearly points out that, in the future, the state's fundamental task is to concentrate our efforts on building the four modernizations. He stressed: It is necessary to rely on the workers, peasants and intellectuals for carrying out the socialist construction undertakings. This fundamental general law affirms the important status of intellectuals. We must further eliminate the pernicious leftist influence on intellectuals, boldly promote and employ middle-aged and young intellectuals who have both ability and political integrity and see to it that all talented persons will be fully used so as to quicken our pace in the region's four modernizations drive.

In a speech, Comrade Ba-Tu-Ba-Gen said: The new constitution, making its appearance as the state's fundamental general law, clearly defines the most important issues concerning the state's political and economic systems, the state's basic tasks in the days to come, the citizens' rights and obligations and the establishment and scope of functions and powers of state organs. We believe that the enforcement of the new constitution is an indispensable legal guarantee for bringing a long period of prosperity to the state, ensuring peace and contentment for the people of various nationalities as they work, modernizing industry, agriculture, national defence and science and technology and building China into a socialist country with highly developed culture and democracy.

Comrade Hao Xiushan said: In the preface of the new constitution, it is pointed out that the state will try its best to promote the common prosperity of the people of various nationalities. For various historical reasons, the pastoral, remote and mountainous revolutionary base areas in our Nei Monggol Autonomous Region are relatively backward in culture and economics. We must actively adopt measures to expedite the construction of pastoral, agricultural and mountainous revolutionary base areas so as to gradually eliminate the inequalities existing in these areas.

NEI MONGGOL PEOPLE'S CONGRESS HAILS CONSTITUTION

At the forum, Shen Xinfa and Qi Junshan, vice chairmen of the regional people's congress standing committee, said: The new constitution carries forward the basic principles of the 1954 constitution and, in particular, sums up both the positive and negative experiences in our country's socialist development. Since the new constitution is formulated through comprehensive discussions of the people of various nationalities on all circles in our country, it totally conforms to the national condition and to the will of the people and is a fundamental law in the new stage for maintaining the state's stability and for running the country well.

(Ge Wa), deputy president of the Nei Monggol social sciences academy, said: The general guiding ideology of the new constitution is the four basic principles. These four basic principles are the common political foundation for the people of all nationalities across the country to unite as one and go forward, as well as the basic guarantee for smoothly developing the socialist modernization.

(Man-Gon-Si), deputy secretary general of the regional people's congress standing committee and a cadre of the Ewenki nationality, said with feeling: Like the people of all other nationalities across the country, we, the people of Ewenki nationality, deeply feel that this fundamental law thoroughly eliminates national oppression and discrimination and fully reflects the fact that all nationalities are equal politically, regardless of their numbers, education level or economic situation. In the national big family, which is composed of more than 1 billion people of over 50 nationalities, the people of the Ewenki nationality, which is composed of only 10,000 people and is backward in economy and culture, share the concern and warmth of the great national big family towards minority nationalities. In view of this, I feel that this new constitution is a law for ensuring the equality and well-being of the minority nationalities.

URUMQI'S WANG ENMAO VIEWS SIXTH 5-YEAR PLAN

HK100234 Urumqi Xinjiang Regional Service in Mandarin 1300 GMT 8 Dec 82

[Text] The following is an article written by Comrade Wang Enmao, entitled: "The Sixth 5-Year Plan Is an Important Step To Realizing the Strategic Goal in Economic Construction Proposed by the 12th Party Congress." Comrade Wang Enmao's article mainly deals with three questions: 1) basic tasks of the Sixth 5-Year Plan; 2) the situation in Xinjiang; 3) the resolute implementation of the Sixth 5-Year Plan and striving for greater development in economic construction.

In speaking about the situation in Xinjiang, Comrade Wang Enmao said: As in other places throughout the country, the situation here is very favorable. In 1982 the situation has become even more favorable since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, and Xinjiang has developed rapidly. Under the leadership of the CPC Central Committee, a series of important instructions on work in Xinjiang issued by the CPC Central Committee has been resolutely implemented, the party's traditions in work for minority nationalities have been revived and leftist mistakes in work for minority nationalities have been corrected so that work for minority nationalities has again embarked on a correct path.

With the further implementation of the party's policies for minority nationalities, a social mood of cadres and the masses of the people of various nationalities trusting, respecting, supporting, learning from and understanding one another has grown. Unity among various nationalities has been further strengthened. The problem of Han cadres being unwilling to work in the border region has largely been solved.

A large number of intellectuals, college graduates and ex-servicemen have written letters asking to be allowed to work in Xinjiang and contribute their strength to defending and constructing the border region. Leading groups at various levels have been further strengthened and a number of cadres from among minority nationalities have been selected to posts with leading groups for the same purpose.

The relationships between the army and the government, the army and the people and production and construction corps and local administration have been further improved. The army cherishes the people and the people support the army. There are numerous touching examples of production and construction corps and local administration helping and supporting one another. In implementing the party's policies for minority nationalities and in educational activities to strengthen unity among nationalities, many advanced units and individuals who have promoted unity among nationalities have emerged.

A stable social order and a favorable political situation of stability and unity prevails over the Nanjiang and Beijing rivers, cities, rural areas and pastures. Thanks to this situation, CPC committees at all levels are able to concentrate their strength on economic construction and have truly shifted the focus of their work to economic construction, thus further developing economic construction.

The special features of this year's economic development are: 1) there is an overall increase in production. In agriculture, the production of grain crops, industrial crops and animal husbandry has increased. In industry, the production of light industry has increased and that of heavy industry has also increased, with rapid growth; 2) the range of increase is bigger than last year. Agricultural output value will increase by over 6 percent and industrial output value will increase by over 8 percent; 3) there is an increase in economic returns. Profits handed over to the state by industrial enterprises have increased and losses have been reduced;

4) the continuous drop in financial revenue in the past 3 years has been stopped. Financial revenue from January to October this year already exceeded the annual plan by 14.9 percent; 5) the industrial and agricultural production of the production and construction corps has also increased. On the basis of succeeding in changing losses to gains last year, greater gains have been made this year; 6) the markets are very brisk and prices are basically stable. This is particularly so in Urumqi, where there is plentiful supply of vegetables at low prices. On the basis of development in production, the people's living standard has been further raised. The average income from distribution of the collective of commune members through Xinjiang has increased from 117 yuan last year to 125 yuan this year.

In speaking about resolutely implementing the Sixth 5-Year Plan and striving for a greater development in economic construction, Comrade Wang Enmao said: 1) do a good job in agricultural production and animal husbandry, stabilize the party's economic policies in rural areas, improve the responsibility system in various forms in agricultural production, suiting measures to local conditions, implement in an overall way the policy of never slackening efforts to strive for an increase in grain production and of energetically developing a diversified economy, do a good job in water conservation, make great efforts in cultivating grassland and pastures, plant more trees and extend afforestated areas and strengthen scientific and technological work in agriculture; 2) step up industrial development, do a good job in developing energy supply and communications, develop cotton and woolen textile, tanning and foodstuffs industries which obtain raw materials from agriculture and animal husbandry, speed up construction of new industrial projects while strengthening work in technical transformation of existing enterprises and increasing economic returns of industrial enterprises; 3) accelerate development in education, science, culture, health work and physical culture; 4) strive to increase financial revenue; 5) continue to raise the living standard of people of various nationalities on the basis of developing production.

URUMQI MILITARY REGION CITES ADVANCED UNITS

HK100954 Urumqi Xinjiang Regional Service in Mandarin 1300 GMT 9 Dec 82

[Text] The units directly under the Urumqi Military Region held their first meeting from 4-9 December to commend advanced units and individuals in building socialist spiritual civilization. The meeting called on commanders and soldiers in the units directly under the military region to conscientiously study the new constitution under the guidance of the spirit of the 12th CPC National Congress, to carry out activities of building socialist spiritual civilization thoroughly and consistently and to strive to create a new situation in strengthening the army.

At the meeting, experiences gained by the units directly under the military region in building socialist civilization were summed up and exchanged. There were 335 advanced units and 1,444 advanced individuals commended and awarded. Five examples for units and six for individuals were set up, and measures were discussed for further carrying out the activity of building socialist spiritual civilization. Since the beginning of this year, party organizations at various levels in the units directly under the Urumqi Military Region have firmly grasped the building of socialist spiritual civilization. The mental outlook of the broad masses of commanders and soldiers has taken on an entirely new look. They have firmer faith in communism and have made up their minds to stick to their posts in the border areas. A new atmosphere has emerged in all aspects of the work.

Some 934 aid, agriculture and industry groups of the units directly under the military region often go to the streets, railway station, schools and shops to help the masses remove refuse, repair roads and beautify the environment. They are spoken of highly by the masses of people from various nationalities for their many good turns.

Xiao Quanfu and (Ma Sun), responsible comrades in the Urumqi Military Region, gave speeches at the meeting. They expressed the hopes that the units directly under the military region would continue to carry out in-depth education in ideals, morality, culture and discipline and education in love for the party, socialism and the motherland. They urged these units to launch an activity among the broad masses of commanders and soldiers to learn from the iron sentry post of Kala Kunlun, to foster the communist ideal and strengthen their faith in communism and to strive to be vanguards in the building of socialist spiritual civilization. The meeting also put forward a proposal to carry out in depth the building of spiritual civilization.

XIAN HOLDS 'TIDYING UP' SOCIAL ORDER RALLY

HK130234 Xian Shaanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 0500 GMT 12 Dec 82

He Chenghua said: Over the past 2 or 3 years, Xian's social order has improved noticeably, but there are still quite a lot of problems. He said: In order to tidy up social order it is necessary to effectively implement the general principle of comprehensive administration laid down by the central authorities. This work should not merely be handled by the judicial departments; all trades and all parties concerned should pay attention to it.

This meeting was presided over by (Zhang Tieming), Xian mayor and secretary of the municipal party committee. (Li Sengui), member of the standing committee of the municipal party committee and secretary of the provincial judicial committee, also spoke at the meeting.

Zhao's Report on 5-Year Plan

OW130126 Beijing XINHUA in English 0103 GMT 13 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 13 (XINHUA) -- Following is the full text of the report by Premier Zhao Ziyang on the Sixth Five-Year Plan for National Economic and Social Development which was approved at the National People's Congress session on December 10:

Fellow deputies, on behalf of the State Council, I now submit a report on the Sixth Five-Year Plan for China's Economic and Social Development for examination and approval by the present session.

The Basic Tasks of the Sixth Five-Year Plan

In 1980, the last year of the Fifth Five-Year Plan, the State Council worked out the general outline and main targets of the Sixth Five-Year Plan (1981-85). Objective conditions were then lacking for drawing up a fairly comprehensive five-year plan as the whole country, in the spirit of the Third Plenary Session of the Eleventh Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party, was busy setting things to rights, the national economy was undergoing further readjustments, detailed studies of many problems had yet to be made in the course of practice, and essential data were not available due to damage during the decade of domestic turmoil. The State Council has conducted careful investigation and study of our economic work in the past two years while stepping up economic readjustment. In the report on the work of the government delivered at the Fourth Session of the Fifth National People's Congress, it put forward ten principles for the development of the national economy centered on achieving better economic results, which the session discussed and approved. The State Council then mobilized the relevant quarters to study and discuss several times the major issues involved in the Sixth Five-Year Plan. Our national economy has now embarked on a sound path of steady growth. The drawing up of the draft Sixth Five-Year Plan has been completed.

The Twelfth National Congress of the Chinese Communist Party formulated the strategic objective, priorities and steps of our economic development. This calls for quadrupling the gross annual value of China's industrial and agricultural production in the two decades between 1981 and the end of this century on condition that economic results are steadily improved; it calls for achieving a fundamental turn for the better in China's financial and economic situation in the five years from 1983 to 1987, that is, striking a balance between state revenue and expenditure by significantly improving the economic results in all trades and professions and all enterprises while ensuring a gradual increase in the funds for economic and cultural development and a gradual improvement in the people's living standards. To accomplish this, we must continue the policy of readjusting, restructuring, consolidating and improving the national economy during the Sixth Five-Year Plan period, make further efforts to solve the various problems left over from the past which hamper economic growth, win decisive victory in achieving a fundamental turn for the better in the financial and economic situation and lay a better foundation or create more favourable conditions for economic and social development in the Seventh Five-Year Plan period. In the five years from 1981 to 1985, we plan to increase the gross value of our industrial and agricultural production by 21.7 per cent, an average annual increase of 4 per cent. Total investment in fixed assets is planned at 360 million yuan, and we will build a number of modern projects and carry out major technical transformation in a number of key enterprises.

Funds for developing education, science, culture and public health service will be 96.7 billion yuan, an increase of 68 per cent over the 57.7 billion yuan appropriated in the Fifth Five-Year Plan. The per-capita level of consumption in urban and rural areas will rise by 22 per cent, averaging an annual rise of 4.1 per cent. We shall during this period maintain a basic balance of state revenue and expenditure and of credit receipts and payments, and basic stability of commodity prices. The Sixth Five-Year Plan is a plan for steady development in the course of readjustment, for promotion of China's modernization and for continued improvement in the people's living standards. Fulfilment of this plan is vital to the future of our whole modernization programme and to the interests of the people of all our nationalities.

The draft of the Sixth Five-Year Plan has been distributed to all the deputies. I would like here to explain its main points and some relevant questions.

1. The Rate of Industrial and Agricultural Growth and Economic Results

An important principle guiding the Sixth Five-Year Plan is to maintain an appropriate rate of growth in China's industrial and agricultural output on the premise of improving economic results. Under the plan, the gross value of industrial and agricultural output in 1985 will come to 871 billion yuan, or 155.1 billion yuan more than the 715.9 billion yuan in 1980. Of this, the gross value of agricultural output will go up from 218.7 billion yuan to 266 billion yuan and that of industrial output from 497.2 billion yuan to 605 billion yuan. In other words, both are to rise annually by an average of 4 per cent, and efforts will be made to bring the figure up to 5 per cent in the course of carrying out the plan. In the gross value of industrial output, light industry is to grow by an annual average of 5 per cent and heavy industry by 3 per cent. By 1985, the country's grain output is to reach 360 million tons, an increase of 12.3 per cent over 1980; cotton, 3.6 million tons, an increase of 33 per cent; yarn 3.59 million tons, a rise of 22.8 per cent; sugar, 4.3 million tons, a jump of 67.3 per cent; coal, 700 million tons, an increase of 12.9 per cent; electricity, 362 billion kWh, a growth of 20.4 per cent; and steel, 39 million tons, a rise of 5.1 per cent. Materialization of this plan will establish a better ratio among agriculture, light industry and heavy industry.

In the 28 years from 1953 to 1980, gross value of agricultural output grew by an average of 3.4 per cent annually. The Sixth Five-Year Plan calls for an average annual increase of 4-5 per cent. This is by no means a low rate, and considerable efforts will have to be made to attain it. The plan projects an industrial growth rate lower than the average in the previous 28 years. This is because the task of industrial readjustment remains very arduous and complicated, energy output cannot be increased significantly in the near future and the pressure on transport cannot be relieved radically. The rate of industrial growth in the previous 28 years was not low, but economic results were very poor. The Sixth Five-Year Plan therefore stipulates a slower rate predicated on better economic results. The plan demands that the quality of products should be improved steadily, varieties and designs should meet the needs of society and the consumption of materials per unit-product should be substantially reduced. All these demands are far more rigorous than in the past. A salient feature of the Sixth Five-Year Plan is its emphasis on better economic results.

Our experience shows that putting the plan targets on a sound basis through overall balancing while allowing some leeway helps protect and heighten the enthusiasm of the working people and production units and ensure a proportionate and coordinated growth of the national economy. The 1981 and 1982 plans will bring the growth of industrial and agricultural output above the average annual growth rate set in the Sixth Five-Year Plan, and this is good news for the whole nation. For the reasons given, we do not propose to raise the growth rate for the last three years of the plan. When, through our efforts in the period of the Sixth Five-Year Plan, the relations between the various sectors are brought into better balance, the work of consolidation is accomplished, a number of key construction projects in preparation for the Seventh Five-Year Plan are completed, and technical transformation of certain major items are carried out and certain key scientific and technological problems solved, the growth for the seventh five-year period is bound to be higher than that for the present five-year period. Provided we work in a down-to-earth manner and, in particular, make significant headway in training personnel, building key construction projects and improving technology, the growth rate for the eighth and ninth five-year periods is certain to be still higher, thus ushering in a new period of vigorous economic development for our country. In this way, we can realize the magnificent objective of quadrupling the gross annual value of industrial and agricultural production by the turn of the century in accordance with the strategic plan worked out at the party's twelfth national congress, a plan which calls for two steps in two decades.

2. The Scale and Priorities of Capital Construction and the Technical Transformation of Enterprises

Under the Sixth Five-Year Plan, total investment in capital construction throughout the country will be 230 billion yuan, roughly the same as for the Fifth Five-Year Plan. Altogether 890 large and medium-sized projects will be undertaken during these five years, far fewer than during the previous five-year period. This is based on the lessons of the past when our capital construction was too large in scale and overextended, so yielding poor returns from investment. In the Sixth Five-Year Plan, energy and transport are priorities and will receive 38.5 per cent of the total investment in capital construction, a somewhat higher figure than before. Meanwhile, appropriate arrangements are made for development in agriculture, the textile and other light industries, the metallurgical industry and the chemical industry, as well as for education, science, culture, public health service, urban public utilities, commerce and foreign trade. Four hundred large- and medium-sized projects are to be completed before the end of 1985, and the rest will be carried over for continued construction during the Seventh Five-Year Plan period. Funds totalling 130 billion yuan are earmarked for updating equipment in the existing enterprises and for their technical transformation. In the 28 years between 1953 and 1980, such funds accounted for about 20 per cent of the total investment in fixed assets. The figure is raised to 36 per cent in the Sixth Five-Year Plan. This is a big step forward. It will help improve the technology of our industry and speed up the modernization of the national economy as a whole.

I would now like to speak at some length about the development plans for energy, transport and agriculture and about the priorities for the technical transformation of the existing enterprises.

The coal industry will receive 17.9 billion yuan in investment during the five years. The funds will be used chiefly for exploiting the coal reserves in Shanxi, northeast China and eastern Inner Mongolia; at the same time, the coalfields in western Henan, Shandong, Anhui, Jiangsu and Guizhou provinces will also be developed. Twenty-eight large coal mines will be added, each with an annual capacity of over one million tons. This, plus the opening of small and medium-sized mines, will increase the total capacity of China's coal industry by 220 million tons. The plan provides for a production capacity of 80 million tons to be available before the end of 1985, with work continuing during the next five-year plan period for the remaining 140 million tons. To speed up the expansion of the coal industry, we should, on the one hand, concentrate on exploiting the big open-cast mines and, first of all, on building as soon as possible five such mines at Huolinhe, Yiminhe, Pingshuo, Yuanbaoshan and Junggar, which are rich in coal deposits. On the other hand, we should step up the technical transformation of the existing mines, build small- and medium-sized ones and tap potential. Thus we will be able to produce more coal with less investment at an earlier date, and we can increase our coal output appreciably in the next few years or within this decade and at the same time lay the ground for greater expansion of our coal industry in the following decade.

A total of 15.4 billion yuan will be invested in the petroleum industry in the Sixth Five-Year Plan period. Efforts will be concentrated on prospecting in the Songliao basin of northeast China, the Bohai Bay, the Puyang region of Henan Province and the Eren basin of Inner Mongolia. General survey and prospecting will also be stepped up to a proper extent in the Junggar basin of Xinjiang and the Qaidam basin of Qinghai, and such work will be steadily continued for present oil and natural gas fields in east China. Our goal is to verify the reserves of a number of new oilfields and to actively prospect for and exploit offshore oil deposits. In these five years, production capacity for oil will increase by 35 million tons and for natural gas by 2.5 billion cubic metres. This should help make up for the depletion as a result of continued exploitation of oil wells now in operation and maintain our annual oil output level at 100 million tons during the 1981-85 period.

A total of 20.7 billion yuan will be invested in the power industry in the same period. It will be used chiefly for continued exploitation of hydraulic resources along the upper reaches of the Huanghe River and the upper and middle reaches of the Changjiang River and in the Hongshui River basin, and for building a number of large hydroelectric stations. At the same time, a number of electric power stations will be constructed near the coal mines in coal-rich Shanxi Province, eastern Inner Mongolia, Huainan and Huaibei regions, western Henan Province, areas north of the Weihe River and Guizhou Province, as will be a number of thermal power stations in Shanghai and Liaoning, Jiangsu, Zhejiang, Guangdong and Sichuan Provinces where enormous amounts of electricity are consumed. These five years will witness the construction or continued construction of 15 hydroelectric stations each with an installed capacity of 400,000 kW or more, 45 thermal power stations each with an installed capacity of 200,000 kW or more, and one nuclear power station with an installed capacity of 300,000 kW. Added to the small stations to be set up, this will mean a total increase of 36.6 million kW of electric power for the whole country. Of this figure, 12.9 million kW will be available before the end of 1985, while work on the remaining 23.7 million kW will continue in the next five-year plan period.

Since these arrangements still fall short of fully meeting the power requirements of China's economic growth, efforts will be made, wherever possible, to step up construction of electric power stations in the course of implementing the plan, while strictly economizing on the use of electricity.

Twenty-nine point eight billion yuan will be invested in transport and post and telecommunications services over the five years, mainly for railway and harbour construction. The Sixth Five-Year Plan provides for laying 2,000 kilometres of rails, double-tracking 1,700 kilometres of the present railways and electrifying 2,500 kilometres. By 1985, the capacity of transporting coal from Shanxi, western Inner Mongolia and Ningxia to other places will have increased from 72 million tons in 1980 to 120 million tons and that to northeast China from 14 million tons in 1980 to 29 million tons. Construction of 132 deep-water berths is scheduled for 15 harbours including Dalian, Qinhuangdao, Tianjin, Qingdao, Shijiusuo, Lianyungang, Shanghai, Huangpu and Zhanjiang so that the handling capacity of the country's coastal harbours will total 317 million tons by 1985 as against 217 million tons in 1980. Work will continue on inland navigation projects along the Changjiang and other rivers. More roads will be built so as to improve the rural transport conditions. In the meantime, efforts will be made to increase the post and telecommunications facilities. Completion of these tasks will relieve the strain on transport and post and telecommunications services.

In agriculture, stress will be put on augmenting the flood control capacity of the Huanghe, Changjiang, Huaihe and Haihe rivers and on completing the construction of the Panjiakou and Daheiting reservoirs in Hebei Province and the Tianjin project for diverting water from the Luanhe River so as to ease the shortage of water for industrial and agricultural use in the Beijing-Tianjin area. Continued efforts will be made to build commodity grain bases on the Sanjiang plain in Heilongjiang Province, in the Poyang Lake area in Jiangxi Province, the Dongting Lake area in Hunan Province and the Pi-Shi-Hang irrigation area in Anhui Province. A network for breeding and popularizing improved seeds should be set up and improved step by step. Shelterbelt networks in northwest, north and northeast China will continue to be built so as to check soil erosion in the areas along the middle reaches of the Huanghe River and the shifting of sand dunes in the northwest. We should make sustained efforts to conduct the nationwide afforestation campaign in order to cover our motherland with trees. Land reclamation on the pasturelands of the minority nationality areas is forbidden. We should expand the total area of artificially sown pastures from the 32 million mu (one mu equals 1/15 hectare) in 1980 to 100 million mu in 1985. A number of farms producing good poultry and animal strains, livestock farms and feed-processing plants will be set up. Between 1981 and 1985, the plan is to increase the area for fresh-water aquiculture by 16 million mu and that for seawater aquiculture by 800,000 mu. All this will help improve conditions for farming, animal husbandry and fishery.

To facilitate economic construction and provide the necessary mineral resources and geological data for future development, we should do more geological prospecting, hunt for mineral deposits, assess natural resources and do better work in hydrogeology, engineering geology and environmental geology during the Sixth Five-Year Plan period.

In the technical transformation of the existing enterprises during this period stress should be put on the following: saving energy and raw and semi-finished materials; improving the product mix; enhancing the properties and quality of products; and increasing the production capacity for certain urgently needed products which are in short supply. Measures will be taken in these five years to carry out in a planned way the technical transformation of a considerable number of key enterprises such as the Anshan Iron and Steel Company, the Baotou Iron and Steel Company, the Changchun No 1 Motor Works, factories in the power equipment manufacturing bases in Harbin and Shanghai, the large Datong, Kailuan and Fushun coal mines and the large caustic soda plants in Tianjin and in Hubei, Liaoning, Sichuan and Shandong provinces. The purpose is to gradually raise the technological level of these key enterprises that have bearing on the national economy as a whole. As the supplier of equipment for diverse fields, the machine-building industry must be ahead of others in carrying out technical transformation. In the 1981-85 period, mechanical and electrical products that are mass produced and widely used, especially motor vehicles, tractors, internal-combustion engines, industrial boilers, water pumps, air blowers and small and medium-sized electric motors that consume much energy should be improved technically and updated. Research and development of a group of key equipments such as precision and highly efficient machine tools, instruments and meters should be undertaken, and efforts should be made to update many kinds of instruments, components and basic parts. We should turn out equipment of a fairly high technical level for farming, animal husbandry and fishery as well as for the textile and other light industries. We should also strive to improve the technology of manufacturing complete sets of large equipment used in power generation, steel rolling, mining, coal washing, transport, offshore oil prospecting and the petrochemical industry. Success in these endeavours will mean a gratifying improvement in the technological level of our national economy.

3. The Development of Education, Science and Culture

Constantly raising the educational, scientific, technological and cultural levels of the whole people is a major guarantee for building a modern material civilization and also a major aspect in building a socialist spiritual civilization. In the Sixth Five-Year Plan, allocations for education, science, culture, public health and physical culture account for 15.9 per cent of total state expenditure (the coreesponding figure will reach 16.8 per cent in 1985), a fairly big increase over the 11 per cent of the Fifth Five-Year Plan. The funds allocated for these undertakings are admittedly still insufficient, but this is what we can afford at present in the context of our limited financial resources. Appropriations for these undertakings will gradually increase along with the future growth of our economy.

The Sixth Five-Year Plan calls for a rise in the number of newly admitted full-time students in institutions of higher education from 280,000 in 1980 to 400,000 in 1985, an increase of 42.2 per cent, while total enrolment is to reach 1.3 million, 13.6 per cent more than in 1980. The number of graduates from these institutions is to be 1.5 million for the five years covered by the plan. Meanwhile, there will be considerable expansion of higher education through radio, TV, correspondence and evening courses. In 1985, a total of 20,000 postgraduate students is to be admitted, 5.5 times the number in 1980, and 45,000 are to complete their postgraduate studies in the five years under review.

The state will appropriate special funds for the construction of fairly advanced teaching and laboratory facilities in a group of key colleges and universities, and for the building or expansion of a number of experimental centres so as to raise the standard of instruction in these institutions. Specialities in colleges and universities will be readjusted and teaching methods improved. Over the years, specialities have been too finely divided and consequently students can acquire only a limited scope of knowledge. This falls short of the requirements of practical work in various fields and for advanced studies and often creates difficulties for the graduates to get employment or to switch to other specialized fields of work. This situation must be changed.. Systematic education of our undergraduates and postgraduates in the basic theories of Marxism must be stepped up and ideological and political work among them should be done regularly, purposefully and effectively. We must ensure that our students are trained to be educated workers with socialist consciousness and professional knowledge. We must continue to restructure secondary education, set up secondary vocational schools of different types, particularly for farming, forestry, animal husbandry, sideline occupations and fishery, the medical and nursing services, finance and trade, public security and procuratorial and judicial affairs, and culture and education. Some vocational and technical subjects are to be added to the curricula of regular secondary schools. It is essential to create the necessary conditions for transforming a number of regular senior middle schools in the rural areas into secondary vocational schools serving agriculture. More attention should be paid to pre-school education and teachers' training. We should strive to make primary school education universal or almost universal by 1985 in most counties and to make junior middle school education universal in the cities. Schools of all types and levels should try to enhance the professional competence of the teachers and their teaching level in an all-round way and gradually to improve the conditions for both teaching and learning. Educational workers throughout the country face the most arduous and pressing task of making primary and junior middle school education universal and eliminating illiteracy among young and middle-aged people, and the whole nation should go into action and give this work full support. Those provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions and those prefectures, cities, counties and grass-roots units which have done good work in developing education and those teachers, educational administrators and other people who have made positive contributions to education should be commended; educational functionaries who are lackadaisical in their work should be criticized; and those people who misuse school funds, obstruct teachers in performing their duties or even insult or injure them should be punished severely. We should make respect of educational work a standard of good social conduct so that everybody will realize that it is the very foundation of our modernization drive.

In science and technology, we will, under the Sixth Five-Year Plan, put into nationwide use the verified results of 40 key scientific and technological research projects in agriculture, the textile and other light industries, energy, the electronic and machine-building industries, raw and semi-finished materials, the chemical industry, the pharmaceutical industry, transport, and post and telecommunications. To meet the needs of economic and social development, we should tackle 100 major problems in 38 scientific and technological research projects vital to production and construction, and try to bring a considerable number to fruition and widely apply the results during this period.

While focusing on research in development and application, we should step up basic research so as to provide China's scientific and technological development with sound guidance and a reliable foundation. In line with the characteristics of the specific disciplines, research in both basic and applied sciences should be geared as much as possible to the needs of economic development and expanding production. We should put the application and dissemination of the results of scientific research on a par with research itself, commend and reward successes in this field and overcome the tendency to underrate its importance. It is necessary to set up, in a planned way and step by step, public centres of information, forecasting and analysis, measurement, calculation and consulting services in applied mathematics in the provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions to serve scientific research and growth of the national economy.

While energetically expanding research in the natural sciences, we should attach importance to studies in the social sciences, in political economy, departmental economics, management science, philosophy, law, political science, education, sociology, ethics, psychology, history, ethnology, literature and art, linguistics, international relations, and so on. We should do our best to expound and solve the major theoretical and practical problems raised in the course of our socialist modernization so that we can use the results of creative studies to help build the socialist material and spiritual civilization and develop our socialist system. Gaps in our social studies should be filled in; weak links strengthened and working conditions improved.

During the Sixth Five-Year Plan period, there will be an appropriate growth in such cultural undertakings as literature and art, the cinema, television, broadcasting, the press, publishing, libraries, museums and cultural centres and in public health service and physical culture. There should be more feature films provided quality is improved, and it is planned to increase them from 82 in 1980 to 120 in 1985. Efforts should be made to produce more science films and documentaries. We should improve the ideological and intellectual content of the radio and TV programmes, raise their artistic and technical quality, improve their production and transmission, and bring them to a wider audience. The total volume of publication of newspapers, magazines and books will amount to 45.6 billion printed sheets in 1985, 22 per cent more than in 1980. We should take steps to improve the techniques and quality of papermaking, printing and publishing and change the present backward conditions. In the main, all cities will have museums, all counties libraries and cultural centres, and all townships cultural stations. Serious efforts should be made to improve the cultural facilities in the national minority areas and border regions. Although most of our intellectual products appear in the form of commodities, the leading cadres at all levels concerned should be fully aware that the purpose of expanding their production is, first and foremost, to develop our socialist spiritual civilization. They must therefore see to it that our intellectual products have communist ideological content and serve to increase the people's scientific and general knowledge, instead of merely seeking profits. In all our cultural and artistic undertakings and academic research, we must keep to the orientation of serving the people and socialism, continue to implement the policy of "letting a hundred flowers blossom and a hundred schools of thought contend", eliminate the erroneous influence left over from the decade of domestic turmoil and, at the same time, oppose bourgeois liberalization and decadent feudal and capitalist culture.

We should keep deepening the mass patriotic health campaign so as to reduce the incidence of diseases and swiftly wipe out virulent infectious diseases that are yet to be eliminated. We should tighten our customs quarantine control so as to prevent inroads from abroad of epidemic diseases already stamped out in China. In health work, we should adhere to the policy of laying equal stress on the cities and the countryside and of combining Chinese and Western medicine. Between 1981 and 1985, there will be an increase of 600,000 people specializing in health work and an addition to 250,000 hospital beds. Vigorous efforts should be made to improve techniques of birth control so that we can carry out our plan for population control. We should encourage physical culture and sports in both town and country, so as to build up the people's physique and raise the level of physical culture and sports.

4. The Expansion of Economic and Technological Exchange With the Outside World

During the period of the Sixth Five-Year Plan, we will continue to expand trade and economic and technological exchanges with the outside world in accordance with the principles of equality and mutual benefit, of unified plan and policy and of concerted action towards our foreign counter-parts. The total volume of import and export trade is planned to reach 85.5 billion yuan by 1985, an increase of 51.8 per cent compared with 1980 and an average annual increase of 8.7 per cent. Of this figure, the total volume of exports is to reach 40.2 billion yuan, averaging an annual rise of 8.1 per cent, which is higher than the growth rate of gross value for industrial and agricultural production in the same period; the total volume of imports will reach 45.3 billion yuan, rising annually by an average of 9.2 per cent, which is slightly higher than the growth rate of exports. This will help speed up production and construction in our country.

Boosting the production of commodities for increased exports is the basis for expanding our foreign trade and other economic exchanges. We should work hard to increase exports of textiles and other light industrial goods, arts and crafts, native products and local specialities and, in particular, raise the proportion of machinery and electrical products in the total volume of exports. There should be planned exports of oil, coal and some rare metals, the resources of which China has in abundance, while the export of commodities whose production consumes too much energy should be restricted. Measures should be taken to adapt all our export goods to changes in the international market and make them more and more competitive. This will provide an impetus for raising the quality of our products and cutting down production costs. In line with the needs of domestic construction, we should change the import mix and properly raise the proportion of new technology and key equipment in the total volume of imports. Efforts should be continued to use foreign loans efficiently, encourage direct investment by foreign businessmen or the setting up of joint ventures with Chinese and foreign investment in order to increase the use of foreign funds to a suitable extent. We should, in particular, stress the role of the coastal cities in expanding foreign economic and technological exchanges. Apart from Guangdong and Fujian Provinces which can continue their special policies and flexible measures, we should grant more decisionmaking power to Shanghai, Tianjin and other coastal cities so that they can utilize their favourable conditions to turn their initiative to better account in importing and assimilating technology, making use of foreign funds, transforming outmoded enterprises and developing the role of these cities in the world market.

The aim of expanding our foreign economic and technological exchanges is of course to raise our capacity for self-reliance, and definitely not to weaken or impair the development of our national economy. Under no circumstances should we waver on this point.

5. Improvement of the Living Standards of the People and Population Control

During the period of the Sixth Five-Year Plan, the living standards of the people in both urban and rural areas will continue to rise. Expansion of the state economy, the collective economy and the individual economy will provide jobs for 29 million people in cities and towns after they have received proper training. The average net income of each peasant is to rise from 191 yuan in 1980 to 255 yuan in 1985, that is, an average annual increase of 6 per cent. This is higher than the annual average of 4.3 per cent attained in the 26 years between 1955 and 1980. The payroll for workers and staff in the whole country was 77.3 billion yuan in 1980 and is to reach 98.3 billion yuan in 1985, an average increase of 4.9 per cent a year, or 4.2 billion yuan. Some of the workers and staff in the fields of education, public health and physical culture got a wage increase last year. This year and in the next three years there will be a pay rise for the rest as well as those working in other fields, group by group, and preparations will be made for reforming the wage system. As the present pay of most middle-aged intellectuals is too low and their burdens are heavy, their salaries should rise more. We believe that our workers and cadres throughout the country will appreciate this.

With the growth of industrial and agricultural production and the increase in the income of the urban and rural population, their consumption level will go up substantially. By 1985, average per-capita consumption will be 22 per cent more than in 1980, averaging a 4.1 per cent annual growth as against the 2.6 per cent for the 28 years between 1953 and 1980. Of this, people living in cities and towns will get an average annual rise of 3.2 per cent and those in the countryside 4.2 per cent. The total volume of retail sales is to reach 290 billion yuan by 1985, 40 per cent over 1980, averaging an annual increase of 7 per cent.

Housing for the people in the cities and countryside will continue to improve. Within the five years under review, it is estimated that 2.5 billion square metres of housing will be built by the peasants for themselves, apart from 300 million square metres of public amenities and facilities to be built in the countryside. Residential housing totalling 310 million square metres will be completed in these five years by state-owned units in cities and towns. This averages out at 62 million square metres a year, which is 2.6 times the average annual figure for the 28 years between 1953 and 1980. Meanwhile, urban public utilities are to be installed faster, environmental pollution resolutely checked, and the environment in key areas improved.

Population growth must be strictly controlled during the Sixth Five-Year Plan period. The census taken on July 1 this year shows that China's population exceeds one billion. From now on, the annual natural population growth rate must be kept under 13 per thousand which means the total population of the 29 provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions must be kept at around 1.06 billion by 1985. The past two years again saw a somewhat higher net growth rate of our population, and for some years from now the total number of births will be at a peak as more and more young people will reach the marriageable and child-bearing age.

Therefore, to attain our goal in population control is going to be an extremely important and strenuous task. The whole society must pay full attention to this problem. We must take effective measures and encourage late marriage, advocate one child for each couple, strictly control second births and resolutely prevent additional births so as to control population growth. Otherwise, the execution of our national economic plan and the improvement of the people's living standards will be adversely affected. Persuasive education must be conducted among the people of the whole country, especially among the peasants, to change radically the feudal attitude of viewing sons as better than daughters and regarding more sons as a sign of good fortune. We must, in particular, protect infant girls and their mothers. A couple that has only one daughter and brings her up well deserves greater commendation, support and reward than a couple that has only one son. The whole society should resolutely condemn the criminal activities of female infanticide and maltreatment of the mothers, and the judicial departments should resolutely punish the offenders according to law.

6. The Basic Balance in Finance and Credit and Basic Stability in Commodity Prices

The downward trend in state revenues should be reversed during the period of the Sixth Five-Year Plan through expanding production, improving economic results and exploring new sources of revenue, and this should be done on condition that a normal rise in the people's income is guaranteed and the appropriate decision-making power of enterprises ensured. Expenditures for various purposes should be properly arranged and controlled, financial supervision strengthened and waste resolutely combated so as to minimize the financial deficit. At the same time, issuance of currency should be strictly controlled to ensure a basic balance between state revenue and expenditure and between credit receipts and payments.

The plan sets total state revenues for 1981-85 at 595.3 billion yuan, those for 1985 being 127.4 billion yuan, an increase of 18.9 billion yuan over 1980. Total state expenditures in the five years will be 609.8 billion yuan, the figure for 1985 being 130.4 billion yuan, an increase of 9.2 billion yuan over 1980. In state expenditures, we will, first of all, guarantee funds for the construction of key projects, gradually increase expenditures on educational, scientific, cultural, public health and physical culture undertakings, and at the same time ensure the essential needs for military and administrative spending, repay foreign debts plus interest on time, and give due consideration to expenses in other fields. It is the consistent policy of the party and government to help the minority nationality areas and the economically underdeveloped regions develop their economy and culture. During the years 1981-85, apart from annually increased financial subsidies to these places, the state will allocate a special fund of 2.5 billion yuan -- an increase of 2.2 billion yuan over the period of the Fifth Five-Year Plan -- to assist such development.

It is planned to have an average annual deficit of around 3 billion yuan in these five years, the concrete figure being 2.5 billion yuan in 1981. In implementing the yearly plans, we should strive to increase revenues and strictly control expenditures so as to keep the deficit under 3 billion yuan.

Market prices affect the very livelihood of the people. During the period of the Sixth Five-Year Plan, we should strive to keep market prices basically stable so as to guarantee the people a secure life. Since the beginning of this year, the localities have conscientiously implemented the State Council's "Circular on Resolutely Stabilizing Market Prices".

Generally speaking, the situation in this respect is good. There have been no big fluctuations in state-set prices, and the prices of some commodities have even gone down somewhat. The general level of retail prices in the first three quarters of this year was about the same as at the end of last year. To stimulate production, there will be some necessary readjustment, either upwards or downwards, in the next few years, in regard to a small number of commodities whose prices are very unreasonable. This, however, must be done on condition that the general level of market prices is kept basically stable.

Fellow deputies, our Sixth Five-Year Plan is a comprehensive plan for overall economic and social development, which encompasses the building of both material and spiritual civilization. As regards building socialist spiritual civilization, there are many important aspects besides the development of the cultural undertakings that I have just discussed, and much more work remains to be done. The party's twelfth national congress drew up a general guideline in this connection which we should implement step by step. Here I would just like to speak on two points, namely, education of workers and staff and improvement in standards of social conduct.

We now face the strategic task of significantly raising the ideology and political consciousness of the ranks of cadres, technical personnel and workers and their familiarity with modern science, their general knowledge and their production skills. We must, in particular, set up regular colleges and schools of all types to train cadres at various levels and workers in different trades and, at the same time, set up short-term training courses teaching fewer subjects, so as to put the education of workers and staff on a regular basis in a relatively short time. Apart from the existing schools that must undertake their share in training workers and staff, all trades and those enterprises which have the facilities should set up schools and training courses. We also hope that the Communist Youth League, the trade unions, the women's federation and other mass organizations will all pay attention to this. Regular education requires strict admission standards and examination systems, suitable teaching material that meets practical needs and qualified and competent teachers. It should enable the students to acquire a systematic knowledge of the basic theories of Marxism and professional knowledge in different fields, so that they will have far better political and professional levels by the time they finish their study. Besides providing systematic education, we must do effective ideological and political work among the workers and staff in line with the policies of the party and government and the tasks of different periods and solve the problems they have in ideology and understanding. We must seek and create new way of conducting ideological education and strive to make it more lively and militant, more appealing and convincing. We must strive to teach more and more people the history of social development, modern Chinese history and the history of the Chinese revolution, spread education in communist ideology, convictions and ethics, in the communist attitude towards labour and in revolutionary discipline, professional ethics, the legal system, patriotism and internationalism, and cultivate fine aesthetic standards and the socialist way of life. All this is aimed at promoting the revolutionary spirit of love for the motherland, the people, labour, science and socialism, heightening the resolve to invigorate the Chinese nation, enhancing the sense of national dignity and honour and enabling growing numbers of workers and staff to become working people with high ideals, moral integrity, general education and a sense of discipline.

Fostering high standards of social conduct is a very important aspect of building socialist spiritual civilization. The twelfth national congress of the party called for making a fundamental turn for the better in the next five years in standards of social conduct.

To this end, efforts should be made in town and country to achieve a general improvement in public order and order in production and other work; to establish better work ethics in production units, offices and the service trades; and to combat all such unhealthy tendencies as sheer irresponsibility, putting money above all else, asserting departmentalism and anarchy, engaging in malpractices for selfish ends and abusing one's powers to secure advantages for others. We must help the cadres and the masses to realize that, while promoting socialist commodity production and exchange, it is essential to do everything to combat and check the shameful practice of selling one's moral integrity, conscience and human dignity and commercializing human relations, as is common in capitalist society. To this end, we should, apart from consolidating the party in accordance with the criteria set out in the new party constitution, encourage the drawing up of rules of conduct and common pledges by people of all walks of life, create villages and neighbourhoods where civility reigns, and organize publicity networks and other forms to promote healthy trends, eliminate the unhealthy and combat in a systematic way things deleterious to society. And we have the ability to do this, since we have the firm and correct leadership of the party, the guidance of communist ideology, the socialist system based on public ownership of the means of production, the powerful state machine of the people's democratic dictatorship and progressive public opinion. Furthermore, we should be able to evoke powerful forces throughout our society to resist all sorts of bad things and establish and develop a new type of relations between people which embody socialist spiritual civilization, namely, mutual respect, care, assistance and friendly cooperation. We should strive to raise the standards of social conduct significantly during the period of the Sixth Five-Year Plan and create a good social atmosphere so that the people can devote themselves to the modernization drive wholeheartedly and with ease of mind.

Fellow deputies, along with the draft of the Sixth Five-Year Plan, I would like, on behalf of the State Council, to submit for your examination and approval the draft of the 1983 plan for economic and social development.

The tasks for production and construction set in the Sixth Five-Year Plan are both forward-looking and realistic and, provided we exert ourselves, they can be fulfilled. Though earnest efforts have been made to achieve an overall balance in preparing the plan, there may be points needing further deliberation, which will be handled properly in accordance with concrete conditions in the course of its implementation. The entire nation, from central to local levels, should close ranks, work in a down-to-earth way and strive to solve all sorts of practical problems so that this important plan can be carried out with full success.

Implementation of the Sixth Five-Year Plan in the First Two Years

Nearly two years have elapsed since we began implementing the Sixth Five-Year Plan. Here, I would like to report on the results so far.

Before formal submission of the Sixth Five-Year Plan to this session for examination and approval, the State Council worked out separate plans for 1981 and 1982 in accordance with its preliminary outline, and these were approved after examination by the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress. The progress has been satisfactory. The actual growth rate of the gross value of industrial and agricultural output reached 4.6 per cent in 1981 as against the planned figure of 3.7 per cent; the growth rate in 1982 is expected to reach 6.4 per cent as against the planned figure of 4 per cent. The annual increase for these two years averages 5.5 per cent. The economic situation as a whole is improving each year and this is a gratifying change.

A sustained overall upsurge in agricultural production has brought prosperity to the rural areas. This is an essential basis for steady improvement in the economic and, moreover, the political situation throughout the country. Compared with 1980, the gross value of agricultural output increased by 5.7 per cent in 1981, and the 1982 figure is expected to be 5 per cent higher than the previous year. Average annual increase for these two years works out to 5.3 per cent. Although many regions suffered from successive serious droughts and floods, the country's total grain output has continued to rise year by year. The national figure for this year is expected to be over 335 million tons, an increase of more than 10 million tons over 1981 and higher than the record year of 1979. Compared with 1980, the 1982 output of cotton is expected to rise by 21.9 per cent; of oil-bearing crops, by 39 per cent; of sugar-yielding crops, by 29.2 per cent; of tea, by 21 per cent; and of pork, beef and mutton as one unit, by 6.8 per cent. There has also been a fairly rapid growth in other fields of the diversified rural economy. Agricultural production having expanded, the peasants' income has gone up by a big margin. Especially gratifying are the changes that have taken place so rapidly in just a few years over wide areas which used to be relatively backward in agricultural production. This situation, almost without precedent since the founding of the People's Republic, is conclusive proof that the rural policies of the party and government are absolutely correct. With more trust than ever in the party and government, the 800 million peasants are full of confidence in the bright future of the socialist system.

The production of manufactured consumer goods has grown rapidly so that there is an ever more plentiful supply of commodities on the market, thus relieving the shortage to a considerable extent. We have not seen such a situation in China since the late 1950s. Compared with 1980, the gross output value of light industry increased by 14.1 per cent in 1981 and is expected to go up by another 5.1 per cent in 1982. This means an average annual increase of 9.6 per cent for these two years. It is estimated that the 1982 output of yarn will be 13.3 per cent over 1980; woolen fabrics, 12 per cent; knitting wool, 42 per cent; sugar, 33 per cent; bicycles, 78 per cent; sewing machines, 61.7 per cent; TV sets, 100 per cent; and washing machines, 990 per cent. Many consumer goods are now of higher quality with better designs and greater variety. The commercial departments have successfully stimulated the interflow of commodities between town and country, expanded the service networks and improved work attitudes. Retail sales volume for 1981 registered a 9.8 per cent increase over 1980 and the estimated increase for 1982 is 8.9 per cent over the preceding year. This gives an average annual increase of 9.4 per cent for these two years. While the people's level of consumption has gone up a great deal in the past two years, the supply of foodstuffs, clothing and other daily necessities has also been fairly adequate for the most part, thus allowing the consumers more choice. For a country like ours with a population of one billion, it is indeed no small achievement to effect such a rapid improvement in market supply.

In heavy industry, which is now being readjusted, production has gradually turned from decrease to increase, thanks to the efforts made to raise the output of energy and use it economically and to readjust the service orientation and product mix. Gross output value was down 4.7 per cent in 1981 compared with 1980, but the estimated 1982 figure is 9 per cent over 1981, so that the average annual increase for these two years will be 1.9 per cent. Heavy industry is no longer serving its own expansion to excess and is now providing a larger portion of its products to agriculture and light industry in the form of raw and semi-finished materials and equipment for technical transformation. Many heavy industrial enterprises are manufacturing durable consumer goods directly for the market.

The output of fuels, power and some important raw and semi-finished materials has gradually picked up again following two years of stagnation or even decline. Compared with 1980, the 1981 output of coal increased by 0.2 per cent, electricity by 2.9 per cent and cement by 3.8 per cent, while the output of crude oil dropped by 4.5 per cent and steel products by 1.7 per cent. It is estimated that, compared with 1981, the 1982 output of coal will rise by 4.6 per cent, crude oil by 0.5 per cent, electricity by 5.1 per cent, steel products by 1.9 per cent, and cement by 8.6 per cent. The upward trend in heavy industrial output following readjustment is a significant indicator of the sound growth of our national economy. The transport and post and telecommunications departments have also played an active part in promoting the development of industry, agriculture and work in other fields.

The trend of continuous decrease in state revenue over the years has started to change, reflecting in a comprehensive way the obvious success of China's economic readjustment. State revenue dropped for three years in a row starting in 1979 as a result of economic readjustment and efforts to solve a host of long accumulated problems, especially those carried over from the decade of domestic turmoil. Compared with 1978, state revenue from domestic sources in 1981 was down more than 10 billion yuan, a decrease of almost 10 per cent. With steady improvement in the national economic situation and the adoption of many measures to increase revenue and reduce expenditure, the downward trend may end this year, and it is expected that state revenue will start to rise again next year. At the same time, there has been a favourable balance of foreign exchange earnings and outlays for two years running, which provides favourable conditions for us to expand foreign economic and technological exchanges.

There has been fresh development in education, science and culture. The number of institutions of higher education has risen from 675 in 1980 to 729 in 1982 and total new enrolment of students from 280,000 to 310,000. Initial successes have been achieved in readjusting the specialities offered by these institutions and in restructuring secondary education. More efforts have been made to disseminate and apply scientific and technological achievements. In the past two years, altogether more than 6,000 major research projects were successful, as was the manufacture of about 1,000 new materials following research. All this is playing an increasingly significant role in economic development. The recent successful under-water launching of a submarine-based carrier rocket indicates the new advance in our science and technology. Continuous progress has been made in such undertakings as the press, publishing, broadcasting, the cinema, television, literature and art and health work. In particular, a number of new inspiring results have been achieved in sports.

The above facts show that through the readjustment in the past few years, the proportion between accumulation and consumption and the ratio of agriculture, light industry and heavy industry have tended to be basically in balance. The readjustment of our national economy has now entered a new, more advanced stage. Provided that overall arrangements are made both for the people's livelihood and for production and construction, we should now focus on continued readjustment of the structures of agriculture and industry and their product mix as well as the structure of enterprises so as to achieve far better economic results in the course of steadily expanding our national economy.

The sustained and encouraging growth of our economy is in sharp contrast to the current worldwide economic depression. In recent years, many countries, one after another, have experienced varying degrees of economic difficulties, with production stagnating or declining, rising unemployment, crushing debts, and inflation.

The rate of unemployment and index of price rises in some countries have reached the highest level since the Second World War. In quite a few countries, the economic recession has become so unbearable and serious as to affect political stability. Many countries are struggling to find a way out of their plight. At a time when the economy in other countries is beset with such difficulties, China's national economy is forging ahead by overcoming all kinds of difficulties. This fully demonstrates the superiority of our socialist system and testifies to the correctness of the line, principles and policies our party had adopted since the Third Plenary Session of its Eleventh Central Committee.

Why is it then that we still have some financial deficits even though our economic situation has steadily improved in recent years? The answer to this question requires a historical analysis of our economic construction. In the 20 years between 1958 and 1978, and especially during the decade of domestic turmoil, the state invested heavily in production and construction. However, owing to the domination of "left" ideas, our economic structure was far from appropriate, there were quite a number of defects in economic systems and enormous waste in the fields of production construction and circulation. The economic results were very poor, and problems as regards the people's life piled up. During this period, the wages and salaries of workers and staff were not regularly raised, parities between the prices of manufactured goods on the one hand and those of farm and sideline products on the other were quite unreasonable, the urban housing shortage grew increasingly acute, and large numbers of young people waited for jobs. Since the Third Plenary Session of the Eleventh Central Committee of the party, the party and government have made immense efforts to solve these problems. From 1979 to 1981, expenditures to cover the increase in the purchase prices of farm and sideline products amounted to 44.2 billion yuan; the rise in the wages and salaries of workers and staff and the introduction of the bonus system, 30 billion yuan; the employment of 26 million people in cities and towns, 10.5 billion yuan; and the building of more housing for workers and staff in cities and towns, 15.2 billion yuan. These, plus the expenditures to cover tax cuts or exemptions for rural areas and the increased price subsidies for imported goods, totalled more than 140 billion yuan. Many such items led to higher state expenditures and lower revenues. Furthermore, the economic results of our production and construction remained very poor for a long time, and this situation was not and could not be drastically changed in a few years. Hence our difficulties in balancing state revenue and expenditure. At the Fourth Session of the Fifth National People's Congress, the State Council made a point of raising the question of improving economic results, and has since adopted a series of measures for that purpose. Through a year's arduous work, things are beginning to pick up. We should, on this basis, work even harder to bring about a fundamental turn for the better in China's economy and finance.

Fellow deputies, the steady improvement in our economic situation over the past two years is inseparable from our redoubled efforts to build a socialist spiritual civilization and from our resolute struggle against serious crimes in the economic and other spheres. The campaign of "five stresses and four points of beauty" spreading across the country proves to be effective. (The five stresses are: stress on decorum, manners, hygiene, discipline and morals. The four points of beauty are: beauty of the mind, language, behaviour and the environment.) Higher standards of social conduct are becoming more common, and there are more advanced persons and exemplary deeds in all fields, shining with the radiance of communist ideas. Since the party's twelfth national congress, a "three loves" campaign to foster love for the motherland, for socialism and for the party has been unfolded in many places.

It is merging with the campaign of "five stresses and four points of beauty" into a movement of "five stresses, four points of beauty and three loves". The deepening of this movement will no doubt greatly help spread the civic virtues of "five loves" (i.e., love for the motherland, the people, labour, science and socialism) put forward in the new constitution. Our all-round effort over the past two years to ensure better public order has achieved notable results. The number of criminal offences in the country as a whole was 15.7 per cent less in the first three quarters of this year than in the corresponding period of last year. In the same period, we handled 136,024 criminal cases in the economic sphere, of which 44,663 have been disposed of, with 26,227 offenders sentenced according to law. Under the impact of this struggle and the influence of our policy, 44,874 offenders turned themselves in and made a clean breast of their crimes. Some of these cases were major and appalling ones involving huge, illegally acquired sums, and people call the chief culprits "big tigers". There are some people who now complain that "we are only swatting flies, not hitting big tigers". In their view, we will be hitting "big tigers" only when we bag offenders from among senior leading cadres. The host of cases handled in our struggle against economic crimes this year have proved that this view does not tally with facts. Of the total of over one hundred thousand criminal cases uncovered so far in the economic sphere, only a very small number involve, to varying degrees, senior leading cadres. Some were taken in by the actual offenders due to serious bureaucratism, others were not strict enough with their children who degenerated into criminals, and still others have been tainted with unhealthy tendencies. These cases either have been or are being dealt with in all seriousness. However, until now we have not found any senior leading cadre who should himself be held accountable for any serious irregularities in economic matters. Facts have shown that the overwhelming majority of our cadres are good or fairly good, and that the leading cores at the central, provincial, municipal and autonomous region levels are trustworthy. Our recent struggle against criminal offences in the economic sphere has been waged on a very large scale and yet it has progressed satisfactorily; cases were handled in the light of proven evidence and in accordance with the law. As a result, there have been no unfavourable social repercussions and no adverse effects on our political stability and unity or on our implementation of the policy of invigorating the domestic economy and opening to the outside world. This shows that our party and government have greatly improved their art of leadership and are nowdoing much better work. Through our recent struggle, we have by and large checked rampant, unscrupulous smuggling and sale of smuggled goods, and a number of serious offenders guilty of graft, embezzlement, offering or accepting bribes, speculation and swindling have been dealt heavy blows. We have thus safeguarded our socialist economic system and our socialist modernization. Of course, the struggle against criminal activities in the economic, political, cultural and social spheres is a long one. In order to ensure the steady advance of our socialist society and a secure and happy life for all our people in town and country, we must in no way relax our struggle against those criminals who refuse to mend their ways.

In short, we have achieved much in the past two years in carrying out the Sixth Five-Year Plan. Nonetheless, a lot of problems left over from the past remain to be solved, and new problems have cropped up in our economic work. For example, in the wake of a marked increase in the output of consumer goods, there has appeared the problem of overstocking and sluggish sales. This is bound to affect future production unless the matter is tackled effectively on the basis of conscientious study. Our work still suffers from many shortcomings; and we are still faced with a host of difficulties.

We must work diligently in order to score ever greater achievements in the last three years of the Sixth Five-Year Plan period.

Major Measures for the All-Round Fulfilment of the Sixth Five-Year Plan

As far as economic growth is concerned, the key to all-round fulfilment of the last three years of the Sixth Five-Year Plan is to make the attainment of better economic results the heart of all our economic work in conformity with the guidelines set by the Fourth Session of the Fifth National People's Congress last year and the Twelfth National Congress of the Chinese Communist Party last September. Judging by the present overall situation of our national economy, this means we must exercise effective control over all planned investment in fixed assets and use it properly, resolutely readjust and consolidate the existing enterprises, do everything to expedite the technological advance of production, and continue to reform current economic systems. Only when we make significant headway in these four aspects, plus marked improvement in the managerial ability of our economic cadres at all levels, can we win a decisive victory in bringing about a fundamental turn for the better in our financial and economic situation and succeed in creating more favourable conditions for the Seventh Five-Year Plan and for China's subsequent economic growth. I would like now to discuss the four aspects in detail before coming specifically to the question of agriculture, the foundation of our national economy.

First, exercise strict control over the volume of total investment in fixed assets and ensure the completion of key construction projects and the technical transformation of enterprises as scheduled.

To ensure a growing capacity for expanded reproduction, we must maintain investment in fixed assets at a certain level for new capital construction projects and technical transformation of existing enterprises. Under the Sixth Five-Year Plan a total of 360 billion yuan is to be allocated for these purposes. Effective control over and proper use of these funds, the completion and operation of the planned key construction projects according to schedule and attainment of outstanding results in the technical transformation of existing enterprises will contribute enormously to augmenting our economic strength.

Experience in our economic construction over the past 30 and more years has proved time and again that the volume of investment in capital construction must suit national strength. This is a basic condition for stabilizing the national economy as a whole. Since the founding of our People's Republic, we have suffered several major setbacks in economic construction, all of which, apart from political reasons, can be attributed economically to the blind extension of capital construction. Such overextension not only strains the supply of building materials and lengthens the construction cycle but is bound to affect production and maintenance and the people's well-being, making it difficult for enterprises to carry on normal production or for necessary improvements to be made in the people's life. When things came to a head, the economy had to be readjusted and many capital construction projects had to be discontinued, causing overstocking and even total waste of large amounts of equipment, a decline in production or even its suspension in many plants serving capital construction, and holding up the work of construction workers. Such drastic curtailment in the wake of excessive extension brought the most serious waste and harm to our economic construction in the past. Once things started to go well after readjustment, people tended to repeat the mistake, again rushing without forethought into a lot of capital construction. This is, indeed, a painful lesson for us, and we cannot afford to make this mistake again.

Proper arrangements have been made under the Sixth Five-Year Plan with regard to the volume of investment in fixed assets. However, signs of sharp increases in such investment have now reappeared. Many localities and units have embarked on quite a few construction projects not included in the plan. We must pay serious attention to this problem and deal with it with a firm hand.

While strictly controlling the total volume of investment in fixed assets, we must see that funds are used properly in the right order of priorities. That is to say, we must first of all ensure investment in key energy and transport projects and in technical transformation of existing enterprises. These areas are the essential basis for vigorous development of our national economy. In order to ensure them adequate funding, we must slash, with the utmost determination, ill-considered projects launched to increase the capacity of ordinary processing industries.

Concentration on key projects centered on those for energy and transport so as to improve and reinforce these two weakest links in our national economy -- this is a major measure for us to gain the initiative in developing the national economy and, therefore, a matter of vital significance for economic construction as a whole. Unless this problem is solved, it will be impossible to invigorate the entire economy; even its partial development will inevitably be hampered, and any rapid growth will be out of the question. The next few years will be a period of great importance to us, during which we must bestir ourselves and pool funds and materials from various quarters for key energy and transport projects, shorten their construction cycle and wrest better returns from investment. There is a shortage of funds for key projects included in the state plan at present, whereas funds in the hands of the localities and enterprises have increased by a big margin and construction projects outside the plan have increased considerably. We must take measures to muster an appropriate amount of funds for the key projects. The State Council has made the decision that, except for a few specified items, all localities, departments and units are to turn over a certain proportion of their receipts not covered in the state budget to the state and all large economic collectives in cities and towns a certain proportion of their profits after taxation as a contribution to funds for the key energy and transport projects. This is their bounden duty, and they should keep the overall interests in mind and pay the stipulated sum to support this important measure that benefits both the state and the people. At the same time, we should adopt correct policies and measures and give proper guidance so as to make funds in the hands of the localities, enterprises, the people's communes and their production brigades and teams available for construction projects that the country badly needs.

In order to exercise strict control over the volume of investment, ensure the proper use of construction funds and get greater returns on investment, the State Council has laid down the following regulations:

(1) All investments in fixed assets, including those covered by the state budget, self-collected funds or bank loans, are subject to overall balancing by the state planning commission or its provincial, municipal and autonomous region counterparts before their final incorporation into the state plan. No locality or department shall make investments in fixed assets outside the plan without prior approval by the appropriate higher authorities. If it does, it will be called to account and punished accordingly for having violated discipline in financial and economic work.

(2) All large- and medium-sized capital construction projects are subject to examination and approval by the State Planning Commission; small capital construction projects are subject to examination and approval by the provincial, municipal and autonomous region planning commissions and relevant departments of the State Council. No unit or individual has the power to decide on capital construction projects without going through overall balancing by the State Planning Commission or its provincial, municipal and autonomous region counterparts. Except for those which the enterprises are entitled to undertake according to state regulations, all projects for technical transformation are subject to joint examination and approval by the appropriate planning commissions and economic commissions at different levels. All large- and medium-sized construction projects and abovenorm projects for technical transformation outside the state plan are subject to overall balancing by the State Planning Commission before being submitted to the State Council for examination and approval.

(3) All construction projects must be undertaken in strict compliance with the procedures for capital construction. No project shall be included in the annual construction plan, still less shall it be started hastily, without prior feasibility studies and technical and economic appraisal, or without such preparatory work as adequate prospecting and designing. Whoever violates this regulation must be called to account.

(4) As regards all construction projects already decided on, the following must be done: to fix the scale of construction, total amount of investment, time schedule, returns on investment and conditions for co-operation with other units. At the same time, the system of responsibility must be strictly applied. On the basis of the worked-out scheduling of a project, the planning department and the one in charge of the project must allot sufficient funds each year and ensure the annual supply of materials needed. Through various forms of responsibility system, the unit for which the project is being built is required to complete its annual plan within the funds allotted, and the building company to guarantee work quality and fulfilment on time.

(5) Investments in capital construction are to be placed under the centralized control of the Bank of Construction of China, which is to supervise their use according to plan. The bank must carry out its duties faithfully and malfeasance must be looked into and dealt with according to law.

Our measures for controlling the volume of investment in fixed assets and ensuring investment, for energy and transport projects and for technical transformation of existing enterprises all have a positive purpose, and we must be firm and very strict in this respect. The ministries or commissions charged with the responsibility of examining and approving projects of capital construction and technical transformation must stick to principles and strive for higher efficiency. In accordance with the principle of different levels holding different responsibilities, they must handle well whatever is within their purview. Construction projects that require their examination and approval must be processed in good time and according to established procedures, and favouritism, arbitrary decisions, delays and shifting responsibility are all impermissible. To facilitate the growth of production, enterprises may themselves take measures, financed with their own funds and suited to their own conditions, to update equipment and carry out technical innovations that will lead to lower energy consumption and greater variety and improved quality of products.

Second, firmly readjust present enterprises, consolidate them in an all-round way and strive to raise the efficiency of operation and management.

The present irrational structure of enterprises and their backward operation and management constitute major obstacles to improving economic results.

This is a long-standing problem and a hard nut to crack. During the decade between 1971 and 1980, our industrial enterprises (not including those run by the production brigades and teams in the rural areas) increased from over 195,000 to more than 377,000, almost double the 1970 figure. This played a certain role in China's economic growth, but there was a good deal of blind expansion due to the prolonged "left" mistakes in the guidelines for our economic work, plus a lack of necessary knowledge on the part of quite a few cadres. Many enterprises operated under capacity or were unable to go into operation at all due to inadequate supplies of raw and semi-finished materials and energy. Because of backward technology and technique, some enterprises were heavy consumers of materials and turned out poor-quality products or even overstocked goods that nobody wanted. In the absense of the most elementary system of economic accounting, some enterprises set no quotas for consumption of material nor did they calculate production costs and thus ran at a loss for years. The management of some others was chaotic, lacking the most indispensable rules and regulations, so that no one assumed responsibility and discipline was lax and the waste appalling. With readjustment and consolidation in the past few years, things have begun to improve, but the problems involved have not yet been fundamentally solved. To this day, quite a number of enterprises have still not matched their best past technical and economic norms; nearly 30 percent of the state-owned industrial enterprises practising independent business accounting incur losses, the total sum of which may well exceed 4 billion yuan this year. The irrational structure of enterprises and their backward operation and management have made it impossible for many advanced enterprises to operate at full capacity because the energy and raw and semi-finished materials they need are used by the backward enterprises, which consumer these valuable supplies and turn out substandard products. This has exacerbated the shortage of energy and raw and semi-finished materials throughout the country and increased the state's financial burden, gravely affecting the growth of state revenue. Unless this situation is changed, it will be very difficult to continue improving economic results in industrial production as a whole, accelerate its growth rate, and make a fundamental turn for the better in the financial and economic situation. Moreover, the large number of backward enterprises will continue to find it all right to rely for their survival on the fruit of the labour of advanced enterprises. Instead of encouraging advanced enterprises and transforming the backward ones, this will encourage many unhealthy tendencies to grow and spread because of the scramble for energy, raw and semi-finished materials, transport facilities and markets, and the normal functioning of the socialist economy and good standards of social conduct will be undermined. Therefore, we must be very firm in readjusting and consolidating our enterprises. Government at all levels and all those doing economic work must understand this clearly and, setting store by the overall interests of the national economy, take resolute and effective measures to do the job well without wavering or further delay.

The State Council has decided that from now on relevant departments shall promptly form according to the products competent leading groups with their local counterparts to draw up programmes for different trades and plans for readjusting enterprises. The following three categories of enterprises must be the first to close down, suspend operations, amalgamate with others or switch to the manufacture of other products: (1) those that are heavy consumers of material, turn out poor-quality products and have been running at a loss over the years due to inefficient operation; (2) those with production in excess of demand and those with large overstocks of goods; and

(3) backward enterprises that contend with the advanced ones for energy, raw and semi-finished materials, transport facilities and markets, and especially those set up without justification that hamper production in the advanced enterprises. The regions and departments concerned must draw up two-year plans for closing, suspending and amalgamating such enterprises and for switching their production. They must provide lists of the enterprises to be closed or suspended, and propose measures to carry out the plans. All enterprises that have incurred heavy losses because of poor operation and management must begin to earn profits within a given time limit. Those that fail to do so must suspend operation pending consolidation. No doubt there will be considerable resistance to overcome and unavoidable problems will have to be solved properly, but this work must be done, and done well. The economic commissions at all levels will be responsible for ensuring implementation of the plans and for supervising and checking up on their progress. The workers and staff in state-owned enterprises that are closed or suspend operations must accept state assignment to other jobs. Those for whom no new jobs are available for the time being should be organized to study or do some work useful to society, and they must strictly observe discipline in all cases. People should be appointed especially to protect the property and materials of the enterprises that close down or suspend production. Such disruptive activities as mass seizure of public property and its divison in private are absolutely forbidden. People who engage in such activities will be severely punished according to law, and the administrative leaders of the factories and local departments concerned will be called to account. Approval and business licenses must be obtained from the departments for industrial and commercial administration before new factories may open; any factory operating without a license shall be closed down according to law. The industrial and commercial administrative departments should exercise their functions and powers in accordance with the law, and no obstruction or interference by any other department is allowed. The socialist system is an advanced social system under which the productive forces can be rapidly developed and labour productivity increased. Therefore, our socialist state encourages the advanced and must in no way protect the backward. The many tax, price and credit systems and regulations that serve to discourage advanced enterprises while protecting backward ones must be revised step by step.

Present enterprises must be consolidated more quickly and effectively. This work must be completed in all of them within the next three years. Three things are essential in this connection: one is to establish competent leading bodies, another is to work out and improve the rules and regulations for management and the system of responsibility, and the third is to draw up plans for technical transformation with the stress on reducing the consumption of energy and raw and semi-finished materials and to set appropriate objectives for the development of products. An enterprise can be said to be well consolidated when all its workers and staff, including its leading cadres, have clearly defined responsibilities, which are linked with the results of production; when labour discipline and work attitude have distinctly improved; when the products meet the needs of society; and when the major economic and technical norms and overall economic results are appreciably better than before consolidation. Consolidated enterprises must be inspected one by one and approved by joint work teams from the relevant departments at a higher level in accordance with the standards set by the central government, and substandard enterprises must be consolidated again.

In doing consolidation, we must, first of all, pay attention to major enterprises so that they may take the lead in raising operational, managerial and technical efficiency and improving economic results. The leading responsible members of the central departments and provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions must direct the work themselves and help one by one the all-round consolidation of a few major enterprises that have great potential in production and are vital to the national economy as a whole. If leading comrades of the localities and departments in charge of economic work do not personally oversee the process in one or two major enterprises nor join the masses in gaining first-hand practical experience but merely issue general calls, they will never be able to acquire the knowledge and initiative needed to lead our modernization drive and will not be competent to continue their present work of leadership.

In conjunction with enterprise readjustment and consolidation, we should tighten financial, price, tax and credit control and strengthen financial and economic discipline. Unlawful appropriation, misuse and withholding of state funds, as well as unjustified additions to production costs and withholding profits in violation of state regulations -- all these things must be checked and the funds recovered in full. The prices of products set by the state must be strictly upheld, and no wilful changes are allowed. Those who violate price regulations should be dealt with seriously according to law. No locality or unit has the authority to change state tax regulations. Unauthorized tax reductions and exemptions must be resolutely corrected and the sum fully paid. Enterprises that evade taxes or are in arrears must pay the state treasury retroactively within a specified time limit together with fines. All undertakings financed by state funds and appropriations must fulfil the economic requirements as set in the plans and designs and must not incur loss or waste. Credit control must be centralized, and no bank at any level may issue loans unless provided for in state plans or by state policies, and no one can compel a bank to issue loans. Resolute and effective measures must be taken to stop the illegal appropriation of state property for use by individual units or the seeking of private interests at the expense of public interests. The constitution provides for an auditing system under which the auditing bodies have the authority to supervise through auditing the revenues and expenditures of departments under the State Council, local governments at different levels, state financial and monetary departments and enterprises and institutions; no other administrative organ, public organization or individual may interfere with this work. Leading cadres at all levels, in particular, should play an exemplary role in observing and upholding state financial and economic discipline. Whoever violates such discipline must be called to account, and those involved in serious cases must be punished according to law. Law officers who break the law must be punished more severely than others. Comrades who adhere to principle and dare to fight against breaches of financial and economic discipline should be firmly supported and encouraged. Whoever retaliates against them must be dealt with severely according to law.

Third, promote technological progress and give full play to the role of science and technology in economic development.

It is a fundamental matter of principle that vigorous economic development must rely on scientific and technological achievements and that science and technology must serve economic development. Generally speaking, the technological level of production in present-day China lags far behind advanced world levels. This is our weak point, and it means that we have a lot of hard work to do conscientiously. We must rely on advanced technology in production to a large extent for all-round fulfilment of the Sixth Five-Year Plan.

Looking still further ahead towards the magnificent objective of quadrupling the gross annual output value of China's industry and agriculture by the end of this century and then scaling even greater heights, we need all the more to give full play to the enormous role of science and technology. This quadrupling is not just a quantitative concept, and it will be impossible to reach the target if we mark time at our present low technological level. All branches of our national economy must gradually apply the advanced technologies that have been in common use in the economically developed countries since the 1970s or the early 1980s and which are applicable in China. All enterprises and industrial departments should strive for technological progress. We must all recognize the extreme importance of this question. When talking about expanding production, some comrades tend to think solely of building new factories or starting new establishments, rather than the technical transformation and technological advance in present enterprises. If they stick to this approach and continue to direct production and construction with their outdated concepts and methods, the national economy as a whole will be unable to raise effectiveness significantly, even if a number of new enterprises that use fairly advanced technology are set up, since the large number of present enterprises will still have outmoded equipment, techniques and technologies and will continue to turn out old products. In that case, it will be impossible to narrow the economic and technological gap between China and the developed countries; indeed, the gap may even widen, a situation which we must of course do our best to avoid.

Comrade Sun Yefang, the noted economist, who remains very much concerned about the socialist construction despite serious illness, recently wrote a very good article on the need to rely mainly on technical transformation for quadrupling the gross annual value of industrial and agricultural output. In this article, which was published in RENMIN RIBAO (PEOPLE'S DAILY) on November 19, 1982, he pointed out that "a big base figure leading to a low growth rate" is not a law governing the development of production but mainly the outcome of neglecting the technical transformation of the existing enterprises. Production will definitely grow at a faster rate, he said, if we no longer "freeze technologies" and "reproduce 'antiques'" but systematically undertake technical transformation of the existing enterprises in their hundreds of thousands with emphasis on the key ones. He suggested that the rate of depreciation for fixed assets should be raised gradually to shorten the depreciation period. The State Council holds that his views are correct. In the future, as far as the financial resources of the state permit, we should take a positive attitude towards steadily raising the depreciation rate. The State Council has instructed the State Planning Commission, the State Economic Commission and the Ministry of Finance to study this question jointly and then work out a concrete plan so that the enterprises will have increasing financial resources for renewal of equipment and technical transformation.

The most important thing in stimulating technological improvement is to organize the scientific and technical personnel to draw up plans and tackle key problems. In conjunction with the departments concerned and with the cooperation of specialists in all branches of science and technology, the State Science and Technology Commission, the State Planning Commission and the State Economic Commission should set to work right now to draw up plans for the development of various trades, for the development of regions with large- and medium-sized cities as their cores and for the technical transformation of key enterprises, and a programme for China's scientific and technological advance. In the process, they should work out realistic policies on technology, specify the technological levels that should and can be reached towards the end of this century, and decide on concrete measures to replace outdated techniques step by step.

For example, we should make full use of China's fairly abundant mineral resources to produce alloy steel, low-alloy steel in particular, and increase their proportion of total steel output as a major policy for the technological development of our metallurgical industry. The use of the rotary kiln with a precalcinator for cement production, which can cut energy consumption by more than one-third, should likewise be established as a major policy for the technological transformation of the cement industry. All trades and professions should proceed from their concrete situation and work out the orientation of their technological advance based on their own characteristics with a view to achieving good results. This is of major importance for China's economic and technological progress. We should pay close attention to the development of the electronics industry which has a particularly important role to play in China's modernization, and should gradually apply electronic technology to different branches of our national economy. Large- and medium-sized cities in the coastal and inland areas with higher technological level should help the minority nationality areas and the outlying border areas raise the technological level of their production. In line with the needs of expanding production in the country as a whole, we should co-ordinate research on various scientific and technological subjects centering on those projects that may yield important economic results, and take forceful measures to mobilize the specialized skills of scientific and technical personnel in all fields to tackle key problems on the basis of a division of labour and co-operation. In particular, we should organize the specialists concerned to take part in the technological and economic appraisal of major construction projects as well as to survey and design them; we should pay attention to their views to ensure better preparation for launching such projects. In this connection, the State Council will organize the departments concerned to make unified plans and work out measures for their execution so as to open up new prospects within the next two to three years.

Importing advanced technology is a major way to promote China's technological progress. Although we have made certain progress in this respect during the past few years, much remains to be done. Following investigation and study and according to unified planning, we should simplify procedures and take prompt action to import urgently needed technology that will not be available at home in a short time. Moreover, we should organize scientists, technicians and workers to assimilate and popularize imported technology. The state will provide the foreign exchange and the funds for the manufacture of the supporting facilities at home. The State Economic Commission has, in co-operation with other departments concerned, drawn up a plan for importing 3,000 items of advanced technology in the next three years to strengthen the technical transformation of the existing enterprises, particularly small- and medium-sized ones. Measures should be taken to execute this plan item by item according to schedule. First of all, domestic resources should be fully mobilized to solve problems which can be solved by relying on our own scientific, technological and productive capabilities, and it is impermissible to seek abroad whatever is available within the country.

We should use administrative and economic means to stimulate the enthusiasm of our enterprises for improving their technical performance. Centres for technological development should be established for different trades and enterprises, and combination in various forms of scientific research, designing and production should be promoted. The production and construction plans of the state and the localities, departments, trades and professions should specify both the making of new products and the eliminating of outmoded ones. Future appraisal of enterprise performance should have as a major criterion the introduction of new products and techniques for increased production at lower costs.

Since the technical norms for many products have become outdated, the State Economic Commission should organize the departments concerned to revise them, beginning from 1983. We should institute a system of state licences for the manufacture of major products, banning the making of substandard items. We should firmly carry out the policy of fixing prices according to the quality of products, enact and enforce a patent law, practise the system of reward for new products and technical innovations and abolish those rules and regulations that hinder technological progress. We should mobilize the masses to learn from pacesetters and to make rationalization proposals, and encourage enterprises and their workers and staff to take vigorous steps to promote technological progress and improve operation and management.

Scientists, intellectuals in other fields and other sections of our people have been honouring the memory of Comrade Jiang Zhuying, a middle-aged scientist in the Changchun Institute of Precision Optical Machinery, and Comrade Luo Jianfu, a middle-aged engineer in the Lishan Microelectronics Company in Shaanxi, and pledged to learn from them. Both of them were exemplary Communist Party members who made scientific and technological inventions and innovations of advanced domestic or world level which our country needed urgently. Throughout their careers, they worked painstakingly amid all kinds of difficulties, often forgoing food and sleep, and devoted all their energy and wisdom to China's scientific and technological development. They did not stop working even when they became seriously ill. They were the first to bear hardship, and the last to enjoy comfort. They placed the interests of the party and state above everything else and gave no thought to personal fame or gain. Their deeds provide vivid examples for education in communist ideology. We hope that all members of the Communist Party and the Communist Youth League, all patriotic young people and the rest of the working people in scientific, technological and other professional fields and in all other trades will follow their examples. We hope that all units where intellectuals work will take a correct attitude towards them, conscientiously implement the relevant policies, put full trust in them and show concern for them so that their can realize their aspirations for contributing their all to the building of the socialist motherland. All intellectuals, except for those with organizational ability who are suitable for posts of administrative leadership, should be able to devote themselves to their own specialities. This is the way, we believe, to ensure that our science and technology will develop by leaps and bounds.

Fourth, energetically and steadily speed up the restructuring of economic systems.

Restructuring economic systems is a major guarantee for improving economic results comprehensively and achieving socialist modernization. Socialist transformation of private industry and commerce in the 1950s ended the exploitation of workers by the capitalists. The current restructuring aims at breaking the convention of "everybody eating from the same big pot" and "giving everybody an iron rice bowl" and truly applying the principle of more pay for more work, less pay for less work and no pay for no work. It is no less significant than the socialist transformation of private industry and commerce. The initial reforms carried out in the past three years have yielded positive results and enriched our useful experience. As the national economy is being readjusted, the ratio of its major branches is becoming more balanced, and this provides favourable conditions for continuing to reform the economic systems. Comprehensive reform should be preceded by careful study and, wherever possible, by experiments so as to enrich our experience. Nevertheless, those reforms which have become possible and imperative under present conditions should be started without hesitation. The on-going consolidation and readjustment of enterprises, encouragement of technical transformation, control over the volume of investment in fixed assets, invigoration of commodity circulation and so on are all bound up with the economic systems, without whose reform we will find it very difficult to go forward.

Therefore, it is both possible and imperative to step up the reform to some extent. Comprehensive reform is to take place gradually during the Seventh Five-Year Plan period. In the next three years, while sparing no effort in drawing up an overall plan to reform our economic systems and working out concrete measures for its implementation, we should go a step further and actively test specific reforms.

Experience over the years tells us that the steady and co-ordinated growth of the national economy requires the correct application of the principle of ensuring the leading role of the planned economy supplemented by market regulation and of exercising strict control over major economic matters through planning while adopting a flexible policy towards lesser ones, which are to be controlled mainly through industrial and commercial administration and economic levers. The state must devote its main efforts to overall balancing of the national economy, and do a better job of centralizing the administration of major economic activities that affect the proportions among the key branches of the economy. In particular, it must strictly control, according to the state plan, the volume and priorities of investment in fixed assets, the key capital construction projects and the increase in funds for consumption. Depending on the circumstances, diverse forms may be adopted for the operation and management of enterprises, the purchase and sale of commodities, the opening of more channels of commodity circulation, employment and the services trades. In terms of concrete steps, we should first of all keep tabs on the key enterprises and the manufacture and distribution of major industrial and agricultural products covered by mandatory planning, and adopt flexible measures with regard to small enterprises and minor commodities covered by market regulation. As for enterprises and products in the intermediate category, namely, those covered by guidance planning, we have to decide on the specific control measures step by step in conjunction with the reform of the price, tax and credit sytems and after accumulating experience through more testing at selected points, because the situation is rather complicated and, furthermore, the role of the various economic levers has not yet been brought into full play.

Both in mandatory planning and in guidance planning, we must make conscious use of the law of value. In order to help enterprises overcome the defects of ignoring social needs and technological progress and to impel them to improve economic results, we must give full scope to the regulatory role of various economic levers, particularly pricing, in the light of the specific conditions of different enterprises and products. For long-standing historical reasons, price parities between various commodities are for the most part irrational at present. This often tempts enterprises to develop in unwanted directions, seriously impedes the smooth progress of economic reforms, adversely affects normal state revenue and expenditure and, in the final analysis, hinders the general improvement of the people's living standards. Reform of the current price system is imperative. However, since this is a major issue affecting the overall situation, it must be handled with discretion according to well thoughtout plans, and we cannot afford the least rashness in this matter. The State Council holds the view that conditions will not yet be ripe for comprehensive reform of the price system in the last three years of the Sixth Five-Year Plan period. But readjustment -- upward or downward -- in the exceedingly unreasonable prices of a small number of products can be made on condition that basic stability in the general level of market prices is maintained. As for the vastly different rates of profit between various enterprises, the problem should first be solved gradually through some such means as settlement according to an internal price scale. The excessively low prices of fuels for industrial use and of some raw and semi-finished materials should be gradually readjusted when practicable, since they hurt production, discourage thrift and can only lead to blind growth of the processing industry.

However, such readjustment is intended to encourage enterprises to reduce consumption of fuels and materials, and no enterprise is permitted to use this to raise the price of its products without authorization, thereby shifting its burden onto the consumers. As for the pricing of minor commodities of the third category, the current method may be changed, by stages and in groups, to that of consultation between industrial and commercial units within the limits specified by the state, or to that of decision by the enterprises themselves. This means that the prices of such commodities may be allowed to fluctuate in line with market conditions. Judging by the results of experiments at some selected localities, this approach is beneficial to both producers and consumers. It has helped to encourage production and satisfy market demands and the everyday needs of the people without destabilizing the general price level. We must resolutely fix commodity prices according to quality and set reasonable price parities between the wholesale and retail trades and according to season and region as a measure to raise the quality of commodities and to promote and regulate their circulation.

In the next three years, on condition that there is no substantial price readjustment, we should reform the tax system and hasten the substitution of taxes on enterprises for profits delivered to the state. This will give greater scope to the regulatory role of taxation in economic activities and improve the relations between the state and enterprises. The old method of management of unified state allocations for state-owned enterprises and unified collection of receipts from them, a method of "everybody eating from the same big pot", shackles the growth of the productive forces. To change this situation, experiments in substituting taxes for delivery of profits have been conducted in over 400 industrial enterprises in the last three years. Some of the experiments cover a city or county while others involve an entire trade in one city. On the whole, the results are fairly satisfactory. In all the experimental enterprises, the growth in income from sales of products has been markedly higher than that in gross output value and, in particular, the growth of both profits earned by the enterprises and taxes turned over to the state is much higher than that in gross output value and, in particular, the growth of both profits earned by the enterprises and taxes turned over to the state is much higher than that of gross output value and income from sales. This means a sharp rise in economic results. Moreover, both the state and the enterprises benefit, with the state receiving a greater part of the increased profit in the form of taxes and payment for the use of state funds, and the enterprises earning more income than previously. Therefore, this substitution should be affirmed as a positive measure. Such reform should, however, be carried out step by step on the merits of each case. There should be two steps for big- and medium-sized state enterprises. The first step, to be started in the period of the Sixth Five-Year Plan, provides for both taxation and profit sharing, that is to say, a certain proportion of an enterprise's profit is paid to the state as income tax and local tax, while the remainder is divided appropriately and in different forms between the state and the enterprise. The second step provides for the collection, when the price system has in the main become appropriate, of a progressive income tax in accordance with the amount of profit. We plan to adopt, by stages and groups in the next three years, such diversified forms of operation for small state-owned enterprises as contracting or leasing them to collectives or to workers and staff members as individuals, with the state collecting taxes and the enterprise paying for the use of state funds and assuming sole responsibility for its own profit or loss.

Meanwhile, to meet the needs of economic development, the rates of industrial and commercial taxes on some products will be duly readjusted and some new taxes introduced wherever necessary. This will give fuller play to the role of taxation in accumulating funds and regulating production, circulation and distribution. These reforms in the system of taxation and profit delivery will profoundly change enterprise operation and management, facilitate adoption by enterprises of the system of economic responsibility and enlarge their decision-making power. They will help to link the interests of an enterprise better with its performance and growth.

Some of the irrationalities in our current economic life, such as creating barriers between town and country, between higher and lower levels and between different departments or regions, excessive manufacturing of identical products, blocking the channels of circulation, misuse of transport facilities, duplication of leadership, and departments and regions hamstringing one another, are related to the present administrative system and structure. Unless this state of affairs is changed, it will be virtually impossible to do anything that needs to be done or to reduce waste throughout society. To solve this problem, we must give scope to the role of all trades and that of the cities, particularly that of big- and medium-sized cities, in organizing economic activities. Guided by this principle, we should gradually and in an appropriate way readjust the system of administering enterprises in the course of their reorganization and amalgamation. National corporations and the small number of large key enterprises should be put under the direct administration of the relevant leading departments of their trades at the central level, while the vast number of other enterprises should gradually come under the administration of city authorities. With regard to enterprises in the latter category, the relevant leading departments should, based on the overall situation, take charge of their development plans, economic and technological policies, technical norms, dissemination of new technologies, creation of new products, and so on. With regard to enterprises in the former category, the authorities of the city where the enterprise is located should continue to be responsible for co-ordination in production, and so on. As for the enterprises within one city, regardless of their trades, the city authorities should be responsible for gradually organizing specialized production and socialized services with independent operation and accounting so far as the casting, forging, heat treatment, machine repair, electroplating and other processes and service facilities in these enterprises are concerned. Production and circulation should also be unified, centering on the more economically developed cities so as to carry along the surrounding rural areas and gradually form city-based economic regions of different sizes and types. This is an objective of the reform that should be gradually carried out under guidance after preparations are made and experience is accumulated in pilot projects.

The Jiangsu Provincial Government recently decided to embark on some experiments in the forthcoming administrative reform so as to adapt the administrative system and structure to meet the requirements for restructuring the economic systems. The main ideas are as follows: departments and bureaus at the provincial level will, as a rule, not be directly responsible for province-owned enterprises, which are to be put under the administration of the cities where they are located; in more economically developed prefectures, the administrative departments at the prefectural and city levels will be merged, with the city exercising jurisdiction over the surrounding counties;

In economically underdeveloped prefectures, the commissioner's offices will, as the representative agency of the provincial government, supervise and check up on the work of their subordinate counties, with the enterprises originally under the administration of the commissioner's offices now put under the authority of the city or county where they are located. In recent years, Qingyuan County in Guangdong Province has made a fruitful experiment in which the county economic commission exercised unified control over the economic activities of the enterprises within the county. Obviously, these reforms help simplify administration, reduce organizational overlapping and raise work efficiency and greatly encourage the integration of town and country and of departments and regions at different levels and facilitate rationalization of enterprise structure and of the geographic distribution of productive capacity.

A new feature of our present economic situation is that far greater supplies of farm and sideline products and manufactured consumer goods are now available on the market. In contrast, the system of commodity circulation has grown increasingly out of keeping with the objective demands. It has been handed down almost unchanged from the 1950s. In those years, it served to restrict and transform private industry and commerce and control commodities in short supply. But objective conditions have changed tremendously in the past two decades and more, and it is now essential to make its reform an important item on the agenda. State commerce should without doubt play a leading role in commodity circulation. At the same time, we should give scope to the positive role of collective commerce and individual traders and pedlars and to the part productive enterprises can play in selling their own products. We must resolutely break regional blockades, unclog the channels of circulation between town and country, and explore more avenues for commodity circulation and reduce the intermediate links so as to form a really unified socialist market and facilitate commodity interflow. The State Council has, therefore, instructed the Committee for Restructuring the Economic Systems to organize the departments concerned and theoretical and practical workers who specialize in commodity circulation to study this question, make an appraisal and draw up at the earliest possible date a short-term plan for reforming the system of commodity circulation, together with necessary and effective measures for its implementation.

There is much to be done in the many-sided reform of the economic systems. Apart from working out a plan for comprehensive reform, we should in the coming three years focus our work on the following: (1) to gradually replace profit delivery with taxation for state enterprises as a measure to improve the relations between the state and enterprise; (2) to bring into play the role of key cities in resolving the contradictions between departments and regions at different levels; and (3) to reform the system of commodity circulation so as to promote the production and exchange of commodities. The accomplishment of these three tasks will set in motion the reform of our economic systems as a whole.

Finally, I would like to discuss in particular the question of agriculture and work in the rural areas.

The situation in the countryside has been very good in recent years thanks mainly to application of a series of correct policies and to the introduction of diverse forms of the responsibility system for production, which have unleashed the peasants' enthusiasm.

The all-round contract system created in practice by the masses was initiated in outlying poverty-stricken areas and soon spread to well-off areas that are more developed economically. This has now become the principal form of the responsibility system in most rural areas, adopted not only by economically backward brigades and teams that engage in one-crop farming, but also popularized in turn among economically advanced brigades and teams that have a highly specialized division of labour. In the course of this process, the all-round contract method has been enriched and refined into a form of production responsibility contracted by a household or group under unified or separate management, or a combination of both, where payment is reckoned according to output, and the households or groups contribute a fixed share to the collective and state. Diverse in form, this contract system is invariably characterized by direct benefits, clearly defined responsibilities and simple procedures. It gives the peasants decision-making power in production and management and helps overcome egalitarianism in distribution. With great flexibility, adaptability and vitality, the system has yielded satisfactory results. Many places report that, with the introduction of this responsibility system. production has gone up, the relationship between cadres and peasants has markedly improved and bureaucratism, arbitrary orders, corruption, waste and other obnoxious practices have declined sharply. This system has now spread from a few areas to most parts of the country, from the countryside to towns and cities and from agriculture to other spheres. It is by no means accidental that this system is gaining ground across China, much to the acclaim of the people. It has proved to be an effective form for bringing out the superiority of the socialist economic system in the rural areas at the present stage. The task for us now is to stabilize and improve the responsibility system for agricultural production. The responsibility system can be allowed to take various forms which may be improved in the course of practice. We must never try to prevent the masses from adopting the system of contracted responsibilities on the household basis with remuneration linked to output, or any other forms that they like. Instead, we should encourage them and help solve problems that crop up. We must proceed from the actual situation and study how to solve the problems in unified or separate management and the forms of contracted work in conformity with the local economic level and other characteristics.

As the output-related system of contracted responsibilities has spread, as a large number of specialized households and households doing specialized jobs besides crop cultivation have come to the fore and as there has been a steady growth of rural commodity production, economic combination has become a necessity and reflects popular will. This is not a combination of the old type. Serving the expansion of commodity production, it helps improve the work before and after production and facilitates co-operation in such specialized and socialized services as the dissemination of techniques, supply and marketing, processing, storage, transport, plant protection and supply of information. Through diverse forms and different levels of combination, the contract system and other means, the economic activities of the peasant households or groups are linked with the big state-owned socialist industries, transport services, commerce, farms and scientific research institutes, leading to close economic ties with them. It should be realized that with the predominance of the socialist state economy, such economic ties and co-operation help to strengthen planned guidance over the peasants' main economic activities and bring them more effectively within the orbit of state planning and make them an organic part of the socialist economy.

From a long-term point of view, the development of economic combination before and after the production process on the basis of a division of labour and of the system of contracting specialized jobs will greatly stimulate commodity production in the rural areas and the prosperity of the rural economy as a whole, thus opening up a correct and distinctively Chinese road and bright prospects for the growth of socialist agriculture. Some embryonic forms of combinations have already appeared, including the combination of specialized productive undertakings, the combination of production, supply and marketing and the combination of technical services. We should guide these properly according to circumstances, help various forms of combination to improve in the course of practice and sum up experience from time to time, instead of rashly approving this form and rejecting that. In short, on the question of combination we should be realistic, adhere to the principle of voluntary participation and mutual benefit, respect the initiative of the masses, and move ahead only when conditions are ripe, thus ensuring steady progress.

"Spare no effort in promoting grain production and actively develop diversified undertakings" is our comprehensive policy for agricultural production, and the slightest neglect of either aspect will result in one-sidedness. Ours being a country with a vast population but limited arable land, feeding the people has always been a matter of prime importance, and we may pay the closest attention to grain production. It must be laid down as a long-term policy admitting of no wavering whatsoever on our part that all land suitable for growing grain crops must be used for that purpose and not others. Certain specific policies should be adopted to ensure that peasants in the main grain-producing areas derive benefit from their productive activities. On the other hand, precisely because we have a huge population and a scarcity of arable land, we must not concentrate all our labour power on the limited acreage under cultivation but must turn our eyes to the vast expanse of our country's territory and make full use of our rich agricultural resources in the hilly and mountainous areas, the grasslands and the waters. On the premise of ensuring the steady growth of grain production and preventing the deterioration of the ecological environment, we should boldly develop diversified economy. This will absorb more labour power, particularly woman and subsidiary labour power, put funds in the rural areas to better use and rationally exploit our natural resources, and it will also provide more favourable conditions for protecting and promoting grain production. In this way, our human, land and material resources can be turned to best account.

In developing agricultural production, we must attach great importance to the role of science and technology and, as soon as possible, set up a scientific and technological research and dissemination network in the service of agriculture. The peasants should be encouraged to provide themselves with various scientific and cultural facilities within their means so as to raise the level of their scientific and general knowledge. At the same time, we must try to improve the conditions for agricultural production and call on the peasants to rely on themselves and, through the accumulation of funds and the investment of labour, to carry out agricultural capital construction projects as local conditions permit. State investment in agriculture should be used mainly for projects that the peasants cannot afford, such as large-scale water conservancy works, development of major forest areas, main roads and telecommunications facilities.

At present, two bad practices prevail in the countryside: one is seizing farmland to put up houses, and the other is indiscriminate felling of forests, both entailing grave consequences.

The Central Committee of the party and the State Council have already taken some measures and will take more wherever necessary to check such practices without hesitation. We must educate the cadres and the peasants to keep in mind the interests of the whole country and the well-being of future generations and not just pursue local and immediate interests at the expense of national and long-term interests.

Fellow deputies, overall fulfilment of the Sixth Five-Year Plan requires that we firmly implement the principle of building both the socialist material and spiritual civilization and continue to step up socialist political development and improve ideological and political work. Under the guidance of the new constitution to be adopted by this session, we should continue to improve socialist democracy and strengthen the socialist legal system the better to protect the rights of the people of all our nationalities as masters of the country. The struggle against serious criminal activities in the economic and other spheres must be continued and public order improved. In the next three years, we should mobilize all government departments and the whole of society and give full scope to the role of the public security, procuratorial and judicial organs in reducing the crime rate substantially, dealing resolute blows at the counter-revolutionary activities of the hostile elements who attempt to undermine the socialist system, and eliminating threats to the safety of women and children and other vile practices that debase social morality, thus winning a decisive victory in making a fundamental turn for the better in the standards of social conduct. The aim is to create good public order and order in production and other work for successful implementation of the Sixth Five-Year Plan. We must continue to strengthen national defence, raise the level of scientific and technological research in this field, the standard of the equipment of the Chinese People's Liberation Army and its military capability and political consciousness, step up militia work and increase our defence capabilities so as to safeguard our socialist modernization.

We should persevere in restructuring government departments during the next three years. Restructuring of departments under the State Council as regards the leading bodies and the organizational set-up has in the main been completed. But there is still a long way to go and our task remains arduous. At present, low efficiency and the bureaucratic style of work remain rather serious. We must solve these problems, or we shall find it difficult to arouse the initiative of the cadres and masses and may very well face the danger of losing what we have achieved in the reform. All departments under the State Council must establish strict systems of responsibility so that every functionary has clearly defined responsibilities and every kind of work has someone to be held accountable for it. We must eradicate the undesirable work style of shifting responsibility onto others and putting things off indefinitely. We must go deep among the masses, acquire a better understanding of objective reality, investigate and study matters more systematically, and stamp out the bad habit of deciding important matters subjectively without investigation or study. Restructuring of government institutions at the provincial, municipal and autonomous region as well as the prefectural and city levels is to start this winter and is expected to be completed in the first half of next year. Restructuring at the county and grass-roots levels is to be completed between the winter of 1983 and the spring of 1984. Thus, the restructuring of government institutions will be completed throughout the country in the spring of 1984. This will give us greater initiative in doing our work.

Fellow deputies, inspired by the spirit of the party's twelfth national congress, the people of all our nationalities are striving to create a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization.

With promulgation of the Sixth Five-Year Plan and the annual plan for 1983 upon approval by this session, our people will have more clearly defined immediate objectives to strive for, and they will be able to link their present work closely with the long-term development of the country. This will be an encouragement to the entire people who will become even more determined in their march towards the great goal set for the end of this century. Government at all levels shoulder heavy loads of work and tremendous responsibilities. To bring about a new situation, we should boldly engage in creative endeavours and at the same time study diligently, work in a down-to-earth manner and advance step by step. There are arduous tasks and numerous difficulties ahead of us. We must give free rein to the initiative of the broad sections of mental and manual workers and carry forward the revolutionary spirit of building our country through hard work. United and through strenuous effort, we will certainly be able to complete the Sixth Five-Year Plan, achieve one success after another for our socialist cause, and make our great motherland more powerful and prosperous with each passing year.

[Editorial: "A Great Call -- Happy To Read the Excerpts of the Sixth 5-Year Plan"]

[Text] Today, this newspaper publishes the excerpts of the "Sixth 5-Year Plan (1981-85) for the National Economic and Social Development of the PRC." This plan has already been approved by the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC. Its full text consists of 36 chapters and 100,000 characters. The excerpts being published today consist of 30,000 characters. Though it is shortened, all the major features of the plan, including the basic tasks, and all the targets, principles, policies and major measures are included. This plan is closely related to the immediate interests of every Chinese citizen. We believe that the 1 billion Chinese people will try to understand and will study all its content with great concern. They will all relate this plan to the conditions in their areas and units and with their labor, work and study and strive to turn it into their own actions.

When the First 5-Year (1953-57) Plan was approved by the Second Session of the First NPC in 1955, it was also published in the newspapers and well-accepted by the people of all nationalities throughout our country. That plan greatly inspired the people to conscienciously plunge into large-scale economic construction. Following the beginning of the Second 5-Year Plan, because of our persistence in "regarding class struggle as the key link" and our frequent engagement in movements of political criticism, the next few 5-year plans were not presented to NPC sessions for examination, dicussion and approval or disclosed to our people. A careful reader might casually find in passage published on our newspapers something related to these plans, such as "welcome the first year of the Third 5-Year Plan" or "this year is the year in which we begin our Fourth 5-Year Plan." However, the broad masses of the people did not have access to the details of the targets or fulfillment of these plans. Owing to the joint efforts of the party and the people, we have scored great achievements in our socialist construction in the past few decades. However, our failure to inform the people of these plans often resulted in the plans themselves failing to be feasible or well-conceived and even in taking 1 year to make a 1 year plan. This made it impossible for us to guarantee the people's full exercise of their right as masters. Furthermore, it could not help but seriously hinder giving play to the superiority of the socialist system.

After more than 20 years, we once again can read our 5-year plan in our newspapers and this has aroused a feeling of finding something we have missed for a long time.

This itself shows that our country's political and economic life has resumed its orbit of healthy development. As masters of the country, the people of all nationalities have the right to know the inside state of affairs of their country. They are entitled to know the revenue and expenditures and the focus of the investment of their country; to know what difficulties our country is faced with in its economic life and what measures will be adopted to overcome these difficulties. They are entitled to know what change will be brought about in the economic and social features of their country after 5 years of construction and to what degree the people's livelihood will be improved. Our people have the right to know all these. When they know about the "inside state of affairs" of their country, they can unite as one and perform their duties as masters to increase our country's wealth and fulfill and overfulfill the 5-year plan.

The Sixth 5-Year Plan is comprehensive in its content. Its focus is conspicuous, its tasks are clearly put forth, its measures are vigorous and the steps it stipulates are sound and feasible. This plan has been formulated by using Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought to sum up the historical experiences in our socialist construction including the work of planning and through a thorough investigation and study. It has materialized the strategic goal, focuses and steps for our economic construction that were put forward by the 12th party congress. It is a feasible short-term plan for the realization of our magnificent goal. It enables us to clearly know the short-term tasks of our struggle and to relate our current work with our long-term development. The fulfillment of our Sixth 5-Year Plan can be regarded as the first battle in creating an overall new situation in our socialist modernization. A victory in this battle has a great bearing on laying the foundation for development in the 1980's and for making our economy prosper in the 1990's.

After carefully reading the Sixth 5-Year Plan we can see that the formulation and implementation of this plan has an ample objective and scientific basis. It is a positive and safe plan. There are neither excessively high targets nor impractical slogans throughout its content. According to the plan, the gross value of industrial and agricultural production will increase by 21.7 percent, with an average progressive increase of 4 percent annually. Of this, both the gross value of agricultural production and that of industrial production are to increase at an average rate of 4 percent a year and, in the implementation of the plan, efforts should be made to strive for a 5 percent increase. This is what is usually referred to as "ensuring a 4 percent increase and striving for 5." As far as the rate of progressive increase of agriculture is concerned, in the 28 years between 1953-1980, our agriculture increased at an average rate of 3.4 percent annually. Therefore, the target of increasing the rate of progressive increase from 3.4 to 4 percent is not a low one and great efforts should be made in order to attain it. As far as the rate of progressive increase of industry is concerned, the target of 4 percent is lower than the average rate in the past 28 years. This is because we have taken into account the fact that it will be impossible for energy production to see a considerable increase in the near future and that it will also be impossible to completely change the strain on communications and transport. At the same time, the task of readjusting industry is still quite arduous. The fact that we are not fixing a high target is helpful to the readjustment of proportions and fuller preparations for the Seventh 5-Year Plan. Judging from every aspect, the Sixth 5-Year Plan is one that has been carefully worked out. A positive achievement of the planning department in setting things right and eliminating "leftist" ideas, it is a plan that can be fulfilled through efforts.

A notable feature of the Sixth 5-Year Plan is that it stresses the improvement of economic results. The historical experience of our economic development has proved that that improving economic results in the fields of production, circulation and capital construction is the core of the matter.

The tendency to concentrate on speed and output value without paying attention to economic results has resulted in the waste of a large amount of valuable energy and raw material and overstocking of large quantities of goods and materials. We have suffered great losses in our attempt to seek an undeserved reputation. This is a very profound lesson. In the field of capital construction, for a long time in the past we were keen on "going in for" or "developing" something "in a big way." We concentrated a large sum of money on the construction of big factories that required heavy investment and had a long cycle, thus using a large amount of financial and material resources. Even after being delayed for a long time, production capacity could not be brought into play. This was also a very profound lesson. In the Sixth 5-Year Plan, we have drawn upon these lessons by taking the improvement of economic results as a precondition. It demands a speed that does not depart from economic results, but rather a realistic speed that concentrates on economic results. In defining the scale of investment for fixed assets, the plan takes into account the fact that it should not only be adapted to the financial resources of the state but also improve the economic results as far as possible. This reflects, from one aspect, that our understanding of the objective law governing economic construction has greatly improved.

In the Sixth 5-Year Plan, the outlay for education, scientific, cultural, health and sports undertaking has been increased to some extent. The number of students to be enrolled in full-time colleges and universities will be increased considerably. Higher education, such as broadcasting and television, correspondence and evening universities also will be greatly developed. In science and technology, the 40 major scientific and technological achievements will be popularized in an all-round way; efforts will be made to tackle 100 subjects of the 38 scientific and technological items that are of crucial importance to production and construction. Corresponding development will also be made in various cultural undertakings, such as literature and art, movies, television, broadcasting, press, publications, libraries, museums and cultural centers, and health and sports undertakings. The living standard of the urban and suburban population and their housing conditions will both continuously improve to some extent. The conditions of middle-aged intellectuals characterized by excessively low pay and heavy workload will change to some extent. All these are encouraging news.

The First 5-Year Plan implemented from 1953 was a plan that had been formulated and implemented in a relatively good manner. Even so, when we read the figures in the Sixth 5-Year Plan and compare them with the figures when we started on our journey, we are still greatly moved. When the First 5-Year Plan was started, our country produced only 1.35 million tons of steel a year. In 1957, we produced 5.35 million tons of steel. We now have more than 30 million tons of steel and its quality, varieties and specifications are incomparable to those at that time. From this example we can see that great development our country has made in its economy. We have made some mistakes, some of them serious, since the First 5-Year Plan. However, once we soberly sum up historical experiences, our past mistakes become our valuable treasure. We should never have too high an opinion of ourselves, nor should we underestimate our capabilities. The people of all our nationalities have high aspirations. Through the efforts of several 5-year plans, we will certainly be able to build our country into a highly democratic and culturally advanced modern socialist country.

Wang Bingqian's Budget Report

[Text] Beijing, December 14 (XINHUA) -- Following is the full text of Finance Minister Wang Bingqian's report on the implementation of the state budget for 1982 and the draft state budget for 1983, which was approved at the National People's Congress session on December 10:

Fellow deputies, I have been entrusted by the State Council with making the report on the implementation of the state budget for 1982 and the draft state budget for 1983, which I now submit for your examination.

I. The Implementation of the State Budget for 1982

The state budget for 1982 has been in operation more than ten months, and the situation as a whole is fairly good. Much fruitful work has been done by all the localities and departments under the leadership of the State Council since the beginning of this year. There has been much headway in readjusting and restructuring the national economy, and production, construction and endeavours in other fields have made new advances; structural readjustment of the central state institutions has been almost finished; and marked successes have been scored in the building of socialist spiritual civilization and the struggle against serious economic crimes. On this basis, the state budget for 1982 will be overfulfilled.

According to present estimates, state revenues for 1982 will total 110.69 billion yuan, or 100.2 per cent of the budgeted figure; expenditures will total 113.69 billion yuan, or 100.2 per cent; on balance, the financial deficit can be kept within 3 billion as specified in the budget.

Implementation of the 1982 state budget shows that there will be a basic balance between state revenues and expenditures as in 1981. Although the basic balance is similar in these two years, the specific circumstances are vastly different: It was achieved last year mainly through drastic retrenchment of expenditure, while this year it will be achieved despite increased expenditures. The state this year appropriately increased necessary expenditures to ensure the steady growth of the national economy; meanwhile, efforts have been made to increase state revenues by expanding production, enhancing economic results and exercising stricter financial supervision and control. It is under these new circumstances that a basic balance between revenue and expenditure is being achieved this year. It should be said that the fulfilment of the 1982 state budget marks a new victory in our effort to bring about a fundamental turn for the better in the financial and economic situation. It is the result of continuing the policy of further economic readjustment and greater political stability by the people of all our nationalities under the leadership of the Chinese Communist Party and the people's government.

Of the total state revenue for 1982, tax receipts come to 67.95 billion yuan, or 105.2 per cent of the budgeted figure; receipts from enterprises 31.1 billion yuan, or 90.4 per cent; state treasury bonds 4.2 billion yuan, or 105 per cent. Compared with last year, total revenue will rise from 108.95 billion yuan to 110.95 billion yuan, reversing the downward trend in the previous three years.

As we know, between 1979 and 1981 the state allocated more than 140 billion yuan through revenue deductions or defrayment appropriations for readjusting the economy and solving the host of problems left outstanding over the years, especially those left over from the decade of domestic turmoil, namely, raising the purchase prices of farm and sideline products, reducing or remitting taxes in the rural areas, providing employment for young people in cities and towns, raising the wages and salaries of workers and staff, building more housing for them, speeding up urban construction, etc. As a result, state revenues dropped for three years in a row.

Steady improvement in the economic situation and the gradual solution of the aforesaid problems have halted the decline in revenue, and we anticipate a steady upturn beginning next year. The rate of revenue increase, of course, cannot be very fast for some time. However, the switch from downturn to upturn is a crucial change which shows that the country's financial situation is beginning to improve notably and that our economic readjustment is entering a new and more deep-going stage.

The continued improvement of the country's financial situation in 1982 is the concentrated expression of the steady growth of our national economy in the course of readjustment during the year. Although there were rather severe natural calamities in some areas in 1982, the gross value of China's agricultural output is expected to rise by 5 per cent over last year, and the yield of major crops such as grain, cotton and oil-bearing crops will increase by big margins. Apart from the fact that the state has given the rural areas the necessary assistance, this is because the rural economic policies of the party and government have been adhered to and the various forms of the system of production responsibility earnestly implemented in different parts of the country, thus spurring peasant enthusiasm in production. Light industry has continued to grow this year on the basis of rapid expansion for three years running. Production in heavy industry has begun to pick up after two years of readjustment. The country's gross industrial output value is expected to exceed the 1981 figure by about 7 per cent. Following the growth of agriculture and of the production of goods for everyday consumption, the market supply of commodities has become more ample while prices have for the most part remained stable. Now there is an excellent economic situation throughout the country, and bright prospects are opening up before us. This is heartening. The economy is the foundation of finance. Without the continued improvement in the national economy, it would have been impossible for the 1982 state budget to be fulfilled smoothly.

The sustained improvement in 1982 of the financial situation is also closely related to our correct financial and tax policies and to the active application of the varied forms of the system of economic responsibility in state enterprises. To stimulate the growth of agriculture and give it increased aid, the state has this year continued the policies of providing subsidies for the purchase prices of farm and sideline products and of keeping the agricultural tax unaltered even when output increased. Present estimates put state expenditure for all price subsidies in 1982 in excess of 33 billion yuan. Of this, around 17 billion yuan are subsidies for the purchase prices of grain, cotton and oil-bearing crops and the additional prices for above-quota purchase of these. The state allocated considerable funds this year for updating equipment in present enterprises and for their technical transformation and trial manufacture of new products. Together with depreciation funds earmarked for enterprises and special-purpose loans, the total comes to nearly 30 billion yuan in this respect. The state has backed up the enterprises' decision-making power in operation and management and strengthened the economic responsibility system in 1982 by allowing them to keep around 17 billion yuan at their disposal through permission to set aside enterprise funds, retain a portion of their profits and practise the system whereby they are responsible for their own profits and losses. Enterprises have used these funds to expand production and provide more welfare facilities for their workers and staff.

The state has also readjusted the tax rates upwards or downwards on a small number of industrial products this year to facilitate readjustment of the national economy and continue to make use of the function of taxation in encouraging or restricting production. These measures have yielded good results and played a positive role in developing the national economy and improving the financial situation.

Total state expenditures in 1982 work out thus: appropriations for capital construction 30.27 billion yuan, or 101.8 per cent of the budgeted figure; funds for tapping the potential of present enterprises, financing their technical transformation and subsidizing the trial manufacture of new products 6.07 billion yuan, or 112 per cent; allocations of circulating funds for enterprises 2.3 billion yuan, or 95.8 per cent; financial aid to rural prople's communes and other agricultural undertakings 7.65 billion yuan, or 100.5 per cent; expenditures on culture, education, science and public health work 19 billion yuan, or 105.6 per cent; expenditures on national defence 17.87 billion yuan, or 100 per cent. Compared with the previous year, total expenditure rises from 111.49 billion yuan to 113.69 billion yuan.

Investment for capital construction increased appropriately in 1982 to speed up the building of key projects. It is estimated that direct budgetary appropriations in this respect will rise by 1.6 billion yuan over the previous year, mainly for projects for basic facilities like energy and transport. The tempo of construction of some major projects has accelerated and the returns on investment for some projects have increased. First-stage construction of the Meishan iron base for Shanghai, installation of the No's 3 and 4 generator sets of the Gezhouba dam hydroelectric power station in Hubei Province and construction of the Datun coal washing plant in the Datun mining area in Jiangsu Province have been completed and the projects put into operation. The 1982 annual plan for creating new productive capacity for cotton textile spindles, synthetic ammonia, chemical fertilizer and depots for commercial oil was completed ahead of schedule.

More funds have been earmarked for cultural, educational, scientific and public health undertakings, and this has contributed to their development. The increase is estimated to be more than 1.86 billion yuan over last year, raising the total outlay for such undertakings from 15.4 per cent of state expenditures last year to 16.7 per cent this year. Thanks to the efforts by the departments concerned, educational work has expanded this year. New student enrolment in institutions of higher learning came to 314,000, a rise of 35,000 over last year, and admissions to vocational and agricultural middle schools totalled 490,000, an increase of 220,000 over 1981. Scientific and technological research has been more successful, its results are better popularized and applied, and scientific and technological consulting services for production and construction have continued to spread. Public health, cultural and physical cultural departments have made advances in treating and preventing diseases, improving the people's physique and protecting their health, promoting family planning and encouraging mass cultural and sports activities.

The state has also given financial help to provide jobs for urban youth and raise the wages and salaries of a portion of workers and staff, and the living standards of the poeple in town and coutry have continued to rise. By the end of this year, it is estimated that the state will have created jobs in various forms for more than 5 million people in cities and towns. More urban public utilities and housing for workers and staff are being built.

To solve gradually the problem of remuneration for workers and staff in government administrative departments and institutions where no bonus system is practised, the state raised, in the fourth quarter of last year, the salary of teachers in primary and secondary schools and of a section of the medical and physical cultural workers; it will in the last quarter of this year, a pay rise to part of the workers and staff in government administrative departments and institutions referred to above. Since employment and pay have risen, the payroll for workers and staff this year is estimated to be 7.6 per cent more than last year. Increased purchase prices for farm and sideline products in the past few years and growth of production and expansion of the diversified economy combine to ensure a further rise in peasant income this year.

Generally speaking, the 1982 state budget is being carried out well. But we recognize that quite a few problems remain in our economic and financial work. The economic effectiveness of production, construction and circulation is still very low. There has not been much improvement in the chaotic operation and management in many enterprises. Financial control and supervision are inadequate. All this has prevented financial revenues from growing in step with industrial output. Another fairly conspicuous problem is the hasty increase of investment in fixed assets, and in particular there have been too many capital construction projects financed by various units themselves. Coupled with the irrational structure of investment, this has brought poor returns on investment and made it impossible to achieve maximum economic effectiveness. In terms of state finance, this means that the growth of revenue cannot keep pace with the needs of economic and social development in our country, and that achieving a balance between revenue and expenditure remains a rather serious problem. We should work harder and better to keep improving state financial affairs.

II. The Draft State Budget for 1983

In his report to the Twelfth National Congress of the Communist Party of China, Comrade Hu Yaobang proposed that we should, in the two decades between 1981 and the end of this century, strive to quadruple China's gross annual value of industrial and agricultural production and make our people fairly well-off both materially and culturally. This great strategic objective requires a fundamental turn for the better in China's financial and economic affairs in the five years from 1983 to 1987. It is a glorious but hard task. Based on these requirements, the main guidelines for state budgetary revenue and expenditure in 1983 should be: to continue the policy of readjusting, restructuring, consolidating and improving the economy, encourage the growth of production, work for better economic results, tap new financial resources and increase revenues; to concentrate adequate financial resources for construction of key projects in energy and transport while continuing to stimulate the initiative of all concerned; to expand culture, education, science and public health services and keep raising the people's living standards through proper arrangements for expenditures based on needs and possibilities; and, through constantly improving work, to do a better job of striking an overall balance, achieve better budgetary control and maintain a basic balance between revenue and expenditure.

The draft state budget for 1983 sets total revenue at 123.2 billion yuan and total expenditure at 126.2 billion yuan, the latter being 3 billion yuan over the former. We should try to reduce this deficit in the course of carrying out the budget.

Total budgetary revenue for 1983 shows a rise of 12.5 billion yuan compared with the estimated 1982 revenue, or a 11.3 per cent increase. After deducting such non-comparable factors as foreign loans and funds raised for key projects in energy and transport, revenue is to increase by 6.11 billion yuan, a 5.8 per cent growth rate.

The breakdown is essentially as follows: tax receipts 72.97 billion yuan, receipts from enterprises 32.39 billion yuan, basic depreciation funds turned in by enterprises to the central financial departments 2.2 billion yuan, receipts from the issuance of state treasury bonds 4 billion yuan, foreign loans 5.4 billion yuan, and construction funds raised for key projects in energy and transport 6 billion yuan.

The 1983 increase in revenue over the previous year marks a good beginning of the gradual expansion of state financial resources. The margin of increase for total revenue in the 1983 budget exceeds that for gross industrial and agricultural output value and is to be realized mainly through expanding production and improving economic results. In 1983, the state calls for speeding up the consolidation of enterprises, vigorously promoting their technical transformation, effective tapping of potential and cutting back production and circulation costs so as to eliminate enterprise losses. At the same time, financial and tax administration should be strengthened so that any revenue lost, including that illegally withheld by some units, is spotted and collected. Provided these requirements are met, revenue is bound to increase to some extent. In working out budgetary revenue, we have made deductions for factors causing decreased revenue such as larger price subsidies due to more purchase of farm and sideline products, the need to create more jobs for urban young people, and the rising costs of simple reproduction in some trades. As a whole, the 1983 arrangements for state budgetary revenues are forward-looking and can be fulfilled if we exert ourselves.

Some explanation is needed on the construction funds to be raised for key projects in energy and transport as listed in the 1983 budgetary revenue. In order to hasten economic construction and invigorate the national economy as a whole, the state has decided to raise 20 billion yuan for the aforesaid key projects during the remaining three years of the Sixth Five-Year Plan, beginning from 1983. The following methods will be used to raise the funds: increased profit delivery and long-term loans from banks are to account for 6 billion yuan; direct state budgetary expenditures will contribute 2 billion yuan; and the remaining 12 billion yuan will be made available through raising "state construction funds for key projects in energy and transport" from the extra-budgetary funds of various localities, departments and units and from after-tax profits of big collectively owned economic enterprises in cities and towns. The three items together will come to an annual average of over 6 billion yuan.
At present, we have the following problems in our economic development: on the one hand, energy shortage and pressure on transport have become major bottlenecks in China's economic growth, making it imperative to speed up their expansion which, however, is impeded by insufficient funds; on the other hand, some localities, departments and enterprises have used quite a lot of extra-budgetary funds for projects in the processing industry, leading to overlapping investment and blind construction and a haphazard use of funds. Now it has been decided to adopt the methods mentioned above so as to concentrate a fair portion of the over-decentralized funds for projects the state badly needs. This can develop energy and transport more rapidly and also help readjust the structure of investment in capital construction. It has been decided that, to raise construction funds for key projects in energy and transport, the state shall requisition, with the exception of a small number of exempted items, 10 per cent of the extra-budgetary funds of various localities, departments and units, while leaving at their disposal the remaining 90 per cent.

Their regular expenditures will not be affected, provided management is improved and good arrangements are made. We believe that this measure taken by the state to concentrate funds on key projects will win enthusiastic support from all quarters concerned.

As revenue picks up, total state budgetary expenditure for 1983 will be 12.5 billion yuan more than that estimated for 1982, an 11 per cent increase. After deducting such non-comparable factors as investments in capital construction using foreign loans and investments in new key projects in energy and transport to be included in next year's plan, there will be a rise of 6.1 billion yuan in expenditure, or a 5.6 per cent increase. The breakdown is essentially as follows:

(1) Appropriations for capital construction total 36.18 billion yuan, an increase of 5.91 billion yuan over the estimate for 1982. Of this sum, capital construction investment directly provided for in the state budget comes to 19.63 billion yuan, and newly added investment in key projects for energy and transport 6.5 billion yuan (including the 500 million yuan from budgeted expenditure). The two items total 26.13 billion yuan, 6.53 billion yuan over the estimate for 1982. This will mean considerably more construction in energy, transport and other key fields. Moreover, reserve funds for capital construction and investments from stand-by local financial resources total 4.65 billion yuan, 1.02 billion less than the estimate for 1982. Investments using foreign loans amount to 5.4 billion yuan, an increase of 400 million yuan over the 1982 estimate.

(2) Funds for tapping the potential of present enterprises, financing their technical transformation and for subsidizing trial manufacture of new products amount to 6.57 billion yuan. Of this sum, funds for development of technology and trial manufacture of new products are 900 million yuan more than in 1982. Increased production and better economic results in the future will come mainly from tapping the potential of present enterprises, encouraging their technical transformation and adopting advanced scientific and technological achievements. More expenditure for these purposes next year is entirely necessary.

(3) Allocations of circulating funds for enterprises total 2.25 billion yuan, slightly less that the estimate for 1982. At present, a large amount of circulating funds has been tied up by state-owned enterprises, and this must be reduced by speeding up their turnover. The above-mentioned budgetary allocations will be used mainly for new enterprises and for increasing reserves of certain materials.

(4) Expenditures for aiding rural people's communes and other operating expenses for agriculture total 7.75 billion yuan, slightly more than the 1982 estimate. Agriculture is a strategic priority in the development of the national economy. Since the adoption of various forms of the system of responsibility in rural production, agriculture and diversified rural economy have grown rapidly and peasant income has increased considerably. The peasants will make more investments in agriculture, but state financial support is still indispensable. The state funds for agriculture will be used mainly to develop grain production, encourage construction of selected projects for forestry, animal husbandry and fishery, undertake agricultural scientific research and popularize new farming techniques.

(5) Operating expenses for culture, education, science and public health services total 20.4 billion yuan, an increase of 1.4 billion yuan or 7.4 per cent over the estimate for 1982.

Of this sum, operating expenses for culture will go up by 9.1 per cent, for education by 7.3 per cent, for science by 9.3 per cent, and for public health work by 7 per cent, all being higher than the margin of increase in total expenditures and revenues. More intellectual investment and modernization of science and technology are a key link in China's four modernizations. However, funds for these purposes can only increase to a limited extent for the time being because present financial difficulties make it impossible for the state to allocate huge sums. As the financial and economic situation improves, expenditures for them should grow.

(6) Expenditures for national defence account for 17.87 billion yuan, about the same as the estimate for 1982. A certain amount of budgetary expenditures is indispensable for modernizing national defence and building regular armed forces.

(7) Administrative expenses come to 8.5 billion yuan, an increase of 500 million yuan over the estimate for 1982. The increase will be used mainly for salary payments and operating expenses in the public security, procuratorial and judicial departments.

(8) Funds for the disabled and survivors of those who die in the line of duty and for social relief come to 2.4 billion yuan, and funds for creating jobs for school-leavers in cities and towns 380 million yuan, both items being about the same as the estimates for 1982.

(9) Expenditures for repaying the principal and interest on foreign loans total 5.1 billion yuan, an increase of 130 million yuan over the estimate for 1982. By the end of 1983, the total of outstanding foreign loans borrowed as part of state revenue will be an estimated 4 billion U.S. dollars.

(10) General reserve funds amount to 2 billion yuan.

The 1983 state budget provides for a marked increase in both revenue and expenditure compared with 1982. In working these out, consideration has been given to the need for further readjusting the economy, building key construction projects, developing culture, education, science and public health work and steadily improving the people's living standards. At the same time, in preparing the budgeted figures for revenue and expenditure, consideration has been given to the necessary expenditures to cover various price subsidies and various special-purpose funds at the disposal of enterprises and the portion of profits retained by them. It should be noted that the draft state budget for 1983 incorporates the guideline of ensuring the needs of major areas while making all-round arrangements. It is a budget that does not leave much leeway. Reaching the budgeted revenues will demand tremendous efforts, and expenditures must be adequately controlled and economy practised. This will be hard work. But we should realize that the present situation in the country is excellent and many favourable conditions exist. Moreover, the State Council has adopted a number of important measures to solve current problems in economic work. It is, therefore, entirely possible to execute this budget. We must conscientiously apply the various economic and financial measures and do our work well in all fields, actively increase revenues and vigorously curtail expenditures so that the 1983 budget is fulfilled successfully.

III. Strive To Carry Out the 1983 State Budget and Further Improve the Financial Situation

The year 1983 will be one of crucial importance in carrying out the Sixth Five-Year Plan. To satisfactorily execute next year's budget, further improve the state financial situation and do spade work for gradually striking a balance in the next five years between state revenues and expenditures, we must pay special attention to the following aspects:

First, efforts should be made to expand production and tap potential as a basis for increasing state revenues. The key to a steady growth of revenue next year is to focus on improving economic results and making this the first priority in our economic work. Stress was often laid in the past on output value and growth rate to the neglect of economic results. This was a big flaw in our work. We have paid attention to this question in the past two years and the situation has improved. However, it cannot be said that the problem as a whole has been fundamentally solved. For example, taxes and profits delivered by state-owned industrial enterprises per 100 yuan of fixed assets and circulating funds were 30 yuan in 1965, but are expected to be only 24.1 yuan in 1982. The turnover time for circulating funds in state-owned industrial enterprises was 74.8 days in 1965 and is expected to be 111 days in 1982. Fixed assets put to use per 100 yuan of capital construction investment were 93.6 yuan in 1965 and are expected to be 80 yuan in 1982. Poor economic results in financial work are reflected in the failure of revenue to increase in phase with increased production and investment, or in a relatively slow production growth accompanied by a rapid increase in appropriated circulating funds. This situation is to a large extent related to the present irrational economic structure, backward technologies and poor operation and management. We must readjust the economic structure, renew equipment, carry out technical transformation, apply advanced scientific and technological achievements and, in particular, improve operation and management so that all industries and trades can achieve significantly better economic results. In this connection, special attention should be paid at present to improving overall economic results. In judging these results achieved by an enterprise, it is necessary to assess the amount of income from the funds used, the turnover time of circulating funds and the recovery rate of investment in fixed assets. These are substantial criteria. Only when successes are achieved in these three aspects can state revenues grow in pace with or faster than industrial output value and full use be made of all production and construction funds. We should also tighten control of funds allocated for non-productive purposes, pay attention to results of their use and strive to do more and better with less funds.

Second, financial management in state enterprises should be improved in real earnest as an enterprise is readjusted and consolidated. At present, operation and management in many enterprises are chaotic, and loss and waste are serious. About 30 per cent of the industrial enterprises operate at a loss and their total deficit is expected to exceed 4 billion yuan this year. The deficit results mostly from high consumption of materials and energy, low quality of products, poor planning and faulty operation and management. Commercial and foreign trade enterprises, too, have incurred considerable losses due to poor operation and management. Overstocking of goods is quite serious in industrial and commercial enterprises. At present, more than 18 million tons of rolled steel are sitting in warehouses and the total value of machinery and electrical products in stock exceeds 58 billion yuan.

How well enterprises are operated an managed has a vital bearing on the stability and progress of state finance. The State Council has decided to consolidate the enterprises by stages and in groups over the next three years, demanding that adequate attention be given to the straightening out of financial affairs in the process. The latter aspect means improved financial management in enterprises, better groundwork, business accounting and a system of economic responsibility, all aimed at bringing order out of chaos, eliminating losses due to poor operation and management and minimizing overstocking and thus reducing loss and waste and improving economic results. All enterprises must in real earnest improve accounting, statistical, metrological and inspecting work, keep careful records of production and management, establish and improve the quota system for production and use of labour, integrate the assessment of enterprise performance according to fixed norms with the system of economic responsibility, and ensure punishments and rewards based on actual performance. In the course of instituting the system of economic responsibility and putting its financial affairs in order, the Capital Iron and Steel Company has apportioned its major economic norms among the departments, workshops, work groups and individuals concerned and linked this with income distribution so that "everybody has a share in fulfilling the various norms and the overall tasks of the enterprise." Thus the company has been able to increase income when production goes up and even when production is down. In Hunan Province, the food departments have annually purchased nearly 5 million tons of grain and 100,000 tons of edible oils over the past few years. Though the state purchase prices of farm and sideline products were greatly raised in 1979, these departments have increased their income, reduced loss and waste, cut down overstocking and minimized transport costs through improving their work and diversifying operations; as a result, they have reduced operational losses by 22 per cent, excluding price subsidies. This shows that it is possible for an enterprise to tap potantial, create more wealth for the state and lighten the state's burden by setting financial affairs to rights and improving the system of economic responsibility. This is of great practical significance for balancing state revenue and expenditure.

Third, we must work within our capability and properly handle the relation between national construction and improving the people's livelihood. Both aspects demand that we act in accordance with our capability, do nothing beyong our means and practise economy by meticulous calculation and strict budgeting. We must stick to the basic principle of "first, feed the people and second, built the country," giving consideration to both national construction and improvement of the people's livelihood rather than stressing one at the expense of the other. For quite a long period in the past, construction was over-emphasized to the neglect of the people's living standard. In recent years, the state has readjusted the ratio between accumulation and consumption and the people's standard of living has thus been raised significantly. This is absolutely necessary. In the years to come, we must continue to handle well the relation between socialist construction and improvement of the people's life. On the one hand, the state will continue to improve the people's material and cultural life step by step on the basis of expanded industrial and agricultural production and greater economic effectiveness. But we must not do this by cutting back funds for national construction, for that would diminish the funds indispensable for it and in turn, impair the fundamental and long-term interests of the people.

On the other hand, it is entirely necessary to increase investment in construction in a planned way now that there is a turn for the better in the financial and economic situation. But we must assuredly act according to our capability, enforce an overall balance and guarantee the needs of key projects. We must concentrate our limited funds and material resources on projects that are badly needed by national economic and social development and can yield quick results; we should refrain from rashly launching new projects and putting up establishments in order to ensure that minor projects do not squeeze out major ones and to prevent waste resulting from duplicate construction. This question warrants our attention when there are financial and economic difficulties and just as much when the financial and economic situation has improved. The 1983 plan for economic and social development and the 1983 state budget provide for both the necessary capital construction and improvement of the people's life. We must keep strictly to the plan and budget instead of attempting anything beyond our capability.

Fourth, we must take vigorous and sound measures to reform the financial and tax systems and step up financial legislation. As the economic readjustment and reform of the system of economic administration go deeper, reform of the financial and tax systems must proceed more speedily so that the two can go ahead in keeping with each other. New rules and regulations have to be drawn up in the light of the new developments and problems in our present financial and economic work. Take, for instance, the systems of setting up enterprise funds, allowing the enterprises to retain a portion of their profits and making them responsible for their own profits and losses. In the past few years of trial application, they have in general brought good results but some problems have also been revealed, so the experience should be summed up to introduce necessary modifications and improvements. This will help consolidate the system of economic responsibility in enterprises. As for taxation, we are going to introduce step-by-step changes to eliminate certain disharmonies between the present tax system and China's economic growth and so more actively use taxation as a lever in regulating income distribution. We will gradually introduce an income tax to replace a greater portion of the profits currently delivered to the state by state-owned enterprises. This will be a major reform. As regards the collective economy and the individual economy of the working people, the existing tax regulations will have to be revised in some cases and new regulations drawn up in others. In order to promote scientific and technological development, pave the way for technological advance and encourage the upgrading and updating of products and the improvement of their quality, the financial departments must not only properly solve the question of how to acquire funds needed for the trial manufacture of new products, but also work out without delay the necessary financial and tax policies and relevant rules and regulations. Besides, work on other aspects of financial legislation must be hastened so that we shall be able in the next few years to formulate and improve the basic statutes on finances, taxation and financial and accounting work.

Fifth, financial control should be tightened and financial and economic discipline strictly enforced. Over the past few years, we have devoted much effort to education in the need to observe financial and economic discipline. This has improved to a certain extent the situation where financial control was not strict enough and financial and economic discipline was lax.

However, quite a few problems still remain. The State Council organized a general check-up on the financial work of state enterprises in the winter of 1981 and the spring of 1982. This exposed rather serious problems existing to varying degrees in many units, such as general chaos in bookkeeping, false itemization of accounts, unjustified additions to production costs, misuse of specified funds and retention and misappropriation of profits that should have been state revenue. Statistics up to the end of July 1982 show that as much as 4.5 billion yuan was involved in various cases of breaches of financial and economic discipline in the past two years. Of the total, retrievable state revenue amounted to 2.1 billion yuan, most of which was recovered some time in 1981 and 1982. The drive launched this year to crack down on serious criminal activities in the economic field has brought to light violations of state policies and decrees and financial rules and regulations by some localities, departments and enterprises which drew up false accounts, fabricated production costs and final accounts, misused state funds, set up their own "treasuries" for no legitimate reasons and had illegal dealings in foreign currencies; a few had gone so far as to appropriate public property for their own advantage and squandered state funds. All these acts are intolerable, for they run counter to the interests of socialist construction, and we can in no way allow them to remain unchecked. The lessons drawn from some cases show that slackened control and lax discipline in the financial and economic fields not only cause excessive decentralization and waste in the use of huge state funds but also leave loopholes for criminals who engage in graft, embezzlement, speculation, profiteering and smuggling. We must, therefore, tighten financial control and strictly enforce financial and economic regulations as part of our effort to bring about a fundamental turn for the better in the financial and economic situation, in standards of social conduct and in party style. Leading comrades at the various levels should set an example in personally tackling this problem, and they should urge all departments concerned to go about this work conscientiously and must not regard it as the concern solely of the financial and economic departments. To enforce the law and state discipline, the following cases must be resolutely dealt with whenever they occur, with all the funds involved retrieved in full: embezzlement, mis-appropriation or withholding of state revenue; indiscriminate additions to production costs, retention of an excessive share of profits and dishonest acquisition and misuse of funds in violation of state regulations; unauthorized reduction or remission of taxes, evasion or default of tax payments, abuse in the granting of loans, seizure of public property for one's own unit, use of budgeted funds for extra-budgetary purposes, and changing enterprises under ownership by the whole people into those under collective ownership. Due punishment should be meted out in serious cases. Personnel in charge of projects undertaken with state funds or other financial allocations will be held responsible if the economic results are not up to the mark set by the relevant plans or serious losses and waste are incurred. They should not ask for state funds and do not care what returns such funds may bring. The leading bodies and leading personnel at all levels, in particular, are responsible for strengthening financial and economic discipline. Leading personnel are expected to play an exemplary role in abiding by state laws and decrees and educate cadres to observe financial and economic rules and regulations. It is impermissible to violate laws knowingly, show contempt for them, refrain from punishing law-breakers, and to tolerate or connive at their crimes.

Fellow deputies, the present political and economic situation in our country is excellent, and the entire people are conscientiously carrying out the tasks set by the Twelfth National Congress of the Chinese Communist Party. Although there may be obstacles of one kind or another on our way forward, we shall, under the leadership of the Communist Party and the people's government, be able to overcome all difficulties by relying on the concerted efforts of the people of all nationalities. We must co-ordinate all our efforts, work with a will and in unison so as to fulfil the 1983 state budget and bring about a fundamental turn for the better in our financial and economic situation.

DENG XIAOPING MEETS TWO PROFESSORS FROM TAIWAN

[Text] Beijing, December 14 (XINHUA) -- Deng Xiaoping had a cordial meeting here today with two professors from Taiwan who have returned to settle on the mainland.

Ma Bi (Maa Bih), former director of the monthly POLITICAL REVIEW in Taiwan, came back to the mainland last year, and Fan Shoukang, former professor at Taiwan University and curator of its library, returned from the United States in April this year.

Both were elected to the Standing Committee of the National Committee of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference last week.

Speaking in the capacity of chairman of the C.P.P.C.C. National Committee, Deng Xiaoping said that sooner or later Taiwan would return to the embrace of the motherland and the country would be reunified. The lead taken by the two professors would produce repercussions, he said.

Deng Xiaoping encouraged Ma Bi and Fan Shoukang to continue contributing their share to the reunification of the country including Taiwan.

Ma and Fan spoke of their joy at the growing prosperity of the motherland they had witnessed since their return and pledged themselves to do their utmost for the country's reunification and socialist modernization.

Present were Hu Yuzhi and Dong Qiwu, vice-chairmen of the C.P.P.C.C. National Committee, and Fan Lenian, son of Fan Shoukang and a specialist in water conservancy who returned from the United States in 1980, and his wife Wang Qiaosheng.

After the meeting, the guests joined the hosts at a luncheon in the Great Hall of the People.

FURTHER COVERAGE OF FIFTH SESSION OF FIFTH CPPCC

CPPCC Constitution

OW122119 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1425 GMT 11 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, 11 Dec (XINHUA) -- Constitution of the CPPCC (adopted by the Fifth Session of the Fifth National Committee of the CPPCC on 11 December 1982)

General Program

During the protracted course of revolution and construction, the Chinese people have developed the broadest patriotic united front, which is led by the CPC and participated in by various democratic parties, nonparty democratics, mass organizations, personages of minority nationalities and patriotic personages of all circles, and which embraces all socialist workers and patriots who support socialism, or who support the reunification of the motherland, including our compatriots in Taiwan, Hong Kong and Macao, and Chinese nationals residing abroad.

The CPPCC is a patriotic united front organization of the Chinese people. In September 1949, the first plenary session of the CPPCC, exercising the functions of the NPC in an acting capacity and representing the will of the whole nation, declared the founding of the PRC, thus giving play to its important historical role. Following the First NPC in 1954, the CPPCC made important contributions by continuing to do a great deal of work in the state's political life and in social life as well as in promoting friendship with foreign countries. In the future, the CPPCC will continue to play its important part in intensifying socialist modernization, in achieving the reunification of the motherland, including Taiwan, and in struggling against hegemonism and safeguarding world peace.

Under the leadership of the CPC, Chinese people of all nationalities have eradicated the exploitative system and established the socialist system. Fundamental changes have taken place with regard to the classes in Chinese society. The worker-peasant alliance has been more consolidated. The intellectuals, like the workers and peasants, have become a force upon which socialist undertakings rely. Most of those who used to belong to the exploitative classes have become laborers who earn their own living. All democratic parties, which have advanced, gone through tests and made important contributions together with the CPC in the course of people's revolution and construction, have become political alliances of those parts of the socialist workers and the patriots supporting socialism they keep in touch with, and they are playing an increasingly important part. People of all nationalities in the countries have developed a national relationship marked by unity, fraternity and mutual assistance. Patriots with religious beliefs have taken an active part in the motherland's socialist construction. Our compatriots in Taiwan, Hong Kong and Macao and our overseas Chinese ardently love their motherland, support the reunification of the motherland and support the country's modernization. Under the new historical period, our country's patriotic united front has an even stronger vitality. It is still an important magic weapon to unite the Chinese people to struggle, and to construct and reunify our motherland, and it will be further consolidated and developed.

Now that the exploitative classes have been eliminated as such, class struggle no longer constitutes a principal contradiction in our society. But owing to domestic factors and international influence, the Chinese people's struggle against the hostile forces at home and abroad will still be protracted, and class struggle will continue to exist within certain limits for a long time.

The principal contradictions our country faces are the contradictions between the people's increasing material and cultural needs and backward social production. The general task of the Chinese people of all nationalities in the new historical period is to rely on our own efforts and work hard to achieve, step by step, the modernization of our industry, agriculture, national defense and science and technology and to make China a culturally advanced and highly democratic socialist country. The CPPCC must, on the political basis of ardently loving the PRC and supporting the leadership of the CPC and the socialist cause, do its utmost to further consolidate and develop the patriotic united front, bring all positive factors into play, unite with all the forces that can be united, and work with one mind and with concerted efforts to maintain and develop the political situation of stability and unity, enhance the building of a socialist democracy and legal system and strive to create a new situation of socialist modernization and realize the general task of the Chinese people of all nationalities.

The CPPCC is an important form of fostering socialist democracy in our country's political life. In accordance with the CPC's policy of "long-term coexistence and mutual supervision" and the principle of "treating each other with all sincerity and sharing weal and woe" with all democratic parties and nonparty persons, the CPPCC will carry out political consultations on the state's cardinal policies and the important issues of the people's livelihood, and will, through making proposals and criticisms, bring its democratic supervisory role into play.

The PRC Constitution is the fundamental guiding principle for all the activities of the CPPCC.

Chapter One: General Principles of Work

Television Covers Closing

HK140232 [Editorial Report] Beijing Domestic Television Service in Mandarin at 1100 GMT on 11 December carries at the beginning of the evening's newscast a 10.5-minute filmed report on the 11 December closing session of the Fifth Session of the Fifth CPPCC National Committee which is being held in the main auditorium of the Great Hall of the People in Beijing.

The film opens with several long shots of many people sitting in the hall's auditorium and on the rostrum on the afternoon of 11 December. There is then a close-up shot of Deng Xiaoping, who is shown looking off-camera in front of him and is then seen looking and smiling at and nodding to a person walking behind him on the rostrum. This person's face is not shown. As Deng is shown in this close-up shot, the announcer in the voice-over says: "Attending the session's closing ceremony this afternoon are Deng Xiaoping, chairman of the CPPCC National Committee; and Ulanhu, Liu Lantao, Lu Dingyi, Li Weihan, Xu Deheng, Wang Shoudao, Pagbalha Geleg Namgya, Zhuang Xiquan, Hu Ziang, Rong Yiren, Hu Yuzhi, He Changgong, Cheng Zhihua, Yang Xiufeng, Bao Erhan, Zhou Peiyuan, Qian Changzhao and Dong Qiwu, vice chairmen of the CPPCC National Committee."

The close-up shot of Deng is followed by several medium shots of the aforementioned CPPCC National Committee vice chairmen sitting in the front row of the rostrum. During these shots, NPC Standing Committee Vice Chairmen Hu Juewen, Shi Liang and Banqen Erdini Qoigyi Gyancan are shown sitting in the second row of the rostrum.

The film then has a long shot of the rostrum showing the emblem of the CPPCC hanging on the heavy curtain at the back of the rostrum. The emblem is flanked by 10 red flags. This is followed by another close-up shot of Deng Xiaoping, who is seen addressing the closing session. During this shot, which lasts 1 minute, Deng is seen and heard saying: "The Fifth Session of the Fifth CPPCC National Committee had 2,054 people. It had a total of 2,054 members. (Of them), 63 died of illness. Two new members have been elected during this session. Now we have a total of 1,993 members. A total of 1,671 members checked in at the session. A total of 1,464 members are present at today's meeting. There are six items on the agenda of today's meeting. We now ask Vice Chairman Ulanhu to preside over and carry out the agenda."

After Deng is seen and heard saying this, the camera pans to show Ulanhu (wearing glasses) in a close-up shot, sitting on the left-hand side of Deng Xiaoping in the first row of the rostrum. During this shot, which lasts more that 30 seconds, Ulanhu is seen and heard saying: "Now let us come to the first item on the agenda, which is endorsing the CPPCC constitution. All our members have discussed the draft constitution in groups. It has been revised in accordance with suggestions made by our members. It has also been examined and approved at the 22d meeting of the Standing Committee of the CPPCC National Committee. The draft constitution is now submitted to this session for examination and approval."

Next, the film gives a long shot of many CPPCC leaders raising their hands on the rostrum. At this point, the announcer is heard saying that the session has adopted the constitution. This long shot is followed by another long shot of many CPPCC National Committee members raising their hands in the auditorium. The camera then cuts to show many participating members in medium and long shots. Next the camera pans to show Deng Xiaoping and many CPPCC leaders raising their hands on the rostrum and the announcer is heard saying that the session has adopted the resolution on the CPPCC constitution. During this shot, CPPCC National Committee Vice Chairman Liu Lantao is seen sitting on the right-hand side of Deng Xiaoping, and Deng is seen sitting at the center of the front row on the rostrum. After this, many CPPCC National Committee members in the auditorium are shown in a medium shot raising their hands and the announcer says in the voice-over that the session has adopted its "political resolution" on implementing the PRC Constitution and fulfilling the Sixth 5-Year Plan in an all-round way. Next, the announcer is heard reading a summary of the resolution and the film has several medium shots of many CPPCC National Committee members sitting in the auditorium and some lesser CPPCC leaders sitting on the rostrum. During these shots, Huang Zhicheng (in PLA uniform), a newly-elected CPPCC National Committee member and former Taiwan air force pilot, is seen reading a paper in the auditorium.

The camera then pans to show Deng Xiaoping, Ulanhu, Liu Lantao and other CPPCC leaders on the rostrum raising their hands to adopt the resolution endorsing the report on the work of the Standing Committee of the CPPCC National Committee. Many CPPCC National Committee members in the auditorium are then seen raising their hands twice to adopt the report made by the motions committee on the examination of motions and the resolution ratifying the report made by the motions committee, and to elect Ma Bi and Fan Shoukang Standing Committee members of the CPPCC National Committee. This segment ends with a long shot of many people applauding in the auditorium.

The following segment begins with a medium shot of Ulanhu who is seen and heard reading his closing speech. During this segment, Deng Xiaoping is seen listening to Ulanhu's speech; Banqen Erdini Qoigyi Gyancan is seen sitting behind Deng Xiaoping in the second row on the rostrum; and Lu Dingyi and Xu Deheng are seen listening to the speech in the front row on the rostrum. The camera then pans in a close-up shot to show Ulanhu delivering his speech. This shot is followed by several medium and long shots of many CPPCC leaders sitting on the rostrum and listening to the Ulanhu's speech, and of many CPPCC National Committee members sitting in the auditorium and listening to the speech.

During these shots, the announcer is heard reading excerpts of the speech. When the announcer finishes reading excerpts of Ulanhu's speech, the film gives a medium shot of some CPPCC National Committee members applauding in the auditorium and a long shot of CPPCC leaders applauding on the rostrum.

Next the camera pans to show Deng Xiaoping in a close-up shot addressing the session. During this shot, Deng is seen and heard saying: "We have completed the program for today's session. I now declare that the Fifth Session of the Fifth CPPCC National Committee has come to a successful close."

After saying this, Deng is seen applauding and is then seen and heard asking all those present to rise and sing the national anthem. When Deng is seen rising from his chair, a female attendant is seen pulling Deng's chair backward and then pulling Ulanhu's chair backward. At this point, two attendants are seen trying to assist CPPCC National Committee Vice Chairman Zhuang Xiquan in rising from his chair in the front row of the rostrum. During the singing of the national anthem, the film gives a medium shot of Deng Xiaoping, Ulanhu, Liu Lantao and other CPPCC leaders standing on the rostrum. During this shot, a female attendant is seen standing behind Ulanhu and Zhuang Xiquan is seen standing and supported by two male attendants.

The film then gives a medium shot of many people standing in the auditorium and a close-up shot of the emblem of the CPPCC hanging on the heavy curtain at the back of the rostrum. There is then a long shot of many CPPCC leaders standing on the rostrum. During this shot, a man is seen standing on the rostrum, facing the auditorium and leading the singing of the national anthem. The filmed report then ends with a long shot of many people standing in the auditorium.

[Newsletter by reporter Wang Yongan [3769 3057 1344]: "The Lofty Duties of CPC Members -- On the Speech Delivered by NPC Deputy Deng Liqun"]

[Text] "The new constitution and Premier Zhao Ziyang's report very clearly define the construction of socialist spiritual civilization, and the core of this construction is communist ideology. During the recent period, all circles have done satisfactory work in the publication of and education in communist ideology, but they have indeed also brought up quite a few problems that we should continue to study. I am going to give my personal opinions on some of the problems related to the theory and policies in order to discuss them with the comrades."

This is the opening passage of the speech of Deng Liqun, secretary of the CPC Central Secretariat and director of the Propaganda Department of the CPC Central Committee, at the fifth group meeting of the Shanghai delegation. These words attracted the attention of everybody and many people took out their notebooks. In the brightly-lit and tidy meeting room, laughter broke out time and again.

Hesitating Outside the Door or Already Inside the Building

A viewpoint has recently emerged that our carrying out of the socialist construction and the series of line, principles and policies, including the strategic goal for us to attain at the end of this century that we have formulated, are but the lowest program of the CPC and the Chinese people.

Concerning this viewpoint, Deng Liqun said, "although this is a problem of wording, it touches on a problem of principle, this is, whether we can correctly summarize and reflect the objective process of our socialist society's evolution. Chairman Mao once said that China's communist movement can be divided into two chapters: the democratic revolution and the socialist revolution. The democratic revolution is our party's lowest program while the final realization of communism through the socialist revolution is our party's highest program. Now the program of democratic revolution, that is, the lowest program, has long been realized and the socialist transformation of the private ownership of the means of production has long been completed. At present, we have entered a new historical period and our tasks are to build a modern socialist country with a high degree of civilization and democracy. Our progress has already pushed us into the stage of realizing the party's highest program, therefore, we will create confusion if we say that our current program is another low program. Marxist theory upholds that a socialist society does not itself constitute an independent society. It is inappropriate to call the general task for the present state the lowest program."

At this point, Comrade Deng Liqun lighted a cigarette and continued to expound to the people that "during the recent period, we criticized the idea that 'communism is a vague illusion." Some comrades have changed the wording of this idea and say that what they mean is that it is quite hopeless to realize the higher stage of communism. True, the realization of the higher stage of communism requires the struggle of several generations of people, but we must admit that we have already entered the initial stage of communism. If we regard communism as a building, we have already entered the building instead of hesitating outside the door. Recently, I visited a grand mansion that has nine inner doors. As you enter one courtyard, you find another courtyard inside that one. There is a long distance between the outermost door and the innermost courtyard and one has to go over this long distance before one comes to the main hall. However, being inside of the outermost door and being outside it are essentially different. Is there any communist factor in the initial stage of communism? Yes, there is. Exemplary heroes such as Luo Jianfu and Jiang Zhuying who emerged on various fronts shone with the radiance of communism. A clear understanding of the stage we are in is of great significance in heightening the awareness of our party members and strengthening their confidence in communism."

We Should Not Have a Hired Hand Attitude Toward Our Own Country

In a slow and sonorous tone, Comrade Deng Liqun shifted the topic of his speech to the problem related to distribution according to labor and the communist labor attitude. He said, "distribution according to labor is a principle of socialism. Because at the socialist stage, the level of the development of the productive force only allows the members of society to carry out exchange on the basis of an equal amount of labor, and the income of a laborer as an individual can only be related to the amount and quality of the labor he has contributed to society. Only at the higher stage of communism can the income of a laborer as an individual be disconnected from his labor.

We communists have carried out prolonged and unremitting struggle for the actual implementation of the principle of distribution according to labor in our motherland and we must continue to fight for the realization of this principle. However, as CPC members, we should attain a more lofty realm of thought and must not be restricted by the principle of distribution according to labor. For we are the advanced elements of the proletariat and have to fight for communism. We must, as was advocated by Lenin, consciously and willingly carry out the labor that has not been assigned as quotas and that will not be paid for. On this problem, the Chinese people should be regarded as being the best in the whole world. They do not haggle much over their remuneration in working for their state and society. Any idea that denies this fact and finds fault with our cadres and peoples in this respect is untenable. Marx said that at the higher stage of communism, people will regard labor as a necessity of the first priority in their lives. Are there any party members in our society who have attained such a realm of thought? The answer is in the affirmative. Some comrades find it difficult for them to live if they do not work or study. They work day and night without rest and regard this is a pleasure. Has work not become a vital necessity for them? During the initial period after liberation, we already criticized those who adopted a hired hand attitude toward their own country. A CPC member should sternly criticize the hired hand attitude that upholds giving the amount of his labor according to his remuneration, because this attitude is diametrically opposed to his position as a member of the communist party.

Using Communist Ethics to Regulate Our Actions

Another viewpoint upholds that in a socialist society, we can only advocate and observe socialist morality instead of communist morality and oppose the advocation of the practice of communist morality in a socialist society. The justification for this viewpoint is that we will trespass the present stage if we regulate people's words and deeds with communist morality. How should we regard this viewpoint? "We have to approach this question by investigating the facts. Judging by the history of the communist movement, we can see that this viewpoint is untenable. Since our revolutionary teachers, the old generation of revolutionaries and the revolutionary martyrs have been able to exemplarily regulate their words and deeds with communist morality, how can it be a practice of trespassing the stage to advocate using communist morality to regulate the actions of communist party members and advanced elements at the initial stage of communist society?"

Deng Liqun went on to say that "we should not regard morality as something abstract and extremely abstruse. The attainment of morality requires self-training, but ultimately it cannot be separated from practice and has to be shown in people's behavior, that is, in their words and actions. To judge whether a communist party member has communist morality, we first of all look into the question of how he handles the relationship between his own personal interests and the party's interests."

Be On Our Guard Against the Corrosion of Capitalism

Deng Liqun explained to all the members of the group the following new situation: "The constitution stipulates that we should oppose corrosive capitalist ideology. This is very important. In implementing our policy of opening to the outside world and enlivening our economy at home, a party member should maintain his communist purity. Judging by the trend of development, some of the policies in our urban and rural areas will be made yet more flexible. What should a party member do to counter this situation? Shall we refuse to allow our party members to do what we allow non-party masses to do?"

After this, laughter broke out all over the meeting room. Sun Daguan, minister of geology and minerals, added that "Such things did happen in the northeast during the land reform and the result was very unpopular." Han Zheyi, secretary of the Shanghai Municipal CPC Committee said: "If our policies are divided into two parts, one for the masses and the other, a different one for our party members, the masses dare not to act according to our policies." Deng Liqun said after Han that, "the key issue lies in education and in the communist awareness of our party members. In order to support Marx's revolutionary activities and scientific research, Engels had to run an enterprise for his father -- against his will -- and become an agent. During the years of our party's underground struggle, some comrades had to run factories or shops acting as capitalists. This is depicted in the film 'The Man Who Deals with Devils.' The situation at present differs completely with the time of underground struggle, but one thing is common, in that whatever activities a party member is carrying out, he should maintain his communist purity. Never should he lower the standard he demands himself to live up to. In carrying out the flexible policies and the economic activities that are allowed by the policies, he should never put profit-making first or do anything against his conscience. On the contrary, he must always firmly remember that he is a party member and pursue the aim of becoming rich together with the masses. He should not conceal anything about his own business including the amount of profit that he has earned. He should pay taxes according to the law and even pay a larger amount of party membership dues. He should manage to spare a part of his income to help the households that have difficulties, to develop production. Should he, as a party member, do this? I think that he should. He can still be a fine party member as long as he strives to maintain his communist purity."

Pursue No Private Interests and Seek No Privileges

Then, a tall, thin old man came to the meeting room and silently sat down. This was Zhu Gongjian, 70, who at present holds the office of vice chairman of the Shanghai Municipal Committee of the China Democratic National Construction Association. He came specially to listen to Comrade Deng Liqun's speech. Deng Liqun said: "Since the CPC took over the political power over the whole country, many of our party members have been assigned leading posts. This is a serious test for us. Indeed, there have been some party members who have not been able to withstand this test and have fallen. When the CPC is in power, each of its members faces great danger. This danger is not so great and at least was not worth mentioning before our party came to power. However, since our party came to power, this danger has become a universal problem and must be carefully handled by every party member. What is this danger and problem? It is using the power of office to pursue personal interests and privilege. Most of the problems of what is called unhealthy party work style and failure to bring a radical turn for the better to party work style are closely related to this. No matter whether a party member is a high-level or low-level leader, he is not allowed to pursue private interests and privileges even if he is not a leader. We have many examples in this respect and we must draw lessons from these examples and thus be on our guard against this malpractice. However, we cannot agree to a kind of erroneous idea that upholds that since the Communist Party came to power, not only a few or a small number of its members but the party as a whole or most of its members will shift from being public servants into overlords who override the people and become their own opposites. In order to prevent bureaucracy and even degeneration and corruption, we should develop to the full inner-party democracy and people's democracy and supervise from the lower to the higher levels all the staff members of the party organizations and state organs. The stipulations on inner-party democracy and people's democracy in the new party constitution and the new constitution are more perfect than before.

"Every party member has the duty to ensure the implementation and enforcement of these stipulations. This is also a question of whether he has any faith in communism. The constitution stipulates that no organizations or individuals have any privilege that transcends the constitution and law. The party constitution stipulates that no party members are allowed to pursue any private interests or privileges. All our party members must personally act to implement these stipulations and conscientiously accept the supervision of the masses and the nonparty personalities. None of our party members are allowed to become exceptionary people who are isolated from the masses. Any party member who violates party discipline and state law must be severely punished."

Communist factors exist right among us.

Our country is vigorously forging ahead.

Comrade Deng Liqun declared his hope to the propaganda departments, saying: "Our articles and speeches are aimed at publicizing communist ideology, but the theory they expound cannot be understood or may sound dull to workers and peasants. Therefore, our propaganda workers are faced with the task of learning from the masses and in practice. They should not only learn from the masses for their practice in creating the new life, but also learn the new language that the masses create in their practice."

As soon as the speech ended, Comrade Zhu Gongjian went to Comrade Deng Liqun and shook hands with him, saying: "What you have said is full of insight. A communist must perform such lofty duties."

ZHANG AIPING ON NATIONAL DEFENSE CONSTRUCTION

HK101203 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 0747 GMT 9 Dec 82

["Zhang Aiping on the New Constitution" -- ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE headline]

[Text] Beijing, 9 Dec (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- According to a report by the JIEFANGJUN BAO Zhang Aiping, the minister of national defense, said: The new constitution is the general constitution for administering and safeguarding the country. The constitution entrusts to us the tasks of upholding the safety of the country and strengthening our national defence construction. This is not only the PLA's historic mission but also the glorious duty and sacred responsibility of the whole people.

The new minister of national defense has just returned to Beijing from his trip to inspect the PLA units in northeast and southeast China and other places. In the middle of the 1950's, he directed the first joint sea-land-air battle in the history of the PLA in which the Dachen Islands along the coast of Zhejiang were liberated at one stroke. He told the reporters of JIEFANGJUN BAO: We did not have much equipment for the liberation of the Dachen Islands. Now, there are new developments in the PLA's weapons and equipment and they are continuously developing. In order to meet the demands of a future war, logistic work of the units should be done in three aspects: 1) improve the scientific and technological knowledge of the logistics personnel; 2) improve and develop the logistic equipment with the development of the modern weapons and equipment; and 3) in normal times, it is necessary to cooperate with the industrial departments, communication departments, commercial departments and medical and public health departments in making preparations for wartime mobilization. In case war breaks out, it is necessary to speedily change to wartime logistic security.

Zhang Aiping said: In this world, peace can be won only with adequate preparations for fighting against aggression. There is an old saying: A state becomes powerful when its people are wealthy. However, conversely, without a powerful state, the people's wealth can be destroyed in the flames of war. Thus, we must continuously remind people to "be prepared for danger in times of peace."

Zhang Aiping held that: The results of economic construction are the material foundation for national defence construction and the actual strength of the national defence. In case of war, many departments should provide direct services for fighting the war. If economic construction is not managed well, strengthening the national defence construction is out of the question. Thus, in normal times, we must cut the expense of national defence as much as possible in order to ensure that economic construction can develop at a greater pace. With the development of the national economy, it is necessary to accordingly strengthen the national defence construction. On the other hand, in the economic construction, there is the question of being prepared for danger in times of peace and being prepared for war in normal times. It is necessary to pay attention to embedding the national defence potential in the national economy departments so as to ensure that when the need arises in a war, we can smoothly realize a swift shift in our wartime economic system.

PLA ISSUES CIRCULAR ON STUDYING NPC DOCUMENTS

OW120812 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0338 GMT 11 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, 11 Dec (XINHUA) -- The PLA General Political Department on 10 December issued a circular on studying documents of the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC, calling on all PLA units to organize the commanders and fighters to conscientiously study the new constitution, documents and resolutions adopted by the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC.

The circular points out: The Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC examined and adopted the Constitution of the PRC and several laws and examined and adopted the Sixth 5-Year Plan for economic and social development and certain other resolutions. This is a major event in the political life of the whole party, the whole army and people of all nationalities throughout the country. It is of great significance in promoting the successful development of our country's socialist modernization and for the revolutionization, modernization and regularization of our army.

The circular says: The new constitution is a great historical document, the best and most complete fundamental law of the state. It concentratedly embodies the party's correct stand, distinctly upholds the four fundamental principles, fully represents the common will and fundamental interests of the people of all nationalities throughout the country, is most authoritative in nature and has the supreme legal force. It is the general rule for running the country and maintaining stability in the new historical period. All units should educate every cadre and fighter to study well, implement and defend the new constitution, carry forward our army's fine traditions and strive to be models in studying, publicizing and implementing the new constitution.

The circular says: In studying Premier Zhao Ziyang's report on the Sixth 5-Year Plan, the emphasis should be placed on helping everyone to clearly see that the economic situation is getting better and better, clearly understand the fighting goals for the near future, see that the fulfillment of the Sixth 5-Year Plan will put the country's long-range economic construction plan on a safe and reliable basis and enhance confidence in quadrupling gross annual industrial and agricultural output value by the end of the century.

The circular calls on all units to closely combine the study of the documents of the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC with the in-depth study of the documents of the 12th party congress, combining the study of the constitution with the study of the section "Strive To Attain a High Level of Socialist Democracy" in Comrade Hu Yaobang's report on the Sixth 5-Year Plan with the section "Strive To Attain a High Level of Socialist Democracy" in Comrade Hu Yaobang's report, and the tasks entrusted to our army by the constitution with the goals for army-building set by the 12th party congress. Leading cadres and organs at various levels should take the lead in studying and train cadres to give guidance in the study. At the same time, leading cadres should go to the units to solve questions raised by cadres and fighters. In studying, it is necessary to clarify various kinds of confused ideas in light of people's actual thinking and continue to eliminate the influence of "left" ideas. The study of the constitution should be included in regular political education to help everyone cultivate the notion and habit of observing and defending the constitution. It is necessary to issue various means and forms of propaganda to make the main contents of the constitution known to every person. Cadres at various levels should also educate their children, relatives and friends to uphold and observe the constitution.

NATIONAL TRADE UNION MEETING OPENS 10 DEC

Ni Zhifu at Opening

OW101225 Beijing XINHUA in English 1130 GMT 10 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 10 (XINHUA) -- China's 18,000 workers' technical cooperation organizations in cities, industrial departments and large enterprises must base development on advanced technology, said Wang Chonglun, vice-president of the All-China Federation of Trade Unions. These organizations involve 400,000 activists and several million workers, he added. He made the remarks at a national trade union meeting that opened here today. Ni Zhifu, member of the Political Bureau of the Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party and president of the All-China Federation of Trade Unions, presided over the meeting.

During the four-day meeting, a national committee of Chinese workers' technical cooperation will be established and advanced collectives and individuals in technical and advanced collectives and individuals in technical cooperation and renovation will be commended. Attending the meeting are 150 delegates from across the country.

He said: "Cooperation activities have promoted technical improvement and resulted in enormous material results." In 1981, these organizations popularized 2,809 energy conservation items involving advanced technology, thus saving 39 million yuan on energy expenses. In 1980, the Beijing technical exchange station helped conserve 110 million kilowatt-hours of electricity, 45.8 percent of the total conserved in the city, by popularizing infrared heating technology and an aluminium silicate refractory fiber material. Cooperation activities were first sponsored by workers in Shenyang, capital of Liaoning Province, in the early 1960s. Groups of volunteers composed of skilled workers helped factories solve technical problems and produce equipment needed by the state. Later, technical cooperation organizations were set up in many large- and medium-sized cities, thus forming a network for solving technical problems, he said.

The vice-president said, "Professional and workers' technical forces must cooperate with each other to modernize the nation's science and technology and base enterprise production on advanced technology."

"This cooperation embodies the superiority of China's socialist system and helps rapidly change the technical backwardness of enterprises," he said. He urged cooperation organizations to center their work on enterprise technical transformation and improving their economic results, and provide technical services for medium-sized and small enterprises to help them solve technical problems. Citing an example, he said, the Shenyang technical cooperation organization since 1981 has helped enterprises solve key technical problems, thus improving the quality of their products. As a result, 17 medium-sized and small factories have made profits instead of suffering losses.

"In the future, technical exchange and popularization should center on energy conservation," the vice-president said. There is a great gap between China's advanced and backward levels in energy consumption, which indicates the country has great potential in energy conservation. For example, he said, the advanced coke consumption rate for making one ton of iron is only 386 kilograms, while the backward rate is above 700 kilograms. He called on workers' technical cooperation organizations to popularize successful energy-conserving technology in all industries. Of all young and middle-aged Chinese workers, more than 30 million need to have additional technical and general knowledge courses, the vice-president said. Workers' technical cooperation organizations should, therefore, run training courses and lectures for these workers. Trade unions' cultural centers and clubs should facilitate these activities, he said.

Cooperation Committee Set Up

[Text] Beijing, December 12 (XINHUA) -- A national committee was established here today to organize workers, technicians and cadres for technical cooperation. The Chinese Workers' Technical Cooperation Committee will coordinate the work of the more than 18,000 local cooperation organizations with several million workers taking part. The committee will publish data, books and journals about their results and train cadres to coordinate the cooperation work.

Wang Chonglun, vice-president of the All-China Federation of Trade Unions, was elected chairman of the committee. A national pace-setter in workers' technical innovations in the early 1950s, he devised a "universal fixture" and adopted improved working methods which enabled him to complete the quota of four years' work in 1953.

Local organizations, in cities, industrial departments and large factories throughout the country, help solve technical problems, make technical innovations and put forward rationalization proposals. They help popularize new technology, processes, materials and advanced operational methods. They also run training courses and help apply scientific research results.

Leaders Commend Advanced

[Text] Beijing, December 12 (XINHUA) — Peng Zhen and other party and state leaders today issued honor citations or certificates to 127 advanced groups and 290 individuals for their outstanding contributions to technical cooperation and innovations. The leaders present included Xi Zhongxun, Song Renqiong, Ni Zhifu and Hao Jianxiu.

The meeting, called by the All-China Federation of Trade Unions, inaugurated the Chinese Workers' Technical Cooperation Committee and commended advanced groups and individuals. The committee will coordinate the work of the 18,000 local workers' technical cooperation organizations throughout the nation.

The Beijing technical exchange center, one of the groups commended today, has run 1,200 training courses for 140,000 people in the past eight years, and sponsored 1,700 lectures for another 210,000 people. The center has helped Beijing's light, textile and food industries solve technical problems, thus cutting costs and consumption of raw materials, while raising product quality. The center helped factories in Beijing's Xuanwu District reduce heat-treatment workshops from 67 to 24, saving more than 10 million kilowatt-hours of electricity each year. The center exchanged experience in making bearings, dies and meters, welding, and in the foodstuffs and electronics industries with Japanese, French, British, U.S., Danish and Hongkong visitors.

Among the commended individuals is Liu Yunxu, vice-president and associate professor of the Jilin Engineering Institute. His improvement of quenching techniques has helped prevent environmental pollution and raise the quality of farm tools. Wang Tongshun, a veteran worker at the Chaoyang Heavy Machinery Plant in Liaoning Province, was also commended. He helped two production brigades and five teams repair farm machines and tools, and trained 26 apprentices, in 800 Sundays and holidays during the past 15 years.

PARTY, STATE LEADERS VISIT SCIENCE EXHIBITION

OW131717 Beijing XINHUA in English 1627 GMT 13 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 13 (XINHUA) -- Party and state leaders Wan Li, Song Renqiong, Zhang Tingfa and Yao Yilin this evening visited the science and research exhibition at the Nationalities Palace of Culture. Sponsored by the Chinese Academy of Sciences, the exhibition displays more than 2,000 major research achievements of the academy since 1978 in agriculture, industry, energy, natural resources, computer technology, lasers, semiconductors, remote sensing technology, nuclear technology, new materials, scientific instruments, and environmental protection. Accompanied by the academy's president, Lu Jiaxi, and vice-president, Yan Dongsheng, the party and state leaders viewed the exhibits and praised the academy for its contributions to the country's socialist modernization. They encouraged the scientists to work even harder to raise their research to a higher level. The exhibition has received more than 60,000 visitors since it opened November 27.

The Chinese Academy of Sciences, a comprehensive natural science research center, has 118 research institutes with more than 30,000 scientists and researchers.

FOREIGN MINISTRY HOLDS DIPLOMATIC RECEPTION

[Text] Beijing, December 10 (XINHUA) -- The Chinese Ministry of Foreign Affairs gave a reception here this evening for diplomatic envoys and their wives in Beijing. Present were Huang Hua, state councillor; Wu Xueqian, minister of foreign affairs; Yao Guang, Gong Dafei, Zhang Wenjin, Qian Qichen and Wen Yezhan, vice-ministers of the Foreign Ministry; Han Nianlong, Fu Hao, and He Ying, advisers to the Foreign Ministry. After the reception, guests and hosts listened to a concert by the Central Conservatory of Music.

CHINA POST HAILS U.S. ARMS SALES TO TAIWAN

OW120907 Taipei CHINA POST in English 8 Dec 82 p 4

[Editorial: "U.S. Arms Sales to ROC"]

[Text] After much controversy and speculation as to future U.S. policy toward the Republic of China, the latest Pentagon notification to the U.S. Congress that the administration intends to sell to the Republic of China U.S.$97 million worth of military vehicles constitutes a timely clarification. The U.S. Congress will have 30 days to indicate its disapproval if it chooses to do so, which is highly unlikely. If it does not object, then the deal will be consummated by the Executive Branch with the Republic of China.

As this is the first offer of the Reagan administration to sell the Republic of China defensive arms, it demonstrates that President Ronald Reagan is fulfilling his promises of continuing to supply the ROC with defensive weapons in accordance with the Taiwan Relations Act. Even though the vehicles offered to us are comparatively small in quantity and consist of only 164 M-113 armoured personnel carriers, 72 M-125 motor carriers and 31 command post vehicles, all of which will be used to equip the ROC's armoured units, yet they represent a U.S. expression of good will and friendship in this critical juncture of our relations.

The Pentagon notification will expire before the New Year's Eve, and presumably Congress will remain silent thereby indicating its approval. Thus it will be a new year's gift for the Republic of China which its 18 million people will greatly appreciate. We hope the Reagan administration will follow up with more arms sales next year so as to greatly strengthen our defense to counter the Peking regime's threat of conquering the Republic of China.

Meantime, we should also strengthen our own defense capabilities by developing an independent defense industry without delay as Premier Sun Yun-hsuan has pointed out. We should rely on ourselves.

COSTA RICAN FIRST VICE PRESIDENT ARRIVES

OW111459 Taipei CNA in English 1409 GMT 10 Dec 82

[Text] Taipei, Dec 10 (CNA) — Alberto Fait Lizano, Costa Rican first vice president, stressed Friday that the Chinese people's diligence and patriotism are helping the Republic of China overcome many problems it is encountering, and the friendship between the two countries is flourishing, in part, due to these characteristics.

First Vice President Fait arrived in Taipei Friday for a six-day visit. In his statement delivered upon his arrival at the Chiang Kai-shek International Airport the vice president said, "The Republic of China has always shown a special friendship toward our country. The numerous bilateral agreements concerning technical and cultural cooperation, the invaluable agricultural, fishing and craftmanship counsel we have received are proof of this friendship."

"International trade constitutes an important means of tightening bonds between both our countries, and although our market and commercial usages differ, the possibility of extending trade is great," he said.

He believes that substantive relations between the two countries will further grow as the Costa Rican Government's policies will foster increased trade and financial cooperation.

UK'S LORD BELSTEAD HOLDS PRESS CONFERENCE 10 DEC

HK101446 Hong Kong Domestic Service in English 0800 GMT 10 Dec 82

[Excerpts] [Lord Belstead] Ladies and gentlemen: First of all, I am sorry to have kept you all waiting for a moment or two, and thank you all very much indeed for coming to this press conference this afternoon. I am leaving Hong Kong in about 2 hours time and it follows a visit of 5 days. I realize that the visit of that length does not begin to do justice to such an important community, but at least I can say that I have been here for what, perhaps by my standard and maybe not by yours, is a working week. This is, as you may also know, the first time that I have been able to visit Hong Kong since I took responsibility for Hong Kong affairs so far as the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in London is concerned and that happened last April. I must say I wish that the visit I paid could have been made earlier. I certainly wish it could have been longer. Nevertheless, it has given me the chance to meet a great number of people. I have had valuable meetings with the governor, Sir Edward Youde, with our ambassador in Beijing, Sir Percy Cradock. I have also met of course members of the Executive Council and the unofficial members of the Legislative Council [UMELCO]. And I would have met with a wider range of representatives and officials, if possible. I assure you that I have noted very carefully the many expressions of views that I have received. The week that I have spent, however, has not been entirely devoted to just having meetings and talks. I have seen and heard something of Hong Kong's business activity.

One thing that has been obvious to me this week is the concern which is in everyone's mind about the future. Well, it has been immensely helpful to me to be able to hear the views of so many people on this vital question. For my part, I should like to reiterate her majesty's government's commitment to Hong Kong. When the prime minister visited Beijing in September, she and the Chinese leaders agreed to enter into talks with the common aim of maintaining the stability and prosperity of Hong Kong. You, indeed we, may have heard that phrase rather often recently. But don't underestimate its importance. We intend to make a success of the talks. There is no set timetable for them and as the prime minister indicated at the end of September, their contents have to remain confidential. But finally, ladies and gentlemen, just two things: first, it is the talks that count, and we really must not be prejudiced by anything which is said outside the talks; and secondly, we must seek a solution which is acceptable to the people of Hong Kong, to China and Britain. Now, we are supported in the knowledge that our relations with the People's Republic are excellent and indeed have never been better. And I cannot believe that with so much at stake for all three sides, we shall fail to find an outcome which is acceptable to all.

Ladies and gentlemen, that is the opening statement that I felt that I would like to make covering, I hope, the main aspects of my visit, and I will do my best to answer any of your observations or questions.

[Question] [Name indistinct] FINANCIAL TIMES. We last heard from the governor, Sir Edward Youde, at the beginning of October that the talks had begun.

What has been achieved in those talks since then?

[Answer] The talks, that I made clear in my opening statement, are being carried on through the diplomatic channel and they therefore are confidential. I am sorry to be unhelpful, but, I am afraid that is the answer that I have to give you.

[Question] You said that the contents must be confidential; can you tell us their form?

[Answer] No, I can't.

[Question] [Name indistinct] from the HONG KONG ECONOMIC JOURNAL. We are told a number of times by both the Hong Kong Government and also the British Government that the will and the interests of the people of Hong Kong (?have got to be represented) through them in Beijing and in the process of the negotiation over the future, but I would suggest that the best way of assuring that the British delegates do their job properly in Beijing is not by just restating history [word indistinct], but by, I suggest, getting at the (?point) about what has been, and what is, and what will be happening at the negotiating table, so we can judge this by ourselves whether the British delegates to the [word indistinct]. So, with this remark in mind I would like to know what actual proposals have been put forward by the British officials in Beijing?

[Answer] Well, there are two things that I would say. The first is that I am sorry, I must repeat that the talks are confidential, not because of some reasons put forward by any particular parties, but because the leaders of the PRC and the prime minister agreed that the talks should be carried on through the diplomatic channel, and that means confidential talks. But, it is highly reasonable that you should ask the sort of question you have, and it is because I am, as I have said, sensitive to what you have said, but I am particularly glad that I happen to be in Hong Kong here at the present time. [sentence as heard] The reason I am here is that I have got the general responsibility for the relations between London and Hong Kong under the foreign secretary in London. But, I am particularly glad that I have been here at the moment because it has meant I and Sir Percy Cradock, our ambassador, have had the opportunity to meet LEGCO [Legislative Council], UMELCO and a great many other people besides.

[Question] Patrick [name indistinct] of Radio Hong Kong. How soon do you expect the Hong Kong people or the Legislative Council will hear about the form of the China-British talks of the Hong Kong future? How soon will you expect?

[Answer] As I say, I have been able during the last 5 days to hear expressions of views from a whole variety of people here in Hong Kong. This, I think, has been very valuable so far as the negotiations are concerned.

[Question] Who is negotiating on Britain's behalf?

[Answer] Sir Percy Cradock.

[Question] (?Only him)?

[Answer] Well, Sir Percy Cradock is responsible for the talks being carried on through the diplomatic channel.

[Question] Will he be supplemented by other people as the talks develop?

[Answer] What particularly do you have in mind?

[Question] Well, presumably the governor can be drawn in at some stage?

[Answer] This, I think this would be highly desirable.

[Question] [Name indistinct] the prime minister and the Hong Kong Government have repeatedly said that the Sino-British talks on the future of Hong Kong should be kept secret and the leaders, the Chinese officials, have talked frequently on this subject. So, in so doing, is that in fact [words indistinct] also contradictory to the joint statement which was issued after Mrs Thatcher's visit to Beijing?

[Answer] I don't think that anything which we have heard since the prime minister's visit has in anyway contradicted the joint statement which was made at the end of her visit to Beijing.

[Question] My question is this. Since both the governments have declared that the talks should be kept confidential, recently, the Chinese officials have said frequently something. In so doing, will that affect the talks?

[Answer] I take your point. But, I repeat what I said at the beginning of the statement I made: I do hope that the people won't be prejudiced by what they hear said outside the actual negotiations.

[Question] M.L. Ng from radio and television Hong Kong. In general, do you feel there is a need to open up more channels to reflect public opinion on the future of Hong Kong?

[Answer] Well, there is, as I say, I now realize at the end of 5 days, a network of lines of communications here in Hong Kong. I have endeavored to make use of that network as the representative of her majesty's government to listen and, of course, Sir Percy Cradock has been here at the same time. I would have thought that we were hearing loud and clear what it is the people of Hong Kong wish to say.

[Question] We have reports suggesting that Hong Kong will become a special administrative zone to be administered by its own people. Do you regard this proposal acceptable to her majesty's government and the people of Hong Kong?

[Answer] It is a good question because, of course, it is what people are thinking about and wondering about. But it falls precisely into the slot of me asking people not to be prejudiced by what is said outside the talks. And it is not something which has come from out of the talks.

[Question] Will that be considered?

[Answer] Well, that is a matter for the negotiators.

[Question] [Name indistinct] It has been suggested that the talks may be concluded within a time frame of about a year, which would coincide with when Mrs Thatcher has to go to the country again. Is that a sort of reasonable suggestion?

[Answer] I must say if a minister in the government is to suggest on behalf of his prime minister when a general election is going to take place, I should think probably that minister's head will probably be chopped off. Mine certainly would be. I have no idea when a general election is going to take place in Britain and I don't think, if I may say so, that the premise of your question is very sound.

[Question] Ian Whitely, Asia television. Now, back to the point about statements from China. People here, of course, are all [words indistinct] indications of what is going on. Do you think that the statements coming out from China are not important and not true? How should people react to these statements?

[Answer] I have not said either of those things. I simply said that statements made outside the negotiations really should not prejudice people in their own anticipation of what the negotiations will achieve.

[Question] [Words indistinct]

[Answer] Precisely why I stressed it is the negotiations which count. The people should keep their eyes on the (?board), remain steady and wait for news from the negotiations. Not easy, I know.

[Question] Philip [name indistinct], FAR EASTERN ECONOMIC REVIEW. Have there actually been face to face talks between Sir Percy Cradock and senior Chinese officials and, if so, have these talks been about (?substantive) issues or merely about the form with which the negotiations would take place?

[Answer] Again, forgive me. I am sorry, I am going over the same ground again. I can't start saying whether substantive issues have been discussed because we are talking about the negotiations through the diplomatic channel. They are taking place, they are continuing.

[Question] Have there been actual talks, or have there merely been exchanges of...

[Answer] I repeat, they are taking place and they are continuing.

[Question] [Words indistinct] Who represents China in the negotiations?

[Answer] This is a matter of course for the Chinese Government.

[Question] [Words indistinct] Sir, could you tell us what your impression is of what the people of Hong Kong want?

[Answer] I think from what I have been told that the people of Hong Kong want to be able to continue to live their lives in the way that they choose, in freedom and in peace.

[Question] Well, will you take part in the negotiations in the future?

[Answer] Well, this is a matter of course as to who takes part in the negotiations for consideration. At the moment, we are quite open about it through the diplomatic channel, and Sir Percy Cradock is conducting them and the British Government have full confidence in Sir Percy.

[Question] [Words indistinct] I would like to know whether any Hong Kong representative will be included in the negotiations?

[Answer] Well, here again, as I say, this is a matter for consideration, and obviously what the future holds when you are conducting talks through the diplomatic channel is something which I would not wish to expand on. What I have done for my part as a representative for the British Government is to leave no stone unturned to consult with LEGCO and UMELCO, and I am very glad I have had the opportunity to do so.

[Question] John [name indistinct], SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST. The prime minister went on public record during the visit here saying the British case would be argued from the basis of the three treaties of the 19th century. Can you categorically state that there has been no change in that approach on the part of the British Government?

[Answer] Well, I have nothing further to say about that particular question other than what has been said before. [Words indistinct] in some detail, but, I would just like to emphasize in this connection, what we are doing in the negotiations is looking to the future of Hong Kong.

[Question] [Words indistinct] MING PAO. Do you think that the present social system, the freedom we enjoy, the peace and lifestyle at this moment is the main factor to maintain the prosperity and stability of Hong Kong?

[Answer] I think that what I have observed, what I have been told and from what I have concluded that all that has been achieved by the people of Hong Kong depends upon the fact that the people of Hong Kong are free to go about their lives as they wish in peace. [passage indistinct]

[Question] [Name indistinct] HONG KONG ECONOMIC JOURNAL. [Words indistinct] prejudiced by anything outside the negotiations, do you mean really that what has been said by the Chinese officials in the media to Hong Kong merchants did not really, or had not been put forward by the Chinese officials in the negotiations in Beijing?

[Answer] I think that we ought to clear the ground now, I suppose I (?don't appear) rude to questioners, there really is nothing that I can say about the details of the negotiations. I really can't answer the question about the contents at all.

[Question] Australia Broadcasting Commission. Have you been told by anyone in Hong Kong that they would like the British to stay after 1997 and have they indicated for how long?

[Answer] The people who talked to me haven't started to embark upon that sort of detail.

[Question] They have not, they have not embarked on that sort of detail?

[Answer] I haven't been invited to do so. I have talked in more general terms.

[Question] They haven't volunteered such information or request?

[Answer] Well, what I mean is this: A great number of people have talked of this situation in general terms about this subject. And all of them without exception have used a particular word to me. And it is the word continuity. That is what people want. It is pretty natural when you are thinking about your families and your future.

[Question] [Name indistinct] TIMES OF INDIA. You started off by referring to a British (?signalling) system which [words indistinct] which judged by this press conference isn't working. Britain and China, in the absence of act of self-determination, Britain and China are determining the future of 5 million people in Hong Kong. From the point of view of those 5 million people, it is quite clear that the Chinese leaders are signalling whether they are talking about the negotiations or not. They are signalling what they think should be the future of Hong Kong. And in reply to this, the British Government, who is also determining the future of Hong Kong through these negotiations, is not (?signalling). Don't you think you could give a few more signals?

[Answer] A complicated question. [laughter] I will give you a very simple answer in return. What we want is something very much like a table which has got three legs. One leg is the future to be acceptable to the leadership in Beijing. The second leg is that the future should be acceptable to the British Parliament and the third leg of the table is that the future should be welcomed by and acceptable to the people of Hong Kong. All three legs are important because if one of those legs gives way, the table will give way as well.

[Question] (Stanley Cheung) from CENTRAL NEWS AGENCY. Once the talks between the British and Red China are held, do you think that the problem will lead to another crisis similar to that of the Falkland Islands?

[Answer] That is a hypothetical question and with the greatest of courtesy to you, sir, it is a question, therefore, which, I am afraid, I will not answer.

[Question] Can we go back to the table with three legs? [laughter] We know from what has been coming from Beijing, what Beijing wants [words indistinct]. We know from what people in Hong Kong say, what they have told you about continuity, what the people of Hong Kong want and what is acceptable to them. Can you now tell us what is acceptable to the Parliament of the United Kingdom?

[Answer] No, I can't, because the talks are going on through diplomatic channels and the negotiations, therefore...

[Question] The question, what is acceptable, what sort of solution would be acceptable to United Kingdom Parliament?

[Answer] Parliament will decide when a report has been made to Parliament.

[Question] So, we have to wait until Parliament has decided after the event whether or not one of those legs exists at all?

[Answer] I think that you have put the wrong cart behind the wrong horse. There is no difficulty about this at all. There are three legs to the table, but, in one particular case, it is true that the leg depends upon acceptability to a parliament in a democratic country. And I am proud that I belong to a country where the final decision is taken by people who are freely elected in parliament, and that is the Parliament in Britain. [words indistinct] I would have thought no trouble at all to try to see that we solve this difficult problem by finding a solution which is acceptable, I repeat, to the Chinese leadership, to the British Parliament and to the people of Hong Kong. Thank you very much, ladies and gentlemen.

WESTERN CHARACTERIZATION OF DENG 'RIDICULOUS'

["Special Feature" by Hsin Yu [2450 7183]: "Ridiculous Comments"]

[Text] Western Commentator's Impression of Deng Xiaoping

In a recent commentary on Beijing's newly drawn up constitution, a well-known Paris newspaper said: "The reformists have no choice but to make certain compromises. They have not expressly abandoned the principle of 'taking class struggle as the key link,' and there is some ambiguity on this question." Knowledgeable people say: This is a new product turned out from the old Western mold.

Either actuated by wishful thinking or hampered by metaphysical inertia, Western commentators have for a long time been invariably fond of portraying "iron man" Deng Xiaoping as so inclined to the right as to take lessons from Western politicians. In the past, what they commented on most was that Deng Xiaoping "opposed Mao" and carried out "de-emphasizing Mao," and portrayed his revival of the "double hundred" policy as similar to the liberalization of the West. In the last couple of years, they have said that he has been making compromises and concessions here and there without fully achieving his goal. For example, in the resolution on questions of party history last year and in the personnel arrangements made by the 12th party congress this year, they have all made this kind of assessment. The reason is the resolution on questions of party history failed to completely negate Mao Zedong and the 12th party congress kept such people as Hua Guofeng in the Central Committee. The present commentary of this Paris newspaper on the new constitution is probably from the same mold!

I can only say that this kind of assessment is extremely ridiculous. There is no harm in talking, but if we are just as idiotic, we could soon find ourselves becoming both deaf and blind. To understand the CPC and China, we should always pay attention to real facts.

The Political Philosophy of the CPC

The facts consist of, first, the words and deeds of the CPC leaders such as Deng Xiaoping and, second, the logic and philosophy they abide by.

What we first come into contact with is, of course, specific words and deeds. What is the actual attitude of Deng Xiaoping toward Mao Zedong? Evidently, he has boldly criticized and corrected the mistakes of Mao Zedong, or done away with superstitions and emancipated the mind, and in the last 5 years, he has largely restored order out of chaos in the legacy, which is full of leftist tendencies, left by Mao Zedong. At the same time, he has spared no efforts in protecting the image of Mao Zedong and the part of his thinking considered correct. According to my knowledge, since his reinstatement and up to the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, he has on more than 40 occasions defended Mao Zedong. As a result of his perseverance, the resolution on questions of party history was finally adopted without further damaging Mao Zedong and yet was able to correct his mistakes. On the question of dealing with people who have made mistakes but do not belong to the Lin Biao-Jiang Qing cliques, the situation is also fairly similar. The reason why Hua Guofeng and Wang Dongxing have not been dropped is precisely due to the personal advice of Deng Xiaoping and others. After the event, I heard people say that the vote they cast was in favor of that policy. This fact can only explain that Deng Xiaoping has achieved his goal!

The present CPC leading group is acting in accordance with their political philosophy. In short, this is "one divides into two" or "opposing one kind of tendency and at the same time guarding against another kind of tendency."

Removing "Taking Class Struggle as the Key Link"

In the new constitution, there is indeed still the mention of class struggle in a certain passage. However, the principle of "taking class struggle as the key link" has already been completely removed. Words affirming "the Great Cultural Revolution," affirming "continuing the revolution under the dictatorship of the proletariat" and repeatedly emphasizing class struggle in the old constitution have disappeared. Moreover, articles that have a coercive effect corresponding to the "key link," such as the right of the CPC to lead the country, the right of the CPC Central Committee to nominate the premier of the government and the right of the CPC chairman to command the armed forces, have all been canceled. On the contrary, it has again stipulated that "all citizens are equal before the law" and stressed that "no organization, including the CPC organization and its members, or individuals may enjoy the privilege of being above the constitution and the law." Moreover, citizens who enjoy the right to vote, amounting to 99.97 percent of 1,008 million people, have also become the "whole people." It should be perfectly clear that the "key link" of former days has completely vanished from the new constitution. Replacing the "key link" is the building of material civilization and spiritual civilization and the building of the new order of democracy and the legal system. If the "key link" means the basic and highest criterion that commands everything, then how can there be "compromise" between this "key link" and that "key link?"

The new constitution only deals with class struggle in a short paragraph of its preamble. Altogether there are two sentences, the first being the more important one: "The exploiting classes as such have been eliminated in our country. However, class struggle will continue to exist within certain limits for a time to come." The second sentence is the explanatory note and demands the corresponding phrase "exist within certain limits."

Deng Is Not the Person Favoring "Liberalization"

The words that merit most attention are "have been eliminated" and "within certain limits." They first basically negate "taking class struggle as the key link" and at the same time also negate the theory of "the dying out of class struggle."

Why do we say that this is a basic negation of the "key link?" The "key link" takes "the bourgeoisie still exist," and moreover, are very powerful even "inside the Communist Party" as its premise and foundation. This was also the start of the great curse suffered by the people of the country in the 10 years of internal disorder. The present constitution says that this is not in keeping with reality. And the reality is that they "have been eliminated." Does this not eradicate the premise and foundation of that "key link?" The second half of the sentence also very clearly says that class struggle is not found everywhere, and we cannot say that "there is still the danger of restoration." It only exists "within certain limits." Many existing contradictions do not constitute class struggle; therefore, we can no longer follow the "key link" and artificially broaden class struggle. However, there is no need for superfluous words. The new constitution still upholds the standpoint of class struggle.

This is another manifestation of the CPC political philosophy "one divides into two." The "one divides into two" on the question of class struggle in the new constitution provides a major profile and general outline of the activities of the CPC in the last 5 years. This is also why Deng Xiaoping enjoys such popular support among the people. On the one hand, it has rehabilitated millions of unjust, false and wrong cases repressed by the "key link" in the past, enabled most of the former landlords, rich peasants and capitalists to remove their label and acquire the right of "universal equality" and shifted the focus of work to the building of the four modernizations. On the other hand, it has opposed "liberalization" in the economic, political and cultural fields, and its vigorous enforcement of eliminating corruption and struggling against smuggling, swindling and other serious crimes has become one of the great events of 1982. Moreover, although the CPC has clearly pointed out that this hitting out at serious economic crimes does constitute class struggle, but regardless of how strong the emphasis, it has nevertheless abandoned the pattern of political campaign and adopted the method of doing things according to legal procedures; the life of most people on the mainland remains normal and they are not harassed. Furthermore, this struggle is in the final analysis subordinate to and in the service of the "key link" of building the four modernizations.

By "compromise," do they mean that such "reformists" as Deng Xiaoping, who were originally opposed to further emphasis on class struggle, have now been compelled to make a concession by keeping this passage in the new constitution? Isn't this kind of view ridiculous? This April Deng Xiaoping specially called on Hu Qiaomu and Deng Liqun. Who can say that what he discussed with them, including the passage of "opposing corruption" in his opening speech at the 12th party congress, was not his original intention or that he was not paying attention to class struggle?

I should also mention a historical fact. According to my recollection, this passage in the new constitution is precisely almost the exact words first put forward by Deng Xiaoping about 4 years ago. The only change is probably the deletion of the words that the stormy class struggle of the past is over. This minor deletion is irrelevant to the main theme. This has absolutely nothing to do with "compromise" on "taking class struggle as the key link," because the present wording has not in any way "obscured" or damaged Deng Xiaoping's original meaning. This deletion has obviously been made to make the words brief and to the point to suit the requirement of legal language, and it is purely a technical matter.

I think that if people want to know the real facts of the politics of the CPC and China, the best thing for them is still not to either intentionally or unintentionally forget the fact that "iron man" Deng Xiaoping is not a person favoring "liberalization" but a firm and devoted disciple of Marx. If they really intend to "obscure" this point, then it is almost tantamount to having no desire to understand the real facts surrounding him. If they have no desire to understand the real facts, they, of course, need not waste their energy and can do what they please.

HSIN WAN PAO ON RESPONSIBILITY SYSTEM FOR DAZHAI

HK131104 Hong Kong HSIN WAN PAO in Chinese 13 Dec 82 p 4

[Special dispatch: "Commune Members' Income Rises With the Introduction of the Responsibility System in Dazhai"]

[Text] Beijing, 13 Dec -- The slogan of "learning from Dazhai in agriculture" was put forth during the Great Cultural Revolution. How are things with the Dazhai brigade now?

Song Liying, a former female chairman of the Dazhai brigade, Xiyang County, Shanxi Province, and deputy secretary of the party branch, said: In 1980, Dazhai rectified its previous "leftist" mistakes and implemented the production responsibility system. It divided into three groups, with remuneration based on production. In the past 2 years, the commune members' income has risen and its industrial and sideline undertakings have developed.

Song Liying was preparing to go back to Dazhai after the conclusion of the NPC and CPPCC sessions. Before she left, she gave an interview to this reporter.

Song Liying is a female party member of the Dazhai brigade. She said that after a democratic election, Dazhai brought in a new leading group. Guo Fenglian, former secretary of the party branch of the brigade, was transferred to work with a fruit tree research institute in Yuci County, Shanxi. Jia Changsuo, a former deputy head of the brigade, was elected as secretary of the party branch. Of the three former deputy secretaries, only former deputy brigade head Liang Xialiang is a deputy secretary. Song Liying remains as a member of the party branch committee. Recently attending the NPC and the CPPCC sessions in Beijing were former deputies and committee members, including Guo Fenglian (NPC deputy), Jia Changsuo (CPPCC member and former party branch secretary and CYL secretary), Song Liying, and Chen Yonggui.

Song Liying said that all Dazhai knew before was how to cultivate the fields; it did not get involved with a diversified economy. Now, everyone realizes what should be done. Private plots have been allocated for each person. Everyone also raises pigs and rabbits. The daily income per person rose from the previous 1.50 yuan to 2.10 yuan last year. This year their income will increase further.

Song Liying said that Shanxi Province shows great concern for the Dazhai brigade. It recently helped the brigade build a small coal pit that added to commune members' income. Everyone at Dazhai is happy.

GEORGE SHULTZ CONTINUES TOUR OF WEST EUROPE

Talks With Italian Leaders

OW141207 Beijing XINHUA in English 0720 GMT 14 Dec 82

[Text] Rome, December 13 (XINHUA) -- Visiting U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz today met with Italian President Alessandro Pertini and Prime Minister Amintore Fanfani and had long talks with Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo. Shultz and the president discussed East-West relations and the Middle East problem.

At a banquet in honor of the U.S. secretary, Colombo said that while adhering to its defense commitments, NATO should take an active part in disarmament talks. The United States and Italy will continue to work together for a comprehensive solution to the Middle East problem, he declared. Colombo called for further coordination of the West's economic policies, including monetary policies and measures for structural reforms necessary for a revival of the world economy. He also criticized protectionism, saying it would only hamper the development of the world economy.

Shultz arrived here on December 11 and will fly to Paris to continue his six-nation European tour.

Meets Egypt's Mubarak in Rome

OW141203 Beijing XINHUA in English 0715 GMT 14 Dec 82

[Text] Rome, December 13 (XINHUA) -- Egyptian President Husni Mubarak, now on a European tour beginning today, held talks with Italian President Alessandro Pertini and Prime Minister Amintore Fanfani on Mid-East issues, particularly the Palestinian question and the withdrawal of all foreign troops from Lebanon. Egyptian Deputy Foreign Minister Usamah al-Baz told a news conference this afternoon that Egypt held that a return to normal of the Lebanese situation depends mainly on an early withdrawal of Israeli troops from that country, and no delay would be tolerated.

Mubarak also met with U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz here today in what he later described as "frank and constructive" talks on Mid-East issues.

The Egyptian president arrived here to address an International Agricultural Development Fund meeting and left for Bonn this afternoon.

Agricultural Subsidies Discussed

OW121942 Beijing XINHUA in English 1849 GMT 12 Dec 82

[Text] Brussels, December 12 (XINHUA) -- The European Economic Community (EEC) and the United States have agreed to hold talks early next month to try to prevent an all-out trade war over agricultural subsidies. But the United States still refused to rule out retaliation against the subsidies.

U.S. Agriculture Secretary John Block told reporters that "we leave that open; there is no decision on that at this time.

On the other hand, EEC Commission President Gaston Thorn said that Europe's common agriculture policy was not negotiable.

European Community countries have been subsidizing farmers heavily to stabilize prices at home and encourage export, to the dissatisfaction of the United States. In one of its counter-measures, the U.S. Government threatened to dump more than three billion dollars worth of American butter, cheese and milk on world markets. The prospect of a possible trade war between the two sides had prompted U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz and the U.S. secretaries of agriculture, treasury and commerce to come here for talks with EEC officials.

CHINA DAILY COMMENTS ON 'SUPERPOWER POLITICS'

["Opinion" column by CHINA DAILY commentator]

[Text] The eager feelers put out by and between the superpowers in the wake of the new leadership set-up in the Kremlin last month were for a time quite dazzling. They were ephemeral, however, and soon enough turned into ominous warnings and bellicose threats as is their wont.

Thus, Washington has decided that the signals from Moscow of willingness to improve relations with the West are not yet convincing.

Moscow, on its part, is accusing Washington of having launched an economic, political and ideological offensive against the Soviet Union.

Speaking for the proposed deployment of the MX missiles, U.S. President Ronald Reagan said it was to meet a relentless Soviet military buildup.

Soviet Defence Minister Dmitry Ustinov warned that if the U.S. started MX deployments, the Russians would respond by deploying a new intercontinental ballistic missile of the same class and in every way matching the MX.

U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz then argued that the Soviet Union had been developing such missiles and putting them into place and that "the issue for us is to match this strength and we will be determined to modernize."

It sounds just like the age-old puzzle of determining whether an original hen had laid the first egg or the first chicken had been hatched from an original egg.

Unchanged

One can only conclude again that superpower politics is a historical phenomenon, and the relationship between the superpowers does not change with the change in leadership of either. Their relationship is, by nature, that of confrontation and contest, however much one might wish otherwise.

In their pursuit of global domination, the superpowers contend on a worldwide scale with excessive military power. They will deal with each other from positions of strength. And they will seek military superiority over each other.

The never-ending armament race, purportedly to seek a strategic balance where from disarmament is to begin, has been going on since the days of the League of Nations, and it is characteristic of superpower relationship.

The talks on reducing intermediate range nuclear weapons have adjourned after 55 fruitless bargaining sessions in Geneva. The Americans refused to accept the Soviet nuclear "freeze" proposal, which they said would perpetuate Soviet superiority. The Russians rejected the American "zero option" plan, which they said was tantamount to unilateral Soviet disarmament.

The United States and its NATO allies have reaffirmed their plan to install 572 Pershing-2 and cruise missiles in Western Europe beginning late next year if the Geneva talks fail to produce agreement. To that, the Soviet Union has said it will respond effectively and promptly.

Hotbeds of War

One hundred and five thousand Soviet troops are still engaged in bloody war against Afghan freedom fighters after invading the neighbouring country three years ago. The Soviet-backed Vietnamese aggression on Democratic Kampuchea is entering its fourth year in January. With U.S. support and protection, Zionist Israelis are turning the Middle East into one of the most dangerous hotbeds of crisis.

After reaffirming its military commitments under the 1954 Manila Pact, the United States has announced the formation of a new central command in the Middle East, which is an expanded version of the defunct CENTO and reportedly covers 19 countries, including Iran and Afghanistan. Its announced purpose is to safeguard U.S. interests against any military threats in the region.

Soviet military leadership has called on its armed forces to double and treble their vigilance and enhance their combat capability and preparedness in view of a U.S. policy of an increasingly dangerous character.

Harsh reality has repeatedly demonstrated that superpower politics will not wither away of their own accord. The people of the world must make it their most important task to oppose superpower hegemony and safeguard world peace.

TRADE FRICTION BETWEEN JAPAN, EEC INTENSIFIES

OW121613 Beijing XINHUA in English 1555 GMT 12 Dec 82

[Text] Tokyo, December 12 (XINHUA) — The three-day trade talks between Japan and the European Economic Community (EEC) ended Saturday during which "neither side made any commitments," Japanese Foreign Ministry officials said. The Japanese Government thought it had been "sandwiched" between the United States and EEC in trade creating a difficult situation for Japan, the officials said.

During the meeting EEC delegation leader Raymond Phan Van Phi of France blamed the trade imbalance between the two sides on Japan, saying it is Japan's "torrential" exports strategy that caused confusion on European markets. Japan's trade surplus with the EEC totaled 12 billion U.S. dollars in 1981. EEC delegates demanded Japan further open its market to European goods and restrict exports to Europe to which Japan responded it will study measures to exereise self-restraint on exports to Western Europe. The EEC side welcomed Japan's attitude on the issue. However, the delegation considered Japan's response vague to EEC's demand to lower import tariffs on 81 commodity items.

Phan Van Phi told a news conference "what would be needed is not a piecemeal reduction in tariffs here and there, but something that would demonstrate in dramatic fashion, the political will of the Japanese Government to actually encourage importation of foreign goods." There is no sign that EEC's offensive against Japan will lessen because the economic depression is worsening with a total unemployment figure of 10 million in Europe.

Caught between the United States and EEC, Japan has its own difficulties. Japan's exports to Europe are decreasing. From January to September this year, Japan doubled its exports of video tape recorders over the same period last year, and exports of color television sets increased slightly. However, all other exports such as tool machinery, automobiles and television tubes decreased sharply. Exports of sound equipment earned less than the same period last year. On Japan's promise to restrain export, however, the local press is skeptical. ASAHI SHIMBUN called Japan's promise "a diplomatic attitude" attempting to shirk the spearhead of criticism for the time being. YOMIURI SHIMBUN advised the government to listen to the EEC to prevent the community from adopting trade protectionism. "Otherwise, Japan cannot avoid becoming an orphan among the Western countries," the paper said.

EEC Seeks Arbitration Panel

[Text] Brussels, December 14 (XINHUA) -- The European Community today decided to ask for the setting up of an international arbitration panel to try to force Japan to open its markets further to imports. EEC officials said the community had taken no decision on the timing of the request to be submitted to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) in Geneva, but it would be soon.

The GATT panel would have no judicial power, but if it decided in favor of community complaints it would have strong persuasive powers, EEC officials said. They noted Japan was not meeting the obligations under the GATT to open its markets fully to competition. In the first ten months of 1982, the EEC had a nearly 8 billion dollar deficit in trade with Japan which is expected to reach over 10 billion by the end of the year.

The ministers agreed to maintain statistical monitoring of certain Japanese products and allow member states to request the monitoring of other products. The Japanese know how to control themselves when they know they are being specifically watched, one official said.

The ministers also agreed today that the commission should press Japan to provide tangible assurances from 1983 onwards that "it was pursuing a policy of clearly defined and effective modification towards the community as a whole as regards sectors where Japanese exports to the community would cause significant problems," the official said.

The ministers discussed EEC trade restrictions with the Soviet Union which will run out at the end of the year. These restrictions on 58 Soviet export items were imposed in March in protest against the imposition of martial law in Poland.

The ministers also approved measures to cut production and set target prices for sales within the community in a bid to halt price-cutting.

INTERNATIONAL SYMPOSIUM ON RURAL ENERGY HELD

OW131304 Beijing XINHUA in English 1156 GMT 13 Dec 82

[Text] Guangzhou, December 13 (XINHUA) -- A five-day international symposium on rural energy, jointly sponsored by the Energy Department of the United Nations University and the Guangzhou Institute of Energy of the Chinese Academy of Sciences, closed last Friday in Guangzhou. Thirty energy experts from 14 countries including Algeria, Canada, China, Colombia, Egypt, France, India, Indonesia, Senegal and the United States attended the symposium. They presented 15 papers on the research and development of energy in rural areas and exchanged views on the relationship between rural energy on one hand and the rural production, life and environment on the other, and related matters.

During the symposium, foreign participants visited the Xinbu production bridge, Shunde County, Guangdong Province, as an example of the application of biogas and solar energy. Located in the middle of the Zhujiang valley, the brigade has an annual sunshine of 2,000 to 2,500 hours with a solar radiation of 110 kilocalories per square centimenter. It has built 235 methane generating pits and adopted solar energy water heaters, which helped the brigade obtain 70 to 80 percent of energy needed in daily life. In addition, the brigade in 1979 built a biogas electricity generating station with a capacity of 12 kilowatts. Besides using biogas for cooking and lighting, the brigade also uses biogas generating electricity for crushing fodder, irrigation and warming silkworm rooms, and the solar energy dryers to dry cocoons and dry and sterilize rice straws for mushroom cultivation.

Professor Maurice Levy, the director of the Energy Department of the United Nations University in Tokyo, said that the experience of the brigade, which helps to promote production and keep the agricultural ecological balance, can not only be popularized in China but should also be spread among the Third World countries in particular.

PRC, TAIWAN MEMBERS OF WORLD EQUESTRIAN BODY

OW090352 Beijing XINHUA in English 0259 GMT 9 Dec 82

[Text] Geneva, December 8 (XINHUA) -- The International Equestrian Federation (IEF) today decided to accept the Equestrian Association of the People's Republic of China as its member. The decision was made at an IEF congress being held in Geneva and attended by delegates of 64 IEF member associations including the Chinese Taibei Equestrian Association. The IEF has also decided that the equestrian association based in Taibei will be represented in the IEF under the name of "the Chinese Taibei Equestrian Association".

A delegate of the Equestrian Association of the People's Republic of China attended and addressed the IEF congress after the IEF resolution on the Chinese representation was adopted.

At today's meeting, the associations of Qatar, Cyprus and Pakistan were also admitted to the IEF.

KANG KEQING MEETS, FETES UNICEF GROUP 4 DEC

OW041645 Beijing XINHUA in English 1614 GMT 4 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 4 (XINHUA) -- Kong Keqing, vice-chairman of the National Committee of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference, president of the All-China Women's Federation and vice-chairman of the Chinese People's National Committee for Defence of Children, met and feted a UNICEF delegation from Arab and Middle East countries here this evening at the Great Hall of the People. Kang Keqing spoke about pre-school education and child care work in China and stressed the need for the Third World countries to meet and exchange their experiences in this field. Prabasi, representative of UNICEF to China, was present on both occasions.

The 8-member delegation includes officials of UNICEF and officials in charge of children's work from five Arab and Middle East countries. The delegation arrived here on Thursday on a study tour of China's pre-school education, child care and public health work. After a six-day stay in Beijing, the delegation will visit Kunming, Shanghai, Suzhou and Guangzhou.

ASIA, PACIFIC WATERSHED MANAGEMENT MEETING ENDS

OW101930 Beijing XINHUA in English 1831 GMT 10 Dec 82

[Text] Kathmandu, December 10 (XINHUA) -- The government meeting on watershed management for Asia and the Pacific ended its one-week session here today stressing cooperation in this field among developing countries in the region. The meeting was held under the joint auspices of the Government of Nepal, the Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO) and the U.N. Development Program (UNDP) with the participation of 15 countries -- Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Bhutan, China, Fiji, India, Indonesia, Malaysia, Nepal, Pakistan, the Philippines, Sri Lanka, Thailand, Western Samoa and the United States. France, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom, Federal Republic of Germany and some international organizations attended the meeting as observers.

A draft report endorsed at the closing session emphasized such areas for regional cooperation as implementation of field activities, promotion of people's participation in upland conservation programs and personnel training.

The main purpose of the meeting was to identify the main problems of watershed management in the region and encourage all institutions at the regional, sub-regional and country levels to establish practical channels of technical cooperation among the developing countries for improving watershed management. The meeting provided an opportunity for the participating countries to describe their watershed management problems and measures taken to solve them. The participants will begin a three-day study tour Saturday of the Phewa watershed management project in Nepal. The activities will end Dec. 13.

HOLDRIDGE REMARKS ON U.S.-PRC RELATIONS NOTED

OW141640 Beijing XINHUA in English 1615 GMT 14 Dec 82

[Text] New York, December 13 (XINHUA) -- U.S. Assistant Secretary of State for East Asian and Pacific Affairs John H. Holdridge said here today that "good relations with China has served our interests well over the past decade" but he admitted that differences existed between the two countries.

Speaking at an annual members luncheon of the National Committee on U.S.-China Relations, he said that "the volume and value of bilateral trade between our two countries has grown tremendously in the past few years."

A "strong and lasting" relationship with China is "vital to our long-term national security interests," he said.

The assistant secretary also said differences existed between the two countries on issues concerning the Middle East, Southern Africa and the Third World.

He said that "to put it bluntly, we take exception to Chinese references to us as 'hegemonists'."

On the August 17 Sino-U.S. joint communique, Holdridge arbitrarily related U.S. arms sales to Taiwan to the question of how Taiwan will return to its motherland, which is entirely China's internal affair.

He said the U.S. position on arms sales to Taiwan "is entirely consistent with the Taiwan Relations Act, which predicates U.S. arms sales to Taiwan on our judgment of Taiwan's military needs."

WANG BINGQIAN MEETS WITH VICE PRESIDENT BUSH

OW150908 Beijing XINHUA in English 0819 GMT 15 Dec 82

[Text] Washington, December 14 (XINHUA) -- U.S. Vice President George Bush met here today with Wang Bingqian, Chinese finance minister and leader of the Chinese delegation attending the third meeting of the China-U.S. Joint Economic Committee.

Present on the occasion were Chinese Ambassador Chai Zemin, deputy leaders of the Chinese delegation Gan Ziyu and Jia Shi.

Wang Bingqian also met today with Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige, U.S. trade representative William Brock and some senators and congressmen.

U.S. REJECTS SOVIET PROPOSAL ON ARMS REDUCTION

OW131543 Beijing XINHUA in English 1514 GMT 13 Dec 82

[Text] Washington, December 12 (XINHUA) -- The United States has rejected a Soviet proposal that the USSR cut the figure of its medium-range missiles by half in return for the shelving of U.S. deployment of 572 Pershing II and cruise missiles in Western Europe.

Government sources here said that the Soviet delegation attending the nuclear arms talks in Geneva had said that the USSR would reduce its medium-range missiles from the present number of 600 to 250 if the above-mentioned condition was satisfied.

State Department spokeswoman Anita Stockman said today that the Soviet proposal was "unacceptable." It aimed at violating the relations between the U.S. and its allies, she added.

She accused the Soviet Union of trying to gain a monopoly of nuclear missiles by blocking the deployment of U.S. weapons in Western Europe.

U.S. SPOKESMAN SAYS USSR SEEKS NUCLEAR MONOPOLY

OW141247 Beijing XINHUA in English 0751 GMT 14 Dec 82

[Text] Washington, December 13 (XINHUA) -- A U.S. State Department spokesman today accused the Soviet Union of seeking a monopoly on intermediate-range nuclear force (INF) in Europe.

The spokesman, Alan Romberg, said the Russians are continuing to seek "the total elimination of U.S. systems while retaining a powerful force of their own."

The accusation came in response to news reports that the Soviet Union has proposed reducing its INF by over 50 percent in exchange for the shelving of a U.S. plan to deploy 572 cruise and Pershing II missiles next year.

Romberg said the Russians "have not undertaken to destroy a single SS-20 (missile)." The Russians are only prepared to remove a certain number of these mobile systems from the European areas to some place farther to the east, he added.

The spokesman indicated the U.S. still holds to President Reagan's zero option proposal under which the Soviet Union dismantle all its INF missiles in exchange for the U.S. cancellation of its cruise and Pershing missiles deployment plan.

RENMIN RIBAO RAPS U.S. STAND ON PALESTINIANS

["International Jottings: by Guo Zhang [0948 4545]: "No Surprise"]

[Text] It is right and proper that things go back to their original owner. But the U.S. Government has other brilliant views.

According to reports, on 10 December the UN General Assembly adopted four resolutions on the Middle East and Palestine issue by an overwhelming majority. These resolutions mainly required Israel to withdraw from all occupied Arab territories and demanded that the right of the Palestinian people to establish their own independent country be recognized.

The United States, together with Israel, voted against these resolutions because "the resolutions require Israel unconditionally to withdraw from occupied Arab territories." This really is strange logic.

Aggression is a culpable action. Aggressors should withdraw unconditionally from other nations' territories which are occupied by them. This is a principle accepted by the international community today. However, according to U.S. logic, Israel's occupation of vast Arab territories is guiltless while Arab countries' demands to recover their lost territories is intolerable. Is this not the same as advocating that a robber may do what he likes while the victim can do nothing but let himself to be trampled on? Is it not ridiculous to advocate this typical policy of the weak being the prey of the strong at the rostrum of the United Nations?

Sometimes the United States has made specious empty comments on the Palestine issue; but once confronted by the crucial problem it immediately has shown its true feathers. This is not surprising because what the United States wants is to monopolize Middle Eastern affairs. The Israeli war policy conforms precisely with United States needs, so Israel has become a mainstay for the United States in the Middle East. For this reason, when dealing with relations between Arab countries and Israel, the United States will never risk offending Israeli authorities. When we understand this point, we will not feel surprised at the behavior of the United States in the United Nations.

PRESIDENT REAGAN MEETS DENMARK'S SCHLUTER

OW141305 Beijing XINHUA in English 0801 GMT 14 Dec 82

[Text] Washington, December 13 (XINHUA) -- Danish Prime Minister Poul Schluter told U.S. President Ronald Reagan today that Denmark "stands firmly" on NATO's two-track decision on the modernization of the intermediate-range nuclear force and on arms control.

Schluter is here on a three-day official visit in the double capacity as the president of the European Economic Community (EEC) and the Danish prime minister.

At a press conference held at the Danish Embassy after his meeting with Reagan today, Schulter said he had conveyed to Reagan the evaluations of an EEC summit meeting held recently in Copenhagen where a number of vital international problems were discussed.

The prime minister said he had told Reagan that a great majority of the Danish Parliament backs Denmark's continued NATO membership and "stands firmly" on the two-track NATO decision of December 1979, noting that over the past few years the Soviet Union has strengthened their military capability drastically.

The Danish Government, he said, "is authorized" at the moment to pay 26 million Danish krone to "fulfil obligations" with regard to the NATO decision, but that any further future appropriations will have to be approved by the Danish Parliament. The two leaders discussed the "importance of the Geneva talks" on arms control and agreed that the talks should continue with the aim to obtain an agreement with the Soviet Union on the zero option.

The Danish prime minister expressed to Reagan the satisfaction of European countries with the lifting of U.S. sanctions on pipeline equipment, but he said that in U.S.-EEC relations, "obviously there are some severe problems around", especially trade frictions on agricultural products. He hoped that the two sides will find a "pragmatic solution" to the matter in future negotiations in Washington.

On the Middle East, a senior U.S. administration official said, Schluter emphasized to Reagan that the EEC is "fully behind" Reagan's September 1 initiative and they stressed the "urgent need for the withdrawal of all foreign military forces from Lebanon." Schluter at his press conference urged that the United States and the ten EEC countries "orientate each other very closely" for a "positive development" in the Middle East.

U.S. CONCLUDES DEFENSE NEGOTIATIONS WITH CANADA

OW112027 Beijing XINHUA in English 1504 GMT 11 Dec 82

[Text] Ottawa, December 10 (XINHUA) -- Canada and the United States have concluded negotiations on a new defence umbrella agreement covering weapons test.

The negotiations had stalled in recent weeks because of the United States' concern over the legal wording of the agreement and Canada's insistence on finding the right language to ensure American financial responsibilities.

A government official said yesterday that both sides now are satisfied with the text and final approval is expected by the end of the year.

This has paved the way for a separate pact allowing testing of unarmed cruise missiles in Canada.

Precise details of the cruise tests, planned for a northern Alberta weapons range beginning in early 1984, will probably take months to work out, but talks on the separate pact are likely to get under way shortly after the umbrella agreement is signed.

The United States has been seeking permission to test the weapon at northern Alberta because it considers the climate and terrain there comparable to conditions the missile would encounter in attack flights into the Soviet Union.

PRC ENVOY REVIEWS CONTACTS WITH USSR

OW150831 Tokyo KYODO in English 0819 GMT 15 Dec 82

[Text] Tokyo, Dec 15 KYODO -- Chinese Ambassador to Japan Song Zhiguang Wednesday said that China has been asking the Soviet Union to change its hegemonistic attitude and to remove the threat it is posing to the world and China during recent contacts between the two countries. Speaking at a luncheon meeting of the Japan National Press Club, the ambassador said that China maintains its diplomatic principle to oppose hegemonism and promote peace in the world.

The ambassador described the contacts with the Soviet Union as "negotiations," while official Chinese description so far has avoided the use of the word "negotiation."

Questioned about a possible shift in China's foreign policy, currently moving back toward the Soviet Union, if the United States made concessions on the Taiwan issue, Song categorically denies it and said that there is no link beween China's fundamental policies toward the United States and the Soviet Union.

The ambassador said that the Soviet Union is posing a threat to China and other countries by maintaining its troops in Afghanistan, supporting Vietnam which has forces in Kampuchea and deploying a large number of troops along the Sino-Soviet borders. Song said that China understands Japan and any other sovereign nation building up its defense capability in order to ensure its own security. In this context, he said, China would understand the Japan-U.S. Security Treaty, if it is aimed at maintaining the security of Japan. The Japanese people themselves should decide whether or not their country should increase its defense capability, he said.

Citing the favorable development of Sino-Japanese relations over the past 10 years since the establishment of diplomatic ties, Song said that the Chinese Government attached importance to ties with Japan because friendly and cooperative relations between the two countries are in the interest of the peoples of both countries and contribute to peace and security in Asia and the Pacific.

Referring to the textbook dispute last summer over description in Japan's school books which China said distorted historical facts, Song said the problem was solved in principle on the government level.

The peoples of both two countries now know that the current good ties are very valuable, he added.

On deterioration of relations with the United States which he said was caused by Washington's attitude toward Taiwan, Song said that he hoped a further development of Sino-Japanese relations would face no obstacles over the Taiwan issue.

PRC OFFICIAL REAFFIRMS STAND ON SOVIET RELATIONS

OW150030 Hong Kong AFP in English 0006 GMT 15 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, Dec 14 (AFP) -- A senior Chinese official reaffirmed here today that the talks already begun on normalizing Sino-Soviet relations would be extremely and he repeated China's traditional accusation of hegemonism against Moscow.

A first series of talks, shrouded in secrecy, was held here in October between the Soviet and Chinese deputy foreign minister, Leonid Ilichev and Qian Qichen. Further talks, officially described as "consultations," were to be held in Beijing and Moscow. The next series was to take place in the new year in the Soviet capital, the official said.

China views the main obstacle between it and the Soviet Union as Vietnam's military domination of Cambodia, the official told foreign journalists here. But the issue was not necessarily the most difficult to resolve, he added.

When last October's talks began after 20 years of hostility, China said that one of the three main threats to Chinese security was Moscow's support for Vietnamese action in Cambodia, where 150,000 to 200,000 Vietnamese troops are defending a regime challenged by Chinese-backed resistance movements. Two further threats to China were the large numbers of Soviet troops stationed along borders with China and with its neighbor, Mongolia, as well as Moscow's three-year-old military occupation of Afghanistan.

Asked if China now was leaning more toward Washington or Moscow, the official said his country intended to maintain its independence and therefore did not need to favor either superpower. Ruling out, for the moment, reestablishing relations between the Chinese and Soviet communist parties, he stressed that current talks concerned normalization of state relations only. The Chinese spokesman also refused to recognize the Soviet Union as a socialist country. He said that the Kremlin's "expansionism" and "hegemonism" was in contradiction to socialism.

PRC OFFICIAL SAYS BORDER WITH USSR 'CALM'

PM141643 Venice L'UNITA in Italian 12 Dec 82 pp 1, 22

[Siegmund Ginzberg dispatch: "Signs of a Thaw From Ussuri Now"]

[Excerpt] Harbin -- "No, the border is calm now": This is what we were told by Zhang Bin, deputy director of the Heilongjiang Province Foreign Affairs Office. He revealed that early in October there was a major military exercise across the border attended by the Soviet Defense Minister. But nothing happened. "We remained calm," he said. Some 2,700 km of river and 300 km of mountains divide China and the USSR and surround the head of the huge chicken that Chinese territory outlines on the map. This head contains half of China's oil, one-third of its coal and a large proportion of its industry. Its beak is formed by Korea.

The latest serious incident, we were told, dates back to May 1978. A platoon of about 40 Soviet troops stopped some Chinese fishermen. "Our troops were nearby but we refrained from surrounding them. Then at one point they said that they had made a mistake and apologized to the fishermen. And that was that." Where was that? "On the Wusuli, 20-30 km south of Chen Bao." Wusuli is the Chinese name for the Ussuri. Chen Bao is the islet, less than 1 square km in size, that the Russians call Damanskiy. There in 1969 bloody clashes involving dozens and dozens of casualties took place for much less cause.

"The most serious friction," Zhang continued, "was in the late sixties and early seventies. In recent years the situation has greatly improved." Zhang Bin has been concerned with the border for 20 years. He is the one who has always received foreign journalists who have traveled as far as they were permitted. He has always made meticulous lists of the "aggressions" by the other side. But this time he is cautious. "We argue that force must not be used and that matters must be resolved peacefully," he repeated continually.

He has attended almost all the bilateral meetings on the border along the rivers. The Chinese and Soviets began those negotiations in 1950. They are still at it. Last year at Khabarovsk an agreement was reached on the interpretation of the navigation treaty. In January the 25th round of meetings will take place. What do you say to each other at these meetings? We asked him.

"Often it was like the Beijing Opera," he replied smiling, "when one of the characters mimes someone groping in the dark. Sometimes the discussions last for days and days on the interpretation of a single word. Sometimes we ask them a question and they reply with another. Then we check with the interpreter whether he has translated accurately and he explains to us: The translation was correct, but evidently they are unable to give a specific answer to the question you put to them. So we pass on to another one, to avoid embarrassing them. They may be prepared to answer the first question another time. It sometimes happens that the same negotiator says different things. Then we summon the interpreters to give evidence."

But what is the climate of the talks? we asked. "Well, when we are negotiating we are very serious. Then, of course, once the official discussions are over, we are freer. But the atmosphere does not change very quickly."

RENMIN RIBAO DENOUNCES SOVIET INTERVENTION IN DRA

["International Jottings" by Xiang Guang [6272 0342]: "The Clumsy 'Duck Tender'"]

[Text] In its last issue, the Soviet magazine NARODY AZII I AFRIKI said in one commentary: The Afghan refugee problem has an "artificial" and "over-exaggerated" character, which "is caused by brutal outside intervention in Afghanistan," because "the people who try to defend their invasion of Afghanistan with rumors and slanders need to make use of elaborately misrepresented figures and stories." The commentary also attacked Pakistan, saying that it wanted to pocket the international aid "due to its financial greed."

What caused the Afghan refugee problem? Wasn't it caused by the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan? Because the Soviet Army invaded Afghanistan in a big way, a large number of Afghan refugees poured into Pakistan and placed a huge financial burden on the Pakistan Government. However, NARODY AZII I AFRIKI did not mention that the cause of the refugee problem was the Soviet invasion but tried to shift the blame on to other people. This recalls to us a Russian idiom: "Tending ducks." In Russian, "duck" is a synonym for "rumor." "Tending ducks" means rumor mongering. By making these remarks, NARODY AZII I AFRIKI was doing nothing but "tending ducks."

However, the "duck tender" was not very clever, because he, after all, did tell some truth. That is, the Afghan refugee problem was indeed caused by the Soviet Union's "brutal outside intervention" in Afghanistan. Therefore, it is true that the Soviet Union indeed needs to make use of those "elaborately misrepresented figures and stories" to defend its aggressive action.

RENMIN RIBAO: PRC 'WELCOMES' NAMASONE REMARKS

["Short Commentary": "Welcome Views"]

[Text] New Japanese Prime Minister Nakasone again expressed his views on Sino-Japanese relations at a full session of the House or Representatives on 8 December. Nakasone said that Sino-Japanese relations "have developed greatly over the past 10 years," that "a stable foundation has been laid for friendly cooperation," and that "in the future, we must pursue cooperation in broad fields such as politics, economics and culture." On the textbook issue, he said that "the international community has said that there was aggression, and that is a fact. We must ensure that this kind of thing never happens again." In the House of Councillors on 9 December, Nakasone said that "records of events in history textbooks must be objectively and fairly considered in accordance with generally accepted doctrine, and careful concern must also be shown for friendship with our neighbors."

Nakasone has spoken many times on developing Sino-Japanese relations of friendly cooperation since forming his cabinet. This shows that he attaches great importance to the development of friendly relations between China and Japan. The Chinese people welcome and appreciate this.

The Chinese people attach great importance to the development of friendly relations between China and Japan. When Premier Zhao Ziyang visited Japan this year, he clearly set forth the three basic principles for developing these relations: "Peace and friendship, equality and mutual benefit and long stability." Comrade Hu Yaobang in his report at the 12th party congress also assigned Sino-Japanese relations the primary position in China's foreign relations. Many things can be said about Sino-Japanese friendship, but they can summarized in one sentence: The people of the two countries should be friends forever. This is required by the fundamental interests of the people of the two countries. China has abundant resources and extensive markets, while Japan possesses advanced science and technology. For the two countries to cooperate in friendship, each supplying what the other needs, will without doubt benefit their posterity and also contribute toward peace in Asia and the world.

The development of Sino-Japanese relations of friendly cooperation should be translated into action, and we should educate our posterity and ensure every generation carries on the relay baton of friendship. We believe that the desire for friendship expressed by Prime Minister Nakasone will promote further development of Sino-Japanese relations of friendly cooperation.

SRV COMBAT AT THAI-KAMPUCHEAN BORDER REPORTED

BK131320 Beijing in Cambodian to Kampuchea 1030 GMT 12 Dec 82

[Text] As everyone expected, when the dry season arrived the Vietnamese aggressor forces in Kampuchea sent a large number of soldiers to launch military operations along the Kampuchean-Thai border, thus spreading the flames of war into Thai territory once again.

On 11 December, the Thai newspaper MATICHON reported that, according to a dispatch by its correspondent in the border area of Aranyaprathet, at 1625 on 10 December heavy fighting broke out between Democratic Kampuchean and Vietnamese soldiers on Route 502 in Kampuchean territory, about five kilometers south of Khlong Nam Sai village in Thailand's Aranyaprathet District. During the fighting, the Vietnamese soldiers used all types of weapons, including 30-mm rockets. Ten rounds of mortar shells landed inside the Thai border. Thawi, a villager in the Thai border area, was seriously wounded and his wife was killed.

According to various other sources, on 7 December Vietnamese soldiers who launched attacks on Democratic Kampuchean soldiers were surrounded by the Democratic Kampuchean soldiers inside Kampuchean territory north of Aranyaprathet in Thailand. The fighting lasted for more than 2 hours. At least five Vietnamese soldiers were killed. The Democratic Kampuchean soldiers seized a quantity of weapons. At 0915 on 7 December the Vietnamese aggressor troops in Kampuchea invaded (?Khlong Yai) District in Thailand's Trat Province and fired rockets at a passenger car, killing three Thai people and wounding nine others.

The fact that the Vietnamese troops have caused the loss of life and property to the Thai people in the border area causes great concern to Thailand.

Earlier, Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach and the NHAN DAN newspaper, mouthpiece of the Vietnamese administration, rejected reports that the Vietnamese were preparing to launch a dry-season offensive in Kampuchea. However, these lies by the Vietnamese were disproved by the mortar shells that fell into Thai territory.

Today the Chinese newspaper RENMIN RIBAO carried a short article on this matter, saying that Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach refuted reports that Vietnamese troops were preparing to launch a dry-season offensive against the Kampuchean patriotic forces. He said that it was not necessary to do so, that is, to use a big net for catching small fish. The newspaper asked: Are the Kampuchean patriotic forces a small fish or a bone in the Vietnamese administration's throat? Nguyen Co Thach should know better than others. He was the one who traveled from Southeast Asia to Western Europe and the United Nations to catch this so-called small fish. The result was that he could not catch this fish, which is growing every day. This is why the Vietnamese administration is sending troops to launch a new dry-season offensive against the Kampuchean patriotic forces. Nguyen Co Thach has changed from being a fisherman into [words indistinct]. So long as the Vietnamese troops remain in Kampuchea, no one knows how many more types of occupations Nguyen Co Thach will have.

DK RADIO COMMENTARY WARNS OF NEW SRV OFFENSIVE

[Text] Beijing, December 13 (XINHUA) -- The Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea and its army must see clearly the present situation in the battlefield and maintain high vigilance so as to smash Vietnamese mopping-up operations to be launched at any time, said radio Democratic Kampuchea in a commentary today.

The commentary said that the Vietnamese aggressors had started bringing large numbers of troops and great quantities of equipment into west Kampuchea since the rainy season in preparation for a dry season offensive. But Hanoi stated recently that "there is no plan for a dry season offensive." The denial is to cover up its war preparations in Kampuchea and to benumb the world opinion and the Association of Southeast Asian Nations, especially to lull the Kampuchean people's fighting will, so as to launch a surprise attack

The commentary pointed out that the world is closely watching the developments in Kampuchea. The Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea, its armed forces and people will continue to keep high vigilance, hold high the banner of national unity and are ready to give the Vietnamese aggressors a hard blow.

INDIAN MENTION AT ASIAD OF BORDER 'STATE' SCORED

["Commentary: A Discreditable Behavior" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, December 8 (XINHUA correspondent Li Yongming) -- The 9th Asian Games have already ended and were a complete success. The host country India made an effective contribution to them, and to the strengthening of understanding and friendship among Asian athletes and between the Chinese and Indian people. But one thing the Indian Government did is somewhat discreditable.

At the closing ceremony December 4, the Indian Government presented, among other things, two dances -- the "lion" dance and the "peacock" dance of the "Arunachal Pradesh." And the two words "Arunachal Pradesh" were included in the distributed program and announced in the ceremony's broadcast.

What is the "Arunachal Pradesh"? It is a "state" the Indian Government set up in 1972 on its border with China but one China has since refused to recognize. Most of the "state" lies in the Chinese territory south of the McMahon Line at the east section of the Indo-Chinese border. It has been illegally nibbled at and occupied by India ever since its independence.

The presentation of those two dances of the "Arunachal Pradesh" by the Indian Government was therefore not to merely delight the games' participants, but a deliberate step to propagate India's sovereignty over the "state", and to legalize it.

The Indian Government has now made the border dispute a multinational affair. It not only can do no good to Sino-Indian relations but also runs counter to one of the games' principles of strengthening friendship among Asian peoples.

The Chinese and Indian Governments are each doing their own bit to seek further improvement of relations. We sincerely wish the Indian Government will work in line with the fundamental interests of our two peoples and adopt effective measures to work for the improvement of relations together with the Chinese Government.

YE JIANYING MEETS INDIAN DELEGATION IN BEIJING

OW141153 Beijing XINHUA in English 1130 GMT 14 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 14 (XINHUA) -- Chairman Ye Jianying of the National People's Congress standing committee met and had a cordial talk at his residence here today with a delegation from the All Indian Memorial Committee for Dr Kotnis and the late doctor's relatives.

The Indian visitors have come to take part in the commemoration activities of the 40th anniversary of Dwarkanath S. Kotnis' death and the 25th anniversary of Madanlal Atal's death.

Kotnis, Atal and some other Indian doctors came to China in an aid-China medical mission in 1938 to help the Chinese people fight against Japanese aggression. Ye Jianying had met with them on several occasions while in Wuhan and Yanan, forging profound friendship with members of the mission.

At today's meeting, Ye Jianying grasped Dr Basu's hand, saying, "I'm so glad to see you again, my old friend." He also shook hands with the other visitors in warm welcome. He said, "China and India are two big countries in Asia. We are close neighbours. Our two peoples should live in friendship from generation to generation."

Dr Basu, who has come as the head of the delegation, said that 44 years have elapsed, but he and his colleagues still cherish the memory of the care Ye Jianying gave them during the five years when they worked in Yanan and other places. Dr Basu also spoke of the successes China has made over the past three decades and of the Chinese people's happy life today. He said he was very glad that the friendship between the Indian and Chinese peoples has developed and consolidated.

Delegation members and Dr Kotnis' relatives presented souvenirs to Ye Jianying, who accepted them, saying, "I'll keep them forever as a symbol of friendship and goodwill."

Ye Jianying had pictures taken together with the Indian visitors.

Present were Wang Bingnan, president of the Chinese People's Association for Friendship With Foreign Countries, and Indian Ambassador to China Ayilam Panchapakesa Venkateswaran.

[Text] New Delhi, December 9 (XINHUA) -- Indian Prime Minister Mrs Indira Gandhi met a Chinese women's delegation here today.

Lu Oui, leader of the delegation and member of the Standing Committee of All China Women's Federation, conveyed regards to her from leaders of the federation Deng Yinchao and Kang Keqing. Mrs Indira Gandhi also asked Lu Cui to convey her warm regards to them in the name of all Indian women.

Lu Cui expressed Chinese women's desire for further strengthening of friendship between China and India, and she wished the friendship will last forever like the ever-flowing Yangtze and Ganges Rivers. Mrs Indira Gandhi replyed that "I echo your beautiful words."

The delegation arrived here yesterday. The Chinese guests will visit schools, colleges and the All India Medical Institute (family planning centre), and hold discussions with representatives of Indian women's organisations.

INDIAN MINISTER RECEIVES HEALTH DELEGATION

OW082128 Beijing XINHUA in English 1841 GMT 8 Dec 82

[Text] New Delhi, December 8 (XINHUA) -- Indian Union Health Minister Mr B. Shankaranand said today that India and China are facing similar problems in health area. The exchanges and learning from each other would strengthen the friendship and understanding between the two countries.

He said this when he received Chinese health delegation headed by Tan Yunhe, vice-minister of the Ministry of Public Health, who arrived here yesterday.

During their talk, Mr B. Shankaranand expressed deep interest in the Chinese policy of "combination of Chinese medicine and Western medicine" and family planning.

Tan Yunhe said his delegation came for learning. There are many common points between the two countries. The Indian policy of "giving priority to prevention than cure" is same to China's. He hoped his visit would promote the cooperation in health area between the two countries.

The delegation will visit various research centers, hospitals and have discussion with Indian counterparts.

TURKISH PRESIDENT KENAN EVREN ON OFFICIAL VISIT

Pre-Trip XINHUA Interview

OW101532 Beijing XINHUA in English 1518 GMT 10 Dec 82

[Text] Ankara, December 10 (XINHUA) -- Turkish President Kenan Evren told XINHUA today that he expected his coming visit to China will tap the potential of Sino-Turkish cooperation and promote the friendly relations between the two countries.

Interviewed by XINHUA three days before going to China, General Evren said he hoped that the cooperation in trade, economy and technology will be further developed.

He said that "the Sino-Turkish relations have been developing in a friendly atmosphere since the establishment of diplomatic relations." They will develop in a more diversified and active way on the basis of mutual benefit, he noted.

Referring to domestic problems, the president said his government will strive to achieve a stable and balanced economic development in accordance with the principle of social justice.

Evren condemned Israeli aggression against Arab countries and its expansionist designs in the Middle East. He pointed out that the Middle East problem should be settled on such conditions as Israeli withdrawal from all Arab territory occupied in 1967, recognition of the Palestinian people's right to self-determination and guarantee for the existence of all states in the region within internationally-recognized secured borders.

He said that "it's very good to link the Arab Fes plan with the proposal of U.S. President Ronald Reagan in the negotiations for a solution to the Middle East problem." He also hoped that the efforts for an end to the Iran-Iraq war will lead to positive results.

Welcomed by Zhao Ziyang

[Text] Beijing, December 13 (XINHUA) -- President Kenan Evren of the Republic of Turkey arrived here by special plane this afternoon for an official visit to China at the invitation of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress and the Chinese Government.

Premier Zhao Ziyang officiated at the welcoming ceremony for President Evren at the Great Hall of the People. When the Turkish president entered the hall Premier Zhao Ziyang greeted him with a cordial handshake and a Young Pioneer presented him with a bouquet of flowers.

After the military band played the national anthems of China and Turkey, President Evren, accompanied by premier Zhao Ziyang, reviewed the guard of honor made up of the three services of the Chinese People's Liberation Army.

Present were Ulanhu, vice-chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress, Ji Pengfei, state councillor, Wu Xueqian, minister of foreign affairs, and Zhang Zhen, deputy chief of the General Staff of the P.L.A.

Also present were Bayan Senay Gurvit, daughter of President Evren, Ilter Turkmen, minister of foreign affairs, and Sermet Pasin, minister of state and other Turkish officials accompanying President Evren on his China visit.

After the ceremony, Premier Zhao Ziyang had a friendly conversation with President Evren at the Great Hall of the People.

Greeting the Turkish president at the airport this afternoon were Wen Yezhan, vice-foreign minister, and Zhou Jue, Chinese Ambassador to Turkey.

Hosted at Banquet by Zhao

OW131557 Beijing XINHUA in English 1522 GMT 13 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 13 (XINHUA) -- Premier Zhao Ziyang gave a banquet to welcome President Kenan Evren of Turkey and his party at the Great Hall of the People here this evening.

President Evren's visit is the first by a Turkish head of state to China, and it is also his first abroad visit since becoming president.

On behalf of Chairman Ye Jianying of the National People's Congress Standing Committee and the Chinese Government and people, Premier Zhao welcomed President Evren and his party.

In his speech, the Chinese premier said that China and Turkey have shared similar historical experiences, the two countries are now faced with the common task of safeguarding national independence and state sovereignty and developing their own national economies.

"We have our own strong points. We can overcome our own weak points by learning from each other's strong points. We have our own experience and can compare notes and draw on each other's experience," he said.

Zhao Ziyang said, "The Chinese Government is willing to strengthen cooperation with the Turkish Government in the political, economic, cultural and technological fields on the basis of the five principles of peaceful co-existence -- mutual respect for sovereignty and territorial integrity, mutual non-aggression, non-interference in each other's internal affairs, equality and mutual benefit, and peaceful co-existence -- in accordance with the needs and possibilities of our two sides. The development of Sino-Turkish relations conforms to the aspirations and interests of the two peoples."

Premier Zhao praised the Turkish Government and people for their acheivements in safeguarding national security, developing their national economy and raising the living standards of the people under the leadership of President Evren.

He said, "In international affairs, Turkey pursues a foreign policy of peace and friendship with all countries, opposing foreign troops' presence in Afghanistan and Kampuchea and Israeli aggression and expansion. Turkey also attaches importance to enhancing cooperation with the Third World countries, and promoting friendship and unity among the Third World countries. The Chinese Government and people highly appreciate this."

Zhao Ziyang reiterated, "China is willing to join all the justice-upholding and peace-loving countries and peoples in opposing hegemonism and defending world peace."

He said: "The Chinese Government and people firmly support the just struggle of the countries and peoples subject to foreign aggression. We firmly support the peoples of Kampuchea and Afghanistan in their struggles against foreign aggression. We firmly support Arab countries and the Palestinian people in their struggle to recover their lost territories and restore their national rights. We firmly believe that so long as all the peace-loving countries and peoples the world over persist in unity and struggle world peace can be defended."

President Evren said in his speech that a deep-rooted relationship has existed for centuries between the Turkish and Chinese nations. He said the relationship has not been weakened by the great geographic distances and the different economic, social and political systems. The Turkish people always cherish friendly sentiments toward the Chinese people.

He said that through his talks with Chinese leaders, mutual understanding will be deepened and bilateral relations will develop.

Evren said serenity and peace prevail in today's Turkey, which may bring much development in Turkey's economy and social situation.

The president said the Turkish people wish that China's new constitution will be carried out smoothly, and the Sixth Five-Year Plan will enable China to achieve ever greater success.

On the world situation, Evren said the international issues have become more complicated and dangerous, feelings of insecurity increase with armed expansion and war preparations. A growing danger to settle conflicts through armed force worsens the present situation, he said.

"Afghanistan and Kampuchea are still occupied by foreign troops, and continuous conflicts have brought great losses not only to the people of the two countries but also to their neighbors," he said. Afghanistan and Kampuchean questions can be settled only when foreign occupation ends and the U.N. resolutions are carried out, Evren said.

Referring to the Middle East, he said that it is impossible to settle the conflict between Israel and Arab countries as long as Israel does not withdraw its troops from the occupied Arab territories, and as long as the rights of the Palestinian people, including the right to set up their own country, are not recognized.

Evren also said that he hoped that the Iranian-Iraq conflict will be settled peacefully.

The Turkish president said an important factor uniting Turkey and China is their identical objective in the world. "This objective is to safeguard world peace and create a more stable and safer environment for the world," he said. He expressed his appreciation for China's efforts in maintaining world peace and security.

Attending the banquet were Ulanhu, vice-chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress, Ji Pengfei, state councillor, Yang Dezhi, chief of the General Staff of the Chinese People's Liberation Army, Wu Xueqian, minister of foreign affairs, Zhou Jiannan, minister of machine-building industry, and Cui Yueli, minister of public health, and leading members of other departments.

Also present were Senay Gurvit, daughter of President Evren, Ilter Turkmen, minister of foreign affairs, and Sermet Refik Pasin, minister of state and other Turkish guests.

Also among the guests was Admiral Nejat Tumer, member of the National Security Council and naval commander of Turkey, who is making a stop-over in Beijing on his way to Japan.

Holds Talks With Zhao

OW141138 Beijing XINHUA in English 1113 GMT 14 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 14 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang held talks here this morning with Turkish President Kenan Evren in the Great Hall of the People.

Sources said the two leaders discussed the current international situation and relations between the two countries.

The talks, which proceeded in a sincere and cordial atmosphere, demonstrated that both sides shared converging or similar views on major international issues.

The two leaders agreed that foreign troops must be withdrawn from Afghanistan and Kampuchea and that the issues of Afghanistan and Kampuchea should be settled in accordance with the relevant U.N. resolutions.

Condemning Israel's policy of aggression and expansion, the two leaders reiterated the support of both nations for the Arab and Palestinian people in their struggle to recover the lost land and to restore their national rights, as well as for the unremitting efforts of the Arab countries in seeking a comprehensive and just solution to the Middle East problem.

Premier Zhao and President Evren expressed their satisfaction with the development of Sino-Turkish relations.

The Chinese premier said it is important to the Chinese Government to upgrade relations with Turkey. He said he hoped that the two countries would increase consultations in international affairs and explore ways to expand their economic cooepration on the basis of equality. Such a relationship should enable China and Turkey to learn from each other, to offset each other's deficiencies, supply each other's needs and achieve common development. "There are great potentials and bright prospects for trade, economic and technical cooperation between the two countries," the premier said.

President Evren said the friendly relations and cooperation between Turkey and China have grown well since the establishment of diplomatic relations. Particularly in the past two years economic and cultural links between the two countries have been enlivened, he said, voicing the hope that the two countries would strengthen cooperation in different fields on the basis of understanding each other.

The two leaders exchanged views on their respective domestic political and economic situations.

Attending the talks on the Turkish side were: Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen, Minister of State Sermet Pasin and Turkish Ambassador to China Necdet Tezel.

On the Chinese side were: Foreign Minster Wu Xueqian, Vice-Minister of Foreign Affairs Wen Yezhan, Adviser to the Foreign Ministry He Ying, Vice-Minister of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade Lu Xuejian and Chinese Ambassador to Turkey Zhou Jue.

Attends Musical Performance

OW141658 Beijing XINHUA in English 1547 GMT 14 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 14 (XINHUA) -- Turkish President Kenan Evren and his party attended a performance of singing, dancing and Beijing opera at the Great Hall of the People here this evening.

The distinguished guests were accompanied at the performance by Ulanhu, vice-chairman of the National People's Congress Standing Committee; Wen Yezhan, vice-minister of foreign affairs; and Lu Zhixian, vice-minister of culture.

The performance was sponsored by the Ministry of Culture and presented by the Central Song and Dance Ensemble and the No. 3 troupe of the Beijing Opera Theater.

Young soprano Ren Yan presented a Chinese song "My Dear Motherland" and a Turkish song about the four seasons. Her signing drew warm applause from the audience and praise from the Turkish president.

President Evren told Ulanhu that Ren Yan sang the Turkish song beautifully with accurate pronunciation of the Turkish. He said that this evening's performance was excellent.

At the end of the performance, President Evren went on stage and presented the performers with a basket of flowers, congratulating them on their performance.

This afternoon, the Turkish guests toured the Great Wall.

Meets With Hu Yaobang

OW150912 Beijing XINHUA in English 0835 GMT 15 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 15 (XINHUA) -- Hu Yaobang, general secretary of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee, said today that China and Turkey have broad-ranging agreement on international issues and their ties are marked by mutual trust.

He said this at a meeting with Kenan Evren, president of Turkey, and the principal members of his party in the Great Hall of the People.

The two leaders recalled the similar experiences of the two countries in past history and exchanged views about bilateral relations and the international situation.

President Evren's talks with Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang, Hu Yaobang said, showed the two sides shared convergent views on a wide spectrum of international issues.

A relationship of mutual trust exists between the two countries, Hu said. "We won't bully you, nor will you bully us, so we can enjoy a lasting friendship," he said. China is also interested in expanding friendly ties with Turkey in trade and economic cooperation, he added.

Evren said the people of Turkey entertain very friendly feelings toward the people of China. Leaders of the two countries should increase contacts which benefit mutual understanding, he said.

President Evren wished China constant new successes and expressed the hope that Chinese leaders will visit his country.

China's State Councillor Ji Pengfei and Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian were among those present.

Prior to the meeting, Hu Yaobang had a brief conversation with the Turkish journalists accompanying President Evren on his current tour.

Both China and Turkey are Asian countries with an ancient civilization and similar experiences in history, Hu said. At the turn of the century, he said, these two countries produced two great leaders -- Kemal in Turkey and Dr. Sun Yat-sen in China.

Both countries are now facing the task of preserving their national independence and expanding their national economy, Hu said. Conferring in the spirit of mutual respect, mutual trust and cooperation, he said, President Evren and Chinese leaders produced very good results in their talks.

Hu Yaobang asked the Turkish journalists to take back to the Turkish people the best wishes of the leaders and people of China.

Meets With Deng Xiaoping

OW150918 Beijing XINHUA in English 0842 GMT 15 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 15 (XINHUA) -- Deng Xiaoping, chairman of the Central Advisory Commission of the Chinese Communist Party, met here this morning in the Great Hall of the People with President Kenan Evren of the Republic of Turkey and the principal members of his party.

The two leaders expressed their pleasure at making each other's acquaintance. They talked about future Sino-Turkish relations and discussed the international situation.

Deng Xiaoping said there are no contradictions between China and Turkey and that the two countries share almost identical views on major international issues.

"In the past," he said, "our two countries did not often exchange visits. From now on we should increase mutual understanding and expand cooperation."

President Evren said relations between Turkey and China are good. Turkey hopes to promote friendly relations with China and develop friendship with all countries.

Later, Deng Xiaoping hosted a luncheon for the Turkish guests.

Also present were Chinese State Councillor Ji Pengfei and Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian.

CHINA DAILY Cites Friendship

HK140211 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 14 Dec 82 p 4

[By CHINA DAILY staff reporter Yang Chongguang]

[Text] There is a special kind of friendliness between the Chinese and Turkish peoples, I discovered on a recent visit to Turkey. It is widespread among workers as well as the intelligentsia and officials.

One day while traveling from the capital of Ankara to the town of Goreme, something went wrong with our car. My companion asked some highway workers where there was a cafe where we could wait. Instead, they invited us into their office for tea. When they learned I was from China, they said: "We love the Chinese people."

They called me "a guest of god," their term for someone who comes from afar. And they gave us lunch.

I wondered the Turkish people should have such friendly feelings for us Chinese as we traveled to Istanbul and Izmir and Efesus.

Efesus, before Constantinople (now Istanbul) was built, it had been the end of the "silk road" that carried the products of ancient China to the Western world -- tea, silk, porcelain.... China and Turkey had close links even back then, and the evidence is still to be seen.

The Turks, like the Chinese, respect elderly people, seeking their opinions and expecting their children to support them if necessary.

China and Turkey also have similar outlooks on the international scene. Seyfi Tashan, director of the Foreign Policy Institute of Turkey, told me: "Both countries have the same points of view on collective security and co-existence as international policy. We have a common basis to further develop our friendly relations."

U.H. Bavulken, acting foreign minister and defence minister, discussed the visit of President Kenan Evren to China. He said: "This is the first visit of the Turkish head of state to China. We believe this visit will get positive results. We'll further develop our economic and cultural relations to benefit the peoples of both our countries."

Turkey and China are far apart geographically, but our friendship has a long history and is flowing onward like the Yellow and Yangtse Rivers and the Tigris and Euphrates.

RENMIN RIBAO Praises Turkey

HK141037 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 14 Dec 82 p 7

[Article by Wan Yuelin [8001 2574 2651]: "The Turkish Government's Achievements in Governing the State"]

[Text] Since it came to power on 12 September 1980, the Turkish Government headed by Kenan Evren gradually has lead Turkey onto the road of steady development.

Before "12 September," cases of terror, violence and murder had emerged one after another. On an average about 20 or 30 people were killed a day and social order was greatly disturbed. Soon after it came to power the present government adopted stern measures to ban the activities of all political parties and proclaimed martial law. It also sent out security troops to destroy the headquarters of terrorist organizations and search for and collect scattered guns and munition. Reportedly over the past 2 years or so some 17,600 people have been arrested on charges of participating in terrorist activities. Nearly 30,000 cases have been tried by the military court and about 26,000 people have been sentenced. Since security measures were adopted social order has improved markedly. In the first year of military control cases of violence were reduced by 75 percent in this country, and the following year they were reduced further by 81 percent. Once terrorist activities in Turkey basically had been brought under control and social order had become more and more stable with each passing day, the curfew imposed on 67 provinces in the country for nearly 2 years was lifted in August this year.

Over the past 2 years the economy also has been greatly developed in Turkey. Before "12 September," the Turkish economy was on the verge of bankruptcy. The inflation rate reached 115 percent and only half the capacity of enterprises was utilized. Market supplies and daily necessities were in short supply. In the face of this situation the Turkish Government continued to implement the "new economic policy" designed to foster private enterprise, increase export, encourage foreign investment and receive foreign aid. It also adopted appropriate measures to carry out a series of economic reforms. All this has played an important role in stabilizing, restoring and developing the Turkish economy.

First, the inflation rate has been reduced. In 1981 it dropped to 35 percent and this year it is expected to be kept at about 30 percent. Second, export value has increased rapidly at a speed unprecedented in Turkish history; in the past 2 years it increased by 93 percent. In 1981 it reached $4.7 billion, a 65 percent increase over the preceding year. In the first half of this year it reached $2.54 billion, an increase of 30 percent over the corresponding period last year. Third, national income has increased. In 1981 the national economic income rose by 4.4 percent and per capita income was raised from $1,180 in 1980 to $1,219. It is estimated that this rate of increase can be maintained this year.

The favorable turns in social order and the economic situation have created favorable conditions for the Turkish military government to realize its promise of "returning administration to the civilians" made when it took power. On 23 December 1981, the military government established a "consultative conference" which was part of the constitutional parliament. At the end of last November a constitutional committee was elected to revise the 1961 Turkish Constitution. In July this year, drafting of the new constitution was finished and on 7 November, referenda were held throughout the country. More than 20,000,000 people voted in these referenda. As a result the draft constitution drawn up by the military government was approved and Kenan Evren, head of state and chief of the General Staff, was elected seventh president of the Turkish Republic for a term of 7 years. The adoption of the new constitution was a great event in the state life of Turkey. It showed that the military government that had been in power for more than 2 years was changed to a civil government and the transition to the democratic parliamentary system was complete.

For more than 2 years the Turkish military government has been advancing forward despite difficulties and has scored spectacular achievements. However, the Turkish Government is still faced with a lot of problems in maintaining social order, developing economy and building up the prestige of the state. It still has much work to do.

EUROPEAN NUCLEAR-FREE ZONES URGED AT MEETING

[Text] Athens, December 13 (XINHUA) -- Participants of a three-day conference sponsored by peace movements that ended here yesterday urged European governments to establish nuclear-free zones in the continent by themselves.

A final declaration issued at the end of the Conference on Nuclear Free Zones in Europe said that governments in the continent should not make their efforts and initiatives dependent on the ongoing Geneva negotiations because of "the clear limitations and dangers included in that negotiation process (only two superpowers are at present talking over the heads of the peoples concerned)."

The declaration also called for a meeting of Balkan governments on the denuclearisation of their region.

The peace movements are planning to organise a special conference in Palermo on the denuclearisation of the Mediterranean region, the document added.

The declaration said the participants expressed their "strong opposition" to the deployment of new missiles in Europe, East and West. It noted the peace movement in Western Europe will continue its struggle against the deployment of Pershing II and cruise missiles.

At the opening session last Friday, Greek Premier Andreas Papandreou stressed the danger of a nuclear war with the acceleration of arms race between the NATO and the Warsaw Pact. "Basically the danger to peace centers on Europe, which is the most likely theater for a limied nuclear war," he warned.

"The only way to avoid the conflict is nuclear disarmament" which could consequently be facilitated by "accords for the establishment of nuclear-free zones."

The conference was organised by Greece's movement for national independence, world peace and disarmament and the Hague-based international peace communication and coordination center.

It was attended by delegations and representatives of peace movements from West European Mediterranean, Balkan and Nordic countries, Representatives of Yugoslav Peace League and Romanian Peace Organisation also participated in the conference.

ITALY SAYS SOVIET PROPOSAL ON MISSILES NOT NEW

[Text] Rome, December 13 (XINHUA) -- The Soviet proposal to remove 150 SS-20 missiles is a new presentation of its old position, the Italian Foreign Ministry pointed out in a statement today.

The statement said the Soviet proposal does not mean to eliminate any of its 333 SS-20 missiles, since it only suggests that 90 such missiles be moved to the other side of the Urals. As these missiles have a range of 5,000 kilometers and are movable, the proposal is only a reproduction of its 1979 position, the statement added.

The statement said the Soviet Union, while insisting that NATO forsake its plan of deploying 572 cruise and Pershing-II missiles, does not intend to make any concession itself. The SS-20 missiles not only are targeted on Western Europe, but also on Middle East, the Mediterranean Sea and North Africa. Judging by the new proposal, The Soviet Union is still aimed at forcing NATO to reduce its medium-range missiles to zero, while refusing to accept the "zero option" for itself, the statement concluded.

FRANCE'S MAUROY IN MALAYSIA, SCORES DK TIES

OW142333 Beijing XINHUA in English 1630 GMT 14 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 14 (XINHUA) -- French Prime Minister Pierre Mauroy said in Kuala Lumpur today that France shared the desire of Malaysia and other Southeast Asian nations for a zone of peace, freedom and neutrality in the region, according to reports reaching here.

Mauroy, who has wound up a three-day visit to Malaysia, told a press conference before his departure that "We condemn the occupation by foreign troops of Kampuchea and Afghanistan and we shall relentlessly press for the implementation of the U.N. resolutions, calling for the evacuation of territories occupied by force and illegally."

Mauroy said that during his two rounds of talks with Malaysia's Prime Minister Mahathir Mohamed, France was asked to influence Vietnam, a country with which it had traditional ties, for a solution to the Kampuchean problem.

"France is certainly ready in the framework of the new relationship between Malaysia and France to do all she can to further a settlement" in Kampuchea, he told the press.

However, contrary to the Southeast Asian nations which support the Democratic Kampuchean Coalition Government headed by Samdech Norodom Sihanouk, France declined to recognise the coalition.

Asked why, Mauroy said France recognised states and not governments. "We have at present no diplomatic relations with the present (Heng Samrin) government of Kampuchea," he added.

Commenting on his talks with his Malaysian counterpart and other Malaysian officials, Mauroy said that the climate had been created at the government level for enhanced economic cooperation between the two countries.

He said France had not had any great involvement in Southeast Asia but his Malaysian visit had provided "a renaissance in trade and economic relations."

During his stay in Malaysia, a protocol was signed between the two governments on a French loan of 250 million francs (about 40 million U.S. dollars) to Malaysia beside a French offer to provide 1.15 billion francs (162 million U.S. dollars) to help Malaysia build power plants and other projects.

FOURTH EUROPEAN POPULAR PARTY CONGRESS ENDS

OW091830 Beijing XINHUA in English 1831 GMT 9 Dec 82

[Text] Paris, December 8 (XINHUA) -- The fourth congress of the European Popular Party ended here today with a communique underlining the need to strengthen the Atlantic alliance and get rid of "the narrow concept of nationality."

The three-day congress mainly discussed the security and defense affairs of Europe and questions concerning economic and political alliance.

Federal Chancellor of West Germany Helmut Kohl said yesterday at the congress that the Soviet Union has for years taken advantage of detente to carry out "super-armament." Therefore, he said, the West must abide by NATO's dual resolution of negotiating while preparing for deployment of new missiles in Western Europe. Only by so doing can peace be secured in Western Europe, he stressed.

Belgian Minister of External Affairs Leo Tindemans who was elected again president of the European Popular Party said the goal of party will remain the consolidation of political solidarity of Europe and further, the realisation of a European alliance.

The European Popular Party was formed on July 8, 1976, by Christian democratic or Catholic democratic parties of seven countries, including Belgium, France, the Netherlands and West Germany, to promote the unity of Europe.

RENMIN RIBAO COMMENTS ON NEW SPANISH POLICIES

[Unattributed report: "The New Government of Spain Adopts New Domestic and Foreign Policy Measures"]

[Text] The new Spanish Government held its first cabinet meeting on 7 December. At this meeting a number of new domestic and foreign policies were adopted. The government declared an 8 percent depreciation of the peseta (Spanish currency) and decided to raise the prices of gasoline and other fuel by an average of 20 percent. With respect to foreign policies, the government made a point of declaring that it would reopen its border with Gibraltar to pedestrian traffic on 15 December. The border was closed because of the dispute with Britain. The government also reexamined the U.S.-Spanish defense cooperation agreement and the problem of Spain's joining NATO. These measures reflected the line that the Socialist Workers' Party would adopt to guide its domestic and foreign policies.

Since it won in the general elections held in late October, the Spanish Socialist Workers' Party has organized the first socialist government in Spain since the end of the Civil War and its general secretary Felipe Gonzalez has taken the office of prime minister. The current government has 17 members with an average age of 40. Except for a few nonparty personages, most of them are members of the Socialist Workers' Party and its ally, the Democratic Action Party. Nine of the Cabinet members are economists. This shows that the government is determined to bring the difficulty-ridden Spanish economy under control. According to Prime Minister Gonzalez' speech on his administrative program, the government will retrench its economic policy to attain the basic objectives of increasing next year's domestic output value by 2.5 percent; decreasing the inflation rate from 15 percent to 12 percent; and creating 800,000 jobs in a period of 4 years (the current number of unemployed is 2 million).

In the field of diplomacy the new government will continue to strengthen its cooperation relationships with countries in Latin America, the Arab world and Africa and strive to realize the objective of joining the EEC. For a long time Spain has disputed with Britain over the sovereignty of Gibraltar. In order to create a favorable atmosphere for the negotiations, the new Spanish Government has decided to lift the blockade of Gibraltar. The new government has also readjusted other foreign policies. It indicated that it would freeze the talks on joining NATO military bodies and would hold a referendum on whether Spain should remain in NATO. It has took a reserved attitude toward a recent NATO conference. It also considers it necessary to reexamine and even renegotiate the defense agreement signed by the former Spanish Government and the United States. The new government will also sign the treaty preventing nuclear proliferation and forbid the installment of nuclear weapons in Spanish territory.

AVIATION COOPERATION PACT WITH W. GERMANY SIGNED

The document was signed by Shen Liechu, Chinese vice-minister of the machine-building industry, and Gabor Andras, Hungarian vice-minister of industry, both cochairmen of the commission.

Chen Muhua, state councillor and minister of foreign economic relations and trade, was present at the ceremony, and met with the guests before the signing. She said the two countries should learn from each other and expand their cooperation in science and technology through exchanges of study groups. Robert Ribanszi, Hungarian ambassador to China, was present at both the meeting and ceremony.

WARSAW DENOUNCES U.S. COMMENTS ON POLAND

OW120440 Beijing XINHUA in English 0243 GMT 12 Dec 82

[Text] Warsaw, December 11 (XINHUA) -- Poland today strongly demanded that the United States stop interfering in Polish internal affairs.

In a speech on December 10, U.S. President Ronald Reagan described the Polish administration as a tyrannical dictatorship in a country under foreign occupation.

Jerzy Urban, press spokesman of the Polish Government, in a statement today said Reagan's speech once again hurt the dignity of the Polish people.

He reaffirmed that independent Poland will resolve its own problems and overcome its difficulties by its own efforts and will never submit to U.S. demands and conditions.

He also denounced the U.S. negative attitude towards the Polish decision to lift the martial law very soon. President Reagan had said he was not satisfied with such a change and looked at it in a negative way.

The Polish Government acts in the interests of the Polish people, not those of a North American power, he said.

MARTIAL LAW IN POLAND TO BE PARTIALLY LIFTED

OW130846 Beijing XINHUA in English 0803 GMT 13 Dec 82

[Text] Warsaw, December 12 (XINHUA) -- General Wojciech Jaruzelski, chairman of the Military Council of National Salvation, announced in a televised speech tonight -- the eve of the first anniversary of the state of seige -- that the martial law restrictions would be partially lifted by the end of the year.

Jaruzelski, who is also the first secretary of the Polish United Workers' Party and government prime minister, said that conditions have arisen for suspending martial law.

The general said that "the detailed proposals" concerning the suspension of the state of siege will be submitted to the National Assembly tomorrow, an important step towards the complete lifting of martial law."

But he said, "only the provisions directly protecting the essential interests of the state, creating a shield for the economy and reinforcing the security of the citizens, will remain temporarily in force."

Jaruzelski said it was not possible to completely lift the martial law at this time because of continuing threats from "internal and external enemies."

SAUDI FOREIGN MINISTER COMMENTS ON RECENT VISIT

OW091940 Beijing XINHUA in English 1908 GMT 9 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 9 (XINHUA) -- Saudi Arabian Foreign Minister Prince Sa'ud al-Faysal ibn 'Abd al-'Aziz Al Sa'ud said in Riyadh yesterday that the visit to China by the delegation of the seven-member committee of the Arab League achieved a very positive result and the delegation had fruitful talks with Chinese leaders. Al-Faysal made the remarks in a statement through Radio Rayadh after he returned home from Beijing. He was one of the members of the delegation in its two-day visit to China. He said that the delegation's visit to the permanent members of the U.N. Security Council was to explain to them the Arab problem, particularly the Palestinian problem as well as the results of the Fes summit conference of the Arab states.

Al-Faysal urged the U.N. Security Council members, particularly the United States, to take their responsibility for the Middle East.

The Saudi Arabian newspaper ARAB NEWS carried on December 7 an editorial entitled "Clear Peking Stand", saying that "China has never wavered from its principled approach to the Middle East question and the plight of the Palestinian people." It added, "Chinese policy has been clear and steady. The Palestinians must have a homeland in Palestine, Israel must withdraw from the occupied lands of the Arabs."

EGYPT'S FOREIGN MINISTER ON MIDDLE EAST ISSUES

OW112002 Beijing XINHUA in English 1848 GMT 11 Dec 82

[Text] Kuwait, December 11 (XINXUA) -- Egyptian Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister Kamal Hasan 'Ali said today it is impossible for Iran to defeat Iraq, and held the Soviet Union and the United States responsible for the continuing war.

In an interview with AR-RA'Y AL-'AMM, a Kuwaiti newspaper, 'Ali said the Gulf and Middle East region is an arena for the Soviet-U.S. rivalry which has intensified following the downfall of the Iranian shah and the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

Although the two superpowers have voiced many objections to the Iran-Iraq war, their disagreements have made it impossible for them to work in coordination to end the war, 'Ali said.

Instead, their continuous arms supply to the two warring sides has helped escalate the war, 'Ali added.

On contacts between Egypt and the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO), he said his country is seeking a direct dialogue between the United States and the PLO.

He appealed to Arab countries and the PLO to hold immediate talks on U.S. President Ronald Reagan's Middle East peace proposal. PLO recognition of Israel's right to exist would lead to a dialogue between the United States and West European countries and the PLO and to the inclusion of PLO in all negotiations for a Middle East settlement, he said.

Referring to an Israeli-run hotel at Taba in the Sinai Peninsula, 'Ali charged Israel with violating an agreement on border disputes signed with Egypt last April. The Taba is Egyptian territory which the government is determined to recover, he said.

Egypt has carried out military exercises in the Sinai Peninsula recently that, 'Ali said, used Israel as the mock enemy.

UN GENERAL ASSEMBLY URGES ISRAELI WITHDRAWAL

OW110226 Beijing XINHUA in English 0207 GMT 11 Dec 82

[Text] United Nations, December 10 (XINHUA) — The U.N. General Assembly by an overwhelming majority today adopted four resolutions urging Israel to pull out from the occupied Arab territories and recognize the Palestinian people's right to self-determination and independence.

One of the resolutions reaffirms that a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East cannot be established without the unconditional withdrawal of Israel from the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and without the exercise and attainment by the Palestinian people of their inalienable rights.

The resolution requests the Security Council to discharge its responsibilities under the U.N. Charter and recognize the inalienable rights of the Palestinian Arab people, including the right to self-determination and the right to establish an independent Arab state in Palestine.

It asks the Security Council to take the necessary measures, in execution of the relevant U.N. resolutions, to implement the plan which, among other things, recommends that an independent Arab state shall come into existence in Palestine.

In another resolution, the General Assembly called upon all member states to participate in an international conference on the question of Palestine to be convened in Paris in August 1983 for a comprehensive effort to seek effective ways and means to enable the Palestinian people to attain and to exercise their rights.

It was announced that the fifth draft resolution on the question of Palestine will be put to vote on a later date.

PLO'S 'ARAFAT CALLS FOR UNITY AGAINST ISRAEL

OW121530 Beijing XINHUA in English 1518 GMT 12 Dec 82

[Text] Damascus, December 12 (XINHUA) -- Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) leader Yasir 'Arafat yesterday called for unified efforts in winning the battle of destiny against the Zionist enemy.

Speaking at a seminar sponsored by the General Federation of Arab Writers, 'Arafat urged Arab writers to continue playing their pioneering role in serving just Arab causes.

The seminar, which is also being attended by Chairman of the Palestine National Council Khalid al-Fahum, will discuss the experience of the Palestinian and Lebanese people during the U.S.-backed Israeli invasion of Lebanon.

Secretary General of the Federation Ali Oqla Orsan, who also spoke at the seminar, stressed the importance of benefiting from the Lebanese-Palestinian experience, which, he said, is a human and national duty.

During a meeting with new Japanese Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone Friday, the king demanded increased Jordanian exports to Japan and proposed regular governmental meetings between the two countries and the opening of an air route between Tokyo and Amman.

Japanese Emperor Hirohito met King Husayn Saturday.

This was King Husayn's second visit to Japan. He last came here in 1976.

LEBANON'S SALIM URGES FOREIGN TROOP WITHDRAWAL

OW150844 Beijing XINHUA in English 0740 GMT 15 Dec 82

[Text] Washington, December 14 (XINHUA) -- Lebanese Foreign Minister Elie Salim said here today Lebanon wants "immediate withdrawal" of all foreign forces from Lebanon which deserves to be independent and free.

"There is no reason for any foreign power to stay in Lebanon beyond today. Everybody that has entered Lebanon has entered for a reason and that reason no longer exists and therefore the Israelis, the Syrians and the PLO should all withdraw from Lebanon today, immediately," not next month, nor in the coming few months, the foreign minister declared.

Salim, answering reporters' questions after meeting with acting U.S. Secretary of State Kenneth Dam today, disclosed that U.S. envoys Philip Habib and Morris Draper are going back to the Middle East this week with "some fresh ideas and new suggestions." He expressed optimism for a "significant progress" in the coming few days.

The minister rejected the idea of partial withdrawals, saying that Lebanon is interested in a "package deal", a political decision to get everybody out and then discussions on a timetable may follow in the context of that package.

He also said he was seeking an increase in the multi-national forces deployed in Lebanon to ensure the withdrawal. France has agreed to increase its force, while Italy and the United States are considering the request.

Salim is here on a three-day visit. Yesterday, he criticized Israel for its refusal to withdraw. "We reached the conclusion that Israel at present does not want to negotiate," Salim said, noting that Israel wants Jerusalem to be a venue for negotiations. He added that Lebanon would not "kneel" before Israel. "We want a Lebanon that has dignity, credibility and access to the Arab world."

In exchange for the withdrawal of its troops which invaded Lebanon last June, Israel reportedly wants to impose on Lebanon normalized political relations. It also wants to reach agreement with Lebanon on establishing a 27-mile buffer zone in south Lebanon. And most recently, it has demanded that talks take place alternately in Jerusalem and Beirut.

Lebanese officials have refused to meet Israeli officials in Jerusalem because negotiating in Jerusalem tends to have the implication of accepting Israel's annexation of East Jerusalem which it captured in the 1967 war.

UN GENERAL ASSEMBLY CALLS FOR END TO APARTHEID

OW100455 Beijing XINHUA in English 0226 GMT 10 Dec 82

[Text] United Nations, December 9 (XINHUA) -- The U.N. General Assembly today adopted ten resolutions calling for urgent efforts to eliminate apartheid in South Africa.

The resolution on the situation in South Africa strongly condemns the South-African apartheid regime for its brutal repression and indiscriminate torture and killing of workers, schoolchildren and other opponents of apartheid, and the imposition of death sentences on freedom fighters.

It reaffirms the legitimacy of the struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa and their national liberation movement by all available means, including armed struggle. The resolution condemns the apartheid regime for its repeated acts of aggression, subversion and terrorism against independent African states. It demands the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of all South African troops from Angola.

The resolution on concerted international action for the elimination of apartheid urges all states and organizations in the world to co-operate fully in effective international actions to eliminate apartheid in South Africa, to promote the establishment of a democratic society, in which all the people of that country will enjoy human and political rights, and to secure peace in the region.

It appeals to all states and organizations to deny any assistance, direct or indirect, to the racist regime of South Africa and provide all necessary assistance for the oppressed people of South Africa and their national liberation movements in this crucial period.

The resolution on comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa requests all governments and organizations to continue implementing the program for the international year of mobilization for sanctions against South Africa beyond 1982.

It urges all states, especially Western states concerned and Israel, to cease all collaboration with the South African racist regime and requests the Security Council to consider actions leading to comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa.

UN URGES S. AFRICA TO END NAMIBIA OCCUPATION

[Text] United Nations, December 13 (XINHUA) -- South Africa was once again urged to terminate its illegal occupation of Namibia and let the Namibian people gain their genuine independence, when the United Nations General Assembly began its consideration of the question of Namibia today.

Paul J.F. Lusaka (Zambia), president of the U.N. Council for Namibia, said that 16 years after the United Nations terminated its mandate over Namibia, the apartheid regime in South Africa was still occupying the territory illegally. He declared that his council had remained committed to the implementation of the settlement plan for Namibia's independence as embodied in Security Council Resolution 435 (1978).

He accused South Africa and its allies of their attempts to obstruct the independence of Namibia by linking the independence with the presence of Cuban troops in Angola. "The only parties to the conflict in Namibia are South Africa, as the illegal occupation power on the one hand, and the people of Namibia as represented by the South West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO) on the other," he noted.

Frank Abdullah (Trinidad and Tobago), chairman of the special committee on decolonization, condemned South Africa for obstructing the efforts to bring about genuine independence in Namibia. He said that the South African minority regime continued to resort to force and political strategems to prolong its illegal occupation of Namibia and to deny the oppressed people of that territory their most basic rights and fundamental freedom.

The only political solution for Namibia, he stressed, was one based on the termination of South Africa's illegal occupation and withdrawal of its forces and, secondly, on the free and unfettered exercise by all Namibian people of their right to self-determination and independence within a united Namibia.

Peter Mueshihange, observer from SWAPO, strongly denounced South Africa for its illegal occupation of Namibia and for turning the territory into an armed fortress of its colonial military and police forces. He endorsed the call, both by the African states and the movement of non-aligned countries, for an early meeting of the Security Council to reassume its responsibilities to fix its new time-frame for the implementation of the U.N. plan on Namibia without further delay.

He deplored that the major North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) powers continued to intensify their collaboration with South Africa in disregard of the relevant U.N. resolutions. Because of introducing extraneous issues into the Namibian talks by the United States, he pointed out, "the process of bringing Namibia to independence through a negotiated settlement has now come to a virtual stand-still."

Indian Representative A.A. Rahim said that it had been four years since the Western contact group (U.S., Britain, France, West Germany and Canada) took upon itself the task of implementing the U.N. plan for Namibia.

The international community had waited and watched in the hope that South Africa's attitude of intransigence and blatant defiance might perhaps be curbed by those best in a position to influence it. That hope had thus far been belied, and the signs on the horizon were far from promising, he said.

One of the principal explanations for South Africa's reluctance to release its hold over Namibia, as also perhaps for the ambivalent attitude of some of its supporters, was the enormous economic stake that these countries had in Namibia, he pointed out.

Danish Representative Wilhem Ulrichsen, speaking on behalf of the 10 member states of the European Community, said that in the view of the Ten, the United Nations plan endorsed in Security Council Resolution 435 provided the only possibility of a peaceful transition to internationally recognized independence for Namibia. He urged all parties concerned to facilitate the conclusion of the negotiations without further delay and to refrain from any action which could endanger the agreement reached.

PRC Envoy Denounces S. Africa

OW142021 Beijing XINHUA in English 1921 GMT 14 Dec 82

[Text] United Nations, December 14 (XINHUA) -- China today called for strict arms embargo and effective new sanctions against South Africa, denouncing its authorities as being "the chief obstacle to Namibia's independence" and "the main menace to peace and security in southern Africa."

Speaking at a plenary meeting of the U.N. General Assembly, Chinese Permanent Representative Ling Qing said these measures were necessary for compelling South Africa "to implement all U.N. resolutions and plans on Namibia and enabling Namibia to achieve genuine independence at an early date."

The Chinese representative condemned South Africa for obstructing Namibia's independence by refusing to implement Security Council Resolutions 385 and 435, for cruelly suppressing the national liberation movement there and for using Namibia as a base to carry out its military provocations against and armed incursions into neighboring countries.

Ling Qing also accused the United States of providing South Africa with political, economic, military and other assistance to preserve its vested interests there.

He said for some time now, the United States and South Africa have even attempted to create a new obstacle to the independence of Namibia by demanding that this question be linked with the withdrawal of foreign troops from Angola.

The Chinese Government, as always, firmly supports the Namibian people's struggle against the South African colonial rule and for national liberation and independence, he said.

UN CONDEMNS SOUTH AFRICAN INVASION OF LESOTHO

OW150228 Beijing XINHUA in English 0140 GMT 15 Dec 82

[Text] United Nations, December 14 (XINHUA) -- The U.N. General Assembly today unanimously adopted a Libya-sponsored resolution, denouncing South Africa for its invasion of Lesotho on 9 December, which resulted in the loss of innocent lives and destruction of property.

It commends the Government of Lesotho for its opposition to the apartheid policy of the South African racist regime and for the sanctuary it is giving to South African refugees.

It urges the Security Council to take immediate steps to deter South Africa from repeating its acts of aggression against and destabilization of Lesotho and other neighboring independent African states.

The United States expressed its reservations on the resolution.

CULTURAL EXCHANGE PROGRAM WITH TUNISIA SIGNED

OW141331 Beijing XINHUA in English 1501 GMT 14 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 14 (XINHUA) -- A cultural exchanges program for 1982-1984 was signed here today between the Chinese and Tunisian Governments.

The program is based on the cultural cooperation agreement between the two countries signed in 1979 to promote cultural exchanges and friendly relations. The cultural exchanges program covers education, culture and arts, information and sports.

Lu Zhixian, Chinese vice-minister of culture, and Tunisian Ambassador to China Ridha Bach-Baouab signed the program on behalf of their respective governments. Chinese Minister of Culture Zhu Muzhi was present for the signing.

At the end of the signing ceremony, Lu Zhixian and Bach-Baouab said that the signing of this program marks the furtherance of the friendly relations between China and Tunisia, thus opening broader prospects for enhancing cultural exchanges and cooperation in other fields.

DEMOCRATIC PARTIES SUPPORT CONSTITUTION

[Unattributed report: "The China Democratic League, China Association for Promoting Democracy and Jiusan Society Separately Hold Meetings To Call on Members To Safeguard the Dignity of the Constitution and Ensure Its Implementation"]

[Text] The China Democratic League, the China Association for Promoting Democracy and the Jiusan Society separately held enlarged meetings of their Central Committee Standing Committees. The meetings approved resolutions or issued circulars calling on organizations at all levels and the members in these parties to study, observe and safeguard the new constitution.

On 12 December the Standing Committee of the Central Committee of the China Democratic League held an enlarged meeting and approved "The Resolution of the Democratic League on Studying, Publicizing and Implementing the 'Constitution of the PRC.'" The resolution calls on all members of the league to exemplarily observe the constitution, safeguard its dignity and resolutely fight against any activities that violate it. Shi Liang, chairman of the committee presided over the meeting and vice chairmen of the committee Hu Yuzhi, Chu Tunan, Peng Dixian, Sa Kongliao, Li Wenyi, Fei Xiaotong and Wen Jiasi attended the meeting.

All those who spoke at the meeting were unanimously of the opinion that for the first time the clear stipulation in the constitution on intellectuals being a force to rely on like workers and peasants in developing the cause of socialist construction greatly encouraged and spurred on the league which is formed mainly of intellectuals. The China Democratic League must regard the constitution as the basic principle for its activities and has shouldered the responsibility of safeguarding the dignity of the constitution and ensuring its implementation; therefore it must implement the new constitution with a high sense of being the master.

The 18th enlarged meeting of the Central Committee Standing Committee of the China Association for Promoting Democracy closed on 12 December. The meeting issued a circular calling on the association's members and organizations at all levels to set examples in studying, publicizing, observing and safeguarding the new constitution. Zhou Jianren, chairman of the Central Committee of the association and Ye Sentao, Zhao Puchu, Wu Yifang, Lei Jieqiong, Wu Ruoan and Xu Boxin, vice chairmen of the committee attended the meeting. Many committee members expressed the view that the clause in the new constitution pointing out that the intellectuals, like workers and peasants are a force to rely upon in building socialism, enormously encourages intellectuals. They are firmly determined to exert all their efforts to make contributions to the motherland.

The meeting also approved Xu Boxin's report on the association's affairs.

On 12 December the Jiusan Society held the 17th (enlarged) meeting of its Central Committee Standing Committee in Beijing. The meeting discussed and approved "The Resolution on Calling on All the Members of the Society To Conscientiously Study, Publicize and Implement the New Constitution" and the "Resolution on Calling on All the Members of the Society To Strive To Carry Out the Sixth 5-Year Plan."

Xu Deheng, chairman of the society, gave a speech at the meeting. He said that safeguarding the dignity of the constitution and ensuring its implementation was our sacred duty. He called on the society's organizations at all levels to conscientiously organize the broad ranks of society members to study and publicize the constitution in combination with the study of the 12th congress documents and to make due contributions to the implementation of the constitution.

Pan Shu, Yan Jici, Jin Shanbao and Sun Chengpei, vice chairmen of Jiusan Society, attended the meeting, which was presided over by Vice Chairman Ke Zhao.

STATE COUNCIL ISSUES RULES FOR AIRLINE SECURITY

OW142052 Beijing XINHUA in English 1516 GMT 14 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 14 (XINHUA) -- The State Council has issued a set of security inspection rules on airlines.

In a public notice published today, the State Council orders security inspections to be made of all Chinese and foreign passengers, their luggage and carry-on articles, unless specially exempted. Passengers must pass through inspection doors equipped with metal detectors and their luggage will be X-rayed. Body and luggage searches may be conducted when deemed necessary.

Those refusing inspection will not be allowed to board the plane, the notice adds.

The notice strictly prohibits carrying into the airport or into the plane articles that endanger the flight, including firearms, ammunitions, lethal weapons, as well as inflamable and highly poisonous articles and radioactive articles.

China's judicial organs will "severely punish in accordance with law" persons found guilty of using violence or other methods to hijack a plane, or of damaging planes or civil aviation facilities by explosion and other means, the notice says.

The notice also contains rules for guaranteeing security of airports.

Earlier this year, the Ministry of Public Security published a notice specifying some security rules on domestic airlines, following an abortive attempt by five men to hijack a plane flying from Xian to Shanghai.

The hijackers were overwhelmed by the crew and passengers, and were later executed in Shanghai.

RENMIN RIBAO ON CADRES' STUDY OF SCIENCES

HK140755 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 11 Dec 82 p 4

[Commentator's article: "A Farsighted Measure"]

[Text] In the last 3 years, a very good job has been done by the Ministry of Agriculture, Forestry and Fishery. That is, it asked leading cadres at and above prefecture level to study agricultural science and technology in Beijing for a period of several months in groups. These cadres were able to temporarily leave their daily work and concentrate on studying science. They listened to the lectures given by specialists and personally did some scientific experiements. Four study classes of this kind have been run so far and good results have been achieved. After returning to their work posts, students have noticeably improved their leading work.

The development of agriculture relies on both correct policies and scientific measures. Since the production responsibility system was universally adopted in rural areas, the production enthusiasm of the vast number of peasants has been fully aroused. This has made the problem of agriculture relying on science and more and more prominent. To realize the struggling objective of quadrupling the total annual industrial and agricultural output value by the end of this century, the work in agriculture will still rely on policies and science.

Therefore, the work of training leading cadres at all levels and raising their level of scientific and technological knowledge has become an extremely urgent matter. The earlier we pay attention to it, the more initiative we will gain in our work. The central authorities required the Ministry of Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Fisheries to train leading cadres at and above the prefectural level with firm determination and take the lead in this aspect. This is a farsighted measure.

Our country's agriculture did not develop at a high speed for a long time in the past and even passed through some twists and turns. The fundamental reason for this is that we did not respect science and did not act according to objective laws. This was also related to the fact that many of our leading cadres in charge of agricultural production did not have scientific and agricultural knowledge. Most of these cadres have long-term experience of revolution and rich experience of actual work. For historical reasons some comrades do not have a high education level and more comrades have not received any special education in agricultural scientific and technological knowledge. Though quite a few of them did grow up in the rural areas, what they are familiar with is at most some traditional farming skill prevailing under small farming economy. In the early 1950's, our party did attach importance to the knowledge training of agricultural cadres. Unfortunately, this work was suspended due to the interference of "leftist" ideology. For a certain period, agricultural production was subject to reckless management and was handled by foolhardy practices nearly everywhere. Slogans violating science, such as "as great as a man's aspiration is, so great is the output the land can yield," were in fashion for a while. This is a serious lesson that we should never forget.

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, our agriculture has gradually moved onto the track of acting according to objective laws. A gratifying situation of steady growth has emerged. A genuine upsurge of the masses "studying and using science" has sprung up in the rural areas throughout the country. Since the masses have gone into action, leading agricultural cadres at all levels should take the lead in better studying and using science. All comrades need to study and even those who have worked in the countryside for a long time and have some scientific and technological agricultural knowledge also need to study and to acquire newer knowledge. Without modern knowledge, they will not be able to shoulder leading work in the modernization drive. In the 1960's and 1970's, science and technology, including agricultural science and technology, in economically developed countries advanced by leaps and bounds. But in this period we did not attach importance to the study of modern agricultural science and technology and we have wasted at least 10 or 20 years. We must immediately make up for the time we have lost and rouse ourselves to catch up with advanced world levels. We must genuinely master modern agricultural science and technology and apply them to the concrete conditions of various places in our country so as to effectively speed up agricultural development and to gradually realize agricultural modernization.

When organizing cadres to study modern agricultural science and technology, we should take various forms and make the study both systematic and regular. To make it systematic, we should let agricultural leading cadres have a period of time for concentrating on study by releasing them in turns from their daily work. Agricultural specialists should be invited to give lectures to them so that they can study some basic knowledge in a systematic way. To make the study regular and constant, they should continue their study in connection with their daily work and apply what they have learned to improving their work.

Not only should the agricultural leading cadres at and above the prefectural level be organized to study modern scientific and technological knowledge, but cadres at the county, district, commune and brigade levels should also be organized to study. At present, many provinces, autonomous regions, prefectures and counties have embarked on dealing with this work. This is necessary.

The localities where this work has not been carried out should start to go into action as soon as possible. We should try to generally train cadres at all levels within a few years time. So long as cadres' scientific level is raised, the work of popularizing science among peasant masses will be guaranteed.

LU DINGYI ON INTELLECTUALS' HISTORY IN CHINA

[Article by RENMIN RIBAO reporters Jin Feng [6855 7685] and Yu Huanchun [0151 3562 2504]: "The Whole Party Must Give Serious Attention to Science and Technology and Intellectuals -- Visiting With Lu Dingyi, Vice Chairman of the CPPCC National Committee"]

[Text] Comrade Lu Dingyi is an old fighter of the CPC. From 1945 to before the "Great Cultural Revolution," he was the director of the Propaganda Department of the CPC Central Committee, directing the party's propaganda and education work. At the very beginning of the "Great Cultural Revolution," he was cruelly persecuted by the counter-revolutionary clique of Lin Biao and Jiang Qing. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, he has been elected and added to the number of the members of the CPC Central Committee and later became the vice chairman of the CPPCC National Committee. At the 12th CPC National Congress, he was elected as a member of the Standing Committee of the Central Advisory Commission. He is almost 70 years old; however, he is still concerned about the important affairs of the state and the party. We heard that he had delivered a very important speech concerning the problem of intellectuals at the Fifth Session of the Fifth CPPCC National Committee. Thus, we have made a special visit to him.

When we met, he said with good humor: "People called the Propaganda Department of the CPC Central Committee, of which I was once in charge, the 'palace of hell'." You dare come to the 'palace of hell' to meet me?"

We laughingly replied: "We are the 'little devils' of the 'palace of hell'. We were liberated long ago. Of course we dare come to see you."

We learned from Comrade Lu Dingyi's secretary that Comrade Lu Dingyi still keeps the habit of tense work. Every day, in addition to taking part in some important meetings, he spends his time reading documents, books and materials. Usually he does not go to bed until midnight. Sometimes when he writes something, he does not go to bed until 3 o'clock in the morning. Now he is enthusiastically talking about the features of his speech which he delivered in the group discussion of the CPPCC.

He said: "There are some friends outside the party who misunderstand that the Communist Party pays little attention to the intellectuals because most intellectuals are not Communist Party members. In fact, in our party, there are also intellectuals, experts, scholars and leading cadres who have met with misfortune. A few days ago, I went to see Comrade Sun Zhifang. He is an economist who joined the party long ago. He has special knowledge, however he has not had a successful career. When he was studying in the Soviet Union, Wang Ming called him a "Troskyite suspect.' After the liberation, he was called a 'right deviationist' and a 'revisionist' for a long time. It was not until the 'gang of four' was smashed that he was rehabilitated. His economic theory finally won its victory now and the Central Committee attaches great importance to it. Has Comrade Zhao Siyang not specially mentioned him in his report concerning the Sixth 5-Year Plan?"

"Comrade Sun Zhifang has refuted one of the Soviet Union's very influential economic theories which holds that 'the greater the base, the slower the rate of development.' The theory has prevailed in our country before and it was expressed as the so-called 'tapping the potentialties,' meaning the continual tapping of the potential of the old machines. We can tap the potentialities, however, the potentialities to be tapped are limited.

"Only if we continue to adopt new technologies and carry out technical transformation can we quicken the pace of production. In order to carry out technical transformation, first it is necessary to respect and trust the intellectuals, and second, the cadres and party members must strive to study scientific and technological knowledge and management knowledge. The two are indispensable."

Comrade Lu Dingyi said that the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee has straightened the party's ideological and political lines; the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee has solved the historical problems; the 12th CPC National Congress has solved the problems of the program and party constitution; while the 5th Session of the 5th NPC has passed the new constitution and the Sixth 5-Year Plan. In order to smoothly implement the Sixth 5-Year Plan, it is necessary to pay attention to technical transformation and the intellectuals. A new feature in the new constitution is that in the preamble to the constitution, the intellectuals, workers and peasants are listed together as the backing forces of socialism. All these encouraged and exited him.

Comrade Lu Dingyi graduated from the Department of Electrical Engineering of the Jiao Tong University in Shanghai in 1926. He joined the party during the great revolution. He has for a long time led the work concerning intellectuals. Thus he has a profound understanding of the party's policy toward intellectuals.

Proceeding from the angle of the party's history, he has talked about the different attitudes and viewpoints in treating the intellectuals which have existed in our party for a long time. In addition, he has talked about the role intellectuals play in revolution and construction.

He said: "Since the founding of the CPC in 1921, we principally did our mass work in the cities. We worked among the students, workers and the urban poor. At that time, there were domestic struggles inside the party on the issue of KMT-CPC cooperation. At first, there was the struggle against Zhang Guotao (who was against KMT-CPC cooperation); later, there was the struggle against Chen Duxiu and Peng Shuzhi (who were the capitulationists on the united front). Chen Duxiu did not know the extreme importance of the revolutionary war in our country's revolution. He even did not agree to let Zhu De, who had rich military experience, join the party. Thus he could not but fail."

"After the failure of the 1927 great revolution, the focus of the revolutionary movement shifted to the rural areas. The principal feature of the revolution was the peasants' revolutionary war led by the Communist Party. Inside the party, in the cities or rural areas, three kinds of people emerged. First, those who established the Red Army and the soviet areas emerged. They were almost without exception revolutionary intellectuals. Among the most famous of them were Comrades Mao Zedong, Zhou Enlai, Zhu De, Liu Bocheng, Chen Yi, Liu Zhidan, Fang Zhimin, Peng Bai, Deng Dinghui, Zhang Dingcheng, Xu Jishen and so on. They united with the peasants to arm the peasants and establish peasant associations and a state power of workers and peasants. They made great contributions to the Chinese revolution. Unfortunately, many of them were killed or overthrown by Wang Ming's 'leftist' opportunist line. Liu Zhidan, the last one persecuted, was saved by the Central Red Army led by Comrade Mao Zedong. If he had not been saved, the Central Red Army would not have had its last foothold. Another kind of people who emerged was Wang Ming's dogmatic clique. They held that the peasants are backward and politically pliable. 'There is no Marxism in a ravine.' The party should attack the big cities where there are workers. The party and an army should be developed among the workers. They thought that they themselves were the only '100 percent Bolsheviks;' all other people were 'right opportunists.' There was another kind of people who wavered between the two. The Zunyi meeting had overthrown Wang Ming's clique and corrected the leftist line; the Chinese revolution could then succeed."

"After liberation, in 1956, the socialist transformation of China succeeded. The Eighth CPC National Congress had provided that the party's central task was economic construction. The party had to make a success of construction, unite with the workers, the peasants and the masses of intellectuals. The Central Committee had specially held a meeting on the issue of intellectuals. Later, there were two opposite stands inside the party on the question of whether the party should unite with intellectuals. One stand, held by people including Zhou Enlai, Chen Yi, Nie Rongzhen and Wang Zhen and so on, paid attention to and could unite with the intellectuals. The other stand, held by people including counterrevolutionaries such as Lin Biao, Jiang Qing, Chen Boda, Zhang Chunqiao and so on, said things like 'the more knowledge one has the most reactionary one is;' 'intellectuals are the bourgeoisie,' 'the stinking ninth category' and 'the enemy' who should be overthrown! The 'Great Cultural Revolution' was started with the overthrowing of the intellectuals. There were still others who held views somewhere in between. For example, I was one of these people. I was in charge of the Propaganda Department of the CPC Central Committee and I had made many 'leftist' mistakes in treating the intellectuals; however, in 1956, at a meeting of the party, I had suggested the correct opinion of 'letting a hundred flowers blossom and a hundred schools of thought contend.' The counterrevolutionary harm and danger of Lin Biao and Jiang Qing was thoroughly exposed in the 'Great Cultural Revolution.' Finally, they were overthrown by the whole people. However, many of their pernicious influences have not yet been liquidated."

"Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committe, the party has set things right, paid attention to promoting the role played by the intellectuals and adopted many measures to improve the treatment and status of intellectuals. Comrade Deng Xiaoping has clearly announced that generally speaking, the intellectuals are a part of the working class. People then said: 'the intellectuals have gone to the heaven,' 'the intellectuals are getting cocky.' Many comrades still do not know that such ideas are extremely harmful and disadvantageous to socialist construction. In our party, there are many cadres of peasant origin. It is easy for them to integrate with the workers and peasants. It is difficult for them to integrate with the workers and peasants. It is difficult for them to integrate with the intellectuals and it is even harder for them to become knowledgeable. However, without intellectuals, without an understanding of science and technology, it would be impossible to make a success of our construction and be difficult for us to quadruple the gross annual value of agricultural and industrial production by the year 2000. The counterrevolutionary clique of Lin Biao and Jiang Qing was against knowledge and intellectuals. We must seriously learn a lesson from this and act in a diametrically opposite way. If we pay attention to knowledge and the intellectuals, then we really pay attention to construction. In society, there are people who say that 'the intellectuals have gone to the heaven,' and, in many places, the policy toward intellectuals has not been seriously implemented. This is because inside the party there are cadres who to varying degrees hold such views. Thus, it is necessary to carry out education throughout the whole party and unify understanding."

Comrade Lu Dingyi excitedly said: "We must make the cadres of our party, in particular the cadres of worker or peasant origin, really understand that the Chinese intellectuals are very different from the intellectuals in countries where capitalism is flourishing."

He then mentioned an unusual phase of history: "In the white terror period between 1927 and 1937, the KMT practiced the fascist policy of 'rather wrongly kill 1,000 than let off one.' Inside the party, there are Wang Ming's 'leftist' opportunist line. Consequently, the party organizations in the white areas were almost completely destroyed. In 1935, Li Zhusheng and Sheng Zongliang betrayed the party.

"In Shanghai, the party organizations from the central bureau level to the branch level were all destroyed. At that time, a new force suddenly came to the fore. Nonparty communists such as Soong Ching Ling, Lu Xun, He Xiangning, Shen Junru, Zou Taofen and Tao Xingzhi emerged. They propagated the Communist Party's stand for national salvation and the communist world outlook. They made great contributions to the Chinese revolution. In addition, this shows that at that time, the outstanding Chinese intellectuals (not only the Communist Party members) understood that only communism could save China.

"In 1949, the Chinese revolution won its victory. The Chinese intellectuals were different from the Russian intellectuals in the October Revolution (1917) in that few of them fled to foreign countries. On the contrary, many intellectuals, including famous scientists such as Li Siguang, Wian Xuesen, Wu Zhonghua and so on, abandoned their excellent pay abroad and strived to return to their motherland by every possible means to serve the cause of socialist construction."

"During the 'Great Cultural Revolution,' almost all the intellectuals, including primary school teachers, were attacked and subject to wrong treatment. After their rehabilitation, most of them did not complain. They continued to faithfully work for the people in straitened circumstances. Recently, have not the newspapers reported the advanced deeds of Luo Jianfu and Jiang Zhuying?"

"The Chinese intellectuals are very good. There are not many of them in the world. They should be respected and trusted. They should not be discriminated against again."

"Now there are fewer cases in which people use the big stick and stick labels on the intellectuals. However, there are still many cases in which the correct opinions suggested by them are neglected. It is said that in some places, when the intellectuals make suggestions, the leaders would ask them whether they want to be led by the Communist Party or not. If they still want it, they must 'listen to me.' This is to 'equate the party with oneself.' This is politically or organizationally impermissible."

"The whole party and the whole people should study Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought and transform their world outlook. We do not emphasize that only the intellectuals should do this. Of course, the intellectuals should pay attention to studying so that they can be both Red and expert."

Finally, the comrade earnestly said: "If the whole party and all the cadres can learn from the historic lesson and fully promote the role played by the intellectuals, the socialist construction will certainly be successful and a powerful China can be expected soon."

REN ZHONGYI ON POLICIES ON INTELLECTUALS

[Special dispatch from Beijing by A Shan [7093 1472]: "Ren Zhongyi Speaks on Implementing Policies on Intellectuals"]

[Text] At a press interview held by the Guangdong delegation to the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC on the day before yesterday, Comrade Ren Zhongyi told the reporters that intellectuals are on the whole good. with more intellectuals there will be more knowledge, and various works will develop more rapidly.

When talking about implementing policies on intellectuals, Ren Zhongyi said that actual difficulties in the work and livelihood of intellectuals, and middle-aged intellectuals in particular, could and must certainly be solved as quickly as possible and those which could not be immediately solved must be gradually solved.

However, in implementing policies on intellectuals, the most fundamental aspect is that of solving the question of understanding the intellectuals. In the past, intellectuals were classified as bourgeois. Since 1957, they have been the target of criticism or attack in almost every political movement. And this reached its apogee in the "Great Cultural Revolution" resulting in a very serious damage. For example, the statement "a rebellion of scholars will not succeed in three years" has been used to prove the inability of intellectuals to accomplish anything. As a matter of fact, many leaders of rebellions in Chinese history were intellectuals. Hong Xiuquan was one of them. We must attach great importance to the workers and peasants, but it is incorrect to belittle the role of the intellectuals. In the present constitution it is written: "Socialist construction must rely on the workers, peasants and intellectuals and unite with all the forces that can be united." Intellectuals have become a part of the working class and, in theory, this question has been settled. However, there are still many problems in actual work. For example, there is a tendency of "leftist" close-doorism in some places on the question of intellectuals joining the party. A worker comrade has said to me: Now that the intellectuals have become popular, we have become not so popular and are mentally under pressure. This kind of thinking is incorrect. However, we also cannot blame them because they have been too deeply affected by the criticism and belittling of intellectuals in the past. Even in the plays and literary works of the past, many of the intellectuals were also depicted as conservative and the "rustic" and uneducated people were always smarter than they. Those who studied more would evolve into "bourgeoisie." The existence of such incorrect understanding about intellectuals in the minds of some people has been caused by our propaganda and opinion over the years. How can we possibly blame them!

Ren Zhongyi said: The former practice of only putting stress on promoting cadres from among the workers and peasants and not paying attention to promoting cadres from among the intellectuals is a "leftist" thing. At present, the situation has still not taken a turn for the better. Several years ago, some university graduates were promoted as cadres at the divisional level in counties and factories, but very few of them were promoted as cadres at the departmental level. The unwillingness to promote cadres from among the intellectuals has something to do with the consistent misunderstanding of intellectuals in the past. We must eliminate "leftist" thinking. "Leftist" actions are brought about by "leftist" thinking.

There are many difficulties in the livelihood of the middle-aged intellectuals at present, but they are still so diligent in their work. What they rely on are their consciousness and dedication. I have talked about Jiang Zhuying and Luo Jianfu with some of the older comrades, and we feel very bad. We must keep their ideas alive. To implement their policies, we must get rid of "leftist" thinking. "A gentleman is ready to die for his intimate friend." I am using this old remark in a new sense. As long as we correctly deal with the intellectuals, we will be able to greatly arouse their enthusiasm. This is an extremely important matter in the building of socialist modernization.

DENG LIQUN AT PHILOSOPHY, SOCIAL SCIENCES FORUM

[Text] Beijing, 12 Dec (XINHUA) -- The Chinese Academy of Social Sciences today held a discussion meeting which was attended by experts and scholars of philosophy and social sciences who are not members of the academy. At the meeting more than 40 experts and scholars pointed out that in order to create a new situation for social sciences in our country and make social sciences serve socialist modernization, it is necessary to correct the thinking of "attaching importance to science and paying little attention to liberal arts" in the minds of some people in society and some leading cadres.

Those experts and scholars came from various localities to attend the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC or the Fifth Session of the Fifth CPPCC National Committee. At the discussion meeting, they offered many constructive opinions and made many good suggestions on how to fulfill the tasks of developing philosophy and social sciences as prescribed in the state Sixth 5-Year Plan. Many of them mentioned that at present some people in society are inclined to "attach importance to science and pay little attention to liberal arts" and some people even consider social sciences "outmoded." They pointed out: A country and a nation, in order to prosper and develop, must not overlook social sciences. We cannot create a new situation for socialist modernization without promoting the development of social sciences. Philosophy and social sciences have now been included in the Sixth 5-Year Plan for national economic and social development. This has fully showed us that the party and the state have paid good attention to social sciences.

Professor Zhou Gucheng said: "'Attaching importance to science and paying little attention to liberal arts' has become a thing of the past and now we should work hard against time. Although I am quite old, I will strive to do a good job in research work and make contributions to ward promoting socialist modernization."

The experts and scholars attending the discussion meeting expressed their satisfaction over the recently formulated Sixth 5-Year Plan which calls for developing philosophy and social sciences in the whole country. They said: So long as we follow the guidelines of the 12th CPC National Congress, develop the superiority of China's social sciences, adhere to the guiding principle of Marxism-Leninism and Mao Zedong Thought, persist in linking theory with practice, implement the policy of "letting a hundred flowers blossom and a hundred schools of thought contend" and advance step by step in a solid manner, we can certainly fulfill the tasks for developing philosophy and social sciences set forth by the Sixth 5-Year Plan and gradually establish a system of philosophy and social sciences with Chinese characteristics.

Ma Hong, president of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences, expressed his appreciation of the opinions and suggestions made by the experts and scholars on behalf of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences. He said: These opinions and suggestions are very good. They can be used as reference in implementing the Sixth 5-Year Plan. In the days to come, the plan for developing philosophy and social sciences will be implemented in various fields. I hope you experts and scholars and various societies and research institutes associated with you will actively take part in developing philosophy and social sciences, make suggestions and be our advisers.

Deng Liqun, member of the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee and director of the Propaganda Department of the CPC Central Committee, attended and spoke at the discussion meeting. He hoped that experts engaged in social sciences research work would take care of their health, maintain good physical condition and use their knowledge to help teach the younger generation.

The discussion meeting was presided over by Mei Yi, secretary general of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences. Sun Shangqing, deputy secretary general of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences, spoke at the meeting on a plan and initial arrangements for promoting the development of philosophy and social sciences.

Also speaking at the meeting were Rong Bao, Wu Liangping, Wu Fuheng, Zhang Bilai, Wu Dakun, Fang Guoyu and Wu Tingqiu.

NI ZHIFU, CHEN WEIDA SEE PLAY IN TIANJIN

SK141220 Tianjin TIANJIN RIBAO in Chinese 13 Nov 82

[Text] A full-length modern drama "Life on Earth" staged by the Liaoning people's art theater with noted movie actor Li Moran as the protagonist is warmly welcomed by the masses of audiences.

Last night, Ni Zhifu, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee and chairman of the All-China Federation of Trade Unions, Chen Weida, first secretary of the Tianjin Municipal CPC Committee, Zhang Zaiwang, permanent secretary of the Tianjin Municipal CPC Committee, and Li Ruihuan, acting mayor, watched the drama at the people's theater and, after the performance, mounted the rostrum to meet with the performers. Ni Zhifu and Chen Weida warmly praised the drama and said to Li Moran: "This is a good drama which timely reflects real life." Comrade Li Ruihuan said: "The audience watched your performance attentively and checked themselves against the various characters in the play. Thank you for bringing a good play to us Tianjin people."

CPPCC DEPUTY SECRETARY GENERAL GAN CISEN DIES

[Text] Beijing, 9 Dec (XINHUA) -- Gan Cisen, member of the Standing Committee of the CPPCC National Committee, deputy secretary general of the CPPCC National Committee, vice chairman and secretary general of the Central Committee of the Revolutionary Committee of the Chinese Kuomintang, suddenly fell ill in Beijing on the night of 8 December. All rescue measures proved ineffective and he unfortunately passed away early this morning at the age of 68.

Comrade Gan Cisen was a modern writer and economist. He actively took part in progressive activities since his youth. He did many useful things in the movement to resist Japanese aggression and save the country and in the democratic movement. After the founding of New China, he was a director of a department of the People's Control Commission of the Government Administration Council of the Central People's Government of the People's Republic of China, assistant minister of the control department, deputy secretary general of the Central Committee of the Revolutionary Committee of the Chinese Kuomintang and deputy director of the Propaganda Department. [as received] He made important contributions to consolidating and developing the united front work.

Following his death, responsible persons of departments concerned including Liu Lantao, Qu Wu, Peng Youjin, Li Ding, Yang Zhengmin, Chen Xin, Li Xiaolu, Huang Dingchen, Wu Maosun and Jia Yibin called on Comrade Gan Cisen's relatives and expressed their deep sorrow over his death.

ANNUAL PLANS FOR 57 INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTS FULFILLED

[Text] Beijing, 9 Dec (XINHUA) -- XINHUA reporters have learned from the State Statistical Bureau that the annual production plans of 57 of the 100 major industrial products incorporated in the national plan were overfulfilled at the end of November, 1 month ahead of time. These products include sewing machines, television sets, recorders, cameras, cloth, wool fabric, cigarettes, paper, natural gas, pig iron, steel and steel products.

A number of products that were in short supply, such as chemical fertilizers, sodium carbonate, caustic soda, cement and plate glass, registered fairly large margin increases.

Their annual production plans were overfulfilled from 1 to 18 percent and were fulfilled 1 month or more ahead of time. More gratifying is the fact that energy production has also exceeded the production target set by the national plan. Total energy output reached 595 million dun (in terms of standard coal) during the first 11 months this year, representing 95 percent of the annual target and up 5 percent from the same period last year. Within it, coal output was 588 million dun while power output was 296.1 billion kWh, both more than (?16) percent higher than that of the same period last year.

China's industrial production has been developing steadily since the beginning of this year. Total industrial output value for the first 11 months amounted to 505.2 billion yuan, up 7.7 percent from that of the same period last year. The output value of light industry was 254.5 billion yuan, up 6 percent, while that of heavy industry was 250.7 billion yuan, up 9.5 percent.

It is worth pointing out that among the overfulfilled products, some products were in the category of "limited production" and some were old-model machinery with low energy efficiency, such as motor vehicles and internal combustion engines. The number of these products produced far exceeded what was forecast in the national plan. Among light industrial products, certain models of bicycles, sewing machines, wristwatches and television sets which sell poorly also greatly exceeded their targets. Departments concerned pointed out that this phenomenon should arouse the concern of all localities.

STATE ECONOMIC COMMISSION HOLDS WORK CONFERENCE

Yuan Baohua on Output

OW101149 Beijing XINHUA in English 1506 GMT 8 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 8 (XINHUA) -- China's gross industrial output value is expected to rise more than 6 percent this year, Yuan Baohua, vice-minister of the State Economic Commission, said here today.

Addressing a work conference called by the commission, the vice-minister said China's industrial production has had fairly balanced growth this year. Total industrial output value rose by 7.7 percent in the January-November period above the same 1981 period (registering a total output value of more than 500,000 million yuan). The output value of light industry went up 6 percent, while that of heavy industry, 9.5 percent, Yuan Baohua said.

Yuan Baohua said great efforts are needed to secure a 4 or 5 percent growth rate next year on the basis of what have been achieved this year.

He proposed the following measures for China's industrial and communications departments:

-- To work out concrete plans and make preparations for next year's production and, in particular, take measures to ensure the supply of energy and raw materials. Emphasis should be laid on production of farming equipment and building materials for the construction of rural housing. The production of consumer goods should be done well, for China has a large domestic market.

-- To improve the production of household utensils and other articles of daily use.

-- To make products that are inexpensive, of good quality and have a mass appeal, and coordinate industrial production and commerce

Yuan Baohua said cadres should be organized by various ministries and departments to conduct research and investigations in the provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions to help increase production in the first quarter of 1983.

1983 Production Stressed

[Text] Beijing, 8 Dec (XINHUA) -- The State Economic Commission today urged leading cadres of the industrial and transportation departments in all localities to go down to grassroots units, join workers there in taking concerted measures and work hard to promote industrial production and transportation service for the first quarter of 1983.

A responsible person of the State Economic Commission spoke this morning at a production work meeting of leading members of the State Council's economic departments concerned. He said that Premier Zhao Ziyang announced at the Fifth NPC's Fifth Session plans to increase by 4 percent this country's industrial production next year and strive to achieve a 5-percent increase. This target is not high, but will require strenuous efforts to attain it, because industrial production for this year will surpass the original plan and is expected to increase by more than 6 percent. With the base figure raised, a continuous growth will not come so easy. Shortages of energy supply and transportation means will become still more tense due to the arrival of the bitter cold season and the expected increases in passenger transport volume during the New Year's Day-Spring Festival period. With the requirement of raising economic results stressed, industrial production and transport service will face still more difficulties. Leading comrades of our industrial and transport departments should bear this in mind and make early arrangements for the first quarter of next year.

He said: Leading comrades of the party Central Committee and the State Council have repeatedly stressed that cadres engaged in economic work should have in their possession firsthand information and should conduct investigations and studies at grassroots levels while summing up experiences and solving problems. Leading comrades of the industrial and transport departments in various localities should act in accordance with this instruction, go to industrial and transport enterprises and join the workers there in solving problems related to industry and transportation. Special attention should be paid to big enterprises and efforts are needed to promote work. It is necessary to make early arrangements for production in the first quarter of next year, promote production of small articles for daily use, and strengthen transport and communications which is a weak link in our national economy. Cooperation and coordination between industry and commerce should be strengthened and efforts are needed in carrying out winter proofing and antifreeze work.

He said that administrative restructuring is underway in the provinces, autonomous regions and municipalities directly under the central government and the leading bodies of many enterprises are being readjusted. All these are completely necessary and should in no way effect exercising leadership over production. In carrying out administrative restructuring, all localities should set up special work groups to promote industrial production and transport service so that the restructuring process and our industrial production and transport operations will not hamper but promote each other.

Lu Dong on Technology

[Excerpts] Beijing, 8 Dec (XINHUA) -- In order to speed up technological progress, the State Economic Commission recently proposed the following four points: it is necessary to firmly shift the guilding principle for economic work to relying on technological progress; it is necessary to formulate specific policies for various trades' technology and equipment; it is necessary to grasp well the concrete work of promoting technological improvement; and it is necessary to draw up a good plan and policy and strengthen organizational leadership.

The above was mentioned by Lu Dong, vice minister in charge of the State Economic Commission, at a meeting on production work today. Lu Dong said: We must clearly understand that in order to develop our economy we must rely on scientific and technological improvements. This is a fundamental and principled matter. The grand target of quadrupling the gross annual value of industrial and agricultural production between 1981 and the end of this century is not merely a quantitative concept. We must strive to raise the level of production. If we remain at the present level of backward technology, we won't be able to accomplish the task of quadrupling the gross annual value of industrial and agricultural production by the end of this century. Therefore, we must rely on progress in science and technology to raise economic results and speed up economic development.

Lu Dong called on scientific and technological workers to actively gear their work to the needs of economic construction. He said that scientific research work must not be divorced from the needs of economic construction and serve academic purpose only.

Lu Dong also stressed that all enterprises must place scientific and technological work in an important place and immediately take effective measures to promote scientific and technological work. He emphatically pointed out that in order to improve technology we must rely on technical cadres and scientific and technical personnel.

Lu Dong put forward the following specific plan to improve technology:

It is necessary to adopt international standards, organize our forces to solve technological difficulties, vigorously develop new products, actively import new technology, promote the use of new technology, strive to raise the quality of products, improve our technology in conserving energy, actively promote the use of computers, set up technological development centers for various trades, promote the widespread use of new technology, establish technological consulting services, make active preparations for implementing the patent system, encourage the masses to make reasonable suggestions and engage in activities for technical innovations and strengthen training work for staff members and workers.

Lu Dong pointed out: In order to promote technological improvement, it is necessary to study and formulate various policies and regulations including regulations for awarding the invention of new technology and new products, regulations for pricing in accordance with the quality of products and setting higher prices for better products, regulations for increasing the depreciation rate, regulations for awarding outstanding designs, regulations for gradually eliminating and banning the use of backward products and policies for solving the problems of closing down or combining various enterprises which are technologically backward.

In conclusion, Lu Dong emphatically pointed out: The work of promoting technological improvement should be done in the spirit of filling in the links to complete a chain. Various units of our country are generally divided into planning, production, capital construction and scientific and technological departments. Without good organizational work, those departments cannot coordinate their work well and will be out of line with each other. Some departments may lag behind other departments, resulting in a waste of time and inefficiency. Therefore, the leading comrades of various units must personally lead the work and organize various departments and organizations to work in coordination so as to achieve faster and better results.

CHINA DAILY REPORTS INCREASED INDUSTRIAL OUTPUT

[Text] China's total industrial output value in the January-November period of this year reached 505.2 billion yuan, 7.7 per cent higher than the same period of 1981, the CHINA FINANCE AND TRADE JOURNAL reported yesterday.

Gross industrial output value for the whole of 1982 is expected to rise more than 6 per cent this year, according to Vice-Minister of the State Economic Commission Yuan Baohua.

The newspaper said that the country's industrial production was increasing steadily in the first 11 months of this year.

The total output value of light industry during this period reached 254.5 billion yuan while that of the heavy industry reached 250.7 billion yuan, nearly 6 per cent and 9.5 per cent respectively more than that of the same period of last year.

In November alone, it said the nation's industrial output value stood at 49 billion yuan, the monthly record of this year.

The figure is 4.8 per cent higher than that of October and 3.7 per cent higher than that of the same month last year.

Satisfactory

The paper said that energy production in the first 11 months of this year was also satisfactory.

The total output of the energy industry during this period equalled 595 million tons of standard coal, which amounted to 95.2 per cent of this year's production quota.

In the January to November period kilowatt hours coal output totalled 589 million tons, oil 93.32 million tons and electricity 296.1 billion kilowatt hours.

Among the 100 major industrial products, such as sewing machines, TV sets, cameras, cloth, silk, paper, steel products, fertilizers, cement, trucks and engines, 57 kinds had already fulfilled their yearly quotas by the end of last month, the paper said.

Meanwhile, the paper said, the total output of chemical fertilizers reached 11.98 million tons, 4.3 per cent more than the same period of 1981.

Although industrial production is still progressing well, some consumer goods have become overstocked and factories in northeast, north and east China are suffering from power supply shortages.

However, all the departments concerned are now trying to work out practical measures to solve these problems, the paper added.

EQUIPMENT MANAGEMENT ASSOCIATION ESTABLISHED

OW110854 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0834 GMT 9 Dec 82

[Text] Tianjin, 9 Dec (XINHUA) -- The Equipment Management Association of China was established in Tianjin today.

Yuan Baohua, vice minister in charge of the State Economic Commission, presided over the inauguration meeting. Hao Jianxiu, alternate member of the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee, and Hu Juewen, vice chairman of the NPC Standing Committee, attended the meeting and delivered speeches. Hu Ziang, vice chairman of the CPPCC National Committee, sent a representative to deliver a written statement to the meeting.

The Equipment Management Association of China is a mass organization under the leadership of the State Economic Commission. It is formed by the responsible persons of related departments, enterprises and undertakings, professors, scholars and experts as well as those comrades with practical work experience. Its main task and important activities are carried out under the guidance of the State Economic Commission. Its task is to study the theories, policies and measures with regard to equipment management, exchange and promote the advanced experiences in improving work on equipment management and transforming equipment and in introducing outstanding achievements in research in order to continuously raise the economic results in equipment management and maintenance work.

The Equipment Management Association of China invited Hu Juewen, vice chairman of the NPC Standing Committee who had always concerned himself over equipment management work and known a great deal about equipment management, as the association's honorary chairman; and Hu Ziang and economist Ma Hong as its advisers.

The association elected Ma Yi, vice minister in charge of the State Economic Commission, as its chairman and Xu Chi, Zou Jiahua, Li Ming, Zhang Peng, Li Tianxiang, Zhao Minsheng, Guan Yeshan, Zhao Weichen, Li Zongtang and Zheng Shuangxi as vice chairmen.

'RADIO BEIJING' NAME TO BE USED FROM 1 JAN

[Text] Beijing, December 14 (XINHUA) -- The name of "Radio Peking" will be changed to "Radio Beijing" starting from January 1, 1983, according to the station.

According to a decision made by China's State Council, the Chinese phonetic alphabet system has been adopted since 1979 instead of the Wade-Giles spelling in romanization of Chinese place and personal names. But, the name "Radio Peking" was temporarily retained to allow listeners abroad to gradually get used to the new romanization of Chinese names and places.

The station's other language services in French, Hindi, Urdu, Sinhalese, Hausa and Swahili will also use Beijing instead of Peking.

ZHEJIANG WORKERS PAPER WILL RESUME PUBLICATION

OW120942 Hangzhou ZHEJIANG RIBAO in Chinese 28 Nov 82 p 1

[Text] With approval by the Zhejiang Provincial CPC Committee, ZHEJIANG GONGREN BAO [ZHEJIANG WORKERS PAPER] will resume publication on 1 January 1983.

ZHEJIANG GONGREN BAO was a newspaper run by the Zhejiang provincial trade union council for staff members and workers in Zhejiang Province and was inaugurated on 7 December 1949. It ceased publication on 5 February 1961.

ZHEJIANG GONGREN BAO will be a quarto newspaper as before. It will be published once a week for a period and changed to twice a week and then later a daily.

The main purposes of the paper are as follows: Under the leadership of the provincial party committee, the paper will vigorously create public opinions for promoting the building of socialist material and spiritual civilization, raising the consciousness of the broad masses of staff members and workers for communism and mobilizing and organizing staff members and workers of the whole province to plunge themselves into the great struggle of building the four modernizations and fulfilling various tasks set forth by the party.

ZHEJIANG GONGREN BAO will adhere to the policy of working for the workers, writing about the workers, publishing workers' writings and reading by the workers. The broad masses of staff members and workers will be its principal readers. Reports on building socialist material and spiritual civilization by the staff members and workers and on advanced people will be the paper's main contents. The paper will use writings on things of interest to and welcomed by the staff members and workers as its subject matter and consider protecting the just rights and reflecting the reasonable opinions of the staff members and workers as its own duty.

At present, post offices in various localities have begun accepting readers' subscriptions to ZHEJIANG GONGREN BAO.

AGRONOMIST FORESEES CHANGES IN AGRICULTURE

OW120919 Beijing XINHUA in English 0245 GMT 10 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 10 (XINHUA) -- Lu Liangshu, president of the Chinese Academy of Agricultural Sciences, today predicted a substantial change in the composition of China's agriculture by the end of the century.

He said in an interview with XINHUA that by the year 2000 about two-thirds of China's agricultural output value will come from forestry, animal husbandry, sideline occupations and fisheries, and the rest from cultivated crops.

This would be a complete reversal of the ratio for 1979, when crop cultivation accounted for two-thirds of the output value, he pointed out.

A rational proportion between crop cultivation, forestry, animal husbandry, side occupations and fishery is a matter of prime importance, the 57-year-old agronomist said. And the proportion must vary for different farming zones where conditions are different.

As a deputy to the National People's Congress, he said Premier Zhao Ziyang correctly stressed the need to improve economic results in his report on China's Sixth Five-Year Plan.

In agriculture, Lu Liangshu said, this calls for a diversification of the rural economy while ensuring the growth of grain production. "If we fix our eyes only on our 100 million hectares of farmland, it would be difficult to increase farm output value by big margins," he said. "We must make full use of mountain slopes, hills, grasslands and water surface."

China gained an average annual increase of 2.4 percent in grain output over the past 30 years and more. An estimate by the Academy of Agricultural Sciences puts China's grain output in 1985 at 360 million tons, with an annual increase of 5.5 million tons. It may reach 460 million tons or even 500 million tons by the year 2000.

"This estimate is well-founded," Lu Liangshu said. "The key to achieving the targets lies in the development of agricultural sciences."

Before 2000, he said, China must renew the strains of its major grain crops twice, simultaneous with improvement in the cropping system and agro-techniques, expansion of irrigated areas and measures to increase the fertility of soil. Prevention of insect pests and plant diseases must be stepped up to reduce crop losses by at least five percent.

He said scientists at his academy predict that in 2000 China's output of meat may quadruple that of 1979 and there will be big increases in the output of eggs and dairy products.

"To achieve our goal, we must improve our agricultural technique popularization network so that the results of research may reach the peasants quickly," Lu Liangshu stressed. "We must also develop education in rural areas and spend more on agriculture, particularly on agricultural sciences."

RICE EXPERT AIMS AT NEW, BETTER TARGET

OW120921 Beijing XINHUA in English 0341 GMT 10 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 10 (XINHUA) -- Yuan Longping, a leading Chinese rice expert, said today that he and his colleagues are cultivating another rice strain that may give higher yield and keep its hybrid vigor for a longer period.

Fifty-two-year-old Yuan Longping is a research fellow of the Hunan Academy of Agricultural Sciences. A hybrid rice strain he and his colleagues bred has won a special-class national science award.

He said the present strain's hybrid vigor lasts only one generation. Seeds have to be prepared every year and this would take up a lot of manpower and space. "We wish to improve it," he said.

Yuan Longping is here attending the current session of the National People's Congress. He said he fully agrees with Premier Zhao Ziyang's statement about the importance of science and technology for the development of agriculture.

"Scientific farming is key to higher output," Yuan Longping said. "For instance, the replacement of tall-stalk rice by short-stalk rice in the 60's boosted per-hectare yield in China and elsewhere from around four tons to about six tons."

But facts in the ensuing years showed that the potential of output increase through morphological changes alone is limited, he added. "Only by integrating morphological and physiological changes did we succeed in raising per-hectare yield to about 7.5 tons. This represented another breakthrough in rice cultivation."

Yuan Longping said: "China is a leading rice producer in the world, but each person has only one-thirtieth of a hectare of paddy fields on the average. To ensure a rapid increase in output, we must rely on scientific farming."

In 1973, Yuan and his colleagues succeeded in cultivating a new hybrid rice strain, which gives a much higher yield than conventional fine strains. The area sown to the new strain in 1982 totalled 5.7 million hectares, accounting for 17 percent of China's total paddy fields. This measure alone is expected to bring in 4.5 million tons more rice for the country.

The Chinese Government issued a special class award to Yuan and his colleagues last year in recognition of their outstanding contribution. The Ministry of Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Fishery plans to expand the area sown to that strain to 6.7 million hectares in 1983 and to 10 million hectares in 1985.

Yuan Longping disclosed that his team has tried out some new combinations which, in addition to high yield, have shown greater resistance to insect pests and plant diseases. This will help reduce production costs and pollution, because less insecticides will be needed. Moreover, the new strain has a shorter growing period (about 120 days), making it a suitable choice for double cropping.

FAMILY PLANNING PROPAGANDA MONTH CIRCULAR ISSUED

[Text] Beijing, 9 Dec (XINHUA) -- On 6 December, the CPC Central Committee's Propaganda Department, the Chinese PLA's General Political Department, the State Family Planning Commission, the Ministry of Public Health, the Ministry of Culture, the Ministry of Radio and Television, the All-China Federation Trade Unions, the CYL Central Committee and the All-China Women's Federation jointly issued a circular on carrying out national family planning propaganda month activities. The circular pointed out that, to effectively control the momentum of next year's population growth and to create a new situation in family planning work, activities will be carried out throughout the country under a family planning propaganda month from New Year's Day to the Spring Festival next year, with emphasis on the rural areas.

The circular said: To fulfill the target of population control as specified by the 12th CPC National Congress, the country's yearly net population increase must be controlled at 10.37 million and the rate of natural yearly average increase must not be allowed to exceed 0.95 percent. This will be a very difficult task which must be fulfilled with great efforts. Therefore, family planning work should never be slackened at any rate, especially in the first 10 years and the next 3 years in paticular. This is a major issue that has a bearing on our country's task of building a high degree of socialist material and spiritual civilization. It is hoped that departments of propaganda, education, family planning, culture, public health, trade unions, CYL and women's federations at all levels will make it mandatory to conscientiously grasp the family planning propaganda month activities and carry out the activities well.

The propaganda month should be based on the guidelines of the 12th CPC National Congress, with the principle that propaganda on family planning is the focal point of our country's fundamental national policy. It should succeed in making the matter known to every household and understandable to everyone.

It should enable leading cadres at all levels to enhance their understanding of the important strategic significance of implementing family planning and to truly succeed in "grasping the two kinds of production at the same time" and establish the "two kinds of responsibility system" at the same time. It should enable party members, CYL members and cadres to truly succeed in "taking the lead in three things," namely, taking the lead in doing propaganda, taking the lead in implementing family planning and taking the lead in doing away with feudal ideology. It should make it known to the broad masses, especially every couple of child-bearing age in the rural areas, that implemenation of family planning is a fundamental national policy. It should enable them to understand the knowledge about birth control and eugenics so that they may consciously adhere to late marriage, late childbirth, fewer children and eugenics and implement birth control measures. It should discover and bring up the old and the new activists in family planning work, build a backbone family planning contingent and a propaganda network and establish a necessary and permanent working system.

The circular demanded: During the propaganda month activities, principal leading comrades of the party, government and army at all levels should personally conduct propaganda and lectures among the cadres and masses; newspapers, radio and television stations should issue editorials, commentaries, news reports and other related articles; and loudspeaker, film, television, slide projector, theatrical, folk art, musical and other propaganda, literary and art units should use all kinds of propaganda forms to propagate family planning. Trade unions, CYL committees, women's federations, public health, educational, railway, communications, commercial, service enterprises and other related departments should mobilize their forces to extensively carry out propaganda education. At the same time, they should vigorously commend and propagate advanced units and personages in the implementation of family planning. Besides doing a good job in propaganda work as a foundation, it is necessary to implement planned parenthood and birth control measures and to protect female babies and the women who gave birth to girls from prejudice and mistreatment.

SHANGHAI DEMOCRATIC PARTIES HAIL CONSTITUTION

OW132321 Shanghai City Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 6 Dec 82

[Text] The Shanghai Municipal Committee of the China Democratic League, the Shanghai Municipal Committee of the Chinese Peasants and Workers Democratic Party, the Shanghai Branch of the Taiwan Democratic Self-Government League and the Shanghai Association of Taiwan Compatriots separately held a discussion meetings on 6 December to warmly celebrate the promulgation and implementation of the new constitution.

At their meeting, members of the China Democratic League held that members of democratic parties are dutybound to study, publicize and defend the new constitution.

Members of the Chinese Peasants and Workers Democratic Party said at their meeting: Now is an excellent opportunity for the democratic parties and intellectuals to play their roles. We should do more work for the implementation of the new constitution.

Responsible persons of the Shanghai Branch of the Taiwan Democratic Self-Government League and the Shanghai Association of Taiwan Compatriots and Taiwan compatriots from various circles in Shanghai pointed out: The stipulation in the new constitution that when necessary the state may establish special administrative regions is completely in keeping with the wishes and interests of Taiwan compatriots and embodies the solicitude and care of the government for the people of Taiwan. We should make greater contributions to the motherland's four modernizations and the great cause of the motherland's reunification.

Some returned overseas Chinese in Shanghai also held a meeting on 5 December to celebrate the promulgation of the new constitution. (Shen Guang), vice chairman of the Shanghai Municipal Federation of Returned Overseas Chinese; (Zhou Bichu), an old returned overseas Chinese painter; (Tang Fengxiang), a returned overseas Chinese from Japan; and (Liao Zhixin), a municipal model worker and returned overseas Chinese from Indonesia, cited articles in the new constitution concerning the protection of overseas Chinese and their families. They deeply felt the solicitude of the great socialist motherland for its children abroad and their relatives. They said with excitement: Returned overseas Chinese and families of overseas Chinese at home are very happy about the promulgation of the new constitution as are Chinese nationals residing abroad.

GUANGDONG'S REN ZHONGYI VIEWS OPEN-DOOR POLICY

[Newsletter by reporter Chen Min [7115 2404]: "The Open-Door Policy Is Beneficial to the Country, to the People and to the Modernization Effort -- Visiting NPC Deputies Ren Zhongyi, Liu Tianfu and Li Jianzhen" -- capitalized passages published in boldface]

[Text] In his report on the revised draft constitution, Comrade Peng Zhen said: "Opening the country to the world under the principle of maintaining independence and keeping the initiative in our own hands is a policy that our country has carried out and will persistently uphold." At the recent session of the NPC, Comrade Zhao Ziyang pointed out: We must enlarge technical exchanges with foreign countries in order to increase our ability to rely upon our own resources. Opening our country to the world has become an important national policy. What is the significance or role of the open-door policy as far as our national construction and the livelihood of the people are concerned? Guangdong has led the way in carrying out the open-door policy and in developing economic, technical and cultural exchanges. Everyone wants to know about its conditions, its experiences and its way of thinking. For this reason, this reporter visited NPC Deputies Comrade Ren Zhongyi, first secretary of the Guangdong Provincial CPC Committee; Comrade Liu Tianfu, governor of Guangdong; and Comrade Li Jianzhen, chairman of the standing committee of the provincial people's congress and secretary of the Guangdong Provincial Commission for Discipline Inspection.

THE THRIVING GROWTH OF MANKIND'S ECONOMY AND CULTURE IN THE COURSE OF EXCHANGE

Comrade Ren Zhongyi began by saying: "You may have already noted my speech at the meeting of the Hong Kong and Macao group. Now, some people at home and abroad still have various concerns about our open-door policy. My speech was given with this in mind." He said: "Let me begin with history. Mankind's economy and culture have thrived only in the course of exchange. The Tang Dynasty of our country had a period marked by vigorous economic and cultural development. It was called the thriving Tang. It also coincided with the peak of our exchanges with foreign countries. The cultures of India, the Middle East and Europe were brought to China and our culture was also spread abroad. Was there not the silk road? Regarding Japan, this is a nation good at absorbing foreign cultures. In ancient times it was greatly influenced by the culture of our Tang Dynasty. After the Meiji restoration, it drew on Western culture. Since the end of World War II, it has again liberally introduced advanced science and technology from other parts of the world. Only thus has Japan become what it is today. The 'May 4th Movement' was the beginning of our new cultural movement. Were not Mr Sai [6357] (science) and Mr De [1795] (democracy) invited from abroad? Marxism-Leninism as the theoretical basis now guiding our thinking was also introduced from abroad. The advanced science and technology of today's world represent the wealth of all mankind, including ourselves. We have a right to draw on this wealth and also the responsibility to add to human wealth. Are not the four great inventions of our ancient China, the revolutionary experiences of today's China and Mao Zedong Thought contributions to mankind? Especially today, in the 1980's, only by enlarging these exchanges can we speed up the pace of our construction. The experience of Guangdong Province also shows that where the door is kept wide open to the world, economic and cultural development is quicker. Where the door is closed, development is slower. In the past, imperialism imposed a blockade on us, interfering with our exchanges with foreign countries.

"Now we have smashed through the blockade. We have no reason to further shut ourselves out from the world, failing to take full advantage of the favorable conditions available with the door open. We must resolutely fight foreign aggression and the invasion of decadent capitalist thinking. But, we must develop economic, technical and cultural exchanges with foreign countries and be firm and unswerving in implementing an open-door policy. Our slogan is to fight what is filthy but not what is foreign."

Comrade Ren Zhongyi said: "Some comrades are afraid to mix with foreigners. In fact, Chairman Mao said long ago: We look upon others as foreigners; do others not also regard us as foreigners?"

Comrade Ren Zhongyi stopped here and rose to say: "The party Central Committee called on us to exploit two kinds of resources: domestic and international; and acquire two sets of skills: in both national construction and the development of economic relations with foreign countries. Now the world situation greatly favors us. Many countries are in an economic crisis. Many people want to trade with us. The contemporary Chinese have the responsibility to work for their own country in creating a new situation." His words reminded me that this college student of the period of the "December 9th movement" had contributed toward creating a new situation in a patriotic movement under the leadership of the party and toward continuously expanding revolutionary forces during the war years. Now this fighter of over 60 (many secretaries of our provincial party committee as old as he) is again shouldering a heavy burden in an effort to rejuvenate China.

TO OPEN THE DOOR IS TO INCREASE THE ABILITY TO RELY ON OUR OWN RESOURCES

What changes will a thriving economy sought through opening the door bring to Guandgong? What are the advantages?

Comrade Liu Tianfu, governor of the province, is an old comrade who has fought in Guangdong for several decades. Touching on the achievements scored by Guangdong in the past 3 years through introducing an open-door policy, taking flexible measures and experimenting with a special economic zone, he said happily: Let me first provide you with some figures: Guangdong was once a very affluent place. But 3 years ago the growth rate of its total industrial and agricultural output value was lower than the average national figure. Now, in the past 3 years, total national industrial and agricultural output value has shown an average annual increase of 6.7 percent, but Guangdong has claimed an increase of 7.4 percent, exceeding the national average rate of growth. The increased income obtained by the peasants in these 3 years approached the total achieved from 1956-1976, a 3 years being the equivalent of 20 years. Workers' income also showed a great increase. The average pay for workers in 1981 showed an increase of 40 percent compared with 1978. Taking into account an increase in commodity prices, the workers's actual income rose 14.8 percent. In 3 years, the whole province arranged work for 1.34 million people. Toward the end of last year, the whole province had basically solved the employment problem left over from the past.

Comrade Liu Tianfu said: "The special economic zones are considered to have changed the most quickly. Industrial output value in special zones rose 150 percent in 3 years. Shenzhen and Zhuhai were once deserted, remote counties. Now they have become initially fair-sized cities. Shekou of Shenzhen, in particular, has changed in just 2 years from an expanse of desolate beach into a thriving industrial port."

I asked: Would the introduction of the open-door policy weaken our ability to rely upon our own resources? This was a problem of concern to some people.

Comrade Liu Tianfu smiled and then replied: Judging from the experience of our Guangdong Province, flexible measures, such as "three cases of supply and one case of compensation" (processing raw materials supplied, assembling parts supplied and processing based on samples supplied, and compensatory trade), and so forth, can be equated with the Chinese saying: "One move that serves several purposes."

Then Comrade Liu Tianfu spelled out the advantages, which he counted on his fingers, one by one: 1) We have brought foreign investment to our country, adding to funds for construction. In the past 3 years, the whole province signed more than 14,000 contracts of various kinds with foreign businessmen. Of over $2.6 billion provided for in the contracts, more than $550 million has been made available. 2) We have introduced advanced technology and equipment. In the past 3 years, we have obtained more than 100,000 units or sets of equipment, improving our province's industrial and technical levels and stimulating the technical transformation of existing enterprises. Some advanced technical equipment has filled gaps in our province's supplies, bringing about gratifying changes in the features of our province's industry and technology. For example, the electronics industry was in the very weak in the past. Now, many electronic products like electronic watches, radio receivers, television sets, and household appliances can be produced indigenously, reaching a relatively advanced level. 3) We have strengthened the competitiveness of our products on the international market and increased export trade. For example, the vitasoy produced by the Guangming farm of Shenzhen by introducing fine-breed milk cows and using germ-free fresh milk-processing equipment accounts for 70 percent of the fresh milk sales on the Hong Kong market. In the past 3 years, our province's total value of imports has doubled. Last year foreign exchange handed over to the state by Guangdong amounted to $1.83 billion. 4) We have trained technical and management forces, with the result that our trained personnel know modern techniques. Through cooperative operations and joint ventures, we have introduced technology and equipment. We have thus actually spent nothing or little to set up many training classes and colleges. All this shows that the introduction of the open-door policy has not weakened out ability to rely upon ourselves. Instead, it has helped increase the wisdom of our industrious and courageous people. It may be best described as a case of "adding wings to a tiger." This enables us to advance more quickly on the road to modernization.

THIS IS A CASE UNDER THE NAME OF "SHE" [socialism] and not under the name of "ZI" [CAPITALISM]

Some people think that opening the door will turn our country to capitalism. Some foreign correspondents and Hong Kong newspapers have made much of this. A Hong Kong newspaper came out with a sensational report that "U.S. troops" had appeared in Guangzhou. It said: "The writer noted that many young men had on U.S. Army jackets. They looked well attired in this way. They were in their element as they strode through main and side streets full of confidence, their heads held high." For this reason, YANGCHENG WANBAO specially sent a reporter to look for "U.S. troops" on the street. He tried for several days without success. The reporter related the real facts. This was hailed by the youths and the masses of Guangzhou, as they felt they had received justice. Comrade Liu Tianfu said that in the Hong Kong press there had recently appeared another strange report. It said that gambling houses had operated in Donggun County of Guangdong with an unending flow of clients. Things were described in vivid detail. The provincial CPC committee, the prefectural CPC committee and the county CPC committee immediately sent a joint investigation group to look closely into the matter.

It was found that the whole story was sheer fabrication. These so-called reports, prompted by ulterior motives, also created confusion in some people's minds as they affect the people of our country. But all those who have come to visit Guangdong and Shenzhen personally will no longer swallow such rumors.

Continuing, Comrade Liu Tianfu said: In the past, imperialism used guns to break open the gate of ancient China. China was forced to remain open and colonization naturally resulted. Today political power is controlled by the people. We already have a powerful socialist economy and an industrious and courageous people imbued with socialist consciousness. We also have the strong leadership of sober-minded Marxists. We have kept the initiative completely in our own hands. On the one hand, we can freely draw on everything from the capitalist world that is useful to us, such as advanced science and technology, scientific management methods in social mass production, specialized division of labor, and so forth. On the other hand, we can also draw on the strength of the people's regime to resolutely resist all things that are harmful to us, such as the capitalist exploitation system, the idea of worshipping money and also the decadent capitalist lifestyle. Therefore, we can answer this problem well and righteously. The open-door policy is a case under the name of "she" and not under the name of "zi."

SPECIAL ZONES MUST PAY PARTICULAR ATTENTION TO BUILDING SOCIALIST SPIRITUAL CIVILIZATION

The reporter of this newspaper also visited Comrade Li Jianzhen and asked her to talk about how the people of Guangdong waged an anticorruption struggle while introducing the open-door policy.

Comrade Li Jianzhen joined the revolution in 1926 under the influence of the peasant riots in Haifeng and Lufeng. She acted as a county party secretary in her twenties and went on the Long March. She is a well-known lady and commands the respect of everyone. She is now over 70. But she still has a straight back and walks briskly.

Mrs Li said: Guangdong is at the southern gate of the motherland. It is not only a base for the use of foreign capital and technology, but also a show window for the propagation of socialist thinking and culture. As far as special zones are concerned, we have stressed all along that in special zones we must pay particular attention to building socialist spiritual civilization and can never allow people to seek privileges or allow the existence of privileged party members and privileged citizens who can defy party discipline and state laws. Therefore, under the correct leadership of the party Central Committee, we must never take a soft line in cracking down on economic crimes. The whole province has lined up for investigation of over 6,000 cases of economic crimes. We concentrated forces on tackling the major cases and resolutely punished criminals like Wang Zhong, former secretary of Haifeng Country, who appropriated confiscated goods and received bribes; Peng Guoxian, vice chairman of the political department of the border affairs bureau of Shenzhen Municipality, who received bribes in defiance of the law; and so forth.

Continuing, Lady Li said: There is still a decadent, evil force that calls for our particular attention. Some underworld societies of Hong Kong have tried every means to infiltrate the special zone of Shenzhen. There they have developed organizations which engage in smuggling and drug peddling, help people to escape, induce girls to be prostitutes, commit murder and robbery and generally do as they wish, upsetting our social order. With the help of the people and through close surveillance, the Shenzhen municipal public security organs have brought them to give themselves up within a given period of time. In dealing with this evil force, we must relentlessly strike blows and never give them room for operation.

Lady Li said that we must develop our special zones in such a way that they have an especially strict legal system and rules of discipline, particularly good social order and moral practices, unusually thriving educational, scientific research and public health undertakings, a particularly rich, colorful and healthy cultural or athletic life and specially clean environment. Only in this way can they embody the features of our socialist special economic zones. Due to the emphasis on the building of spiritual civilization, people now have a quite keen demand for science and culture. It has become common practice for the masses of cadres and workers to study culture, technology and foreign languages. Many people have devoted their spare time to study. Various special zones have conducted socialist, patriotic and collectivist education, carried out "five stresses and four beauties" activities and directed efforts toward rectifying party style and overhauling social order. The people of special zones now show more passionate love than ever before for the party and for socialism. They are especially sincere in supporting the party's line and general and specific policies followed since the 3rd Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. People's spiritual outlook and their social style are continuously improving.

In conclusion, Lady Li said: "The new situation is just beginning. There are surely many defects and problems in our work. But we have confidence in putting the hearts of the party and the people throughout the country at ease. Under the correct leadership of the party Central Committee, Guangdong can surely become the prosperous and powerful socialist southern gate of the motherland."

NEI MONGGOL'S ZHOU HUI URGES JOBS FOR YOUTHS

SK140900 Hohhot Nei Monggol Regional Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 13 Dec 82

Comrade Zhou Hui stated: To find employment for youths constitutes a major task of urban administrative work. In arranging jobs for such a large number of people, it is impossible to depend only on the state-run enterprises, because they already have enough manpower. Since these state enterprises cannot cover all job arrangements, what is to be done? The answer to this question is that efforts should be made to further emancipate minds, relax the restrictions of policies and open more avenues of employment by means of developing collectively owned enterprises and encouraging youths to personally open a business. At present, leading comrades in some areas have not widened their horizon in this regard because they do not profoundly understand and effectively implement the CPC Central Committee's decisive policy on the long-term coexistence of various economic forms. The major reason jobless youths are not willing to get a job in collectively owned enterprises is that they worry about the cost of childbirth, old age, illness and burial arrangements because they would be without social insurance. The most important reason for this unwillingness, however, is that, through the long influence of leftist ideas, we have failed to put collectively and individually owned enterprises on a due position. Only by solving this problem ideologically, according to the policy, will we increase the number of youths who obtain jobs in collectively owned enterprises and open businesses by self-reliance. Concerned party organizations and departments at all levels should adopt an active attitude toward the problem and resolutely and rapidly improve former principles and measures that discriminate against, impose restrictions on and deal blows at collectively and individually owned enterprises. In addition, efforts should be made to devise principles and measures to guide, encourage, promote and support these enterprises. As to the former provisions, it is necessary to earnestly conduct studies according to the central authorities' new guidelines and put forward concrete measures for improving these provisions. Each comrade should be clearly informed that the development of urban collectively and individually owned enterprises is closely related to the issue of employment. Where there is a new prospect in developing these enterprises, there is a new prospect for employment of urban labor forces.

Comrade Zhou Hui stated: There are currently a lot of problems in commodity circulation channels. Units in various fields have enacted rigid rules. Though there are a lot of youths awaiting work, a lot of service businesses cannot be opened. Some businesses that youths are willing to work in are not allowed to open. Some businesses that should be opened suffer from the lukewarm attitude of responsible personnel. Some youths who are willing to open a business, however, are unable to do so because of a lack of professional knowledge. In addition, there are many new trades that need to be opened. All of this requires that we give a helping hand and create conditions for enabling them to achieve great development as soon as possible.

In answering some comrades' questions on whether food and lodging service business are too saturated to be developed, Comrade Zhou Hui stated: Continuous efforts should be made to analyze the saturation point in this regard. Now that the approved number of hotels has been exceeded, why do some people still want to open new ones? And why do more travelers prefer to seek lodging at certain collectively and individually owned hotels? I think that this state of affairs is largely due to their full service and politeness. In this sense, I suppose that state hotels should learn from collectively and individually owned ones. It is natural to maintain a balance in developing hotel business among the state, collectives and individuals. However, it is important to first stimulate development and allow hotels to have a little competition, under which they would achieve great development.

Comrade Zhou Hui stated: Collectively and individually owned enterprises involve wider areas and more units and individuals. Their business operations are complicated and require a high sense of following the state's policy. Therefore, it is imperative to strengthen the administrative work over them. Efforts should be made to educate them to carry out their business operations within the provisions of the policy and to refrain from following the old and rigid business way. Problems stemming from their business operations should be solved in a timely manner by conducting guidance. By no means shall we simply impose restrictions on them. Efforts should be made to help them steadily develop along a correct orientation.

In conclusion, Comrade Zhou Hui stated: It is necessary to vigorously publicize the importance of establishing collectively and individually owned enterprises to draw the attention of various circles. By showing our work achievements in this regard, we should vigorously upgrade the people's understanding on the importance of collectively and individually owned enterprises so as to improve the thinking of those unable and unwilling. Households that have scored achievements in this regard should be commended politically. All in all, efforts should be made to further emancipate minds to catch up with the new situation prevailing in development.

SHANXI 'REBEL' ARRESTED IN PORNOGRAPHY CASE

HK120316 Taiyuan Shanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 11 Dec 82

[Excerpts] According to SHANXI RIBAO, the Taiyuan Municipal CPC Committee made a decision on 7 December to expel from the party (Huang Ruian), who illegally peddled pornographic audiotapes and committed many crimes in the economic, political and cultural fields. In view of (Huang's) crimes, the municipal public security bureau arrested him for investigation on the evening of 11 December.

Before the Great Cultural Revolution, (Huang Ruian) was a secretary in the general office of the Shanxi provincial people's council. He became leader of factional organization at the start of the 10 years of turmoil. He took an active part in seizing power in Shanxi and attacked and persecuted large numbers of old cadres. He became a member of the standing committee of the provincial revolutionary committee, deputy director of the provincial revolutionary committee general office, deputy secretary of (Fujiao) District CPC Committee of Taiyuan Municipality and vice chairman of the district revolutionary committee, and deputy secretary of the Beicheng District CPC Committee of Taiyuan Municipality. In August 1980, due to having taken advantage of the investigatory drive in order to continue persecuting old cadres, he was demoted to the post of a secretary in the municipal metallurgical and coal bureau.

After his demotion, (Huang Ruian) was dissatisfied and failed to come to work for a long time, pretending to be ill. During this time he went in for speculation in a big way and engaged in criminal activities such as peddling pornographic audiotapes. The circulation of these pornographic tapes seriously corrupted the thinking of the masses, especially young people and juveniles, and was extremely harmful for the building of socialist spiritual civilization.

The 12 December SHANXI RIBAO carries a short commentary on this episode, which says: People are very glad that the rebel leader (Huang Ruian) has been expelled from the party and arrested according to law for illegally peddling pornographic tapes. This affair tells us that there are serious criminal activities in the cultural field, too. They are linked with economic crimes and menace the great house of socialism, like white ants. This is an important expression of the class struggle in the new historical conditions.

In recent years reactionary and pornographic songs and publications have come in by various channels to poison people, especially young people and juveniles. As a result, some people have been induced to embark on the path of crime. This has become a social problem attracting universal concern. The party organizations at all levels and the departments concerned must resolutely ban these reactionary pornographic things and severely punish according to law those criminal elements who peddle and circulate spiritual rubbish.

It should be noted that certain rebel leaders and beaters, smashers and looters of the Great Cultural Revolution period have turned to economic or cultural crime after collapsing politically. They thus continue to confront us. Painful lessons tell us that we must by no means underestimate their capacities and influence. At present, leading comrades in certain units lack vigilance against people of this type. The masses are very worried about this. We hope that the report openly exposing the illegal activities of rebel leader (Huang Ruian) will sharply awaken these politically colorblind people.

A representative of Henan Province's Nanle Country -- hometown of Comrade Bai Qian -- made a special trip to Shenyang to attend the memorial service and sent a wreath. Bai Qian's wife, (Lu Qi), and his children and realtives also attended the memorial service and sent wreaths and poetry. Comrade Guo Feng presided over the service. Comrade Xu Shaofu delivered a memorial speech.

TAIWAN APPEALS FOR STUDENTS TO RETURN FROM U.S.

[Newsletter from Washington staff reporter Kou Zhizhong [1379 5267 0022]: "Taiwan Students Become 'Detainees' After Studying in the United States"]

[Text] "Come back! Taiwan U. students" is currently a popular topic of the media in Taiwan. The "Taiwan U. students" referred to are the graduates of "Taiwan University" to go back to Taiwan. This appeal to call back the souls of those away from home has been made by Chao Yao-tung, the "minister of economy" of Taiwan.

According to statistics compiled by the Taiwan authorities, of the 53,613 students approved by the Taiwan "Ministry of Education" for studying abroad (not including those who left Taiwan under the designation of visiting relatives) in the last 20 years, only 6,200, representing less than 12 percent of the total figure, returned to Taiwan after graduation. In the last 5 years, 94.6 percent of the students studying abroad in the United States have taken up natural sciences, and most of them, actually about 92 percent, are also "studying ways to become 'detainees.'" Among them, 23.7 percent are "Taiwan U. students." Sun Yun-hsuan, "president of the Executive Yuan" of Taiwan, lamented: "We have already lost the most valuable part of our precious source of skilled personnel" and "can no longer endure the loss."

Since this year, the Taiwan authorities have sent a "talent hunting delegation" to the United States on two occasions and organized three tours "for scholars who studied in America to visit Taiwan." They have also held all sorts of meetings under such names as "backflow of skilled personnel meeting" and "parents of students who are studying abroad forum" and called for developing an "overseas residents returning home to visit their parents movement." Some people have suggested levying a "studying abroad tax" to be deposited with the bank. The money will be handed back with interest to the students on their return, otherwise, it will be confiscated. Li Kuo-ting, a member of the Administrative Committee of Taiwan's "Executive Yuan," said: To win back skilled personnel, "we must provide them with more attractive salary and working conditions. But in this way, we will in turn again produce the side effect of encouraging the outflow of skilled personnel." "This dilemma has made the government (the Taiwan authorities) very perplexed."

The U.S. WALL STREET JOURNAL holds that this question has reflected the disappointment of the people over "Taiwan's economic miracle," however, the more important reason is their dissatisfaction of Taiwan's political autocracy. Chen Jo-hsi, a female writer of U.S. nationality, pointed out: "Clean and just political administration is the best trump card for getting the people to return to the country. Many Taiwan students have expressed that if spies continue to run amuck and people are always making secret reports, they would rather lead a vagrant life overseas." Chen Jo-hsi said: A friend of mine at the University of California was greatly shocked by the death of Chen Wen-cheng last year. He said: "Chen Wen-cheng's criticism of the government (the Taiwan authorities) was not likely to be stronger than my own. What would happen to me if I went back?" Another reason why students studying abroad are not returning is because they have lost faith in the Taiwan authorities. In the words of Mei Ko-wang, president of Tunghai University of Taiwan, the "desire" for "building" Taiwan has diminished. Taiwan's CHUNG YANG JIH PAO blamed the parents of some of the students studying abroad for deliberatly encouraging their children to stay in America so that they could one day go and spend the rest of their life there.

This summer when the joint university entrance exam was held in Taiwan, the campus of the "Taiwan University" was filled with colored posters. Some read: "Come, come, come to Taiwan University; go, go, go to the United States." This is perhaps an omen that the appeal "Come back! Taiwan U. students" will continue.

TAIPOWER CONTRACTS TO BUY FRENCH, UK URANIUM

OW140355 Taipei CNA in English 0305 GMT 14 Dec 82

[Text] Taipei, Dec. 14 (CNA) -- Taiwan Power Co. (Taipower) has recently signed two purchase contracts for uranium, one worth U.S. $600 million with the French Cogema Co, which will supply 2,000 tons of enriched uranium over a 10-year period, and the other with the British RTZ Co., which will provide 4,000 tons over a 15-year period.

Taipower has also signed an easy-term agreement with Banque de Paris et des Pays-Bas and four other French banks to borrow 1.5 billion French francs to help finance the deal with the French firm.

The state-run power company noted that this is the first time the ROC will purchase enriched uranium from sources other than the United States. The 1.5 billion French franc loan is also the largest ever extended to the ROC by French banks.

Taipower noted that both Cogena Co. and the British RTZ Co. will start to supply the nuclear fuel in 1989.

CABINET WARNS AGAINST SUBVERSIVE ACTIVITIES

OW140351 Taipei CNA in English 0248 GMT 14 Dec 82

[Text] Taipei, Dec. 14 (CNA) -- The Executive Yuan Monday warned compatriots in this country not to be deceived by falling into the trap of those persons or groups who have issued statements in favor of the Peiping regime or overtly advocated changes in the organization of the state.

In answer to interpellations raised by legislator Huang Huang-Hsiung, the cabinet in a letter stressed that this small group of elements having conspired to overthrow the government or engage in other subversive activities will be outlawed as seditionaries.

Law-abiding citizens should draw a clear line against dealing with these elements, the cabinet letter noted, calling on the people here not to be cheated and drawn into their trap.

Overseas Chinese, individuals or groups, will be entitled to the same protection and treatment of the government as citizens residing here if they stand behind the government and give support to the nation's cause, the letter indicated.

In fact, a great majority of the people born in Taiwan who have become overseas Chinese are law-abiding and loyal to the Republic of China, and the government will certainly keep close contact with them and give them necessary assistance, the letter said.

BRIEFS

THAI FISHERY AGREEMENT -- Kaohsiung, 3 Dec (CNA) -- The Thai Government has agreed to allow this nation's fishing ships to operate inside its 200-mile marine zone. The agreement was reached through the assistance of the Kaohsiung Fengkuo Fishery Company. Chinese fishing ships can buy their daily necessities and sell their catches at Bangkok. Local fishing boats can operate off the Thai coast after their applications are approved by the Thai Government. [Text] [Taipei CNA in English 0301 GMT 3 Dec 82 OW]

RENMIN RIBAO. U.S., USSR WANT NUCLEAR MONOPOLY

HK180726 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 18 Dec 82 p 7

["Short commentary": "What Unanimity"]

[Text] In the short space of 2 months or so, the United States and the Soviet Union have twice held talks on nuclear nonproliferation, displaying remarkable enthusiasm.

At present the United States and the Soviet Union are staging a new round of nuclear arms race, with an intensity in no way inferior to that of the 1970's; each seeks to overwhelm the other. But the fact that they dwell on nuclear nonproliferation with such great relish and exert themselves to prevent other countries from acquiring nuclear technology or developing nuclear industry shows that their interests coincide to a remarkable degree on this issue.

Since the United States and the Soviet Union developed nuclear weapons more than 20 years ago, their intention has been to maintain their monopoly in this field. Together they concocted a "partial nuclear test ban treaty" in an attempt to prohibit other countries from developing nuclear defenses, and they also erected obstacle after obstacle to the transfer of nuclear technology in order to stop other countries from using nuclear energy to benefit themselves. They even came up with a theory that the more countries acquired nuclear technology, the more would be the manufacture of nuclear weapons and the greater would be the danger of nuclear war. This is pure deceit. Ninety-six percent of the nuclear missile stockpile in the world is in the hands of the two superpowers, the United States and the Soviet Union. Moreover, they are further developing new weapons. The great majority of countries in the world demand that they first tangibly reduce and then proceed to completely abolish nuclear arms, but that is precisely what these two superpowers refuse to do. Who, in fact, is threatening world peace? It is evident to all. To put it bluntly, the interest of the two superpowers, the United States and the Soviet Union, in nuclear nonproliferation is nothing but a desire to continue to maintain and consolidate their hegemony and monopoly in the nuclear field. That is all there is to it!

'FIERCE BARGAINING' ON MISSILES IN EUROPE SEEN

[Text] Moscow, December 19 (XINHUA) -- Nobody should expect the Soviet Union to make a series of concessions as the date of U.S. deployment of new missiles in Europe is drawing near, says an article carried in today's PRAVDA. Earlier, at the Geneva talks on the limitation of nuclear weapons in Europe, the Soviet Union suggested cutting its medium-range missiles if the U.S. would not deploy new missiles in Western Europe. The proposal was disclosed and turned down by the Reagan administration.

The PRAVDA article says that the U.S. administration "gave a distorted interpretation of the state of things at the talks on the limitation of nuclear weapons in Europe." It says that the Soviet side suggested cutting both Soviet and U.S. medium-range missiles now in Europe by two-thirds, leaving no chance for missiles and bombers to escape the agreement and banning the deployment of dangerous new nuclear weapons, certainly including the U.S. Pershing-2 and cruise missiles.

PRAVDA calls upon the U.S. "to give up plans for a build-up of nuclear weapons" and go over to serious quest for a solution to the problem of nuclear weapons in Europe.

Observers here think that the PRAVDA article showed that fierce bargaining is going on between the Soviet Union and the United States over nuclear weapons in Europe, and people have to wait and see what the outcome would be.

VIENNA ARMS REDUCTION NEGOTIATIONS END 16 DEC

[Text] Vienna, December 16 (XINHUA) -- The 28th round of negotiations on arms reductions in central Europe ended with its 326th plenary session here today without any substantial progress as in the past. Representatives of the Warsaw Pact bloc and the NATO group blamed each other for bringing the negotiations into a blind alley for lack of a "spirit of realism."

Head of the Soviet delegation V. Mikhaylov said that the talks were "not satisfactory" because the NATO countries stuck to a "non-constructive stand." He criticized the West for seeking military superiority and trying to force unequal treaties on Warsaw Pact countries. On the other hand, the representatives of Western countries blamed the Soviet Union for lack of sincerity to reduce its own superiority in conventional arms.

At a news conference jointly sponsored by the two sides, head of the Dutch delegation W.J. de Vos Van Steenwijk said that the Western countries' proposal of July 8 in the form of a draft agreement contained specific schedules and means to reduce the ground and air force troops of each side stationed in central Europe to 900,000 and it showed the political desire of the West to sign a just agreement acceptable to both sides.

In the talks, he said, the West also handed over to the Warsaw Pact countries a draft agreement and two related documents based on the proposal, but they were rejected by the Warsaw Pact Organization. The next round of talks is scheduled to start January 27 next year.

LIAOWANG ARTICLES ANALYZE FIVE WARS IN WORLD

OW200158 Beijing XINHUA in English 0137 GMT 20 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 20 (XINHUA) -- THE OBSERVATION POST, an authoritative and comprehensive monthly magazine published in Beijing, carried articles in today's issue analyzing the five wars in Kampuchea, Afghanistan and Lebanon, between Iran and Iraq, and between Britain and Argentina over the Malvinas (Falklands) issue.

These articles said the Kampuchean war is four years old. The patriotic Kampuchean armymen and civilians have been fighting the Soviet-backed 200,000 Vietnamese invaders under extremely difficult conditions. But the invaders have landed themselves in a mire and their hegemonist expansion has been contained.

1982 is the third year of the Afghan people's heroic resistance against Soviet aggression. The 100,000-strong Soviet troops have been stranded in Afghanistan, which has become a heavy burden to the Soviet Union. As the Soviet authorities have refused to withdraw their troops from Afghanistan, the war will continue.

The Iran-Iraq war has entered into the third year. Iran carried the war into the Iraqi territory during the "Ramadan operation" last July. As a result, a new picture of the war has emerged. The war situation shows the warring parties are a match to each other in military strength. Iran has become very active in offensives while Iraq is active in defense and counter-attacks. Since for the time being neither of them can emerge victorious, the war tends to drag on.

The air and sea engagements between Britain and Argentina over the issue of the Malvinas Islands highlighted the turbulent international situation in April this year. Britain now maintains a 4,000-strong garrison on the islands.

The Israeli invasion of Lebanon in June was another aggressive war against the Arab nation. It has brought greater tension and complicity to the Middle East situation. With Israel occupying more than one-third of the Lebanese territory and inventing excuses to delay the withdrawal of its troops from Lebanon, the war clouds are still hovering over the land.

The monthly also carried an article entitled "What Do the Five Wars Show?" The article says the five wars have proved that the international situation, far from experiencing a detente, is featured by greater upheavals and growing tensions. The whole world feels threatened by these wars despite their regional character, the article notes. The two superpowers' rivalry for global hegemony remains the major source of disorder in the world, it says.

It points out that the Soviet Union is the aggressor on the Afghan battlefields. Moscow is also behind Vietnam's aggression in Kampuchea. In the case of the Israeli invasion of Lebanon and Britain's war with Argentina, people notice that the United States supported one of the conflicting parties.

All these wars were or have been fought in Third World countries, who have therefore become the first victims to the two superpowers' contention for hegemony, the article says.

The article adds that developments in the past year have shown that the superpowers' ability to influence the world situation has greatly diminished. The Soviet Union is bogged down in Afghanistan while the United States has become the object of denunciation in the Middle East because of its connivance in Israel's invasion of Lebanon.

Superpower competition is generally the root cause of conflicts in the world. In certain circumstances, national or religious contradictions and other disputes, including issues between nations left over from history, especially from the colonial times, may become acute and develop into wars, the article says.

SECRETARY SHULTZ WRAPS UP WEST EUROPE VISIT

OW180900 Beijing XINHUA in English 0719 GMT 18 Dec 82

[Text] London, December 17 (XINHUA) -- U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz said today that he felt "a great sense of reassurance" about the unity and determination of the NATO alliance during his two-week-long visit in Western Europe. Shultz, now in London on the last leg of his seven-nation European tour, had talks today with his British counterpart Francis Pym on a wide range of issues, including East-West relations, NATO defence, the Middle East and the world economy.

Speaking at a joint press conference with Pym today, Shultz said that his talks with leaders of all the countries he had visited had reached a great depth of understanding. Relations between the United States and its Western European allies had been strained recently by disputes over sanctions against the Soviet natural gas pipeline and trade and other issues.

Asked about American policy towards the Soviet Union, Shultz said that it had to be realistic and strong in the face of Moscow's strength and its willingness to use it, as in Afghanistan. The West alliance should not indulge in any "wishful thinking" in dealing with the new Soviet leadership, he added.

Shultz said that control of the 160 cruise missiles due to be deployed in Britain from next winter was a matter for the NATO alliance and should be discussed on this basis. British Foreign Secretary Pym indicated that there was "no particular likelihood of any change" to the present arrangements under which the missiles would be under American control.

Commenting on anti-nuclear movement in Western Europe, Shultz noted that he well understood their fears. "But when you are confronted by a strong aggressor, the worst thing you can do is to allow your defences to decline and let fear lead you into appeasement," he said.

RENMIN RIBAO 28 Dec Comment

["Roundup" by Zhang Yunwen [1728 0336 2429]: "Shultz' West European Tour"]

[Text] U.S. Secretary of State Shultz completed a 2-week trip to Europe on 18 December. He visted seven countries -- West Germany, Belgium, the Netherlands, Italy, France, Spain and Britain. This was his first visit to West European countries since becoming secretary of state. Shultz made this trip at a time when the Soviet leadership is changing and U.S.-European economic contradictions are intensifying once again.

Shultz held a series of talks with West European leaders centered on East-West and U.S.-European relations. The United States is currently concerned about coordinating with its allies its strategy toward the Soviet Union, pushing forward the formulation of a common East-West trade policy and easing U.S.-European economic contradictions. These topics were also the main aims of Shultz's visit.

Since the death of Brezhnev, both the United States and the Soviet Union have expressed the desire to improve relations but their race for military supremacy is still intensifying. The United States is demanding that the West European allies continue to strengthen their armaments. However, the West European countries, sunk in economic crisis, hope that the new Soviet leadership will change its policy so that they can get their breath back. In this situation, the United States urgently needs to unify its ideas and plans with the countries of Western Europe. Hence, at the NATO foreign ministerial conference and in his talks with West European leaders, Shultz discussed the situation facing East-West relations and the common stand of the West following the coming to power of a new Soviet leadership. The NATO foreign ministerial conference reiterated NATO's twofold resolution of 1979 on medium-range ballistic-missile deployment and its stand of support for the U.S. "zero option" and also declared its willingness to continue the East-West dialogue and its welcome for any Soviet move for easing tension and for the "reestablishment of trust." This shows that the two sides reached a compromise on the basis of mutual concessions, but under the precondition of identity of fundamental U.S. and European interests, there will be certain differences between them regarding assessment of the situation and relations with the Soviet Union. Hence, in the new year the Soviet Union will continue to adopt both hard and soft tactics to do everything possible to wreck the implementation of NATO's twofold resolution, while certain West European countries will encounter difficulties in reaching a decision on medium-range-ballistic-missile deployment. Hence, certain West European leaders have termed 1983 "the testing year for NATO" and "the most difficult year since the war."

Another issue discussed by Shultz during his visit to Western Europe was that of East-West trade. There are serious differences between the United States and Europe on this issue. The West European countries do not agree to strictly limiting trade with the Soviet bloc and restricting credit for it and oppose the pressure put on Western Europe by the United States over the question of selling the Soviet Union natural gas pipeline equipment. During his visit to Europe, Shultz tried to mend the cracks between the United States and Europe on this matter. The West European countries declared that they "hoped not to fight an economic war with the East" and held that trade was a factor in the endeavor to attain stability and peace, but they did agree to study a common strategy. The French took a particularly hard line, insisting on their own decisionmaking powers in foreign trade and forbidding the United States to "issue orders" to France. They reiterated that France was an ally, not a "slave." France expressed support for the U.S. stand in defense matters but stressed that there is no such thing as "an economic NATO" and that France "would do business with anyone it chooses." Hence, when speaking of the U.S.-French talks and relations between the two countries, Shultz said that the talks had been fruitful but also acknowledged that "there are still problems" and that the two sides "have not cooperated fully."

Shultz also held wide-ranging talks on the U.S.-European agricultural products trade dispute. The United States has not ruled out retaliatory measures, while Western Europe insists that the European Community's agricultural policy is not negotiable. However, for the sake of gaining "the most elementary unity of views," Shultz took a "low-key approach," with the result that the atmosphere eased somewhat and both sides agreed to delay the solution of the problem until next year.

Shultz' West European trip was another important visit made by high-ranking U.S. officials for the purpose of harmonizing U.S.-European relations, following President Reagan's visit to Western Europe in June. Since he put emphasis on the points of unity between the United States and Europe and avoided enlarging the differences, some progress was made in coordinating the Soviet policy of the United States and its European allies, consolidating NATO, promoting mutual understanding and easing the contradictions.

However, in the wake of the ever-deepening global economic crisis and the intensification of U.S.-Soviet rivalry for hegemony, more and more problems will accumulate between the two sides, and Shultz continues to face a situation fraught with difficulties.

U.S. SENATE APPROVES BILL FOR MX PRODUCTION

OW181021 Beijing XINHUA in English 0725 GMT 18 Dec 82

[Text] Washington, December 17 (XINHUA) -- The controversial MX project survived a Senate vote late last night when the fiscal year 1983 defense appropriation bill, which contains 988 million dollars for producing the first five MX missiles, was approved by a 56 to 42 margin.

However, the government is not free to use the funds until it can convince the Congress sometime after next March 1 that the current basing plan for the missile is sound enough, or it can present a better one.

The House of Representatives voted down the funds for the initial production of the missile on Dec. 7 on the ground that many experts, both inside and outside the government, had expressed doubts on whether the current basing plan -- the so-called "closed space basing" -- could ensure the invulnerability of the costly missile.

Their doubts were further supported by a revelation by General Vessey, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, in a testimony before the Senate Armed Services Committee on the next day that three of the five-member Joint Chiefs of Staff had some reservation on the plan. But after a new round of lobbying efforts, President Reagan succeeded in persuading the Republican controlled Senate to make a compromise.

The bill is still pending a House-Senate conference decision early next year and the Democratic House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill has spread the word that the compromise is not acceptable to the house. So it is believed here that the Senate vote last night meant nothing more than a mere face-saving "victory" for the President.

COMMENTARY RAPS VIETNAMESE ANTI-CHINA 'SLANDERS'

HK190746 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 19 Dec 82 p 6

["Short Commentary": "How Can This Be?"]

[Text] The Vietnamese authorities currently regard China as their scapegoat and are attempting to pin onto China, lock, stock and barrel, the blame for the domestic consequences of their invasion of Kampuchea.

Due to this invasion, Vietnam's domestic economy is in a perilous state and there is social turmoil and seething popular discontent. A NHAN DAN editorial of 15 December acknowledged that "negative phenomena" such as "speculation, hooliganism, corruption, theft, and graft" have appeared in society, and that certain people take advantage of "loopholes in management to sabotage the economy." It is evident to everyone that all these so-called "negative phenomena" are expressions of popular discontent.

Actually, if Vietnam withdrew all its more than 100,000 troops from Kampuchea, stopped its aggression and expansion, halted the waste of manpower, material and money, and actively engaged in economic construction to enable the people to live contented lives, these "negative phenomena" would naturally disappear. However, NHAN DAN went so far as to pin the blame for these "negative phenomena" on China, racking its brains in babbling that these constituted "psychological warfare" waged against Vietnam by China in order to "invade, occupy and annex" Vietnam and also "many-faceted sabotage warfare" waged by China "economically, politically, ideologically, militarily, culturally and in lifestyle and so on." There was much more in this vein. However, the further this gets from common sense, the more absurd it is shown to be. The more all-pervasively NHAN DAN accuses China of "sabotage warfare," the more ridiculous it shows itself.

We wish to ask: If China was really so infinitely resourceful and capable of seizing every opportunity to wage "sabotage warfare" in Vietnam, would that not make fatheads of their excellencies, the Hanoi authorities? In slandering China, NHAN DAN thus ends up ridiculing itself.

Of course, NHAN DAN's purpose is none other than to make use of a clamor for "resolutely smashing" "China's sabotage warfare" to mobilize the Vietnamese army, police and agents to step up their action against those "negative phenomena", that is, to suppress the discontented people, to enable the Hanoi authorities to go on with their hegemonist policy. However, the people's discontent cannot be pacified unless there is an end to aggression and expansion. What is the use of carrying out suppression under an anti-China pretext? It is impossible to calculate how many times China has been slandered and attacked by the Vietnamese authorities, and there is no need to haggle over the figure. The problem is, how can the Vietnamese authorities persist in their reactionary domestic and foreign policies under an anti-China signboard without any sign of repentance, even though they are at a dead end?

NGUYEN CO THACH ON KAMPUCHEA, PRC 'PRESSURES'

OW181956 Beijing XINHUA in English 1926 GMT 18 Dec 82

[Text] New Delhi, December 18 (XINHUA) -- Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach concluded a three-day visit to India today after signing a bilateral agreement on the setting up of a joint commission to promote economic and technical cooperation between India and Vietnam.

The agreement is the third one concluded by the two countries in a few weeks. In November, India agreed to provide Vietnam with an assistance credit of one billion Indian RS (roughly 10.3 million U.S. dollars). The other agreement is a trade protocol signed in New Delhi last week.

India also agreed to provide training facilities for the Vietnamese in remote sensing techniques, new energy sources and in science policy and management under a plan of action for cooperation between the two countries in science and technology in 1983 and 1984.

In an interview broadcast by the India radio, Nguyen Co Thach made it explicit "Vietnamese troops would stay on in Kampuchea."

Referring to the situation in Indo-China, he attacked the so-called "pressures and hostile activities" from China and the ASEAN countries.

In a meeting held by the All India Peace and Solidarity Organisation, he said Vietnam wants the Kampuchean seat to remain vacant during the seventh non-aligned summit meeting scheduled to be held here in March.

"Not only should the seat remain vacant as decided by the sixth non-aligned summit, but my country also wants that the Kampuchean question should not figure in the summit deliberations," he said.

DK DEMANDS RESTORATION OF NONALIGNED SEAT

OW181038 Beijing XINHUA in English 0821 GMT 18 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 18 (XINHUA) -- Radio Democratic Kampuchea in a commentary broadcast today demanded that the forthcoming seventh non-aligned summit should restore the legitimate seat of Democratic Kampuchea in the Non-aligned Movement.

The commentary pointed out that Democratic Kampuchea, an independent and sovereign state, is a member of the United Nations and one of the sponsors of the Non-aligned Movement. Vietnamese armed aggression against Kampuchea at the end of 1978 was a flagrant violation of the spirit of the United Nations Charter and of the principles of the Non-aligned Movement. Therefore it has been opposed and condemned by most of the U.N. member countries. The sixth non-aligned summit held in Havana 1979 should have condemned the criminal Vietnamese aggression on Kampuchea and demanded withdrawal of its troops in accordance with the principles of this movement. But, Cuban Prime Minister Fidel Castro, by taking advantage of his capacity as chairman of the conference, illegally deprived Democratic Kampuchea of its right to attend the meeting in defiance of opposition from most participants.

As the seventh non-aligned summit is approaching, the commentary said, Vietnam has started seeking support from certain countries for its attempt to obstruct once again the restoration of the Democratic Kampuchea's legitimate seat in the Non-aligned Movement. In order to defend the principles of non-alignment, the seventh summit should uphold justice by restoring the legitimate seat of Democratic Kampuchea.

Cambodian Service on Debate

BK191434 Beijing in Cambodian to Kampuchea 1030 GMT 19 Dec 82

[Text] On 17 December, Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach said in New Delhi that Democratic Kampuchea's seat at the seventh summit of nonaligned countries will remain vacant as during the sixth summit. He also said he opposed to the coming summit discussing this question.

Kampuchea was one of the founders of the Nonaligned Movement. In 1979, the Cuban leader -- using his position as chairman of the sixth summit -- deprived Democratic Kampuchea of its right to attend without taking into consideration the protest of the majority of the countries attending the summit.

Recently, the ASEAN countries have tried to restore Democratic Kampuchea's legitimate seat. They have argued that the fact that Democratic Kampuchea was not invited to attend the summit was illegal. Democratic Kampuchea should be invited to attend the seventh summit to be held in New Delhi in March next year.

SIHANOUK SAYS RELATIONS WITH PRC 'EXCELLENT'

OW191106 Hong Kong AFP in English 1040 GMT 19 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing Dec. 19 (AFP) -- Prince Norodom Sihanouk, leader of the recently formed anti-Vietnamese Cambodian coalition, has denied rumors that he was having disagreements with China.

In a message received here today by the AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE bureau here today, the former head of state, who now lives in the North Korean capital of Pyongyang, called his relations with the Chinese Government "excellent".

According to observers here, Prince Sihanouk may have felt some resentment following China's reception last month of the Khmer Rouge leader Khieu Samphan, the vice-president of the coalition, while Prince Sihanouk was also in Beijing.

He then cancelled a visit he was to make this month to Cambodia, to areas not controlled by the Vietnamese army and where he had announced his intention to hold a coalition government meeting. The cancellation was interpreted by many as a sign of irritation.

Since then, Prince Sihanouk has said that he will go to Thailand and Cambodia sometime next year.

During Khieu Samphan's visit to Beijing he met individually with Chinese leaders, who treated him at least as well as they did Prince Sihanouk.

In his message the prince also called his relations with his coalition partners "excellent". The alliance of Cambodian movement opposing the 150,000 - 200,000 Vietnamese soldiers now defending the pro-Hanoi Phnom Penh regime, was formed last June with the backing of the non-communist countries in Southeast Asia and China. Long discussions were needed to work out the differences dividing the anti-Vietnamese Cambodian leaders.

DK'S SON SANN HOLDS TALKS WITH SINGAPORE LEADERS

OW191942 Beijing XINHUA in English 1636 GMT 19 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 19 (XINHUA) -- Prime Minister Son Sann has pledged to make efforts to keep the Democratic Kampuchean Coalition Government working until "a complete pullout of the Vietnamese troops from Kampuchea and a free election in his country."

According to reports from Singapore, he told a press conference in that city Saturday he would try by all means to achieve this aim.

Son Sann, who arrived in Singapore for a visit December 18-21, said he came to express gratitude to this country for its assistance in Kampuchea's struggle for national liberation.

It was Son Sann's first visit to Singapore since the coalition government was formed by three Kampuchean anti-Vietnamese resistance factions last June.

Son Sann and Singapore's leaders including Prime Minister Lee Kuan Yew and Foreign Minister S. Rajaratnam are expected to discuss Kampuchea's seat at the summit of nonaligned countries to be held in New Delhi next March.

ZHAO ZIYANG DEPARTS FOR MIDDLE EAST-AFRICA TRIP

Holds Press Conference

OW200510 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 0300 GMT 20 Dec 82

[Text] Premier Zhao Ziyang of the State Council left Beijing by a special plane on the morning of 20 December for an official goodwill visit to Egypt. After the visit, Premier Zhao Ziyang will pay official goodwill visits to African countries in the following order: Algeria, Morocco, Guinea, Zaire, the Congo, Zambia, Zimbabwe, Tanzania and Kenya.

Accompanying Zhao Ziyang on the visit are Gu Mu, state councillor; Wu Xueqian, minister of foreign affairs; Gong Dafei and Wen Yezhan, vice ministers of foreign affairs; Lu Xuejian, vice minister of foreign economic relations and trade; Wang Ziya, adviser of the ministry of machine-building industry and chairman of the board of the China National Machinery Import and Export Corporation; and Wang Letian, deputy director of a department under the General Staff Department of the PLA.

Present at the airport for the sendoff were Hu Yaobang, general secretary of the CPC Central Committee; Wan Li, vice premier of the State Council; Ulanhu, vice chairman of the NPC Standing Committee; Chen Muhua, state councillor and concurrently minister of foreign economic relations and trade; Hu Qili, member of the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee; and Ji Pengfei, state councillor.

Before he boarded the plane Premier Zhao Ziyang held a press conference for Chinese and foreign journalists on the purposes of his visit to the 10 African countries. He answered questions presented by the reporters.

Zhao Ziyang said: My colleagues and I are delighted to be embarking on a trip at the invitation of the governments of 10 African countries. African countries and people obtained national independence and liberation after prolonged struggles against imperialism and colonialism. They now are struggling to develop their own national economy and build prosperous and powerful countries.

He said: Africa is a continent full of vigor and vitality. We have maintained good relations with African countries. The purposes of my visit are further to enhance mutual understanding and friendship, strengthen unity and expand cooperation. All African countries have their own strong points. We could learn from many of their experiences. The visit will provide us a good opportunity to do so. I am also delighted that I again will have the opportunity to meet many of our old friends. We will exchange views on how to strengthen friendly relations and cooperation between us and other questions of mutual concern. We will discuss, in particular, how to intensify economic and technical cooperation under the new situation.

Zhao Ziyang expressed the belief that the visit will be successful and that friendly relations and cooperation between China and Third World countries in Africa will be further enhanced.

When asked by a foreign reporter if Israel had the right to exist, Zhao Ziyang said: China consistently has called for Israeli withdrawal from the occupied Arab lands and for restoration of the Palestinian people's national rights -- including the right to establish their own country. On this basis, all countries in the Middle East can enjoy the right of independence and existence. Please note, I said on this basis.

In answer to a question on whether the visit will be extended Zhao Ziyang said: Many chiefs of state and heads of government of African countries have visited China. We owe them a lot. My visit to the 10 countries will take about a month. If I could have my own way I would like to spend 2 years visiting African countries.

In response to a reporter's question on China's aid to Africa Zhao Ziyang said: As I have just said, we will discuss the question of how to intensify economic and technical cooperation under the new situation during the visit. China will continue to assist African countries' construction as it supported the national liberation movement in Africa in the 1950's and 1960's.

Present at the airport for the sendoff were also Du Xingyuan, secretary general of the State Council; Chen Chu, deputy secretary general of the State council; Yang Dezhong, deputy director of the general office under the CPC Central Committee; Yao Guang, vice minister of foreign affairs; Han Nianlong, adviser of the ministry of foreign affairs; Zheng Tuobin, vice minister of foreign economic relations and trade; He Zhengwen, deputy chief of General Staff of the PLA; and Shen Tu, director of the Civil Aviation Administration of China; as well as envoys and staff members of the embassies of Morocco, Zambia, Zimbabwe, Kenya, Egypt, Algeria, Guinea, Zaire, the Congo, Tanzania and Pakistan.

Cites Friendship, Cooperation

[Text] Beijing, December 20 (XINHUA) -- Premier Zhao Ziyang said today the purpose of his visit to 10 African countries is to enhance understanding, friendship, unity and cooperation with them.

In a statement to Chinese and foreign journalists at Beijing airport, Zhao said these African countries have their own merits and experience worth studying.

"This visit will provide me with an opportunity to learn from African countries and peoples," Zhao said. "What rejoices me in particular is that I will be able to reunite with many old friends."

He and his colleagues were leaving for Africa with great pleasure, Zhao said.

"African peoples have won national independence successively as a result of protracted struggle against imperialism and colonialism, and they are now working to develop their national economy and make their countries powerful and prosperous," Zhao said. "Africa is a continent full of vigor and vitality."

The Chinese premier said he expects to exchange views with African leaders on expanding relations of friendship and cooperation and other issues of mutual interest. "We will, in particular, explore ways of strengthening our economic and technical cooperation in the new circumstances," he added.

"I hope my visit will be a success and that China's relations of friendship and cooperation with African and other Third World countries will grow still further," Zhao said.

The premier also answered questions raised by foreign correspondents.

A correspondent of the Long Island NEWSDAY from the United States asked if Premier Zhao's itinerary may extend to include Nigeria. Zhao said: "I don't have the plan as yet. Many African heads of state and government leaders have visited China on several occasions and we are owing a heavy debt in terms of exchange of visits. My present visit to the 10 countries will take me about a month. Personally, I would like to spend two years visiting in Africa."

In reply to a question asked by a REUTER correspondent about China's attitude toward aid to African countries, Zhao said: "I just said that we will explore ways of enhancing economic and technical cooperation in the new circumstances. China will continue supporting African countries in their economic construction just as it had aided their national independence movements in the 50's and 60's."

Answering an ASSOCIATED PRESS correspondent's question about Israel's right of existence, Premier Zhao said: "It has always been China's position that Israel must withdraw from the Arab territories it is occupying and that the Palestinian people must regain their national rights including the right to build their own country. On this basis, all countries in the Middle East should enjoy the right of independence and existence."

The Chinese premier said to the journalist with an emphatic tone: "I think you have noticed the phrase 'on this basis' which is used."

Leaves for Egypt

OW200828 Beijing XINHUA in English 0717 GMT 20 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 20 (XINHUA) -- Premier of the State Council Zhao Ziyang left here by special plane this morning for Cairo, capital of Egypt, starting his official friendly visit to ten African countries.

He was seen off at the airport by Hu Yaobang, general secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China, Wan Li, vice-premier of the State Council, Ulanhu, vice-chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress, Chen Muhua, state councillor and minister of foreign economic relations and trade, Hu Qili, member of the secretariat of the C.P.C. Central Committee, and Ji Pengfei, state councillor.

After Egypt, the Chinese premier will visit nine other African countries of Algeria, Morocco, Guinea, Zaire, the Congo, Zambia, Zimbabwe, Tanzania and Kenya.

Together with Premier Zhao Ziyang on the visit are Gu Mu, state councillor, Wu Xueqian, minister of foreign affairs, Gong Dafei, and Wen Yezhan, vice-ministers of foreign affairs, Lu Xuejian, vice-minister of foreign economic relations and trade, and Wang Ziyi, advisor to the ministry of machine-building industry, and Wang Letian, deputy department director of the headquarters of the General Staff of the Chinese People's Liberation Army.

Zhao Ziyang told reporters the purpose of his visit is to further the understanding, friendship and unity between China and the ten African countries. All African countries have merits and experience worth studying. "This visit will provide me with an opportunity to learn from African countries and peoples," he said.

Zhao Ziyang also shook hands with Hu Yaobang and diplomatic envoys and officials from the ten African countries and Pakistan, who came to see him off.

Also seeing the premier off at the airport were Du Xingyuan and Chen Chu, secretary general and deputy secretary-general of the State Council, Yang Dezhong, first deputy director of the general office of the C.P.C. Central Committee, Yao Guang, vice-minister of foreign affairs, and Han Nianlong, advisor to the Foreign Ministry, He Zhengwen, deputy chief of the General Staff of the P.L.A., Zheng Tuobin, vice-minister of foreign economic relations and trade, and Shen Tu, director general of Civil Aviation Administration of China.

RENMIN RIBAO on Zhao's Tour

[Editorial: "A Major Event in the History of Sino-African Relations"]

[Text] Beginning on 20 December, Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang will be making a friendly, official visit to African countries that include Egypt, Algeria, Morocco, Guinea, Zaire, the Congo, Zambia, Zimbabwe, Tanzania and Kenya. The fact that Premier Zhao Ziyang is going to make his first visits to the African countries after the 12th CPC Congress indicates that the Chinese Government attaches great importance to developing friendly relations and cooperation between African countries and China and to enhancing the profound friendship between the Chinese and African peoples.

Long-standing friendship exists between the Chinese and African peoples. As early as the second century China traded with Egypt. Later, friendly contacts and economic and cultural exchanges between China and countries in North Africa and on the eastern coast of Africa increased with each passing day. These friendly contacts were obstructed and undermined after the Western colonialists' aggression in Africa and China. After World War II, the stormy national liberation movement swept across Asia and Africa. The Chinese people booted out imperialists and founded a new China. African countries won their independence one after another. The visit to Africa by the late Chinese Premier Zhou Enlai in 1963 greatly promoted and strengthened the traditional friendship between the Chinese and African peoples and their militant unity was forged in the struggle against imperialism and colonialism. The 19 years since then have seen substantial development in the relations of friendship and cooperation between China and African countries. As of now, our country has established official diplomatic relations with 45 African countries and has signed friendship treaties, economic and technical cooperation agreements, trade payment agreements and cultural exchange agreements with many of them. Mutual visits by leaders and people from all walks of life in our country and in many African countries have taken place one after another. The Chinese and African peoples learn from one another and support one another in building their respective countries. This has further enhanced mutual relations of friendship and cooperation.

Great changes have taken place in the African political situation since the early 1960's. Except for Namibia and South Africa, where the people still are fighting against colonial rule and racism, the African countries fundamentally have accomplished the great historic task of achieving national independence. They now are working for the development of their national economies so as to consolidate their political independence with economic independence. This is the main trend of developments in Africa. However the African Continent still remains unstable due to disturbances and destruction caused by South Africa's racists, who are putting up a desperate struggle, and to rivalry for spheres of influence between the superpowers. This has seriously affected the stability and development of African countries. Besides, developed countries of the West are plundering and exploitating through unequal exchanges. This also is an important deterrent to rapid economic development of the African countries. In the past few years in particular, the international economic situation has been deteriorating continuously. The Western countries have spared no effort to shift their economic crisis onto the Third World countries, making the economic situation in African countries still more difficult.

Under such circumstances the demand for economic independence and the establishment of a new international economic order voiced by African countries and other Third World countries has become a major political issue closely linked to the maintenance of world peace. While opposing outside interference and maintaining peace and stability in Africa, the African countries in recent years have made unremitting efforts to promote a "South-North dialogue" and "South-South cooperation." This has given great impetus to the establishment of a just and reasonable new international economic order. No force in the world can block the great historical trend of the African peoples to build their new life.

China is a developing socialist country and belongs to the Third World. To oppose hegemony and defend world peace is the guiding principle of China's independent foreign policy. To enhance the unity and cooperation between China and other Third World countries is the basic starting point of China's foreign policy. China shares similar bitter experiences with the Third World countries and is faced with the same problems and tasks as theirs. China always holds that it is her sacred internationalist duty resolutely to support the African and Arab peoples in their struggle against imperialism, colonialism, hegemonism, South African racism and Israeli expansionism. The Chinese Government and people firmly support the African countries and peoples in their efforts to develop national economy, seek economic independence and establish a new international economic order.

Premier Zhao Ziyang's forthcoming friendly visit is the second one ever paid by a Chinese premier to Africa and follows Premier Zhou Enlai's visit in the 1960's. This is an important event in the history of relations between China and African countries. On behalf of the one billion Chinese people, he will extend cordial regards to the African peoples and through the visit study their experience of construction. His visit will further enhance understanding, friendship, unity and cooperation between China and African countries. We are deeply convinced that the premier's visit undoubtedly will further develop the relations of friendship and cooperation between China and the African countries. The friendship between the Chinese people and the African peoples will be similar to flowers in spring that grow more and more luxuriantly and beautifully.

EGYPT'S MUBARAK NOTES NEW ECONOMIC READJUSTMENT

OW181558 Beijing XINHUA in English 1502 GMT 18 Dec 82

[Text] Cairo, December 18 (XINHUA correspondent) -- "Egypt has entered a new stage of an economic management and reformation program," President Husni Mubarak declared at the recent congress of the ruling National Democratic Party.

This signifies that Egypt is making efforts to readjust its economic policies with a view to improving its economic condition.

The "open door" policy adopted in 1974 has brought about radical changes to Egypt's economy. Its GNP saw an increase of 8-9 percent annually since 1975 with the figure reaching 34.4 billion Egyptian pounds (about 41 billion U.S. dollars) in 1981-82. However, the policy had certain negative aspects. The bulk of the foreign aid went to non-productive sectors while industry and agriculture were more or less neglected.

This gradually led to an imbalance between consumption and production and between import and export. The inflation kept going up with the financial deficit in fiscal 1981-82 reaching 3.9 billion Egyptian pounds (about 4.6 billion U.S. dollars). Industrial and agricultural production slowed down and the country had to depend more heavily on foreign aid.

President Mubarak began to seek ways of reviving the economy after he assumed office in October last year. He declared that while the "open door" policy should be adhered to, some readjustments and reforms were necessary.

He stressed the need to "turn a consuming economy into a productive economy", that is, economic policies should be beneficial to the country's industrial and agricultural developments on the basis of self-reliance. Accordingly, the government in this fiscal year allocated 900 million Egyptian pounds (about 1,080 million U.S. dollars) for reclamation of land and food production, and 1.5 billion Egyptian pounds (about 1.8 billion U.S. dollars) for industrial investments.

Priority has been given to industry and agriculture in the current five-year plan (1982-1987) which was made public later last month.

Private investments from domestic resources are encouraged. According to a law recently adopted by the government, Egyptian private investors enjoy the same rights as their foreign counterparts, including exemption of commercial and industrial profit taxes for five years. While domestic private investments are expected to rise to 24 percent of the total during the period of the current five year plan, foreign investors are also welcome.

The government has also taken measures to reform the management system of state-run enterprises which have 80 percent of the country's total capital. Production in these enterprises will be managed by a board which can work out its own policies on prices and wages for its employees.

Strict limitation has been put on the use of privately owned foreign exchanges and the influx of luxurious consumer goods. At the same time, export items have been granted tax-free treatment and their prices have been adjusted to relieve the deficit in foreign trade.

President Mubarak has called on the people to make strenuous efforts to carry out the reformation program. Although there are bound to be twists and turns on the way forward, it is the common aspiration of the Egyptian people to reform their economy and to consolidate their political independence through economic independence.

REAGAN: FOREIGN TROOPS MUST LEAVE LEBANON 'NOW'

OW171942 Beijing XINHUA in English 1622 GMT 17 Dec 82

[Text] Washington, December 17 (XINHUA) -- President Ronald Reagan said in an interview yesterday that "the time is now" for foreign troops to withdraw from Lebanon.

THE WASHINGTON POST, which reported the interview today, quoted administration officials as saying that Reagan was growing impatient with Israeli demands that all remaining forces of the Palestine Liberation Organization be withdrawn from Lebanon before other troops leave.

"The Government of Lebanon should be sovereign over its own territory, and we think the time has come now for the foreign forces that are in there -- Syria, Israel and the remnant of the PLO that is in there -- to get out," said Reagan.

He added that "for those countries to delay in getting out now places them in the position of being occupying armies."

THE WASHINGTON POST also reported that U.S. special envoys Philip Habib and Morris Draper have been in the Middle East for weeks to help negotiate foreign troop withdrawal but little progress has been made because Israel has put forward unreasonable conditions during the negotiations.

It noted that Reagan's remarks reflect the growing concern shared by high officials in the administration that the stalemate on the troop withdrawals is getting in the way of serious discussions of the Middle East peace initiative he put forward last September 1, and that the initiative will lose its initial momentum when Israel and other foreign forces remain in Lebanon indefinitely.

It also noted that Reagan made the comment before he is to meet King Husayn of Jordan in Washington next week. The United States has always wanted Jordan to participate in the Middle East peace process, but this certainly cannot be done when Israel still occupies one third of the Lebanese territory.

ISRAELI 'CONCESSIONS' MASK DOMINATION OF LEBANON

OW191852 Beijing XINHUA in English 1833 GMT 19 Dec 82

["Commentary: U.S. Proposal for Partial Troop Withdrawal and Israeli New Trick -- by XINHUA Correspondent Rui Yingjie" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beirut, December 19 (XINHUA) -- U.S. special envoy Philip Habib and his assistant Morris Draper have been back to the Middle East for shuttles between Beirut and Jerusalem with a new U.S. proposal.

They were reported to try to break the deadlock in negotiations on the withdrawal of foreign troops from Lebanon. Only a couple of days after their arrival, it was reported that headway had been made in their talks with leaders of Lebanon and Israel. Israel expressed optimism as Prime Minister Menahem Begin said on Wednesday in Jerusalem that he believed that his country would soon conclude an agreement with Lebanon.

All this created an impression that thanks to U.S. efforts and Israeli concessions, a step forward, somehow, seemed to have been taken in negotiations on the pullout of foreign troops from Lebanon.

It is, however, easy to know what exactly all this means if only one pays attention to the "concessions" the United States has required Israel to make and the prerequisites demanded by Israel before making "concessions".

According to the new U.S. proposal, Syrian and Palestinian troops will withdraw from the north to the Al-Biqa' Valley, east Lebanon, while Israeli forces will withdraw from their occupied 'Alayn mountains along the Beirut-Damascus international highway to th areas between the coastal town of Damur, 15 kilometers south of Lebanon, and the Ash-Shuf Mountains, a withdrawal of less than 10 kilometers.

Israel also demanded that after the limited withdrawal of Israeli troops, the Lebanese Government must negotiate with it to conclude an "non-aggression agreement" as a prerequisite for the Israeli withdrawal from Lebanon.

As disclosed, the Israeli "non-aggression" calls for:

-- Israeli maintenance of its military positions near the Al-Biqa' Valley about 10 kms to the southeast of Beirut;

-- Establishment of a security zone between south Lebanon and Israel;

-- Supervising Lebanese territorial sky and waters;

-- Recognition of the legal presence of the Israeli-supported troops in south Lebanon;

-- Establishment of an Israeli diplomatic organ in Beirut;

-- Opening borders to Israel to let its merchants move freely and dump Israeli goods into Lebanese market.

The Israeli requests show that Israel is trying to replace its present military occupation by more naked, overall military, political and economic controls of Lebanon.

Lebanese President Amin al-Jumayyil made it clear in a speech on December 16 that Lebanon will refuse the Israeli requests.

Meanwhile, reports from Washington said the United States would make efforts for the withdrawal of all foreign troops from Lebanon in the first quarter of 1983. However, it made no mention of the Israeli demands while talking about withdrawal.

The U.S. is assuming a righteous posture as if it has devoted itself to establishing Lebanese security and stability. But as a matter of fact, it always stands on the Israeli side. Both the U.S. and Israel are trying to exploit some Lebanese' eager aspiration for an earliest possible withdrawal of foreign troops to force these people to swallow that bitter pill concocted by Israelis.

The Lebanese question can never be solved by so doing.

STATE COUNCIL PUBLISHES 1983 ECONOMIC PLAN

OW190820 Beijing XINHUA in English 0748 GMT 19 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 19 (XINHUA) -- The State Council today published the national economic and social development plan for 1983 adopted at the Fifth Session of the Fifth National People's Congress.

Following is a summary of the plan:

The main task for the 1983 national economic and social development is to continue implementing the principle of readjustment, restructuring, consolidation and improvement and place improving economic results above all. Specific tasks and major indices are as follows:

1. Ensure a steady increase in grain production, while boosting a diversified economy and bringing about an all-round development of agriculture, forestry, animal husbandry, sideline occupations and fishery.

The total agricultural output value in 1983 is planned to rise four percent over the estimated figure of 1982. Grain output will be 342.5 million tons, 7.5 million tons above the expected 1982 output, and cotton, 3.37 million tons, an increase of 70,000 tons over this year's estimated figure.

It is imperative to continue implementing various rural economic policies formulated by the Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party, consolidate and perfect all forms of the responsibility system in agricultural production and further enhance peasants' enthusiasm for action.

2. Further readjust the product mix, and strive for the improvement of economic results and a sustained, steady increase in industrial production.

The 1983 industrial output value is planned to grow four percent over the estimated figure of 1982, and a five percent increase is the goal in implementing the plan. The output of yarn will be 3.32 million tons, 0.3 percent more than 1982's expected output; sugar, 3.7 million tons, an increase of 8.2 percent; and there are to be fairly big increases in output of bicycles, wristwatches, washing machines, cameras and other durable consumer goods. Coal output will be 670 million tons, up 3.1 percent, compared with this year's estimated output. The output of crude oil will be 100 million tons, maintaining the same production level in each of the past two years. Electricity output will be 338,000 million kilowatt-hours, a four percent increase.

Because of the energy shortage, steel output is targetted at 35.5 million tons, one million tons less than this year's estimated figure. Output of chemical fertilizers will be 12.55 million tons, roughly the estimated figure for 1982. Cement output will be 92 million tons, up 2.2 percent, and timber output, 50.85 million cubic meters, an increase of 1.7 percent.

In transportation, the 1983 volume of cargo carried through railways is set at 1,120 million to 1,140 million tons, 20 million to 40 million tons more than the estimated figure of 1982.

Short-distance transport should be handled through waterways and highways as much as possible in order to ease the strain on railways. Efforts must be made to develop posts and telecommunications and civil aviation.

3. Strive to increase revenues and reduce expenditures, and continue to maintain the balance between state revenue and expenditure and between credit receipts and payments.

The state budget for 1983 sets total revenue at 123,200 million yuan, 12,500 million yuan more than in 1982. Total expenditure is set at 126,200 million yuan, an increase of 12,500 million yuan. On balance, the deficit will come to 3,000 million yuan.

4. Exercise strict control over the volume of total investment in fixed assets, accelerate construction of key energy and transport projects and selectively promote technical transformation of existing enterprises.

The 1983 total investment in fixed assets is set at 74,700 million yuan, 4,300 million yuan less than in 1982. Of this, investment in capital construction will amount to 50,700 million yuan, a decrease of 1,800 million yuan, and funds for financing equipment replacement and technical transformation of existing enterprises will come to 24,000 million yuan, 2,500 million yuan less.

Of the total investment in capital construction, there will be fairly big increases in construction of key projects. The funds for equipment replacement and technical transformation will be used mainly to save consumption of energy resources and raw materials, reduce costs, restructure the product mix, upgrade the product property and quality, raise the multi-purpose utilization rate of resources and improve the environment so as to achieve real technical updating.

5. Better organize circulation of commodities and aim to expand foreign trade.

The purchasing power for 1983 is planned to be 276,000 million yuan, 20,000 million yuan or 7.8 percent more than the estimated figure of 1982. Of this, cities and towns will increase 6,800 million yuan and the rural areas will increase 13,200 million yuan. Commercial departments must strengthen market prediction and organize well the supply of commodities.

The total volume of import and export trade is set at 68,400 million yuan, an increase of 14.5 percent over the estimated 1982 figure. Of this amount, export volume will be 32,800 million yuan, up 4.8 percent and import volume will be 35,700 million yuan, up 25.3 percent. Efforts will be made to increase export, especially the export of machinery and electrical products. Active efforts will be made to continue to use foreign funds effectively and import in a planned manner advanced technology that meets the needs of the country, especially the need in technical transformation of the industry.

6. Strengthen scientific and technical research and popularization and application of scientific research results and intensify the training of personnel.

In 1983, systematic efforts will be made to tackle key technical problems and to popularize scientific and technical results outlined in the Sixth Five-Year Plan. A long-term plan for development and research is slated to be worked out and technical personnel will be organized to participate in the execution of the technical transformation program of various trades and industries.

Colleges and universities are scheduled to take further steps to readjust their course structures and fields of study and strive to improve teaching quality. In 1983, colleges and universities will enroll 341,000 students, increasing an estimated 27,000 from 1982 and secondary technical schools will enroll 434,000 students, increasing an estimated 18,000 over 1982. All forms of adult education should be supported. These include television colleges, correspondence colleges and evening colleges. Meanwhile, work must be done well to train cadres.

7. Continue to improve the material and cultural life of the urban and rural population on the basis of production being developed.

Further efforts are needed for family planning to work well successfully in controlling the growth of the population, especially in the countryside. The national natural population growth rate in 1982 is estimated to be 13.5 per thousand and in 1983 the figure will be controlled at under 14 per thousand.

Primary education and secondary must be run well. All approaches should be adopted to organize the peasants and workers to improve their general knowledge and learn political and scientific knowledge in order to raise their cultural and scientific knowledge level.

Efforts will be continued to increase employment in rural and urban areas. In 1983, jobs for 5.5 million young people will be arranged.

The incomes of urban and rural population will be further increased. In 1983, the payroll in state-owned units is planned to increase 3,000 million yuan over the 1982 estimated figure to reach 74,000 million yuan. The peasants' income will continue to rise on the basis of increased agricultural production and lowered production costs.

Great efforts will be made to continue to improve the living conditions for urban workers and staff members and efficiently organize the production and supply of building materials needed in the countryside. Further steps will be taken to protect the environment and reduce pollution, strengthen labor protection and encourage safety production.

The mass patriotic sanitation campaign will be carried on in depth to reduce the incidence of diseases.

Further development will be made in art and literature, radio broadcasting and television, press and publication and other cultural undertakings. The creative atmosphere for art and literature will be encouraged.

In order to fulfill or overfulfill the 1983 plan, it is necessary to improve economic results. This calls for continued efforts to restructure and readjust the existing enterprises, institute and perfect the economic responsibility system, encourage technological progress and actively improve planning and management.

STATE COUNCIL'S FIGURES FOR 1982 ECONOMIC PLAN

[Text] Beijing, December 19 (XINHUA) -- China's 1982 national economic plan is expected to be fulfilled or overfulfilled, with a five percent increase in agricultural output value and a seven percent increase in industrial output value from last year, according to figures released by the State Council today.

Grain output is estimated to increase more than 10 million tons from 1981 to reach 335 million tons, topping the peak 1979 figure. Cotton output is estimated to be 332,000 tons more than last year to reach 3.3 million tons. The output of oil-bearing seeds is estimated to be 11 million tons, 800,000 tons more than 1981. Increases will also be registered in the output of sugar-bearing crops, silkworm cocoons, tea, pork, mutton and beef.

1982 will be the fourth consecutive year of increases for light industry, registering a growth rate of 5.1 percent in terms of output value.

Output of bicyles is expected to be 32 percent up from last year; sewing machines, 19.5 percent, and washing machines at least doubled. Big increases are also expected in sugar beer, synthetic detergents and plastic products.

Chemical fibers, chemical fabrics, salt, household porcelain and radio sets, whose production has been under control, showed some decreases compared with last year.

Heavy industry recovers fast after two years of economic readjustment, with total output value expected to increase 9 percent from last year.

Coal output will reach 650 million tons, 28 million tons more than last year, an increase of 4.6 percent. Crude oil output will be 101.7 million tons, about the same as last year. Electricity output will be 325,000 million kilowatt-hours, 15,700 million kilowatt-hours and 5.1 percent more than last year. Increases are also estimated for rolled steel, timber, cement, glass, acids, soda, chemical fertilizers, plastics, walking tractors, power generating equipment, motor vehicles, locomotives, railway wagons, ships and medical apparatus.

Plans for transport and posts and telecommunications can also be overfulfilled.

State revenue is projected to be 110,700 million yuan by the end of the year, 1,700 million yuan more than last year. State expenditure will reach 113,700 million yuan, 2,200 million yuan more than last year, showing a deficit of 3,000 million yuan.

Investment for capital construction is expected to reach 52,500 million yuan, 8,200 million yuan more than last year. The pace of construction of key projects has been quickened and investment returns on some projects improved. The investment for fixed assets is expected to reach 79,000 million yuan. Of this amount, investment for replacement and technical transformation projects will reach 26,500 million yuan, 4,000 million yuan more than last year.

Retail sales are expected to reach 256,000 million yuan, 21,000 million yuan or 8.9 percent more than last year. Retail sale prices have remained at the same level as at the end of last year but slightly higher than last year's average. There are no big changes in official market prices. Prices in rural markets rose slightly.

Total volume of import and export is expected to reach 59,800 million yuan, 92.6 percent of the planned figure, and 0.6 percent less than last year. Export quota is expected to be fulfilled and show a 0.5 percent increase from last year while import plan can be fulfilled by 85.7 percent and will be 1.9 percent less than last year.

Plans for scientific research is well fulfilled, with more research results and better application of the research results and better application of the research results carried out than before. The successful launching of a carrier rocket by submarines marked a new progress in science and technology.

Universities and colleges reported a total enrollment of 314,000, which is 35,000 more than last year. Enrollment in vocational and agricultural middle schools is expected to reach 490,000, which is 220,000 more than last year. The number of hospital beds is expected to be 43,000 more than last year.

Incomes continue to rise nationwide. The value of agricultural and sideline produce sold to the state by the peasants is estimated to be 10,000 million yuan more than last year. The payroll of workers and staff will reach 88,000 million yuan, 6,000 million yuan more than last year. The bank savings of rural and urban people at the end of October was 11,700 million yuan more than at the beginning of this year, with the total being 64,100 million yuan.

WAN LI TO ACT AS PREMIER DURING ZHAO'S ABSENCE

Sixth 5-Year Plan 'Excerpts'

HK171002 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 13 Dec 82 pp 1-4

[Text] The Sixth 5-Year Plan of the PRC for National Economic and Social Development (1981-1985)

(Approved by the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC on 10 December 1982) (Excerpts)

Preface

The Sixth 5-Year Plan of the PRC for National Economic and Social Development (1981-1985) has been formulated on the basis of conscientiously summing up our long experience in socialist construction after an overall analysis of the present situation in national economic and social development and in accordance with the strategic arrangements made by the CPC Central Committee for economic construction before the end of this century. This 5-year plan, which proceeds from the realities in China in taking a new socialist road for building a modern economy, is a continuation of the policy to readjust, restructure, reorganize and upgrade the national economy and enable it to develop steadily and healthily and will further promote the socialist modernization and improve the Chinese people's livelihood.

While steadily working for more and better economic results, the strategic objective of China's economic construction for the two decades between 1981 and the end of this century is to quadruple the gross annual value of industrial and agricultural production in order to place China in the front ranks of world countries in terms of gross national income and output of major industrial and agricultural products, give a strong impetus to modernizing the entire national economy and enable the Chinese people to be comparatively well off both materially and culturally. To realize this objective, we must keep a firm hold on agriculture, energy and transport, and education and science, the three strategic priorities for promoting the national economy as a whole. To realize this objective, we must take the following two steps in our strategic planning: in the first decade, aim mainly at laying a solid foundation, accumulating strength and creating the necessary conditions; and in the second, usher in a new period of vigorous economic development. To accomplish this planning is a very arduous but glorious historical task.

The formulation and implementation of the Sixth 5-Year Plan is a major step for realizing the gigantic objective for the two decades. During these 5 years, it is necessary to adopt effective measures in order to achieve stability and a certain growth rate in the economy and create better conditions for future economic and social development.

Part One: The Basic Task and Composite Targets

Chapter 1: The Basic Task

The basic task of the Sixth 5-Year Plan is to continue to implement the policy of readjustment, restructuring, reorganization and upgrading, further solve the various problems left over from history that have obstructed the economic development, achieve a decisive victory in bringing about a fundamental change for the better in the financial and economic situation, and lay better foundations and create more favorable conditions for national economic and social development during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period. The specific requirements of the basic task follow:

1. While working for more and better economic results, it is necessary to plan for a 4-percent annual increase and strive for a 5-percent increase in the implementation of the plan in industrial and agricultural production.

2. It is necessary to vigorously increase the production of farm produce, light and textile industry products and other manufactured goods for daily use needed by the people, increase the supply and improve the quality of consumer goods to meet the needs of growing purchasing power and changes in consumer structure, and maintain basic stability in market price.

3. It is necessary to energetically readjust the service orientation and product mix of heavy industry, lower the consumption of materials -- especially energy consumption -- and maintain a general balance between the production of the means of production and the means of subsistence.

4. It is necessary to carry out technical transformation of the existing key enterprises in a planned manner, extensively promote technical innovations with the emphasis on energy conservation, and at the same time concentrate necessary funds on stepping up the construction of energy and transport projects in order to do a good job in preparing for development during the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

5. It is necessary to unify and organize the scientific and technical forces throughout the country in solving difficult scientific and technical problems and popularizing and applying the fruits of scientific and technical research, strive to develop education, science and other cultural undertakings, and promote the building of a socialist material and spiritual civilization.

6. It is necessary to intensify the building of national defense and the national defense industry, study and develop new-type conventional and strategic weapons, and modernize the army's equipment.

7. By developing production, raising economic results and appropriately concentrating funds, it is necessary to stop the downward trend in the state financial revenues and enable the state to start to increase revenues so as to gradually increase expenditures for economic and cultural undertakings and ensure a basic balance between financial revenues and credits.

8. It is necessary to vigorously expand foreign trade, effectively utilize foreign capital and actively import advanced technical know-how in order to promote economic and technical development in the country.

9. It is necessary to strictly control the population growth, properly solve the employment problem of the urban labor force and continuously improve the urban and rural people's material and cultural livelihood on the basis of the development of production and evaluation of labor productive forces.

10. It is necessary to step up environmental protection, stop further environmental pollution and improve the environment of some key areas.

Chapter 2. Gross Social Product, National Income and Economic Results

1. Gross Social Product: By 1985, the gross social product produced by agriculture, industry, building industry, transport and commerce, estimated on the basis of fixed 1980 prices, will reach 1,030 billion yuan, an increase of 180 billion yuan over the 850 billion yuan in 1980, achieving an average annual growth rate of 4 percent. Of this gross social product, the total output value of agriculture will be 266 billion yuan; an increase of 21.7 percent over the 218.7 billion yuan in 1980, achieving an average growth rate of 4 percent. The total output value of industry will be 605 billion yuan, an increase of 21.7 percent over the 497.2 billion yuan in 1980, achieving an average annual growth rate of 4 percent.

2. National Income: By 1985, the total national income will reach 445 billion yuan, an increase of 78.3 billion yuan over that in 1980, achieving an average annual increase of 15.6 billion yuan or an average annual growth rate of 4 percent, approaching or equivalent to the planned growth rates of the total output values of industry and agriculture.

By 1985, the consumption funds will account for 71 percent of the utilization amount from the national income, and the accumulation funds will account for about 29 percent of the utilization amount from the national income.

3. Economic Results: Improving economic results must be made a prerequisite in increasing the gross social product and national income. The following standards must be reached for various economic and technical targets:

(1) The quality of industrial products must meet the standards specified by the state. In addition, efforts must be made to raise the ratio of quality products. Departments in charge of industry should revise the current technical standards for industrial products so as to raise these standards still higher.

(2) Energy consumption per 100 million yuan worth of total industrial output value will drop from 81,500 dun in 1980 to between 71,500 and 68,200 dun in 1985, achieving an annual energy-saving rate of between 2.6 and 3.5 percent.

(3) By 1985, the steel products utilization rate of the key enterprises in the machine-building industry will be 3 percent higher than that in 1980.

(4) The productivity of the entire labor for state-run industrial enterprises will be heightened by an average of 2 percent annually.

(5) The comparable product costs of state-run industrial enterprises will be reduced 1 to 2 percent annually.

(6) The expenditures used by state-run commercial enterprises for the circulation of commodities will be reduced 1 to 2 percent annually.

(7) In state-run industrial enterprises, the number of days allowed for turnover of circulating funds will be shortened from 114 days in 1980 to 105 days in 1985; in state-run commercial enterprises, the number will be shortened from 165 days in 1980 to 163 days in 1985.

All leading organs, economic management departments and grassroots economic units must give priority to raising economic results. In accordance with the overall needs of the country, they should clearly define their respective economic and technical targets and adopt effective measures to supervise and ensure their fulfillment.

Chapter 3: Finance and Credit

Section One: State Revenues

The state financial revenues will reach 127.4 billion yuan in 1985, 18.9 billion yuan more than in 1980 and an average annual increase of 3.8 billion yuan, or 3.3 percent. The state financial revenues will total 595.3 billion yuan in the 5 years.

Section Two: Expenditures

The state expenditures will reach 130.4 billion yuan in 1985, an increase of 9.2 billion yuan over 1980. The state expenditures will total 609.8 billion yuan in the 5 years, including 583.6 billion yuan for domestic expenditures and 26.2 billion yuan for expenditures on capital construction projects built with foreign loans.

In state expenditures, we will, first of all, guarantee funds for the construction of key projects, gradually increase expenditures on educational, scientific, cultural, public health and physical culture undertakings, and, at the same time, ensure the essential needs for military and administrative spending, repay foreign debts, give due consideration to expenses in other fields, and help the minority nationality areas and the economically underdeveloped regions develop their economy and culture. Arrangements for the main expenditures during the 5 years follow:

1. Appropriations (including foreign loans) for capital construction total 170 billion yuan, an average of 34 billion yuan per annum, 29.9 percent of the total expenditure, and 10.2 percent less than the 38.1 percent during the Fifth 5-Year Plan.

2. Allocations for education, science, culture, public health and physical culture amount to 96.7 billion yuan, an average of 19.3 billion yuan per annum, 15.9 percent of the total expenditure (including 16.8 percent in 1985), and 4.9 percent more than the 11 percent during the Fifth 5-Year Plan.

3. Appropriations for financing agriculture amount to 38.7 billion yuan, averaging 7.7 billion yuan annually and consisting of 6.3 percent of the total expenditure, roughly, the same level as in the Fifth 5-Year Plan.

4. Expenditures on national defense and preparations against war account for 88.3 billion yuan, an average of 17.7 billion yuan annually, 14.5 percent of the total expenditure or 2 percent less than the 16.5 percent during the Fifth 5-Year Plan.

5. Expenditures on administration and management amount to 40.8 billion yuan, an average of 8.2 billion yuan per annum, 6.7 percent of the total expenditure, or 1.8 percent more than the 4.9 percent in the previous 5-year plan.

6. Development funds in aid to the minority nationality areas and the economically underdeveloped regions take 2.5 billion yuan, 2.2 billion yuan more than the 300 million yuan during the previous 5-year plan.

7. Payments on the principal and interest of foreign loans take 24.3 billion yuan, averaging 4.9 billion yuan per annum.

8. The central reserve funds account for 4 billion yuan and the local working capital [ji dong cai li 8541 0520 6299 0500] and reserve funds take 6.8 billion yuan.

Section Three: Measures For Increasing Revenues and Retrenching Expenditures

The balance of financial revenues and expenditures during the 5 years shows an annual deficit of about 3 billion yuan. The deficit in 1981 was 2.5 billion yuan. In implementing the annual plan from henceforth, we must strive to bring the deficit below 3 billion yuan. The basic measures for achieving this target are increasing production, raising economic results, and, at the same time, changing the situation in which funds are excessively scattered so that the state can concentrate necessary funds, maintain an appropriate proportion of state revenues in the entire national income, and ensure a balance between central financial revenues and expenditures.

Section Four: Credit Receipts, Payments and Issuance of Currency

The sources for credit funds will increase 192.5 billion yuan and the utilization of credit funds will increase 217 billion yuan. In light of the reality, some currency are issued.

Vigorous efforts must be made to overfulfill the savings deposit plan and strictly control issuance of loans in accordance with the plan in order to ensure a basic balance between credit receipts and payments, and to prevent credit inflation. It is necessary to effectively supervise loans and control issuance of currency.

Chapter 4: Investment in Fixed Assets

In the 5 years, total investment in fixed assets for units owned by the whole people throughout the country will be 360 billion yuan, including 230 billion yuan for capital construction and 130 billion yuan for updating equipment and technical transformation.

Section One: Capital Construction

Of capital construction investment, energy and transport are priorities, and appropriate arrangements are made for agricultory development, the textile and other light industries, the metallurgical industry and the chemical and building materials industries, as well as for education, science, culture, public health service, urban public utilities, commerce and foreign trade.

Investment funds are distributed among various sectors as follows:

The fuel and power industries will receive 58.63 billion yuan, of which 17.93 billion yuan are earmarked for the coal industry, 15.47 billion yuan for the petroleum industry, 20.73 billion yuan for the power industry, and 4.5 billion yuan for major energy-saving measures.

Communications and transport services will receive 29.83 billion yuan, of which 17.29 billion yuan are earmarked for railways, 9.61 billion yuan for other transport facilities, 580 million yuan for civil aviation, and 2.35 billion yuan for post and telecommunications services.

Agriculture, forestry, water conservancy and meteorological services will receive 14.13 billion yuan.

The textile and other light industries will receive 13.98 billion yuan.

A total of 7.28 billion yuan will be invested in the forestry and building materials industries.

The metallurgical industry will receive 17.51 billion yuan.

The chemical industry will receive 11.43 billion yuan.

A total of 1.49 billion yuan are earmarked for geological exploration.

The machine-building industry will receive 2.89 billion yuan.

Other industries will receive 8.46 billion yuan.

A total of 9.43 billion yuan will be invested in science, education, culture, public health service and physical culture.

A total of 6.26 billion yuan are earmarked for the development of commerce and foreign trade.

A total of 17.88 billion yuan are earmarked for housing for workers and staff members, urban public utilities and environmental protection.

A total of 30.8 billion yuan are earmarked for earthquake rehabilitation in Tangshan and Tianjin, support for underdeveloped areas and other construction projects.

A total of 890 large- and medium-sized construction projects will be undertaken, of which 400 will be completed. The remainder will be carried over for continued construction during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period.

New production capacities to be added to the major industries and transport services are as follows:

Coal industry: One hundred one coal pits will be built, adding 80 million tons in new production capacity;

Power industry: Ten hydroelectric power stations and 27 thermal power stations will be completed. These and the partially completed power stations will add 12.9 million kilowatts in installed capacity, of which 3.2 million kilowatts will be hydroelectric power;

Petroleum industry: Production capacity for crude oil will be increased by 35 million tons;

Railways: The plan provides for laying 2,067 kilometers of rails, electrifying 2,511 kilometers and double-tracking 1,689 kilometers of the present railways.

Harbors: Fifty-four deep-water berths will be completed, increasing the handling capacity of China's harbors by 100 million tons;

Building materials industry: Twenty-five cement factories will be completed, increasing cement production capacity by 12.4 million tons;

Forestry industry: Logging and hauling capacity will be increased by 3.2 million cubic meters;

Textile industry: Twelve chemical fiber projects will be completed, increasing chemical fiber production capacity by 380,000 dun. Six cotton spinning plants and 6 woolen spinning plants will be completed, adding 300,000 new cotton spindles (and another 4.4 million spindles through equipment updating and technical transformation) and 200,000 new woolen spindles (and another 270,000 spindles through equipment updating and technical transformation);

Light industry: Sugar production capacity will be increased by 500,000 tons, paper production capacity by 310,000 tons and salt production capacity by 1.03 million tons. In addition, equipment updating and technical transformation will further increase sugar production by 1.38 million tons, paper production capacity by 750,000 tons and salt production capacity by 340,000 tons.

Metallurgical industry: Priority will be given to the first stage construction of the Baoshan steel complex so that its blast furnaces will start operation in 1985 with an initial production capacity of 3 million tons of iron, 3 million tons of steel and 500,000 tons of seamless steel tubes;

Chemical industry: Production capacity of synthetic ammonia, phosphate fertilizer and ethylene will be increased by 1,525,000 tons, 46,000 tons and 115,000 tons respectively.

Specific funds are earmarked for scientific research, technical and economic appraisal, exploration and design and other preliminary work on 279 selected projects during the Sixth 5-Year Plan period to make it dovetail with long-range development plans.

Section Two: Equipment Updating and Technical Transformation

A total of 130 billion yuan will be invested for equipment updating and technical transformation. Of this amount, 13.1 billion yuan will come from the state coffer; 38.5 billion yuan will be bank loans; and depreciation funds and other self-raised funds (including use of foreign investment) of localities, departments and enterprises will make up the remaining 78.4 billion yuan.

Updating and transformation should be aimed at improving product mix and enhancing product property and quality with the emphasis on saving energy and raw and semifinished materials. The plan includes updating the equipment and technology of the existing enterprises, rational use of resources and bringing serious pollution under control, popularizing the application of the results of scientific and technological research that are proved effective, and increasing the production capacity of light industrial products which are in short supply.

Section Three: Strive To Increase Investment Returns

It is imperative to strictly control the scale of investment in fixed assets ensuring that the needs of energy, transport and other key projects and of the technical transformation of the existing enterprises are met, while curtailing blind construction to expand the capacity of the processing industries in general. The stress of every capital construction, equipment updating and technical transformation project should be to shorten the building cycles and reduce construction costs. Every effort should be made to increase the investment returns.

The major measures for controlling the scale of investment and increasing investment returns are:

1. The overall scale of investment in fixed assets, including state budgeted funds, self-raised funds and bank loans, must go through overall balancing by the State Planning Commission and the provincial, municipal and autonomous regional planning commissions and must be brought in line with the unified state plan.

2. All large- and medium-sized capital construction projects are subject to examination and approval by the State Planning Commission; small capital construction projects are subject to examination and approval by the provincial, municipal and autonomous regional planning commissions and relevant departments of the State Council; and, except for those that the enterprises are entitled to undertake according to state regulations, all projects for technical transformation are subject to joint examination and approval by the appropriate planning commissions and economic commissions at different levels according to their authorities.

3. All construction projects must be undertaken in strict compliance with the procedures for capital construction. No project shall be included in the annual construction plan, still less shall it be started hastily, without prior feasibility studies and technical and economic appraisal, or without such preparatory work as adequate prospecting and designing.

4. It is necessary to improve designing and strengthening construction management. It is necessary to revise and draw up engineering and construction standards and norms and to strengthen basic work focusing on increasing economic results. It is necessary to consolidate the construction enterprises in an all-round way, improve management and administration, increase labor efficiency and ensure engineering quality.

5. It is necessary to reexamine and set reasonable standards for budgetary estimates and budgets of investments in fixed assets, as well as reasonable standards for charges, in order to reduce project costs.

6. As regards large- and medium-sized projects already decided on, the following must be done step-by-step: fix the scale of construction, total amount of investment, time schedule, returns on investment and conditions for cooperation with other units.

7. It is necessary to improve the system under which a project is checked, accepted under completion and put into operation.

8. It is necessary to continue to implement the system of construction investment under which charges are made for use of the completed project and to implement step by step the system under which the construction of projects is undertaken by contractors.

9. All types of investments in capital construction are to be placed under the centralized control of the Construction Bank of China, which is to supervise their use according to plan.

Chapter 5: Goals of Scientific and Technological Development and Training of Competent Personnel

By taking major scientific and technological problems in economic and social development and popularizing the application of results of scientific and technological research, our goals are to achieve some breakthroughs in solving the key technical problems that exist in the weak links of the national economy, mainly energy saving and exploitation, communications and transport, agriculture and multipurpose use of resources; to make some progress in environmental protection, urban and rural construction, medical and public health services, family planning and other social undertakings; and to get well prepared in science and technology for development in the Seventh 5-Year Plan period.

In science and technology, the state will mainly tackle 100 major problems in 38 scientific and technological research projects in 8 fields. The most important projects are:

1. to breed a number of superior new varieties of rice, wheat, soybean, corn, cotton, sugar crops, rape, and animals and fowls, and to set up perfect breeding systems;

2. research in large-scale integrated circuit technology and its industrial production technology and equipment as well as development of computer technology;

3. energy exploitation and energy-saving technology;

4. research in chemical fiber spinning technology and fabric dyeing and finishing equipment;

5. research in raising the level of crude oil processing and comprehensive utilization of petrochemicals;

6. research in comprehensive utilization of the associated ores in the three big mines at Jinchuan, Panzhihua and Baotou; improve red hematite ore dressing technology; and new types of key materials urgently needed by the defense, electronics and other industries.

7. development of the 2,050-millimeter hot continuous rolling machine, the 600,000-kilowatt thermal power generating unit, extra high-tension alternating current transmission and transformer equipment, offshore petroleum drilling and extraction equipment and other complete sets of large equipment.

Some of the above-mentioned projects are to be completed or will make important progress during the Sixth 5-Year Plan period.

In popularizing the results of scientific and technological research, the state will put into nationwide use the results of 40 key scientific and technological research projects.

Basic research will be steadily developed while tackling key scientific and technological research projects, popularizing results of scientific and technological research and strengthening research of key application and development projects.

Vigorous efforts will be made to strengthen the training of competent personnel in all fields. On the basis of improving the quality of teaching, higher education and secondary professional education will be developed and the rotational training of on-the-job cadres will be carried out. The number of newly admitted students in institutions of higher education in general will increase from 280,000 in 1980 to 400,000 in 1985, and the total enrollment in these institutions will increase from 1,144,000 in 1980 to 1.3 million in 1985. In the 5 years, 1.5 million students will graduate from colleges, and in 1985 there will be 1.5 million students attending television, correspondence and evening courses. In 1985, a total of 20,000 postgraduate students will be admitted, 5.5 times the number in 1980, and 45,000 are to complete their postgraduate studies in the 5 years.

Chapter 6: Goals of Development of the People's Livelihood and Social Undertakings

The annual natural population growth rate will be kept under 13 per thousand during the 5-year period.

A total of 29 million new jobs will be provided in cities and towns during the 5-year period.

The total payroll for staff and workers will increase at an average of 4.9 percent annually.

The peasants' per capita net income will increase at an average of 6 percent annually.

The consumption level of residents in cities and rural areas will go up at an average of 4.1 percent annually.

A total of 310 million square meters of housing will be constructed in cities and towns throughout the country during the 5-year period; 2.5 billion square meters of new houses will be completed in the rural areas.

The number of hospital beds will increase by 250,000, and the number of professional health workers will increase by 600,000.

There will be a fairly big development in the cultural, art, radio and television broadcasting, newspapers, publishing, sports and other fields.

Part Two: Development Plans of the Economic Departments

Chapter 7: Agriculture

During the Sixth 5-Year Plan period, agriculture will continue to be placed at an important strategic position so that the agricultural economy will continue to be enhanced.

All forms of production responsibility systems in the rural areas must be stabilized, and these systems must be perfected and improved, step by step, on the basis of summing up the masses' practical experience. New agricultural science and technology must be energetically adopted and popularized so that the conditions for agricultural production will be improved. To achieve an overall increase in agricultural production, production of cereal crops must never be slackened and economic diversification must be actively developed.

Section One: Agricultural Crops

The targets for major agricultural outputs by 1985 are as follows:

Grain: 360 million dun, an increase of 12.3 percent over 1980. Of this amount, 11.5 million dun will be soybean, an increase of 44.8 percent over 1980;

Cotton: 3.6 million dun, an increase of 33 percent over 1980;

Oil-bearing crops: 10.5 million dun, an increase of 36.5 percent over 1980;

Sugar crops: 46.7 million dun, an increase of 60.4 percent over 1980. Of this amount, 35.88 million dun will be sugarcane and 10.82 million dun will be beets;

Tobacco: 1.3 million dun, an increase of 81 percent over 1980;

By setting the areas for growing major agricultural crops and the amounts of products to be procured, by making procurement contracts and by carrying out correct pricing policies, the peasants will be guided in making rational plans for various crops so that the supply of agricultural products will be compatible with the needs of society. Areas for growing cereal crops must be maintained at 1.7 billion mu nationwide and must not be reduced any further; but the size within a province or autonomous region may be appropriately adjusted according to local conditions. Areas for growing cotton must be maintained at about 85 million mu nationwide; rational readjustments may be made among different localities. Areas for growing rapeseed must be controlled. Areas for growing tobacco must be kept at about 8 million mu. The state will set the requisition base through purchase and other procurement quotas for major agricultural and sideline products. Certain products that exceed the base amounts or quotas will be purchased at higher or lower prices; other products that are not purchased by the state may be marketed by the peasants themselves.

To further arouse the production enthusiasm of the peasants in the grain producing areas, the state will give them preferential treatment in terms of investment and allocation of supplies and will intensify the construction of bases for production of cash crops in a planned manner. At the same time the state will actively support those provinces and autonomous regions that have to import foodgrain to develop grain production.

With regard to agricultural production know-how, positive efforts will be exerted to select and popularize fine seed strains; more fertilizer will be used and composition of chemical fertilizer and know-how in applying fertilizer will be improved; construction of water conservancy works and control of insect pests will be intensified; modern agricultural know-how will be energetically popularized and developed; supply of diesel oil, electricity, farm machines and implements essential for agricultural production will be ensured; and state-owned farms will be better run by improving their management.

Section Two: Animal Husbandry

By 1985 the output of pork, beef and mutton will reach 14.6 million dun, topping that of 1980 by 21 percent. Output of eggs and milk must be increased and the breeding of various fine strains of animals, fowls, bees and rabbits peculiar to certain localities, and the breeding of such rare animals as minks and musk deer should be developed.

All policies must be earnestly implemented. Animal husbandry should be developed with state, collective and individual efforts. Household breeding businesses and professional breeding households should be promoted. The internal structure of animal husbandry should continue to be readjusted. This means that while developing pig raising, the breeding of cattle, sheep and rabbits -- which are principally herbivorous -- should also be developed. The composition of livestock should be restructured. The number of female animals should be increased. The measures for fattening young livestock for slaughter during the same year should be popularized. The construction of pastures and grassland should be expedited. By 1985, the area of artificial pastures will be expanded to 100 million mu from 32 million mu in 1980. Feed processing should be developed by various means such as the setting up of a factory with joint efforts in order to make full use of byproducts such as chaff, bran and rice dregs from food processing. The breeding of dairy cattle and dairy goats by collectives and individual rural households should be energetically developed in the outskirts of large- and medium-size cities and in the vicinity of large industrial and mining districts so that cities' milk supplies will increase.

Section Three: Aquatic Production

By 1985, the output of aquatic products should reach 5.1 million dun, an increase of 13 percent over that of 1980. By 1985, the output of fresh water products should reach 1.6 million dun, topping that of 1980 by 78 percent, and the output of sea water products should reach 550,000 dun, or a 25 percent increase over 1980.

The right to use lakes, small reservoirs, dams, various types of water surfaces and beaches must be further ensured. Breeding by professional contractors and rural households, which are mainly composed of professional and selected households, should be actively developed. All forms of joint operations should be encouraged. By 1985, there should be 59 million mu of water surfaces, or 16 million mu more than in 1980, for fresh water breeding, and there should be 2.5 million mu of sea water surface or 500,000 mu more than in 1980, for sea water breeding.

Section Four: The Rural Industry and Sideline Occupations

The value of industrial output and sideline occupations in the rural areas should increase faster. The existing rural enterprises engaged in industrial and sideline production must be restructured and improved, and their operation and management must be strengthened. All localities must clearly chart a course for the development of the rural enterprises engaged in industrial and sideline production in accordance with the state's relevant laws and regulations and the principle that such production is beneficial for agricultural production, will not undermine the natural resources and will not compete with the large industrial enterprises for energy and raw materials. These enterprises must also be assisted in improving their operation, management and production of marketable, quality products.

Section Five: Water Conservancy Projects

The principal goal is to consolidate the existing flood-control capabilities of such large rivers as the Huang He, Chang Jiang, Huai He and Hai He in order to ensure the safety of the important dams and major cities. Water supply problems in northern China's major areas are to be resolved. Efforts are to be exerted to complete the Panjiakou and Daheiding Dams and the project to divert the water of the Luan River into Tianjin so that the water shortage problem in Beijing and Tianjin can be eased. Water conservancy projects in such major commodity grain producing areas as the Sanjiang plain in Heliongjiang, and the areas surrounding Jiangxi's Poyang Lake, Hunan's Dongting Lake and Anhui's Pi-Shi-Hang irrigation district are to be carried out so that the irrigation systems of these areas can be improved step-by-step.

Local water conservation construction will be strengthened. Besides, peasants will further be mobilized to accumulate funds through labor for carrying out effective water conservation projects.

Section Six: Meteorological Work

According to the requirements for "accuracy, promptness and economy," essential modern know-how will be adopted, the existing technical potential will be tapped, and meteorological intelligence, weather forecast and climate information and other means will be used to serve economic construction and national defense so that favorable weather conditions can be utilized and losses caused by natural disasters can be reduced.

Chapter 8: Forestry

Section One: Afforestation

Shelterbelt networks in northwest, north and northeast China will continue to be planted. Vigorous efforts will be made to plant farmland forest networks in plains and waterway areas and to promote tree-planting around houses and villages and along rivers and roads. Concentrated efforts should be made to plant fast growing, high-yield forests and economic forests.

A total of 290 million mu will be afforested across the country. Efforts will be made to guarantee the quality of forests planted and to raise the preservation rate to over 60 percent by 1985 so that the percentage of forest-covered land in our country will be further increased.

Efforts will be made to fully arouse the initiatives of all sectors to carry out a well-organized, all-people, obligatory, tree-planting campaign. Mountain and forest rights will be defined and maintained, and the system of responsibility in various forms will be established and perfected. The policy of attaching equal importance to planting and management should be seriously implemented, and the management and protection of forests should be strengthened. People who have infringed on other's forest rights and who have damaged forests shall be punished by law.

Section Two: The Cutting and Shipment of Timber

A total of 55 million cubic meters of timber will be produced by 1985, an increase of 2.6 percent over 1980. Of this, 31 million cubic meters will be delivered to the state, up 1.3 percent from 1980. During the 5-year period, the area of reforestation will be 39.1 million mu, of which 31 million mu will be artificially reforested. The newly added timber production capacity will reach 3.2 million cubic meters.

The state timber policy should be seriously implemented, and the amount of felling should be strictly controlled. It is not permitted to assign state-owned forests to the collectives or individuals, and the collectives should not assign tracts of forest to the masses. Firm and forceful measures should be taken to stop wanton felling of trees. The timber production and delivery plan worked out by the State Council should be strictly implemented.

No felling should be carried out beyond the planned quota, and no timber destined for the state should be intercepted or retained locally. The planned purchase and marketing of timber by the state should be strictly enforced. Free timber markets should be closed, and the trading of timber at negotiated prices, either disguised or otherwise, will be banned.

Section Three: Forest Industry

Vigorous efforts should be made to develop the production of plywood, using leftovers from timber felling, lumbering and processing as raw materials. Continued efforts should be made to carry out the multipurpose use of timber and the production of rosin, tannin extracts, shellac and other forest chemical products.

Chapter 9: Consumer Industry

Section One: Textile Industry

Cotton textile industry: A total of 3.59 millions tons of yard and 15.3 billion meters of cloth will be produced in 1985, up 22.8 percent and 18.3 billion meters respectively from 1980. The cotton textile capacity will be increased by 4.7 million spindles in 5 years. This is achieved mainly through expansion and transformation of old plants and the establishment of an appropriate number of new plants in cotton growing areas in the course of readjusting the distribution of cotton textile plants.

Wool and hemp industry: A total of 180 million meters of wool fabric will be produced in 1985, up 78 percent from 1980. The wool spinning capacity will be increased by 470,000 spindles in 5 years. The production capacity of wool tops will be increased by 30,000 tons, through expansion of old facilities or the establishment of new ones in Nei Monggol, Xinjiang and other wool producing areas and in Shanghai, Beijing and Tianjin, where great quantities of wool are imported. The hemp textile capacity will be increased by 90,000 spindles in 5 years.

Silk industry: Efforts will be made to develop our traditional silk production technology, produce more products with distinguishing national or local features and increase the variety of products. A total of 43,000 dun of silk and 1 billion meters of silk fabrics will be produced in 1985, an increase of 23 percent and 32 percent respectively from 1980.

Chemical fiber industry: A total of 780,000 tons of chemical fiber will be produced in 1985. The chemical fiber production capacity will be increased by 380,000 tons in 5 years. China will be basically self-sufficient in the raw materials for chemical fiber by 1985.

Section Two: Papermaking Industry

Product structure will be readjusted. While guaranteeing the production of paper used in the cultural and publication field and in the industrial technological field, efforts should be concentrated on the production of commercial packing paper and paperboard and of increased quantities of high-grade printing and processed coated paper. The output of paper should reach 6 million tons by 1985, an increase of 12 percent over 1980. The papermaking capacity will increase by 1.06 million tons in 5 years. The production capacity of various kinds of paperboard will rise by 500,000 dun through expansion and transformation of existing facilities.

Section Three: Food Industry

Sugar: Sugar output will reach 4.3 million tons by 1985, up 67.3 percent from 1980. Sugar processing capacity will increase by 1.88 million tons in 5 years.

Beer: The production capacity will increase by 1.5 million tons in 5 years: a total of 2 million tons will be produced in 1985, an increase of nearly 2-fold over 1980.

Cigarettes: A total of 20 million cartons will be produced in 1985, up 32 percent from 1980. Production will be conducted strictly in accordance with a unified plan, following the consolidation of enterprises and the exercise of centralized management and operation by the state.

Salt: A total of 16.5 million tons will be produced in 1985.

Various localities should actively develop, in light of the local resources and market needs, the production of beverage, candies, cakes, dairy products, baby foods, instant foods, canned foods, wine, millet wine, fine-quality popular white spirits and other food items and condiments.

Section Four: Durable Manufactured Consumer Goods

The outputs of major products in 1985 are: 33 million bicycles, a 1.5-fold increase; 14 million sewing machines, up 82 percent from 1980; 45 million wristwatches, up 98.5 percent from 1980; 3.5 million washing machines, a 13-fold increase from 1980; 4.5 million recorders, a 5-fold increase over 1980; and 7 million television sets, a 1.8-fold increase from 1980.

The volumes of electric fans, alarm and master clocks and recorders shall be controlled and their quality raised.

The distribution of durable consumer industry and the increase of its production capacity shall strictly follow the provisions of the plan and the policy of distribution. A blind rush to set up plants and increase the production capacity should be avoided.

Section Five: Household Chemicals Industry

Efforts should be concentrated on the production of plastic products, detergents, photosensitive materials and cosmetics. Marked results should be made in raising the grades and developing new generations of products.

Section Six: Other Light Industries

Efforts should be made to actively develop leatherware, domestic ceramics and glassware, hardware, garments, shoes, hats, arts and crafts and furniture. Efforts should also be made to actively develop electric lighting, cultural and educational goods, articles for minority people and various small commodities.

Chapter 10: Energy

Section One: Energy Conservation

The total output of the primary energy resources (coal, petroleum, natural gas and hydropower) in the whole nation will be 682.9 million dun of standard coal in 1985 with an increase of 45.7 million dun over that of 1980 and an average annual growth rate of 1.4 percent. The average annual 4 percent growth rate in industrial production during the period of the Sixth 5-Year Plan will be achieved mainly by conserving energy and using less energy resources.

It is required that within the 5-year period, energy resources equivalent to 70 to 90 million dun of standard coal be saved by conserving and using less energy resources. Energy conservation must be emphasized in east China, northeast China and other areas such as Beijing, Tianjin and Sichuan and in power, metallurgical, chemical, construction material, petroleum, railway and communications and other departments where a great deal of energy is being consumed.

Within the 5-year period, the state will make arrangements to develop 1,303 projects for energy conservation including 195 major products for technical transformation that will cost more than 10 million yuan each.

It is required that fuel oil consumption in 1985 be reduced by approximately 10 million dun as compared with 1980. In order to replace the boilers in power stations that use oil and to increase coal supplies, arrangements will be made to appropriate special funds for the development of related projects within the 5-year period.

After the implementation of various energy conserving measures in 1985, the energy consumption index per-unit production value in industry will be reduced an average of 2.6 to 3.5 percent per year. The per-unit energy consumption for 17 major industrial products such as steel and power generation will be reduced by 3 to 12 percent each within the 5-year period.

Section Two: Coal Industry

The output of raw coal in the country by 1985 will reach 700 million dunn, an increase of 80 million dun over 1980 with an average annual growth rate of 2.5 percent. Included in the above-mentioned figure is the production output of 385 million dun of coal produced by collieries monopolized by the state for marketing, representing an increase of 41 million dun over 1980. The coal output is Shanxi will reach 160 million dun, representing an increase of 40 million dun over 1980 and accounting for 50 percent of the coal output increase in the whole country.

The principal measure taken to increase coal production will be to speed up the technical transformation of the existing coal mines and bring into full play their production potentials. Strenuous efforts will be made to help existing coal mines achieve a net increase of 18 million dun of coal production by 1985 after making up the losses from those collieries that are too old or abandoned and to complete a batch of new coal mines on time and help them go into full operation in order to increase coal production by 23 million dun in 1985. Attention must be paid to the work of consolidating coal mining enterprises. It is required that the overall efficiency for collieries monopolized by the state for marketing be raised from 0.912 dun per coal miner per day in 1980 to 0.965 dun in 1985. Positive efforts will be made to develop mechanization in coal excavation, tunnelling and transportation as well as in pit prop replacement. The level of mechanization for all collieries monopolized by the state for marketing in the country will be raised from 37 percent in 1980 to 44 percent in 1985. We will increase the total capacity of the nation's coal industry by 220 million dun. Coal mines with a total production capacity of 80 million dun are to be completed and commissioned by 1985 with work continuing during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period for the remaining 140 million dun.

The general plan for the construction of coal mines in several key regions is as follows:

Shanxi and Hebei in northern China will increase the total capacity of their coal mines by 93 million dun with Shanxi's capacity to be increased by 78 million dun and that of Hebei by 15 million; coal mines with a total production capacity of 29 million dun are to be completed and commissioned by 1985.

Northeast China and the eastern part of Nei Monggol will increase the total capacity of their coal mines by 50.8 million dun with the eastern part of Nei Monggol's capacity to be increased by 25 million dun and that of Liaoning by 11.4 million dun; coal mines with a total production capacity of 16.5 million dun are to be completed and commissioned by 1985.

The east China region will increase the total capacity of their coal mines by 52 million dun with Shandong's capacity to be increased by 21.5 million dun and that of Anhui by 21.4 million. Coal mines with a total production capacity of 22 million dun are to be completed and commissioned by 1985.

In addition, proper arrangements will be made for the development of coal mines in central-south, northwest and southwest China. Central-south China will increase the total capacity of its coal mines by 13 million dun, that of northwest China by 8.2 million dun and that of southwest China by 7.7 million dun.

Section Three: Petroleum Industry

The annual output of crude oil will remain at the 100 million dun level in 1985. The output of natural gas in 1985 will be 10 billion cubic meters with 5 billion cubic meters to be produced by natural gas fields in Sichuan. Within the next 5 years, the production capacity for crude oil will increase by 35 million dun and for natural gas by 2.5 billion cubic meters.

For the next 5 years, efforts will be concentrated on oil prospecting in the Songliao basin of northeast China, the Bohai bay area, the Puyang region of Henan Province and the Eren basin of Nei Monggol. General survey and prospecting will also be stepped up to a proper extent in the Junggar basin of Xinjiang and the Qaidam basin of Qinghai in an effort to find some new oilfields as soon as possible. The general survey and prospecting for natural gas will be concentrated in the Sichuan region. Active efforts will be made to cooperate with foreign countries for the surveying and exploitation of offshore oil deposits.

Section Four: Power Industry

By 1985, China will be generating 362 billion kWh of electricity, an increase of 61.4 billion kWh over 1980 with an annual growth rate of 3.8 percent. We will try to surpass this goal in the course of implementing the plan. Hydropower stations will be generating 70 billion kwh of electricity in 1985 with an increase of 11.8 billion kWh over 1980 and an average annual growth rate of 3.8 percent.

The construction of some large hydropower stations will still be concentrated in the upper reaches of the Huang He and in the upper and middle reaches of the Chang Jiang and its tributaries as well as in the Hongshui He basin. Arrangements will be made to build some medium-sized hydropower stations that are close to the center of the electric load and less prone to flood, these require engineering work on a smaller scale, need less investments and bring about quick economic results. Efforts will be made to develop small hydropower stations according to local conditions in energy deficient northeast China, east China, Guangdong and other regions. The construction of thermal power stations will mainly be carried out in coal rich Shanxi, four leagues in east Nei Monggol, Huainan and Huaibei regions, and areas north of the Wei He to build some power stations in the vicinity of coal mines and gradually form a base area for thermal power stations. Depending on transport conditions, required thermal plants will be built in the fairly large city of Shanghai and the provinces of Liaoning, Jiangsu, Zhejiang, Guangdong and Sichuan. These 5 years will also witness the construction of a nuclear power station with a power-generating capacity of 300,000 kW.

During this 5-year period, the construction of power stations will mean a total increase of 36.6 million kW in electric power with hydropower stations that will generate 15.6 million kW of electricity. Of this figure, 12.9 million kW will be generated by power stations to be completed and commissioned by 1985 with hydropower stations that will generate 3.2 million kW of electricity. The work on the remaining 23.7 million kW will continue in the Seventh 5-Year Plan period. Of this figure, hydropower stations will generate 12.4 million kW, and thermal power stations will generate 11.3 million kW of electric power.

We will continue to speed up the construction of power transmission projects. Five hundred thousand-volt high tension transmission lines will be extended by 5,640 km. Two thousand seven hundred km of such transmission lines will be completed within the 5-year period.

Section Five: Rural Energy Resources

According to the principle of suiting measures to local conditions, supply each other's needs in energy, making comprehensive use of energy and paying attention to practical results, efforts will be made to rationally use and save rural energy resources.

The principal measure is the popularization of 25 million firewood and coal saving stoves and boilers so that this kind of boiler or stove will be used by one-seventh of the peasant households in China. While improving the existing 6.5 million march gas ponds, efforts will be made to steadily develop 3.5 million new marsh gas ponds. An additional fifty million mu of firewood forests will be developed. More small hydropower stations will be developed in rural areas where hydraulic power is abundant. Positive efforts will be made to develop solar and wind power and make use of geothermal energy.

Chapter 11: Metallurgical Industry

Section One: Iron and Steel Industry

Steel output in 1985 will be 39 million tons, 5 percent more than in 1980; to meet requirements to save energy and lower the iron-steel ratio, pig iron output will be between 34.5 million tons and 35.1 million tons, a drop of 9.3 percent to 7.7 percent from 1980; iron ore output will be 117 million tons, an increase of 3.9 percent over 1980.

Alloy steel output in 1985 will be 3 million tons, an increase of 63.3 percent over 1980; and ordinary low-alloy steel output will be 3.5 million tons, an increase of 15.2 percent over 1980.

Output of steel products in 1985 will be 29.3 million tons, 7.9 percent more than in 1980; the rate of standard products will be 80 percent, or 3 percent higher than in 1980; output of steel products in short supply such as steel plates, steel tubes, silicon steel sheets and strip steel will be 11.15 million tons, an increase of 3 million tons or 37 percent over 1980.

The iron and steel industry must strive to reduce materials consumption and especially to achieve marked progress in reducing energy consumption. It is necessary to strictly control the production of high-energy-consumption products such as ferroalloys in northeast and east China where energy is in short supply, and to shift their production step by step to the northwest and southwest regions where there is abundant hydroelectric power. Technical transformation will be started at the Anshan Iron and Steel Company, the largest iron and steel complex in China, so that it will increase varieties of steel products, improve product quality, reduce energy consumption and solve the problems of insufficient blooming capacity.

The scale of construction in the 5 years is to increase steel production capacity by 3.33 million tons, iron production capacity by 3.37 million tons, and steel products capacity by 1.72 million tons. The first stage construction of the Shanghai Baoshan iron and steel complex, with an annual capacity to produce 3 millions tons of steel and 3 million tons of iron, will be completed in the main. The scale of construction of iron mines in the 5 years is to increase iron ore production capacity by 33.55 million tons.

Section Two: Nonferrous Metals Industry

Based on the existing foundation, we will give priority to developing aluminum production, make vigorous efforts to increase production of lead and zinc, conditionally develop copper production and make positive arrangements for the production of other products in short supply so as to provide more and better raw materials and new materials required by industrial and agricultural production, national defense construction and the most advanced branches of science and technology.

The 1985 output of 10 nonferrous metals, copper, aluminum, lead, zinc, nickel, tin, antimony, mercury, magnesium and titanium, will increase by 12.7 percent over 1980.

Efforts will be made to develop gold and silver production and to increase production of rare-earth metals and rare metals.

Chapter 12: Chemical Industry

Section One: Chemical Fertilizer Industry

The development of phosphate fertilizer and potash fertilizer production will be accelerated to gradually increase the proportion of phosphate and potash fertilizers in the total output of chemical fertilizers. Output of chemical fertilizers in 1985 will be 13.4 million tons, 8.8 percent more than in 1980. This total includes 2.8 million tons of phosphate fertilizer, up 21.2 percent; 50,000 tons of potash fertilizer, up 150 percent; and 10.55 million tons of nitrogenous fertilizer, up 5.6 percent.

In the 5 years, work is to be started on projects to produce 8.33 million tons of standard phosphorous ore, of which facilities for 2.43 million tons will be completed and put into production; projects to produce 3.69 million tons of standard iron pyrites ore, of which facilities for 2.9 million tons will be completed and put into production; projects to produce 500,000 tons of concentrated phosphate fertilizer and complex fertilizer, adding 46,000 tons in new capacity; projects to produce 2.12 million tons of synthetic ammonia, adding 1.52 million tons in new capacity; and projects to produce 2.87 million tons of urea, adding 2.24 million tons in new capacity.

Section Two: Agricultural Chemicals Industry

Efforts will be made to increase production of agricultural chemicals that are highly effective, less toxic and of low residual effect, reduce production of agricultural chemicals that have a high residual effect, and replace the BHC [benzene hexachloride] step by step.

Section Three: Basic Chemical Industry

Output in 1985 of sulphuric acid will be 8.1 million tons, 6 percent more than in 1980; that of soda ash will be 1.9 million tons, 18 percent more than in 1980; and that of caustic soda will be 2.1 million tons, 9 percent more than in 1980. The total scale of construction for soda ash in the 5 years is to produce 1.39 million tons, adding 260,000 tons in new capacity.

Section Four: Petrochemical Industry

In 1985 output of ethylene will be 700,000 tons, 43 percent more than in 1980; that of plastics will be 1.05 million tons, 17 percent more than in 1980; and that of synthetic rubber will be 170,000 tons, 38 percent more than in 1980.

The scales of construction for the petrochemical industry are: ethylene, 1.01 million tons; plastics, 660,000 tons; synthetic rubber, 95,000 tons; and chemical fibers and raw materials of chemical fibers, 780,000 tons. The newly added production capacities are: ethylene, 115,000 tons; plastics, 33,000 tons; and synthetic rubber, 95,000 tons.

Section Five: Fine Chemical Industry

With regard to fine chemical products such as dyestuffs, paints, photosensitive materials, magnetic tapes and various kinds of chemical reagents, solvents and catalysts, efforts are to be made to improve quality, increase new varieties and develop new technology in preparation for further development during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period.

Chapter 13: Building Materials Industry

Priorities are to be given to cement, sheet glass and sanitary ceramics. At the same time, attention is to be paid to developing new types of building materials and non-metallic mines.

Cement output in 1985 will be 98 million tons, an increase of 23 percent over 1980. Of this total, 32 million tons will be produced by large- and medium-sized cement factories, an increase of 25 percent over 1980. In the 5 years, 25 large- and medium-sized cement factories including the Jidong factory in Hebei, the Huaihai factory in Jiangsu and the Ningguo factory in Anhui will be completed; a number of key large and medium-sized cement factories will be renovated and expanded; and technical transformation will be started on a number of small local cement factories where conditions are favorable.

Output of sheet glass in 1985 will be 42 million standard cases, an increase of 52 percent over 1980. Concentrated efforts are to be made to build 15 large glass factories including those in Luoyang, Henan, Qinhuadao, Hebei, and Lanzhou, Gansu.

Output of sanitary ceramics in 1985 will be 4.5 million units, an increase of 54 percent over 1980.

Chapter 14: Geological Prospecting

Geological prospecting is to be strengthened vigorously and step by step to accelerate the progress in looking for mineral deposits and evaluation of resources, do a good job in comprehensive prospecting for mineral reserves, extend the scope of services and prepare the necessary data of mineral resources and geological information for production and construction in the 1980's and economic growth in the 1990's.

Attention is to be paid to geological surveying and prospecting for energy, particularly petroleum and gas, to increase exploitable reserves. In the 5 years, 48 billion tons of new coal deposits are to be found. Preparatory engineering and geological exploration work for hydroelectric power construction should be carried out to meet the development requirements of hydroelectric power.

Overall arrangements should be made with regard to geological work for both metallic and non-metallic mineral deposits to expand sources of large-quantity minerals and certain specially needed minerals. In the 5 years, new deposits of 2.4 billion tons of iron ore, 600 million tons of phosphorus ore and 180 million tons of iron pyrites are to be found. Vigorous efforts are to be made to develop hydrological, engineering and environmental geological work. At the same time, efforts should be made to strengthen basic geological work and develop geological science.

Chapter 15: Machine-Building and Electronics Industries

It is necessary to make improving quality, developing new varieties and raising the technological level the central tasks, to strengthen work on key scientific and technological research projects and development and research on new products, to import applicable advanced technology and to transform our backward technology step by step. Further efforts should be made to readjust the service orientation and expand the scope of services. Active attention should be paid to drawing up plans for the reorganization of the major trades and machine-building and electronics enterprises in central cities and industrial bases and to promoting specialization production technologies and basic products.

The total output value of the country's machine-building and electronics industries in 1985 will be 25.6 percent higher than in 1980, representing an average annual increase of 4.7 percent. The output value of machinery and electrical products for production purposes is to increase by 7.2 percent over the same period, averaging 1.4 percent per year; and that of consumer machinery and electrical products, by 84 percent, averaging 13 percent per year.

Section One: Development Plan for Major Machine-Building Trades

In the electrical machinery manufacturing trade vigorous efforts are to be made to perfect the thermal power generating units of 100,000 kilowatts or higher capacity that are already in production, and produce on a trial basis still larger and higher efficiency thermal power generating units; to produce a quantity of large hydroelectric equipment, and actively develop large water-pumping and energy-storing units [chou shui xu neng ji zu 2132 3055 5552 5174 2623 4809] and high-head power generating units; and to develop 300,000-kW nuclear power station equipment. In 1985, the plan calls for the production of power generating equipment with a total capacity of 3.5 million kW. Efforts are to be made to update and replace the high-energy-consuming electrical machineries that are produced in large quantities and widely used such as industrial boilers, small motors, small- and medium-sized transformers, industrial resistance furnaces and small electric arc welding machines. In the 5 years, 171 new varieties and 22 series of these 5 categories of products are to be developed.

In the motor vehicle manufacturing trade the priorities are to improve the old models of vehicles such as the "Jiefang" and "Yaojin" trucks, the "Beijing" lightweight cross-country vehicles and the "Shanghai" sedans so that their major overhaul mileage will be increased from the present 100,000 kilometers to 150,000-200,000 kilometers, and their fuel consumption will be reduced by about 20 percent from what it is now. In 1985, the country is to produce 200,000 motor vehicles, basically of improved and new models.

In the machine-tool and tool manufacturing trade the priority is to improve the precision and efficiency of products and the level in forming complete sets of equipment, and to maintain stable and reliable property and performance. In 1985, 100,000 units of machine tools will be produced.

In the mining and general-purpose machinery manufacturing trade the priorities are to produce a number of coal-mining equipment, coal-dressing equipment and safety equipment; and to manufacture small billet continuous casting machines, large aluminum sheet rolling machines and urban gas equipment. Vigorous efforts are to be made to develop offshore petroleum exploitation equipment, large steel rolling equipment, complete sets of large open-cut mining equipment and complete sets of ore-dressing equipment. Vigorous efforts should be made to update and replace the general-purpose machines that are produced in large quantities and are high-energy-consuming, such as industrial pumps, wind blowers, compressors and oxygen-producers. In the 5 years, 43 series and 281 new products will be added to these types of general-purposes machines.

In the instrument- and meter-making industry emphasis is to be placed on manufacturing instruments and meters for measuring, inspecting, regulating and controlling energy consumption, which are needed for the technical transformation of the nearly 700 enterprises and industrial boilers, kilns and heating furnaces, each of which consumes over 50,000 dun of standard coal annually; on producing complete sets of instruments and meters for all types of large equipment and projects and for the technical transformation of the key enterprises of all trades; and on providing inspecting and gauging instruments needed in scientific and technological research.

In the agricultural machinery manufacturing industry machinery products and ruggedly-built "light, simple, inexpensive and durable" farm implements, mechanical or semi-mechanical, needed for the development of agriculture, forestry, animal husbandry, sideline production and fishery, are to be developed. In 1985, the output of tractors will be 60,000 units, and the output of walking tractors will be 280,000 units.

Construction machinery manufacturing industry, civil ship-building industry, light industrial and textile machinery manufacturing industry and medical apparatus manufacturing industry have all worked out their own major development plans.

Section Two: Development Plans of the Major Electronic Industries

Electronic component industry: Efforts will be made to improve the technology of components production, increase the variety of electronic components and improve their quality and lower the production cost.

Computer industry: Emphasis will be given to the development of miniature- and small-size calculators and single-board [dan ban 0830 2647] miniature computers and computers for industrial control, to further improve the systematic functions, to expedite the upgrading of products and to develop the capability of mass production. The large- and medium-size computer series will be actively developed. The development of system and application softwares will be strengthened, and the system of processing information rendered in Chinese characters will be developed.

Radio and television industry: Mass production of all-channel [quan pin dao 0356 7340 6670] color and black and white television sets will begin; multipurpose television to serve the economic departments will be developed and popularized; multipurpose radio receivers and recorders of top and medium grades will be developed; the development of color videorecorders will get actively underway.

Other civil electronic industries: Emphasis will be given to the development of electronic equipment for oil exploration of the sea, air traffic control, numerical microwave communication system, optical cable communication system, wired and wireless communication system, and so forth; modern electronic products and equipment to serve agriculture, industry, science and technology, culture and education, and public health will be developed.

Section Three: Scientific and Technological Research of the Machinery and Electronic Industries

The technology of the production of parts and basic components will be improved, and the research and development of fundamental technology will be strengthened.

The development of new products and complete sets of equipment will be intensified so that more advanced technological equipment will be available to various departments.

Technical standards are to be upgraded, products designs are to be improved, and the capability of developing new products is to be strengthened. The work of organizing people to tackle the key problems of the state's scientific and technological projects and to develop new products is to be strengthened.

Section Four: Reorganization and Technical Transformation of the Machinery and Electronic Industries

The regional organs of the automobile, ship-building and electronics trades as well as the specialized coordination of such technologies as casting, forging, heat treatment, electroplating are to be further improved and developed.

Technical transformation of the machinery and electronic industries will be one step ahead of other projects, and attention will be given to the upgrading of products manufactured by these industries. To improve the quality of basic components and basic machinery, to replace production of products that consume a large amount of energy and to develop production of major products conducive to expanding export, a number of main engine manufacturing plants, auxiliary plants and research and design units are to be transformed systematically.

Chapter 16: Construction

Construction and installation projects involving 210 billion yuan and the construction of 700 million square meters of different types of houses and buildings have been planned. By 1985, 55 percent of the buildings under construction will have been completed. This will be 2.3 percent higher than 1980, which was 52.7 percent.

Construction methods are to be improved so that the time for construction can be shortened and the quality of construction can be improved. According to our country's situation, new standards for the designs of the major professions and trades buildings are to be set. Centering on conservation of energy and raw materials and on improving the construction quality, the existing plants engaged in producing structural components and parts are to be transformed in a planned manner. Outmoded machinery will be replaced or refitted with auxiliary equipment so that the degree of mechanization can be raised in every way. Research of architectural science and technology is to be intensified so that the technical and economic performance of buildings can be enhanced.

Chapter 17: Transport, Posts and Telecommunications

Section One: The Total Volume of Transport and Postal and Telecommunications Service

The targets of the freight volume for the major transport and communications departments and the targets for the total postal and telecommunications services in 1985 are as follows:

Volume of railway freight will be 1.2 billion dun. This will be 10.5 percent over that of 1980 and it represents an average annual increase of 2 percent; the rotation volume of freight transport will be 660 billion dun kilometers, or an increase of 15.6 percent over 1980. It represents an average annual increase of 2.9 percent.

Volume of freight carried by ships and barges will be 460 million dun, or an increase of 16.4 percent over 1980. It represents an average annual increase of 3.1 percent. The rotation volume of freight will be 566.1 billion dun, or an increase of 12 percent over 1980 and an average annual increase of 2.3 percent.

The volume of freight handled by coastal ports will be 260 million dun, representing an increase of 19.6 percent over 1980 and an average annual increase of 3.7 percent.

The volume of freight handled by highway transportation will be 650 million dun, which represents a 20.8 percent increase over 1980 and an average annual increase of 3.8 percent.

The total rotation volume of freight handled by civil air transport will be 800 million dun kilometers, which represents a 86.5 percent increase over 1980 and an average annual increase of 13.3 percent.

The total postal and telecommunications service will reach 2.37 billion yuan, which is a 27.4 percent increase over 1980 and an average annual increase of 5 percent.

Section Two: Railway Construction

Technical transformation and construction of railways, which center on increasing coal delivery capabilities, will be carried out in the following sectors:

To increase Shanxi's coal export and to increase the transport capabilities of the railways that lead to northeast China through Shanhaiguan. With the completion of the projects electrifying and double-tracking several important trunk lines, Shanxi, western Nei Monggol and Ningxia will be able to increase their coal export capabilities from 72 million dun in 1980 to 120 million dun in 1985; and the capabilities of delivering coal to northeast China through Shanhaiguan will be increased from 14 million dun in 1980 to 29 million dun in 1985. This will be generally compatible with Shanxi's coal export capabilities. The coal and phosphorous ores export cababilities in the southwest will be increased. By 1985, the goods export capabilities of Yunnan and Guizhou through the Guizhou-Kunming, Hunan-Sichuan and Sichuan-Guangxi railway lines will reach 12 million dun, an increase of 4 million dun over 1980. The strained transport situation along the coastal areas in southeast China will be alleviated and the transport capabilities of northeast and northwest China will be strengthened when the projects of building and rebuilding a number of double-track and electrified railways are completed.

More passenger transport facilities will be built. Within the 5-year plan period, additional passenger terminals will be built in Shanghai, Shenyang and Shihjiazhuang.

Nationwide, 2,067 kilometers of new railways and 1,689 kilometers of double tracks will be built and 2,511 kilometers of railways will be electrified. There will be an additional 2,350 locomotives, of which 300 will have electrical engines and 900 will have internal combustion engines, and there will be an additional 6,380 coaches and 72,000 flatcars.

Section Three: Construction of Water Transportation

The main emphasis will be placed on strengthening the construction of harbors and inland water transportation, especially the construction and technological transformation of docks for seagoing vessels.

Construction of 132 deepwater berths will begin in 15 harbors, including Dalian, Qinhuangdao, Tianjin, Qingdao, Shijiusuo, Lianyungang, Shanghai, Huangpu and Zhenjiang. Efforts will be made to complete 54 of them during the 5-year plan period. The total cargo handling capacity of our ports will increase from 217 million tons in 1980 to 317 million tons in 1985.

In inland water transport, construction will center on the main streams of the Chang Jiang, Jinghang canal and Xi Jiang. The coal-loading capacity of the various ports on the Chang Jiang will be increased from 15.7 million tons in 1980 to 30 million tons in 1985, through technological transformation and the expansion of coal transfer wharves in Pukou, Hankou and Zicheng harbor. The coal transport capacity of the Jinghang canal in the section between Xuzhou and Yangzhou will be increased from 5 million tons in 1980 to 10 million tons in 1985 by dredging the waterways, constructing additional multiple-lane shipping locks and expanding coal piers.

Efforts will be made to dredge the waterways of the Xi Jiang so that, by the time the Seventh 5-Year Development Plan begins, 1,000-ton barges will be able to sail directly from Guangxi's Guixian harbor to Guangzhou.

During the 5-year period, the tonnage of vessels for coastal transportation will be increased by 1.5 million tons, either through renovating old vessels or constructing new ones, the tonnage of oceangoing vessels by 4.26 million tons and the tonnage of barges for sailing the Chang Jiang by 670,000 tons. Passenger capacity in both freighters and passenger liners will be increased by 61,000. The number of voyages of the existing passenger lines will be further increased and new lines will be opened.

Section Four: Highway Construction

Concentrated efforts will be made to build or renovate seven trunk highways, including Qingzang highway, Xinjiang-Tianshan highway and the highway between Gansu's Lanzhou and Shaanxi's Yichuan, which will expand the trunk highway network in the southwest and northwest regions; the Pingquan-Shuangjingzi highway, which links Hebei and Eastern Nei Monggol; and the Sixian-Pukou highway, which connects north Jiangsu with east Anhui.

The method of using civilian workers [min gong jian qin 3046 1562 1696 0530] and the method of people sponsorship with government support [min ban gong zhu 3046 6586 0361 0504] will be continued in building roads in counties and communes to improve rural transportation.

Section Five: Civil Aviation Construction

Final works on the Urumqi and Beijing airports will be completed. Airports in a number of cities and localities will be renovated or expanded to raise their technological standards and traffic capacities.

New international and domestic routes will be opened and the old ones readjusted. The number of scheduled flights will be increased. Special aeronautical service will be developed to serve the needs of agriculture and the exploration of energy resources. The daily utilization and carrying rate of aircraft will be gradually raised, flight safety insured and service further improved.

Section Six: Postal and Telecommunications Services

Concentrated efforts will be made to strengthen telephone services in cities, especially downtown telephone lines in major cities, to increase long-distance calling capacity and to raise the international telecommunications capacity. A total of 700,000 downtown telephone lines will be added in 5 years, 6,200 km of long-distance telecommunications cables will be erected or laid, and 2,700 urban and rural telecommunications offices will be expanded or built.

Chapter 18: Domestic Commerce

Section One: Balance Between Supply and Demand in Market Commodities

The value of retail commodities sales in 1985 will total 290 billion yuan (not including the value of retail sales by peasants to nonpeasant residents), up 40 percent from 1980, or an average of 7 percent a year. The value of retail commodities sales in rural areas will grow at an annual rate of 7.5 percent, while the rate for urban areas will be 6.3 percent.

To maintain a balance in supply and demand and basic commodity price stability, commerce departments should make a concerted effort with production departments to increase the production and supply of readily salable goods to the market. At the same time, commerce departments should strengthen their unified leadership and planned management of markets, improve commodity flow, reduce unnecessary links, organize supply in a rational way and strengthen retail work.

Vigorous efforts will be made to develop commerce-run industries and catering and other services. The 1985 business value of catering and other services is targeted at 14.4 billion yuan, up 43 percent from 1980.

Section Two: Commodities Structure

While insuring the dominating role of state-run commerce, efforts will be made to develop collective and individual commerce in order to gradually form a commodity circulation system incorporating different economic forms and possessing a multiple of circulation channels and fewer links.

There will be 4.4 million retail, catering and service points in China's urban and rural areas by 1985, an increase of 2.38 million or 1.2 times. This represents a 4.3 points per 1,000 people, an increase of 2.2 points from 1980. The number of people employed will reach 16 million, an increase of 6.73 million or 73 percent.

Section Three: State-Run Commerce Management

All commercial enterprises shall enforce and perfect the system of responsibility in management. They should further carry out well the allocation and transfer of commodities, strengthen the control of funds and organize commodity flow by economic zones.

Efforts must be made to strengthen the political-ideological work of the workers, seriously improve their service and attitude, and raise their cultural, professional and technical standards.

Efforts will be made to conduct a market forecast and to publish it on a regular basis.

Chapter 19: Economic and Trade Relations With Foreign Countries

Section One: Export and Import Trade

It is necessary to adhere to the principle of unified planning and consistent policy, maintain unity in dealing with foreign countries, and harness the enthusiasm of various localities, departments and enterprises in developing foreign trade. It is also necessary to conscientiously study changes in the international market situation and readjust the export and import mix in good time to improve trade conditions and continuously increase the economic results.

By 1985 the total volume of China's import and export trade will reach 85.5 billion yuan, an increase of 52 percent over 1980. The average annual increase will be 8.7 percent. Out of the grand total, the volume of import trade will reach 45.3 billion yuan, increasing at an average annual rate of 9.2 percent. The volume of export trade will reach 40.2 billion yuan, growing at an average annual rate of 8.1 percent.

In import trade, efforts will be made to import new technology and major equipment in accordance with the needs and available funds, ensure the import of materials in short supply in production and construction, and effectively organize the import of materials for the domestic market and for supporting export. In arranging imports, all localities and departments should follow the unified planning and should not blindly import goods and equipment, especially consumer goods for daily use that can be made and are available in China so as to protect and promote the development of national industry.

In export trade, the export of important materials having a bearing on the national economy and people's livelihood must be organized in strict accordance with the state plan. Efforts will be made to actively expand the export of textiles, other light industry goods and artistic items by bringing into full play the superiority of China's traditional artistry and massive labor forces and by using imports to support exports. It is necessary to raise the technical level of machinery and electrical products and promote their sales in international market. It is necessary to organize the export of nonferrous metals, rare metals, nonmetallic mineral products, and chemical industrial and pharmaceutical products which are plentiful in China or have great production potential. Procurement and export of farm, subsidiary, native, special and animal products must be organized in a planned manner. Export of certain commodities whose production consumes much energy must be limited.

Section Two: Utilization of Foreign Capital

It is necessary to actively but safely utilize foreign funds in accordance with the needs of national construction and domestic capabilities, to import and make effective use of the imported equipment and repay the debts in order to promote the development of production and construction in China. Utilization of foreign funds must be concentrated on the construction of energy and transport projects and technical transformation and new equipment for existing enterprises, thereby combining utilization of foreign funds with import of new technology and technical transformation.

Section Three: State Foreign Exchange Revenue and Disbursement

Efforts must be made to actively increase earnings from foreign exchanges, strive to cut down foreign exchange disbursement, and strictly control expenses not related to foreign trade in order to maintain a basic balance in foreign exchanges.

Section Four: International Economic and Technical Assistance and Cooperation

Efforts must be made to render assistance to foreign countries and at the same time develop economic and technical cooperation among countries on the basis of equality and mutual benefit.

Section Five: Special Economic Zones

Special economic zones have been set up in Shenzhen, Zhuhai and Shantou in Guangdong and Xiamen in Fujian on a trial basis. It is necessary to sum up their experience in building and managing well special economic zones.

Section Six: Tourism

The number of tourists visiting China will reach 2 million in 1985, an increase of 70 percent over the 1.16 million in 1980. It is necessary to appropriately expand the construction of tourist facilities, develop more tourist areas and improve service quality.

Section Seven: Customs and Merchandise Inspection

While making things convenient for people leaving or entering the country, it is imperative to strictly prohibit smuggling and other illegal activities. It is necessary to properly readjust tariff in order to encourage or limit the export and import of certain goods so that we can expand economic and technical exchanges with foreign countries while protecting and promoting the development of production in the country. It is also necessary to strengthen the inspection work of export and import merchandise.

Part Three: Regional Economic Development Plans

Chapter 20: Coastal Regions

It is necessary to make full use of the existing economic foundations in the coastal regions and to give full play to their strong points to promote the further economic development of the interior.

It is necessary to give full play to forces in scientific research and to make full use of favorable conditions in technology and management to develop industrial production in the direction of high quality and new, choice and sophisticated products. Efforts should be made to readjust major industrial departments, especially the production of industrial processing, and to change the product structure according to social needs and the principles of less consumption of energy and raw materials, less transport facilities needed, being less in "three wastes," highly intensive technology, highly intensive labor and earning more foreign exchange.

It is necessary to step up the exploration and conservation of energy resources and to accelerate the building and technical transformation of harbors and railways in order to gradually ease the strains in energy and transport and to effectively give full play to the capacity of turning out industrial products needed by society.

It is necessary to make full use of favorable conditions to vigorously expand our economic and trade relations with foreign countries. Full play is to be given to the special characteristics of abundant manpower, relatively high processing technology and convenient transport facilities to develop the export of processed products made of imported raw materials. At the same time, it is necessary to make use of some foreign funds and to introduce some suitable, advanced technologies in a planned way.

Chapter 21: Inland Regions

It is necessary to accelerate construction in transport, energy industry and raw materials industry in order to support the economic development of the coastal regions.

The existing machine building industry should be readjusted and reorganized in order to link up its parts to form a whole system.

On the condition that fulfilling the tasks of transferring cotton, wool, hemp, silk, sugar crops and tobacco to other areas is ensured, it is necessary to develop consumer goods industry according to the characteristics of local natural resources and increase in a planned way the degree of self-sufficiency in industrial products for daily use.

The agricultural potential of the interior should be brought into full play.

Chapter 22: Minority Nationality Regions

It is necessary to continue to give vigorous support and effective assistance to the minority nationality regions to develop their production and bring about a prosperous economy.

It is necessary to make full use of favorable conditions in agriculture and animal husbandry and to make efforts to increase the output of agricultural and livestock products.

Industrial construction should be strengthened in a planned way and according to the characteristics of local natural resources.

Efforts should be made to develop the production of products particularly needed by minority nationalities and to improve trade among various nationalities.

Continued financial, material and technical assistance should be given to the minority nationality regions. The fixed amount of state financial subsidies should increase at an average rate of 10 percent a year. At the same time, the state will allocate 500 million yuan as special funds for supporting economic development in the minority nationality regions and economically undeveloped areas.

Chapter 23: Cooperation Among Regions

It is necessary for various regions to cooperate economically and technically with one another in a planned and systematic way and on the basis of summing up experiences.

The main forms of cooperation among various regions are material and technical cooperation and inter-unit economic combination.

In developing economic and technical cooperation among various regions, it is necessary to uphold the principle of "coordinating the activities of the nation like pieces in a chess game," to strengthen planning management, to conscientiously practice the system of signing contracts, to establish step by step a national management system in economic cooperation and to effectively do legislative work in economic and technical cooperation among various regions.

Chapter 24: Development and Management of National Lands

It is necessary to work out plans for the development and management of national lands in some areas, first of all, the plan for the economic zone in the Chang Jiang delta with Shanghai as its center and the plans for the economic zones of heavy, chemical and coal industries bases with Shanxi as their center, including western Nei Monggol, Northern Shaanxi, Ningxia and western Henan.

It is necessary to make comprehensive surveys and special studies of major regions, to further do a good job in the survey of agricultural resources and agricultural zoning, to step up work in water and soil conservation in some major regions and to strengthen the management and use of water resources. Efforts should be made to survey and develop marine resources and to do a good job in this regard.

Legislative work should be stepped up with regard to national lands.

Part Four: Scientific Research and Educational Development Plan

Chapter 25: Science and Technology

Within the next 5 years, efforts should be made to achieve some major scientific and technological results in urgently needed areas to narrow China's gap with the advanced world level, improve production techniques of some major trades, within the various sectors of the national economy, and make necessary scientific and the technological preparations for the implementation of the Seventh 5-Year Plan, as well as for long term development thereafter.

Section One: Popularization of Scientific and Technological Results

The state has decided to popularize 40 major scientific and technological results within the next 5 years. The principal ones are technologies for raising agricultural output and for processing and preserving agricultural produce, new light and textile industrial products and technology, energy-saving and energy-development technology, new machinery and electronic technology, raw and processed materials industry and construction technology, chemical industry and pharmaceutical technology, transportation and post and telecommunications technology.

All departments, areas and enterprises must actively adopt scientific and technological results for the purpose of lowering energy and raw and processed materials consumption, increase the variety of products, improve product quality and raise labor productivity. In popularizing and adopting scientific and technological results, they should pursue the necessary policies on commodity prices and loan interest rates, in order to encourage and support the adoption of scientific and technological results.

Section Two: Tackling Key Scientific and Technological Problems

In line with the needs of economic and social development, efforts should be made at various administrative levels to speedily solve the major scientific and technological problems in production and construction, as well as scientific and technological problems in social development. Within the next 5 years, the state will concentrate on solving problems in 8 areas and on tackling 38 major scientific and technological problems. The eight areas are: 1) agrotechnique; 2) food processing and light and textile industrial technology; 3) energy development and energy-saving technology; 4) geological and raw materials development technology; 5) machinery and electronics technology; 6) transportation technology; 7) photoconductive fiber communications technology, remote sensing technology, laser technology, superconductivity technology, isotope, radiation and other new technologies, as well as gene engineering application technology; 8) other technological problems relating to the development of new contraceptives, research on treatment for virulent hepatitis and cancer, environmental protection and pollution control.

About three-quarters of the state's scientific and technological items to be tackled are aimed at solving equipment and technological problems for the major construction projects or technical transformation projects during the Sixth or Seventh 5-Year Plan periods; a considerable number of these items will yield results and be applied to production during the Sixth 5-Year Plan period. They will play an effective role in promoting economic and social development.

Section Three: Research in Basic Sciences

Basic sciences should meet the needs of the state for tackling scientific and technological problems. While strengthening research in relevant basic theories, we should pay attention to, and carry out, research on major scientific theories related to mathematics, physics, chemistry, biology, geology and astronomy, so as to lay a foundation for the longterm development of the national economy.

Section Four: Measures for Developing Science and Technology

Improve and carry out the major technical and economic policies on agriculture, energy exploitation and conservation, machinery equipment, transportation, comprehensive utilization of resources, environmental protection and other fields, as well as improve and carry out the respective technical and economic policies of each trade.

Readjust the research organs and reform the research system. Apart from establishing some research centers and bases for industrial experiments and the demonstration of agricultural modernization, generall[illegible] independent scientific research organs will not be established. Existing resear[illegible]entific rese[illegible]h organs will be readjusted and reorganized where necessary. Units engaged in appl[illegible] [illegible]earc[illegible] and developmental research should gra[illegible] develop tow[illegible] [illegible]ocial[illegible] tio[illegible] [illegible]djusting scientific research organs, big e[illegible]s should be [illegible] to de[illegible]lop [illegible]echnologies and set up technic[illegible] development c[illegible]rs f[illegible] [illegible]gy [illegible] consumer go[illegible] [illegible]oducing trades and other enterprises. V[illegible]ious fo[illegible] of associ[illegible] combining [illegible]ic rese[illegible] and produc-tion should be [illegible] [illegible]erimental [illegible]is, and the [illegible] royal[illegible] for scientific rese[illegible] [illegible] be [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]rength [illegible]he ties between s[illegible] and t[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] an[illegible] [illegible]nt on the other.

The organization and management of scientific and technological contingents should be strengthened. The existing scientific and technological personnel should be rationally organized, on the basis of cooperation and division of work, to actively participate in tackling major scientific and technological problems, in technical transformation, in preparatory work for major prospecting and designing projects and in drawing up plans for scientific, technological, economic and social development.

Efforts should be made to improve the means of scientific research and working conditions. The expenses needed for tackling key projects and popularizing major scientific research results selected by the state should, in accordance with specific use, be included separately in the scientific and technological, technical transformation, capital construction and credit fund plans at different levels. This means that special funds should be used for a special purpose and that the necessary materials should be assured. Foreign scientific and technological documents and data should be imported in a planned way. Also, both foreign and domestic scientific and technological documents and data should be collected, rearranged, reproduced and reported in a planned way. Efforts should be made to strengthen the exchange of scientific and technological information within the country to speedily form a scientific and technological information network well suited to China's scientific and technological development.

Activities to popularize scientific and technological knowledge should be actively launched. Particular attention should be paid to popularizing science among the young people and to encouraging them to love and learn science.

Chapter 26: Philosophy and Social Sciences

It is necessary to achieve relevant development in the study of philosophy and social sciences. Efforts must be made to further organize various forces studying philosophy and social sciences to intensify the study of Marxist theory, history and the present situation in China and foreign countries, and various subjects in social sciences, especially the study of major theoretical and practical problems that must urgently be solved in China's socialist modernization in order to use the fruits of creative research for building a highly cultured and democratic socialist country and creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization.

In doing the research, it is necessary to continue to uphold the guidelines of Marxism-Leninism and Mao Zedong Thought, implement the principles of integrating theory with practice and of "letting a hundred flowers blossom and a hundred schools of thought contend," advocate the fine study styles of seeking truth from facts and daring to explore questions, bring forth new ideas, uphold truth and correct mistakes, and actively participate in the discussion and struggle of major ideological and theoretical questions at home and abroad.

Study of philosophy and social sciences must be concentrated in the following 12 fields: 1. study of the fundamental theory and philosophy of Marxism; 2. study of economics and practical economic problems; 3. study of political science and the science of law; 4. study of sociology; 5. study of nationality problems; 6. study of literature and art; 7. study of linguistics; 8. study of historiography; 9. study of problems in education; 10. study of problems concerning religion; 11. study of international issues; and 12. compiling philosophy and social sciences in the "Encyclopedia Sinica," dictionaries and other reference books, as well as collating ancient books and historical archives.

The study of military science, journalism, library science, the science of archives, political geography and social psychology must also be intensified as well.

It is necessary to readjust research institutions of social sciences, set up institutions of new subjects and strengthen those with weak management. Libraries, information centers and other facilities necessary for scientific research must gradually be set up.

Chapter 27: Primary and Secondary Education

Efforts will be made to actively develop preschool education, reinforce primary education, consolidate and upgrade junior middle schools, readjust and reform senior middle schools, develop vocational and technical education, and liquidate illiteracy in order to raise the scientific and cultural level of the whole nation.

Preschool enrollment will increase from 11.51 million in 1980 to 18 million in 1985.

Efforts will be made so that by 1985 primary education will become universal or almost universal in most counties in the country. Other localities must also make efforts to create the condition to accommodate more school-age children. Primary school enrollment will reach 130 million in 1985. All provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions should adopt effective measures to increase the school attendance rate, especially the number of children attending school regularly, in the vast countryside. frontier areas and regions inhabited by minority nationalities.

Efforts will also be made so that by 1985 junior middle school education will become universal in the cities. Senior middle schools must be restructured and strive to achieve steady progress in the course of reform. In 1985, ordinary senior middle schools will enroll a total of about 2.8 million new students, 1 million less than in 1980, while vocational and agricultural middle schools will enroll 1.4 million new students, 1.16 million more than in 1980. Compared with 1980, vocational school enrollment will increase by 550 percent and agricultural school enrollment by 610 percent in 1985.

It is necessary to readjust specialized subjects and types of training in production in technical schools in order to raise their training quality. Technical schools that are not fully filled should undertake the task of training workers for factories or offer training to youths awaiting employment, but they are not responsible for job assignments.

Chapter 28: Higher and Secondary Vocational Education

Section One: Institutions of Higher Education

1. Regular colleges and colleges for professional training: The number of newly admitted students in regular colleges and colleges for professional training will rise to 400,000 in 1985 while total enrollment is to rise from 1.144 million in 1980 to 1.3 million, an increase of 13.6 percent. The number of college graduates will be 1.5 million in the 5 years covered by the plan.

Serious efforts will be made to improve the projection of the required number of people with professional skills, and 10-year and 20-year training programs will be drawn up based on the projection.

The mix of college departments and the distribution and contents of special fields of study will be readjusted. The proportion of colleges for professional training will be raised. A number of professional schools and short-term vocational colleges will be set up on a trial basis to achieve greater educational purpose with less money spent. These schools and colleges should try to enroll only day students and may charge them some tuition. Upon graduation, these students should be employed on the basis of their academic records. The number of students studying courses that are urgently needed should be increased appropriately, and the number of students in departments that are not needed at the present should be reduced. To strengthen the students' adaptability to work after graduation, the contents of certain fields of study should be broadened and relaxed in light of the needs of economic and cultural construction, the trend of scientific and technological development and the specific conditions of the school.

Construction and management of teaching and laboratory facilities will be strengthened. The state will appropriate 700 million yuan as special funds for the construction and expansion of a number of experimental centers in a group of key colleges and universities, including experimental centers for computer science and its application, electronics, mechanics and biochemistry.

2. Graduate students: In 1985, a total of 20,000 postgraduate students will be admitted, 5.5 times the number in 1980, while total enrollment will reach 50,000, an increase of 28,400 from 1980. In the 5-year period, a total of 45,000 students will graduate from their postgraduate studies.

Necessary reform of the postgraduate enrollment system will be made to gradually raise the proportion of college graduates who have completed more than 2 years of employment and workers who possess the same educational level. Planning and education departments should call various schools, research and personnel units together to jointly draw up an enrollment and training program. Graduate schools should be set up on a trial basis.

3. Students studying abroad: Efforts will be made to send out 15,000 students in the 5-year period, an average of 3,000 a year. The number of students returning from study abroad will reach 11,000 in the 5-year period. Natural science and engineering technology will be the principal fields of study abroad, and the emphasis will be placed on disciplines and fields that are relatively weak in our country and need to be developed. At the same time, a certain number of personnel will be sent out to inspect and study foreign politics, economy, law, education and languages.

Section Two: Secondary Vocational Schools

The number of newly admitted students in secondary vocational schools in 1985 will be 500,000 while total enrollment will reach 1.25 million. A total of 2.3 million students will graduate from secondary vocational schools during the 5-year period. Enrollment in special fields of study such as finance, economics, political science and law, administration and management, light and textile industry and architecture will be increased appropriately.

Section Three: Higher Education and Secondary Vocational Education for Adults

It is necessary to organize rotational training of cadres in stages and in groups and establish step by step a regular and standardized cadre rotational training system. Office cadres should leave their jobs temporarily for 6 months of study every 3 years. Special training courses for cadres will be developed step by step at institutions of higher education to train young and middle-aged leading cadres. The number of cadres admitted to these special training courses in institutions of higher education should reach 15,000 in 1985.

Workers and staff members with secondary education level will receive training in stages and in groups. In the 5 years, workers who have an educational level equivalent to that of senior middle school or secondary vocational school graduates will be organized to study politics, culture, technological theories, technological processes and operational techniques so that a considerable number of them will have an educational level of college graduates. Management personnel of enterprises will be organized to study management and administration and professional and technical knowledge so that they will become, step by step, experts in economic work. Directors of large- and medium-sized factories should basically meet the standards stipulated in the "provisional regulations governing directors of state-owned factories," that is, they should possess a secondary or higher level of general and scientific knowledge, be familiar with their respective fields of production and operations, understand the relevant economic laws and regulations and be competent in management and administration. Engineering and technical personnel should be organized and encouraged to pursue advanced studies, constantly acquire advanced science and technology from both China and foreign countries and strengthen their professional knowledge.

It is necessary to actively develop television, correspondence, evening, workers and peasants universities and encourage people to educate themselves. The educational level acquired by those who have attended these universities or who have taught themselves will be recognized after passing unified graduation examinations given by the state.

Part Five: Social Development Plan

Chapter 29: Population

Section One: Strict Control of Population Growth

By 1985 we aim to have the total population on the mainland at 1.06 billion, with a birth rate of about 1.9 percent and a natural growth rate of under 1.3 percent.

Family planning should also be practiced in areas where minority nationalities live in compact communities, and family planning programs should be drawn up in accordance with each area's economic and natural conditions and population situation.

Section Two: Measures To Control Population Growth

A good job should be done in propaganda and education. Family planning commissions at all levels should closely coordinate with the propaganda, public health and civil affairs departments and trade union, women's federation and CYL organizations to conduct thoroughgoing and painstaking propaganda, education and ideological work.

It is necessary to vigorously encourage each couple to have only one child. Vigorous efforts should be made to increase the percentage of one-child couples, strictly control the number of couples having the children and firmly put an end to having more than two children. To achieve this goal, while he must persist mainly in ideological education, we should at the same time adopt necessary supplementary economic and organizational measures. In rural areas, while various forms of production responsibility systems are being implemented, it is imperative to establish corresponding family planning responsibility systems so that family planning will be carried through to each commune, production brigade and team and individual.

Technical guidance on family planning will be strengthened as will be health care for women and children.

Family planning work organizations will be improved, and their staff will be strengthened.

Chapter 30: Labor

Section One: Labor Employment in Cities and Towns

In the 5 years, units owned by the whole people and collectively owned units in cities and towns will each increase the number of workers and staff members by 11 million; self-employed workers will increase by 1.5 million; units owned by the whole people and collectively owned units will hire approximately 5.5 million additional people to fill jobs vacated by natural attrition. Thus, a total of 29 million people will be employed. By the end of 1985, the new work force in cities and towns throughout the country will in the main find jobs.

When recruiting workers from society according to plans, both units owned by the whole people and collectively owned units at and above the county (or municipal district) level must follow the principle of public recruitment, voluntary application, all-round examination and employment of the best qualified. The retirement of workers and staff members and the departure of cadres from their posts for convalescence must be handled strictly according to the stipulations of the State Council without exception. A good job should be done in the pre-employment training of young people awaiting employment in cities and towns. Those who have received the training will be selected by the hiring units on their qualifications. The state will not handle all job assignments.

Section Two: Strengthening Labor Protection

In conjunction with enterprise consolidation and technical transformation, serious efforts will be made to solve the outstanding problems in safety techniques and labor sanitation, effectively improve working conditions, strive to prevent accidents resulting in injuries and deaths, and reduce the incidence of occupational diseases to below the lowest past level.

The labor protection system will be perfected and labor protection and welfare measures will be improved.

Chapter 31: Residents' Income and Consumption

Section One: Residents' Income

In 1985, the average per capita net income for peasants will be about 255 yuan, which is 33.5 percent higher than the 191 yuan in 1980 and represents an average annual increase of 6 percent. The proportion of cash income will be increased by a rather large margin.

In 1985, the total wage earnings of the country's workers and staff members will be 98.3 billion yuan, which is 21 billion yuan more than in 1980 and represents an average annual increase of 4.2 billion yuan or 4.9 percent. In the 5 years, most of the workers and staff members of units owned by the whole people, with the exception of a small number of cadres in the upper grades, will receive a promotion of one grade on the wage scale. Wages for most middle-aged intellectuals are too low and their burdens are heavy. They will be given relatively greater increases in wages.

Section Two: Residents' Consumption

In 1985, the level of average per capita consumption of residents in urban and rural areas will reach 277 yuan, which is 50 yuan higher than in 1980 and represents an average annual increase of 4.1 percent. This is higher than the average annual increase of 2.6 percent between 1953 and 1980. Respectively, the average per capita consumption of residents in cities and towns will be 547 yuan in 1985, an increase of 79 yuan over 1980, and that of rural residents will be 212 yuan, an increase of 39 yuan over 1980.

In terms of the material things being consumed, consumer goods for urban and rural residents will become more varied.

Chapter 32: Urban and Rural Construction and Social Welfare

Section One: Urban and Rural Construction

The principle of keeping the size of large cities under control, rationally developing medium-sized cities and actively developing small cities will be earnestly implemented. Generally, new large- and medium-sized industrial projects should not be built in large cities, but should be located -- as much as possible -- in small- and medium-sized cities or suburban areas. Industrial technical transformation should be linked with city planning. Extremely large cities and some favorably conditioned large cities should develop satellite cities and towns in a planned way. Urban construction should be conducted according to the principle of comprehensive development.

The national village and small town planning should be completed by stages and in groups before 1985. It is necessary to strengthen supervision over construction in villages and small towns and strictly control and save the use of land. Peasants' housing will continue to be mainly built by the peasants themselves, while the collective economy mainly concerns itself with assisting in the construction of public utilities in villages and small towns. In the 5 years, it is estimated that new homes built by peasants will total 2.5 billion square meters in floor space, and that newly built public welfare facilities will total 300 million square meters in floor space.

Section Two: Resident Housing in Cities and Towns

It is necessary to bring into play the initiative of the central government, local authorities, enterprises and individuals; make use of different channels and forms of funds; and carry out housing construction in a planned way in order to further improve the housing situation for people in cities and towns. In the 5 years, it is planned to build houses totaling 310 million square meters of floor space in cities and towns, averaging 62 million square meters each year. The living conditions of residents in cities and towns who do not have homes of their own or are living under crowded or inconvenient conditions will be improved somewhat.

Urban housing construction must be coordinated, in step with city development programs and placed under the overall planning and construction of municipal public utilities and ancillary projects. Work will begin on the sale of houses on an experimental basis, and individuals are encouraged to buy homes.

Section Three: Urban Municipal Public Utilities

It is necessary to bring into play the initiative of the central government, the local authorities and the enterprises to carry out the transformation and construction of various municipal public utilities in cities by stages and in groups in order of importance and urgency.

Attention must be paid to expanding the water supply capacity in cities where the water supply is insufficient, effective and appropriate arrangements must be made for the construction of water supply facilities especially in Beijing, Tianjin, Dalian, Qingdao, Xian, Shenyang, Taiyuan and other big cities where there is a serious water shortage. The objective for the last 3 years of the Sixth 5-Year Plan is to complete new facilities with a total water supply capacity of 10 million tons per day, which means an average annual increase of 3 million tons in daily water supply capacity. At the same time, serious efforts must be made to save water.

Large cities, where conditions are available, should make their own arrangements for the construction of gas facilities, relying mainly on local efforts. The overall scale of construction calls for facilities to supply about 8 million cubic meters of gas per day, adding about 3.5 million cubic meters per day in new capacity.

Based on local financial and material feasibilities, cities in north China should build boiler rooms in key districts to expand the area served with central heat supplies.

The local governments should appropriately increase funds and properly arrange for the construction of public utilities in cities. Urban maintenance funds and construction funds drawn from industrial and commercial profits must be used for the specific purposes for which they are drawn.

Section Four: Social Welfare

It is necessary to fully tap the potentials that can be put to use from all quarters and adopt many ways to actively initiate various types of social welfare work.

It is necessary to take good care of the livelihood of the households entitled to the five guarantees [childless and infirmed persons who are guaranteed food, clothing, medical care, housing and burial expenses by the people's commune] and families of revolutionary martyrs and soldiers in rural areas.

It is necessary to appropriately develop a number of sanatoriums and rest homes and arrange for workers and cadres to recuperate and rest by stages and in groups.

In the 5 years, funds to be spent by the state as pensions to families of the deceased and for social relief will total 12.67 billion yuan.

Chapter 33: Cultural Undertakings

Section One: Films and Art

In the field of films and art, the stress should be placed on raising the ideological level and artistic quality of motion pictures and works of art and, on this basis, energetically increase the quantities of such works. In the 5 years, the number of new feature films produced per year will be increased from 82 in 1980 to 120 in 1985, averaging two new feature films to be shown each week. Vigorous efforts will be made to develop science and educational films, improve and develop documentary films and increase the number of cartoons, puppet films, etc., and television films. At the same time, efforts will be made to promote creative work in modern dramas, traditional operas, operas, dance dramas, music, dancing, quyi, acrobatics, puppet shows, leather-silhouette shows, painting, sculpture, photography and so forth to enrich productions of art and performance programs and, especially, to increase the proportion of items on modern themes.

Section Two: Press and Publishing

Journalistic and publishing means will be actively improved; all publishing, printing and distributing organs will be properly streamlined and reformed; and the quality of books and magazines will be increased on the basis of improvement in their quality. The total number of printed sheets will reach 45.6 billion, or an increase of 8.2 billion sheets over 1980.

Book publishing will be improved. By 1985, there will be 13,000 distribution points throughout the country, or 1.5 times over 1980.

Section Three: Radio and Television Broadcasts

Radio and television broadcasts will be appropriately developed and continual efforts will be exerted to improve their service and perfect the means of service. Special attention will be given to strengthening the means of program transmission, particularly the means of transmission for televised programs so that these programs can cover a larger area.

Within the 5-year period, a central color television building will be constructed in Beijing and new television centers will be built in some provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions.

Section Four: Cultural Relics, Museums, Libraries

The preservation of cultural relics will be strengthened and the work concerning cultural relics will be further developed. By 1985, 850 organs will have been set up to take care of cultural relics. To strengthen scientific research on cultural relics, institutes engaged in scientific research of cultural relics will be established and improved.

The existing museums will be replenished and improved. Museums will be gradually set up in those cities where there are no museums at the present stage.

Construction of public libraries will be stepped up. Special attention will be attached to the construction of the Beijing library, Public libraries will be set up step-by-step in those provinces, municipalities and counties where there are no public libraries at the present stage. Children's libraries will be built in large- and medium-size cities.

Section Five: Cultural Work and Mass Cultural Work in Areas Inhabited by National Minorities

Cultural work in areas inhabited by national minorities, particularly the frontier areas, must be actively developed. Libraries, cultural halls, museums, theaters and other cultural facilities in these areas must be set up and expanded. Roving cultural groups, such as the Mongolian cultural troupe mounted on horseback, should be set up in those counties and banners where there are currently no theatrical troupes. The work of translating the Han language into minority languages and dubbing motion pictures with the national minorities' spoken languages will be improved.

The publishing of books and journals of the national minorities must be done properly, reference books in minority languages will be compiled, and books about the cultural legacy of the national minorities will be compiled and published.

Mass cultural activities will be actively promoted and construction of cultural facilities for the masses will be stepped up.

Section Six: Cultural and Art Exchanges with Foreign Countries

To promote cultural and art exchanges, exchanges of visits of personages of the cultural and art circles and acting groups between China and foreign countries, particularly countries of the Third World, will be expanded.

Chapter 34: Public Health and Sports

Section One: Medical and Health Work

The principle of giving consideration to both cities and rural areas and combining Chinese and Western medical knowledge will be upheld, the medical and health organs in cities and rural areas at different levels will be strengthened, and efforts will be exerted to promote medical and health services so that the medical and health services for the people will be further improved.

Within the 5-year period, there will be 250,000 additional hospital beds, or an average of 50,000 each year. Principal attention will be directed to increasing the number of beds for the obstetrical, pediatric, contagious disease, tumor and mental disease and other special departments in cities, and to increasing the number of beds in hospitals where Chinese medicine is practiced.

Within the 5-year period, there will be an additional 600,000 professional health workers, or an increase of 120,000 health workers on the average each year. Within these 5 years, there will be an additional 230,000 doctors [yi sheng 6829 3932] of Chinese and Western medicine; among them, 180,000 will be certified doctors [yi shi 6829 1597]. By 1985, there will be a total of 4.21 million professional health workers and 1.38 million doctors of Chinese and Western medicines, including 890,000 certified doctors. The three forces -- doctors of Chinese medicine, doctors of Western medicine, and doctors who practice a combination of Chinese and Western medicines -- are to be united so that their roles can be brought into full play. Training and improvement of barefoot doctors, rural medical workers and midwives will be intensified.

The policy of putting prevention first in medical work will continue to be implemented and the patriotic health movement will be launched among the masses in a penetrating and sustained manner.

Section Two: Pharmaceutical Work

The pharmaceutical industry must step up its scientific research, work energetically to improve the quality of products and their curative effects, and increase the output of medicines in short supply. Along with consolidation and reorganization of enterprises, substandard pharmaceutical enterprises must be closed with resolve and products of poor quality, which are harmful to people's health, must be eradicated.

Section Three: Sports

Sports in urban areas will be energetically promoted, special attention will be given to promoting physical education in schools, and sports activities in factories, mines, enterprises and the rural areas will be actively promoted.

Efforts must be exerted to consolidate and upgrade the technical standards of sports and physical exercise. The advanced world levels of table tennis, badminton, women's volleyball, gymnastics, "wei qi" [Chinese chess game] and diving must be maintained. The level of other sports must also be improved by a relatively great margin.

Construction of stadiums must be appropriately intensified.

Chapter 35: Environmental Protection

Ravage of the natural environment must be prohibited, development of new pollutants must be checked, continual deterioration of the ecological environment must be energetically put under control, special attention must be given to resolving prominent pollution problems, and the environmental conditions of such major scenic sightseeing cities as Beijing, Hangzhou, Suzhou and Guilin must be further improved.

Antipollution installations for new constructions must be designed, built and put into operation simultaneously with the main buildings in accordance with the State Council's regulations; the discharge of various types of harmful substances must be conducted according to regulations stipulated by the state so that new sources of pollution can be avoided and checked.

Special attention must be given to harnessing, by groups and stages, pollution caused by the old enterprises and efforts must be exerted to heighten industrial enterprises' capabilities for disposing of the "three wastes" [waste gas, waste water and industrial residue] and making multipurpose use of their resources.

Planned guidance on environmental protection must be strengthened and financial resource problems must be rationally resolved. All responsible departments must work up general plans for carrying out enterprise consolidation and reorganization, technical transformation and antipollution control simultaneously. Environmental monitoring and scientific study of the environment must be stepped up and efforts must be made so that a national environmental monitoring station and 64 other major stations can be equipped as soon as possible, and so the Chinese institute of environmental science can be basically established and a selected number of local scientific research institutes can be properly equipped during the Sixth 5-Year Plan period. Legislation of the environmental protection law and the execution of such a law must be properly carried out.

Chapter 36: Social Order

A good social order must be maintained in cities and rural areas so that people can work wholeheartedly for the four modernizations.

Activities of "five stresses and four beauties" must continue in a penetrating manner, public pledges on civilized behavior and a code of conduct for staff, workers and students must be broadly promoted in urban and rural areas so that a marked improvement in social conduct can be achieved.

Public order must be further improved: Elements who are hostile to socialism and criminal elements must be rebuffed with resolve.

Serious criminal activities in the economic sphere must be resolutely rebuffed so that the socialist economic system and modernization can be safeguarded.

Chapter III: The Standing Committees of Local People's Congresses At and Above the County Level

Article 25

Standing committees are to be established for the people's congresses of provinces, autonomous regions, municipalities directly under the central government, autonomous prefectures, counties, autonomous counties, cities and municipal districts.

The standing committees of the local people's congresses at and above the county level are permanent organs of the respective local people's congresses and are responsible and accountable to them.

Article 26

The standing committee of the local people's congresses at and above the county level consists of one chairman, several vice chairmen and several members to be elected from among the deputies by the respective local people's congresses.

The members of the standing committees may not concurrently hold posts in state administrative organs, judicial organs and procuratorial organs. If a member of the standing committee wants to assume the above-mentioned posts, he must submit his resignation to the standing committee and resign from the post in the standing committee.

The standing committees are composed of the following numbers of members:

1. thirty-five to 65 members for each province, autonomous region and municipality directly under the central government, and not to exceed 85 members in a province with an extremely large population;

2. thirteen to 35 members for each autonomous prefecture and city, and not to exceed 45 members in a city with an extremely large population;

3. eleven to 19 members for each county, autonomous county and municipal district, and not to exceed 29 members in a county or a municipal district with an extremely large population.

Article 27

When the respective people's congresses are not in session, the standing committees of the people's congresses of provinces, autonomous regions and municipalities directly under the central government may draw up and promulgate local statutes in accordance with the specific conditions and actual needs of their respective administrative areas, provided that these statutes do not contradict the constitution, laws, policies, decrees or administrative orders of the state, and report to the NPC Standing Committee and the State Council for the record.

The standing committees of the people's congresses of the cities where people's governments of provinces and autonomous regions are located and of those relatively big cities approved by the State Council may draw up draft local statutes as necessary in their respective cities, submit them to the standing committees of the people's congresses of the provinces and autonomous regions for examination and enactment and report them to the NPC Standing Committee and the State Council for the record.

Article 28

The standing committees of the local people's congresses at and above the county level exercise the following functions and powers:

1. to exercise leadership over and conduct elections of deputies to the respective people's congress;

2. to call sessions of the respective people's congresses;

3. to discuss and make decisions on the important tasks in political, economic, cultural, educational, health, civil affairs and nationality work of the respective administrative areas;

4. to make decisions on partial revisions of the national economic plans and budgets in the respective administrative areas in accordance with theproposals of the people's government at corresponding levels;

5. to supervise the work of the people's governments, people's courts and people's procuratorates at corresponding levels, to maintain contacts with deputies of the respective people's congresses and to receive and handle appeals and opinions from the masses of people on the above-mentioned organs and state personnel;

6. to revise or abolish improper decisions made by the people's congresses at the next lower level;

7. to make decisions on appointments and dismissals of deputy governors, vice chairmen of autonomous regions, deputy mayors, deputy heads of autonomous prefectures, deputy heads of counties and deputy heads of districts when the respective people's congresses are not in session; to make decisions on the choice of acting governors, chairmen of autonomous regions, mayors and heads of autonomous prefectures, counties and districts when they are unable to perform their duties for various reasons;

8. to make decisions on appointments and dismissals of secretaries general, department heads, bureau chiefs, directors and section chiefs of the respective people's governments and to report to the people's governments at the next higher level for the record;

9. to appoint and dismiss vice presidents, chief justices, deputy chief justices, members of judicial committees and judges of the people's courts and to appoint and dismiss or approve the appointments and dismissals of deputy chief procurators, members of the procuratorial committees and procurators of the people's procuratorates in accordance with the provisions of the organic laws of the people's courts and the people's procuratorates;

10. to elect additional deputies to fill vacancies of the people's congresses at the next higher level and replace individual deputies when the respective people's congresses are not in session;

11. to make decisions on conferring local honorable titles.

Article 29

Standing committee meetings shall be convened by the chairman; such meetings are to be held at least once every 2 months. Resolutions of the standing committees are to be approved by more than 50 percent of the total members of the standing committees. The chairman and vice chairmen of the standing committee are the participants in chairmen's meetings to handle the major day-to-day work of the standing committee.

Article 30

Work organs shall be established by the standing committees in accordance with their work needs.

Chapter IV: Local People's Government at Various Levels

["Trademark Law of the PRC" -- adopted at the 24th session of the Standing Committee of the 5th National People's Congress on 23 August 1982 -- translation by the Trademark Office]

[Text] Chapter I. General Provisions

Article 1

This law is enacted for the purposes of improving the administration of trademarks, of protecting the exclusive right to use a trademark, and of encouraging producers to guarantee the quality of their goods and maintain the reputation of their trademarks, with a view to protecting consumer interests and to promoting the development of socialist commodity economy.

Article 2

The Trademark Office of the Administrative Authority for Industry and Commerce under the State Council shall be responsible for the registration and administrative control of trademarks throughout the country.

Article 3

Registered trademark means a trademark which has been approved and registered by the Trademark Office. The trademark registrant shall enjoy an exclusive right to use the trademark, (which right shall be) protected by law.

Article 4

Any enterprise, institution, or individual producer or trader, intending to acquire the exclusive right to use a trademark for the goods produced, manufactured, processed, selected or marketed by it or him, shall file an application for the registration of the trademark with the Trademark Office.

Article 5

Where the state prescribes that certain kinds of goods must bear a registered trademark, registration of a trademark must be applied for in respect of such goods. Where no trademark registration has been granted, such goods shall not be sold in the market.

Article 6

Any user of a trademark shall be responsible for the quality of the goods in respect of which the trademark is used. The administrative authorities for industry and commerce at all levels shall, through the administrative control of trademarks, exercise supervision over the quality of the goods and shall stop any practice that deceives consumers.

Article 7

Any word, design, or their combination, used as a trademark, must be distinctive so that it be distinguishable. Where a registered trademark is used, it should carry the indication "registered trademark" or a sign indicating that it is registered.

Article 8

In trademarks, the following words or designs shall not be used:

(1) those incidental with or similar to the state name, national flag, national emblem, military flag, or decorations, of the PRC;

(2) those identical with or similar to the state names, national flags, national emblems, emblems, or military flags, of foreign countries;

(3) those identical with or similar to the flags, emblems, or names, of international intergovernmental organizations;

(4) those identical with or similar to the symbols, or names, of the Red Cross or the Red Crescent;

(5) those relating to generic names or designs of the goods in respect of which the trademark is used;

(6) those having direct reference to the quality, main raw materials, function, use, weight, quantity or other features of the goods in respect of which the trademark is used;

(7) those having the nature of discrimination against any nationality;

(8) those having the nature of exaggeration and deceit in advertising goods;

(9) those detrimental to socialist morals or customs, or having other unhealthy influences.

Article 9

Any foreigner or foreign enterprise intending to apply for the registration of a trademark in China shall file an application in accordance with any agreement concluded between the PRC and the country to which the applicant belongs, or according to the international treaty to which both countries are parties, or on the basis of the principle of reciprocity.

Article 10

Any foreigner or foreign enterprise intending to apply for the registration of a trademark, or to deal with other matters concerning a trademark in China, shall entrust the organization designated by the state to act on his or its behalf.

Chapter II. Application For Trademark Registration

Article 11

Any application for the registration of a trademark shall, in a form, indicate, in accordance with the prescribed classification of goods, the class of the goods and the designation of the goods in respect of which the trademark is intended to be used.

Article 12

Where any applicant intends to use the same trademark for goods in different classes, a separate application for registration shall be filed in respect of each class of the prescribed classification of goods.

Article 13

Where a registered trademark is intended to be used in respect of other goods of the same class, a new application for registration shall be filed.

Article 14

Where any word and/or design of a registered trademark is to be altered, a new registration shall be applied for.

Article 15

Where, after the registration of a trademark, the name, address or other registered matters concerning the registrant change, an application regarding the change shall be filed.

Chapter III. Examination For, and Approval of, Trademark Registration

Article 16

Where the trademark for which registration has been applied for is in conformity with the relevant provisions of this law, the Trademark Office shall, after examination, preliminary approve the trademark and publish (it).

Article 17

Where the trademark for which registration has been applied for is not in conformity with the relevant provisions of the this law, or where it is identical with or similar to the trademark of another person which, in respect of the same or similar goods, has been registered or, after examination, preliminarily approved, the Trademark Office shall refuse the application and shall not publish (the said trademark).

Article 18

Where two or more applicants apply for the registration of identical or similar trademarks for the same or similar goods, the preliminary approval, after examination, and the publication shall be made for the trademark which was first filed. Where applications are filed on the same day the preliminary approval, after examination, and the publication shall be made for the trademark which was the earliest used, and the applications of the others shall be refused and (their trademarks) shall not be published.

Article 19

Any person may, within three months from the date of the publication, file an opposition against the trademark which, after examination, has been preliminarily approved. If no opposition is filed, or if it is decided that the opposition is not justified, registration shall be approved, a trademark registration certificate shall be issued and (the trademark) shall be published. If it is decided that the opposition is justified, no registration shall be approved.

Article 20

The Trademark Review and Adjudication Board, established under the Administrative Authority for Industry and Commerce under the State Council, shall be responsible for handling trademarks disputes.

Article 21

Where the application for registration of a trademark is refused and no publication of the trademark is made, the Trademark Office shall notify the applicant in writing. Where the applicant is dissatisfied, he may, within fifteen days from the receipt of the notification, apply for a review. The Trademark Review and Adjudication Board shall make a final decision and notify the applicant in writing.

Article 22

Where an opposition is filed against the trademark which, after examination, has been preliminarily approved and published, the Trademark Office shall hear the opponent and the applicant state facts and grounds and shall, after investigation and verification, make a decision. Where any party is dissatisfied, it may, within fifteen days from the receipt of the notification, apply for review, and the Trademark Review and Adjudication Board shall make a final decision, and notify the opponent and the applicant in writing.

Chapter IV. Renewal, Assignment and Licensing of Registered Trademarks

Article 23

The period of validity of a registered trademark shall be ten years counted from the date of the approval of the registration.

Article 24

Where (the registrant) intends to continue to use the registered trademark beyond the expiration of the period of validity, an application for renewal of the registration shall be made within six months before the said expiration. Where no such application could be filed within the said period, an extension period of six months may be allowed. If no application is filed by the expiration of the extension period, the registered trademark shall be cancelled.

The period of validity of each renewal of registration shall be ten years.

Any renewal of registration shall be published after approval.

Article 25

Where a registered trademark is assigned, the assignor and assignee shall jointly file an application with the Trademark Office. The assignee shall guarantee the quality of the goods in respect of which the registered trademark is used.

The assignment of the registered trademark shall be published after approval.

Article 26

Any trademark registrant may, by signing a trademark license contract, authorize other persons to use his registered trademark. The licensor shall supervise the quality of the goods in respect of which the licensee uses his registered trademark, and the licensee shall guarantee the quality of the goods in respect of which the registered trademark is used.

The trademark license contract shall be submitted to the Trademark Office for the file.

Chapter V. Adjudiction of Disputes Concerning Registered Trademarks

Article 27

Any person disputing a registered trademark may, within one year from the date of approval of the trademark registration, apply to the Trademark Review and Adjudication Board for adjudication.

The Trademark Review and Adjudication Board shall, after the receipt of the application for adjudication, notify the interested parties and request them to respond with arguments within a specified period.

Article 28

Where the trademark, before being approved for registration, has been the object of opposition and decision, no application for adjudication, based on the same facts and grounds, may be made.

Article 29

After the Trademark Review and Adjudication Board has made the final decision maintaining or cancelling the disputed registered trademark, it shall notify the interested parties in writing.

Chapter VI. Administration Control of the Use of Trademarks

Article 30

Where any person who uses the registered trademark commits any of the following, the Trademark Office shall order him to rectify (the situation) within a specified period or shall cancel the registered trademark:

(1) where any word, design, or their combination, of the registered trademark is altered unilaterally (that is, without the required registration);

(2) where the name, address or other registered matters concerning the registrant of a registered trademark are changed unilaterally (that is, without the required application);

(3) where the registered trademark is assigned unilaterally (that is, without the required approval);

(4) where the registered trademark has ceased to be used for three consecutive years.

Article 31

Where the registered trademark is used in respect of goods which have been roughly or poorly manufactured, or whose superior quality has been replaced by inferior quality, (so that) consumers are deceived, the administrative authorities for industry and commerce at all levels shall, according to the circumstances, order the rectification (of the situation) within a specified period, and may, in addition, circulate a notice of criticism or impose a fine, or the Trademark Office may cancel the registered trademark.

Article 32

Where the registered trademark is cancelled or has expired and not been renewed, the Trademark Office shall not approve, during one year from the date of the cancellation or the removal (on account of expiration), applications for registration of trademarks identical with or similar to the said trademark.

Article 33

In the case of any person violating the provisions of Article 5 of this law, the local administrative authoritives for industry and commerce shall order him to file an application for registration within a specified period, and may, in addition, impose a fine.

Article 34

Where any person who uses an unregistered trademark commits any of the following, the local administrative authorities for industry and commerce shall stop the use of the trademark, order him to rectify (the situation) within a specified period, and may, in addition, circulate a notice of criticism or impose a fine:

(1) where the trademark is falsely represented as registered;

(2) where any provision of Article 8 of this law is violated;

(3) where the manufacture is rough or poor, or where superior quality is replaced by inferior quality, (so that) consumers are deceived.

Article 35

Any party dissatisfied with the decision of the Trademark Office to cancel the registered trademark may apply for review within fifteen days from the receipt of the (corresponding) notice. The Trademark Review and Adjudication Board shall make a final decision and notify the applicant in writing.

Article 36

Any party dissatisfied with the decision of an administrative authority for industry and commerce imposing a fine under the provisions of Article 31, Article 33 or Article 34 may institute proceedings with the people's court within fifteen days from the receipt of the (corresponding) notice. If no proceedings are instituted or if there is no performance (complying with the decision imposing the fine) by the expiration of the said period, the administrative authority for industry and commerce concerned may ask the people's court for compulsory execution.

Chapter VII. Protection of the Exclusive Right To Use Registered Trademarks

Article 37

The exclusive right to use a registered trademark is limited to the trademark which has been approved for registration and to the goods in respect of which the use of the trademark has been approved.

Article 38

Any of the following acts shall be an infringement of the exclusive right to use a registered trademark:

(1) to use a trademark which is identical with or similar to the registered trademark in respect of the same or similar goods without the authorization of the proprietor of the registered trademark;

(2) to make or sell, without authorization, representations of the registered trademark of another person;

(3) to cause, in other respects, prejudice to the exclusive right to use the registered trademark of another person.

Article 39

In the case of any of the acts infringing the exclusive right to use a registered trademark as provided for in Article 38 of this law, the party whose right was infringed may request the administrative authority for industry and commerce, at or above the county level, of the location (domicile or establishment) of the infringer to handle (the matter). The administrative authority for industry and commerce concerned shall have the power to order the infringer to stop the infringing act immediately and to compensate the party whose right was infringed for the damages suffered. The amount of compensation shall be the profit which the infringer has earned through the infringement during the period of the infringement or the damages that the party whose right was infringed has suffered through the infringement during the period of the infringement. If the circumstances are serious, the said authority may, in addition, impose a fine. Any dissatisfied party may institute proceedings with the people's court within fifteen days from the receipt of tht notice. If no proceedings are instituted or if there is no performance (complying with the decision imposing the fine) by the expiration of the said period, the administrative of the said period, the administrative authority for industry and commerce concerned may ask the people's court for compulsory execution.

Where the exclusive right to use the registered trademark was infringed, the party whose right was infringed may institute proceedings directly with the people's court.

Article 40

Any party that passes off (a trademark as) a registered trademark of another person -- including any party that makes or sells, without authorization, representations of the registered trademark of another person -- shall compensate for the damages suffered by the party whose right was infringed and additionally shall be imposed a fine; furthermore, any person directly responsible (for the passing off) shall be prosecuted, according to law, by the judicial organs in respect of criminal responsibility.

Chapter VIII. Supplementary Provisions

Article 41

Any application for trademark registration and any other proceeding in trademark matters shall be subject to the payment of a fee. The rate of the fees shall be prescribed separately.

Article 42

The implementing regulations of this law shall be drawn up by the Administrative Authority for Industry and Commerce under the State Council. They shall enter into force after they have been submitted to and approved by the State Council.

Article 43

This law shall enter into force on March 1, 1983. The "Regulations Governing Trademarks" promulgated by the State Council on April 10, 1963, shall be abrogated on the same date, and any other provisions concerning trademarks contrary to this law shall cease to be effective at the same time.

Trademarks registered before this law enters into force shall continue to be valid.

Liu Weiming, member of the Secretariat of the CYL Central Committee, presided over the preparatory session. He announced that there were a total of 1,995 deputies to the 11th National CYL Congress and that 1,954 deputies attended today's preparatory session.

Delegates at the session elected the 172-member congress presidium with Gao Zhanxiang as the general secretary of the congress and approved a list of the members of the Credentials Committee with Wang Jiangong as its chairman to examine the credentials of the delegates to the 11th National CYL Congress.

It was decided at the preparatory session that the agenda for the 11th National CYL Congress, which will open tomorrow, will be as follows:

1. Discuss and approve the work report of the 10th CYL Central Committee;

2. Discuss the draft of the revised "Constitution of the Communist Youth League of China" and approve the "Constitution of the Communist Youth League of China";

3. Elect the 11th CYL Central Committee.

Delegates attending today's preparatory session also endorsed a resolution on the decisions of the 2d, 3d and 4th Plenary Sessions of the 10th CYL Central Committee on adding more members to the league's Central Committee. They affirmed the decisions of these three plenary sessions to add Li Ruihuan, Keyum Bawudun, Wang Jiangong, Chen Haosu, He Guangwei and Wang Zhaoguo as members of the 10th CYL Central Committee.

After the preparatory session, the presidium of the congress held the first meeting and elected 12 persons, including Wang Zhaoguo, as permanent members of the presidium. The presidium meeting also endorsed the report of the Credentials Committee on screening the credentials of the delegates and approved a list of deputy general secretaries of the congress.

Leaders Greet Opening

OW200112 Beijing XINHUA in English 1842 GMT 19 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 19 (XINHUA) -- On the eve of the 11th National Congress of the Chinese Communist Youth League, revolutionary veterans express their hopes for the youth league and the younger generation. They are Peng Zhen, Deng Yingchao, Xu Xiangqian, Nie Rongzhen, Wang Zhen and Lu Dingyi.

Peng Zhen, member of the Political Bureau of the Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party, sent a message from Chengdu to the presidium of the national youth league congress scheduled to open tomorrow.

He urged the 48 million youth league members to arm themselves with Marxism-Leninism and Mao Zedong Thought and steadfastly follow the road of socialism and communism.

"I hope all the youth will broaden their general knowledge, sutdy science and production techniques and become skilled hands with high ideals, morals and culture and observing discipline in various fields of socialist modernization," he said.

Deng Yingchao said the youth league should carry on its fine revolutionary traditions, act as the good assistant of the Communist Party, play an exemplary role among the youth of all nationalities in China and rally the broadest section of young people to work for the country's modernization.

Marshal Xu Xiangqian said that in China young people had always been in the van of revolutionary struggles. The youth league had the fine task of training millions upon millions of successors to the revolutionary cause. Young people should become politically sound and professionally competent.

Nie Rongzhen urged the nation's young people to become the most active force in building the country. The youth league should become a school for young people to learn communism in practice.

Wang Zhen said that the 250 million young people in China were the most active and vigorous force working in various fields. Ever since the opium war, many revolutionary movements in China had been started by young people and many revolutionary veterans of the party had begun their revolutionary career by doing youth work. The best time of a person's life was his youth. Young people should have lofty ideals, study hard dare to scale new heights in various fields of science and overcome all difficulties to fulfill their glorious tasks.

Lu Dingyi said that many revolutionary veterans had laid down their lives to overthrow the rule by imperialism, the landlord class and the comprador bourgeoisie, so that China could become prosperous and powerful. Today's younger generation should take over this great cause and work for this aim.

"We should proceed steadfastly on the road of building socialism. Young people should concern themselves with world affairs and affairs of the state. They should work selflessly and honestly and be worthy successors to the revolutionary cause," he added.

Hu, Deng, Others at Opening

OW201007 Beijing XINHUA in English 0900 GMT 20 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 20 (XINHUA) -- The 11th National Congress of the Chinese Communist Youth League opened here today amidst thunderous applause. The Great Hall of the People rang with the singing of the national anthem by the youthful voices of the 10,000 participants of the opening ceremony.

Party and state leaders attending were Hu Yaobang, Deng Xiaoping, Chen Yun, Deng Yingchao, Wan Li, Xi Zhongxun, Wang Zhen, Wei Guoqing, Ulanhu, Fang Yi, Yang Shangkun, Yang Dezhi, Yu Qiuli, Song Renqiong, Zhang Tingfa, Ni Zhifu, Qin Jiwei, Chen Muhua, Deng Liqun, Chen Peixian, Hu Qili, Qiao Shi, Hao Jianxiu, Bo Yibo, Tan Chenlin, Li Weihan and others.

Veteran youth leaders including Xu Deheng and former youth league secretaries attended.

The center of the rostrum backdrop was decorated with the golden and red league emblem of a bright sun, a league flag, a cog wheel and an ear of wheat. Veteran leaders mixed with the youth league leaders as they took seats on the rostrum.

Attending the 11-day congress are 1,995 delegates and 150 observers, representating 48 million youth league members all over the country. The youth of Taiwan are also represented. Delegates consist of outstanding league members and youth leaders, workers and peasants who have made achievements, combat heroes, model teachers, scientists, writers, engineers as well as outstanding students. 637 delegates have won national or provincial honors.

The average delegates' age is 29.5. There are 616 women delegates, accounting for 30.9 percent of the delegates total. All the 55 minority nationalities of the country have their own delegates who account for 11 percent of the total number.

The atmosphere of the congress was livened up by 800 Young Pioneers who entered the hall playing their band and waving bouquets. Young Pioneers recited a poem of greetings.

Hu Qili, member of the Secretariat of the party Central Committee, conveyed the party's expectations of the young. He said: The Communist Party must arouse the consciousness of youth, rely on their strength and bring their vanguard role into full play so as to make the Chinese revolution and construction victorious. The young people must follow Communist Party leadership and Marxism-Leninism, be one with the people and keep to the correct political orientation in order to take a real part in revolution and construction.

Wang Zhaoguo, first secretary of the league Central Committee, delivered a work report entitled "Youth of the Whole Country Unite and March Towards the Brilliant Future of Socialist Modernization!" He reviewed the youth league's work in the past four years and called upon the nation's young people to be pace-setters in the modernization drive.

Before the congress started, jubilation prevailed as the delegates from different parts of the country challenged each other for songs for over half an hour. The hall resounded with popular revolutionary songs of the 1950s and 1960s, including "Socialism Is Good" and "Without the Communist Party There Will Be No New China."

Hu Qili Addresses Opening

OW201017 Beijing XINHUA in English 0909 GMT 20 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 20 (XINHUA) -- Hu Qili, member of the Secretariat of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee, addressed the 11th National Congress of the Communist Youth League which opened here today.

Greeting the congress on behalf of the party Central Committee, Hu Qili said the youth league had worked hard as a close helper of the Communist Party in the past four years during which China had been undergoing a great historical change. "The younger generation has made inspiring adaptations as the country is forging ahead in construction and reform," he said.

Two important conclusions could be drawn from China's youth movement, he said. One, the Communist Party must arouse the consciousness of youth, rely on their strength and bring their vanguard role into full play so as to make the Chinese revolution and construction victorious. Two, the young people must follow Communist Party leadership and Marxism-Leninism, be one with the people, and keep to the correct political orientation in order to take a real part in revolution and construction.

China's progressive young people, he said, were motivated by a firm, scientific belief in the communist movement and the cause of the people. "With this belief, one sees the full meaning of life, has the strength to overcome difficulties, and is ready to sacrifice personal interests, even life itself, in the interests of the people," he said.

"This is not an impulse of the moment, nor religious belief", he said. "The revolutionary martyrs and the older generation brought this faith to victory. We will resolutely take over the torch and continue the struggle," he said. "The future belongs to the youth".

Fulfilment of China's aim to quadruple gross annual value of industrial and agricultural production by the end of the century and the country's future advance had to a great extent become the historical task of the younger generation. Their attitude toward work, study and life would determine the future of the country.

"The youth league is entrusted in this period with the task of rallying all young people in the country to reach this historical goal," he said. The league should strongly support advanced youth, help young people solve their problems and dispel their doubts in a reasonable way, and encourage erring youth to turn over a new leaf.

Hu Qili said: "Our young people love their country and the country nurtures them. They love the party and the party is leading them to a bright future. They love socialist society and society accepts responsibility for their development. They respect the older generation of revolutionaries and the veterans are helping them to press further ahead.

"These relations of socialist society rally the people and encourage the nation's creativity in its drive for socialist modernisation."

Wang Zhaoguo Addresses Opening

OW201140 Beijing XINHUA in English 1108 GMT 20 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 20 (XINHUA) -- Wang Zhaoguo, first secretary of the Chinese Communist Youth League Central Committee, described the youth of today's China as a young generation that has been "tempered" to become "more promising" and "able to accomplish more."

In his report to the youth league congress today, Wang Zhaoguo said that as the confusion caused by the "Cultural Revolution" was clarified, what were "left" errors and tendencies toward bourgeois liberalization were being understood better. Young people had come to realise that their personal future was closely linked with that of the motherland and the Communist Party and were steadily following the party in the great historical change taking place in the country.

China today had 250 million people between 15 to 28 years old, he pointed out. Half of the working class was under 28 years old, and over 70 percent of the country's youth were in the countryside. One million young people had won national recognition as pace-setters. Half of the youth league's 48 million members had been recruited in the past four years.

In line with the orientation of the third plenary session of the party's 11th Central Committee, the youth league had adopted the policy of arming young people with Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought and modern science and general knowledge. It emphasised as the main task of the youth working for modernisation and was correcting the past error of focusing on class struggle. The league had returned to its role as the core uniting and educating young people.

Youth should be pace-setters in China's modernisation drive, he stressed. He called upon young people to work and study hard and set an example of socialist morals, ever-ready to answer the country's call to work at any job anywhere, including doing their part to help less developed places move ahead. Dedication and solid work would be the hallmark of revolutionary heroism in the new period.

In China, he said, all labour that created the wealth of society, that benefited the people, merited social respect.

He urged young people to become competent workers for China's modernisation. They should study politics, general knowledge and science and link their studies with the needs of the country and the people. Moral quality was important, he said. Selfishness would be backsliding. Social progress depended on alert, questing minds.

Young people should stand at the forefront of the national effort to improve social relations. In a socialist society, Wang Zhaoguo said, the relations between people should be mutual respect, mutual concern, mutual help and friendly cooperation. The Communist Youth League should publicize among the young people a correct world outlook, socialist morals, discipline and respect for the law and upgrade their overall educational level.

League work among the young people would be improved, he said, if youth league leaders kept in mind that this generation had grown up during the chaos of the "Cultural Revolution". They wanted to get at truth through their own practice and thinking rather than accept ready-made conclusions. So dogmatism should be avoided. There was a new interest among young people in studying the writings of Marx, Lenin and Mao Zedong. This should be encouraged.

Wang Zhaoguo pledged that the youth league would work to rally youth and be active in defending their interests. This included assisting the departments concerned to help the several million young people who enter the labor force every year to get technical training, organize spare-time study and cultural and sports activities, defend the rights and interests of the young people guaranteed by the constitution while educating them in the correct use of their democratic rights.

The young people of China, he said, wanted to join hands with the youth of all countries to work in defence of world peace, oppose hegemonism and strive for a better future for mankind.

"The world has a bright future and it belongs to the young," he said.

MADRID CSCE SESSION ADJOURNS UNTIL FEBRUARY

OW181646 Beijing XINHUA in English 1538 GMT 18 Dec 82

[Text] Madrid, December 17 (XINHUA) -- The 35-nation and two-year-long follow-up Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE) today adjourned until February 8 after making no progress since reconvening in early November.

Leader of the Austrian delegation Franz Ceska said in a meeting today that things had become more difficult for neutral nations such as Austria to function as a bridge and propose dialogues between East and West. He said that to their disappointment, not even informal understandings on certain aspects had been reached in this session.

Leader of the Soviet delegation Anatoliy Kovaliov proposed Tuesday to call the gathering as "useful and constructive," but Western countries refused it.

U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz accused the Soviet Union here yesterday of violating the 1975 Helsinki accords.

The present session was convened on November 9 after a suspension of eight months, the sixth round of the Helsinki follow-up conference beginning in Madrid in November 1980.

Western delegations proposed since the opening of the session that more than 10 proposals of theirs concerning Poland and human rights be written into the draft of the final document. They also proposed that improvements of human rights conditions in the Soviet Union and East European countries be set as a requirement of exchange for the convening of the European disarmament conference.

The Soviet Union and East European countries accused Western delegations of making the proposals to interfere in their internal affairs. Neutral nations tried to mediate between East and West and put forth time and again compromise proposals, but their efforts had no results.

OPEC MINISTERIAL MEETING OPENS IN VIENNA

OW202345 Beijing XINHUA in English 1530 GMT 20 Dec 82

[Text] Vienna, December 19 (XINHUA) -- The Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) opened its 66th ministerial meeting here today with a joint determination to defend the present 34-dollar bench-mark oil price. But its 13 member nations still have wide differences in producing agreement on production quota, which is regarded as the key to saving the organization from price structure collapse.

"We all agree to keep the price at dlrs 34. Now we are trying to see how to do that," said Venezuelan Minister of Petroleum Humberto Calderon Berti. Kuwaiti Oil Minister Shaykh 'Ali al-Khalifah as-Sabah insisted that the member nations attain genuine accord on production quotas and production rate. "It is either this or no accord at all," he said.

Conference sources said the ministers agree that the only way to prevent OPEC's price from collapsing is to reduce the flow of oil to the market, making it more scarce and therefore more expensive. But several countries want to increase their production quotas assigned them last March when the OPEC set up a 17.5-million-barrel-a-day ceiling.

Other countries raised their production to replenish their war coffer or to pay foreign debts in violation of the March agreement. Earlier, Iran stated it would block any agreements by the organization that did not boost Iranian output at the expense of Saudi Arabia.

Saudi Arabian Oil Minister Ahmad Zaki Yamani said his country had honoured the March agreement and did not agree to Iranian demands that Saudi Arabia slash her output.

In opening the conference, Nigerian Oil Minister Umaru Dikko said: "Conservation and substitution are biting harder than before. There has been a substantial rise in non-OPEC oil production, which is steadily displacing OPEC supplies." We must act with resolve to prevent this period of difficulty from becoming a time of crisis which could conceivably engulf us all," Dikko said in the capacity of the conference's president.

TANJUG CITES PRC SOURCES ON USSR, AFGHANISTAN

LD172319 Belgrade TANJUG in English 1719 GMT 17 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 17 (TANJUG) -- Beijing believes that the Soviet Union "cannot subdue the Afghan guerrilla", but, at the same time, that "it does not want to abandon Afghanistan as a strategic base for penetration to the south."

Official sources in the Chinese capital consider that Moscow is attempting to impose a political solution. Reports published here Friday claim that such a political solution would actually constitute legitimization of the pro-Soviet regime of Babrak Karmal. In this way, the Soviet Union would achieve what it has not succeeded in achieving on the military level, assesses Beijing.

The Soviet Union will not withdraw from Afghanistan until it is dealt heavy blows by the united struggle of the Afghan people, China assesses. Beijing believes that pressure by world public opinion could influence the Soviet Union to pull out.

At the same time, China has launched a thesis that Afghanistan is a burden for the Soviet Union just as Vietnam was a burden for the United States. On the basis of this claim, it may be concluded that the Soviet Union will be compelled to pull out of Afghanistan sooner or later. Beijing is very interested how and when this will be done.

China also expects the Soviet Union to show greater understanding in respect to the resolving of the Kampuchean crisis. A withdrawal from Afghanistan and settlement of the Kampuchean problem would create much better conditions for the Chinese-Soviet talks which are to resume early next year in Moscow.

HABIB CHATTI REPORTEDLY URGES USSR TO QUIT DRA

OW202018 Beijing XINHUA in English 1513 GMT 20 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 20 (XINHUA) -- Habib Chatti, secretary general of the Organization of Islamic Conference today demanded that the Soviet Union withdraw its troops from Afghanistan, according to reports received here.

Chatti said at a news conference in Jakarta that the people of Afghanistan should be allowed to determine their own destiny. He pledged that the Organization of Islamic Conference supports the struggle of the Afghan guerrillas.

Chatti arrived in Jakarta yesterday from Kuala Lumpur and is scheduled to leave for Pakistan tomorrow. After his arrival, he held talks with Indonesian President Suharto for an exchange of views on the Middle East, Afghanistan and other regions of the world.

[Text] Beijing, December 21 (XINHUA) -- Hu Yaobang, general secretary of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee, met and had a cordial conversation with Hyman G. Rickover, retired admiral of the United States, Mrs Rickover and their party.

Also present were Wang Bingnan, president of the Chinese People's Association for Friendship With Foreign Countries, Liu Huaqing, commander of the Navy of the Chinese People's Liberation Army, and Arthur W. Hummel, U.S. ambassador to China.

The American guests arrived here December 16 at the invitation of the Chinese People's Association for Friendship With Foreign Countries.

REACTION TO PRAVDA AFGHAN GUERRILLAS EDITORIAL

OW181622 Beijing XINHUA in English 1613 GMT 18 Dec 82

[Text] Washington, December 17 (XINHUA) -- The United States today warned the Soviet Union from making incursions into Pakistan in pursuit of Afghan guerrillas.

A decision to permit Soviet and Afghan Government troops to pursue Afghan guerrillas into Pakistan would cause world repercussions, Alan Romberg, the State Department spokesman, told reports. He said a PRAVDA editorial Thursday made references to the "lawful right" of the Soviet and Afghan Government troops to pursue guerrillas across the Pakistan border. The editorial gave no "evidence of a concrete change in Soviet policy," he said.

"We would view with grave concern anything that threatens Pakistan or risks enlarging the war," he said.

Romberg reaffirmed the U.S. position on the Afghan issue, saying that the United States is always alert for evidence of Soviet willingness to negotiate a settlement in Afghanistan which will lead to the withdrawal of their troops, a political settlement "allowing for the establishment of an independent and non-aligned Afghan Government chosen by the Afghan people themselves, and an honorable return of the refugees."

"We would welcome concrete Soviet moves in this direction," he said.

CHINA DAILY QUESTIONS RECENT CRITICISM FROM U.S.

HK210139 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 21 Dec 82 p 4

[Article by Zhao Jinglun: "Why Does the Media in U.S. Paint a Grim Picture of China?"]

[Text] China accounts for a quarter of mankind. America accounts for a quarter of the world's gross product. Their combined weight is overwhelming and can serve as the most positive single factor in world affairs. To lump the two countries together is not sheer fantasy. There is a solid basis for cooperation.

China and America have overriding common interests -- and not just in terms of strategy. What is more, in spite of the immense differences in culture, social system, and ideology, there is an unmistakable, if inexplicable, temperamental affinity between the Chinese and American people. Indeed we sometimes become infatuated with each other.

All this is no mystery, and is appreciated by most unbiased Americans. There would have been no need to belabour the point had it not been for the recent spate of media reports that paint a grim picture of the People's Republic. It is amazing how far China's critics are willing to go. HARPER'S says China "stinks." William Buckley calls the Chinese system "odious and repressive." Congressman John Leboutillier, on the authority of Alexander Solzhenitsyn, asserts the Chinese are worse than the Russians under Stalin, and THE NEW YORK TIMES's Fox Butterfield describes China as a sinister police state.

Facts

As the value schemata are fundamentally different, the debate will go on indefinitely. But certain basic facts are beyond controversy. Compared with the rest of the Third World, China has not done so badly.

A billion people are adequately fed and clothed in spite of the fact that China has only 7 percent of the world's arable land. Widespread famine resulting from flood or drought plus misrule is a thing of the past. There is a rudimentary but effective system of health care.

Life expectancy has nearly doubled. Those who sneer at China's backwardness should be reminded that China is one of a few countries that have orbited and recovered earth satellites and synthesized insulin.

It is true the state of affairs in China still leaves much to be desired. When the industrialized countries were making rapid progress during the late '50s and the '60s, China was its own worst enemy. I am, of course, referring to the ill-fated "Big Leap Forward" and the catastrophic "Cultural Revolution," and power has corrupted not a few.

But why this flood of criticism at a time when the present leadership is doing everything to correct past mistakes? What are China's critics up to? Are they calling for a U.S. (Western) crusade against China as well as the Soviet Union? Have they lost all sense of reality?

Source

It would be interesting to try to locate the source of this curious phenomenon.

A theory of conspiracy has been offered to explain this outpouring of venom. It is well-known that the CIA enlists the services of certain journalists and has a clandestine book-publishing operation. The Taiwan lobby is doing its best to poison the atmosphere. But the American system seems to operate too openly for conspiracies of such magnitude. Picking on China simply has become fashionable.

But the real culprit is ideology -- anticommunism of a particularly intolerant kind... (but) we all live on a shrinking planet and share many common problems. We would do well to set it aside and get down to more urgent business.

RENMIN RIBAO CONSIDERS 1984 U.S. ELECTION

["International Jottings" by Zheng Yuan [6774 0954]: "No One Knows How It Will Turn Out"]

[Text] Who will be entering the White House in 1984? It seems too early now to be making predictions. However, a planning group in the White House is already anxious and fearful; it recently used a computer to run a simulated election campaign to see how it would turn out. The result showed Reagan losing.

This caused quite a stir. The White House assistant press secretary stated: "Neither the President nor I believe this estimate." He also conveyed a White House order: No more simulated elections of this kind will be allowed in the future.

It is very common in America to use computer forecasting, from football games on the small scale to the economic situation on the large. Sometimes these forecasts are relatively correct, and sometimes they are rather wide of the mark; there is no need to take offense at that. However, to forecast the presidential election 2 years hence is no laughing matter. The White House originally intended to make use of this to create a little public opinion and improve the prestige of the incumbent President and never thought it would end up outsmarting itself. Forecasting that President Reagan would be unable to serve a further term might have an inestimable effect on the American electorate. Thus, the White House hurried to come out with a ban on forecasting and also announced that Reagan was "confident" in victory. Actually, the computer forecast of the White House planning group was of course a bit impatient, but Reagan's announcement of confidence in victory was really a bit too early, too. It is impossible to predict how the U.S. economic situation will develop in the next 2 years, and so it is impossible to forecast whether Reagan can serve another term. It is safer to say that no one knows how it will turn out.

JOURNAL ON U.S. DOMESTIC, EXTERNAL BROADCASTING

HK151240 Beijing SHIJIE ZHISHI in Chinese No 21 1 Nov 82 pp 24-25

[Article by Shi Feng [2514 7364]: "A Random Talk on American Broadcasting"]

[Text] The United States has the most developed television and broadcasting industry in the world. In 1920 its first broadcasting company had only a 50-kilowatt transmitter for broadcasting news and mercantile advertising programs. By the end of the 1970's, the country had more than 810 broadcasting companies, over 8,400 radio broadcasting stations and over 1,400 television broadcasting stations, with a total transmitting power of 86,000 kilowatts. The United States leads the world in terms of the number of television and radio broadcasting stations and receivers. There are many types of broadcasting stations in the United States, most of them commercial. Only a few are noncommercial (that is, educational) stations. There are also some stations which specialize in news, music or religious programs. Most of these stations use medium wave amplitude modulation in their broadcasts (Note 1), although some of them use ultrashortwave frequency modulation (Note 2). (Note 1: AM broadcasting can be used in long, medium and shortwave broadcasts. Its advantage is that it occupies a fairly narrow bandwidth and can accomodate a fairly large number of broadcasting stations on quite a narrow medium or short wave frequency band. The signals can be picked up by ordinary receivers and thus AM is widely used.) (Note 2: FM broadcasting occupies a wider bandwidth and usually functions within the ultrashortwave frequency band. Its advantage is that it produces better sound quality and is less susceptible to interference.) The overwhelming majority of the broadcasts are in English, but there are also some foreign language programs for immigrants.

Three Major Domestic Broadcasting Companies

There is no "government-run" national broadcasting network in the United States. Nearly all the domestic broadcasting stations are commercial ones whose main source of revenue comes from advertising. They are controlled, either directly or indirectly, by broadcasting companies of major monopolistic capital groups like Morgan, Rockefeller and Mellon.

Among them, the three largest national broadcasting networks are ABC, CBS, and NBC, which deal with both television and radio broadcasting. Politically, however, they are controlled by the government's "Federal Communications Commission." Licenses for radio and television stations have to be approved by this commission.

At the top of the echelon of the three major American broadcasting companies is a board of directors. The chairman of the board is the biggest shareholder or founder of the company. Administratively, the top person is the general manager. There are quite a number of assistant managers, each responsible for a special department. Among the various business departments, the news department, which supplies news, commentary and public affairs programs to radio and television networks, is the largest and usually takes orders directly from the general manager.

Aside from running a great number of subordinate stations, the three major companies also have interests in more than 200 television stations and in numerous subsidiary radio stations and have resident correspondents all over the country and the world. Competition is very keen between the companies. Take ABC for example. It used to be the youngest and smallest of the three major companies. Through competition in the last decade or so, it has grown substantially and has become the biggest and strongest company with the greatest number of viewers and listeners. Today, this company has more than 250 television stations and over 1,700 radio stations subordinate to it. It has four broadcasting networks: a contemporary network with 421 stations which specialize in contemporary music and songs for youths; an adult listeners' network with 496 stations which specialize in classical music and songs; an FM network with 193 stations which specialize in music programs; and an archive network with 592 stations which specialize in news, archive and information programs.

Sophisticated electronic techniques are widely used by the three major companies in their news coverage and editing to achieve higher efficiency. Each company transmits about 130 newscasts a day and each network broadcasts at least 60 minutes of news programs (each lasting for about 5 minutes) a day.

Most of the major American broadcasting networks are on the air from early morning until late at night, with broadcast hours ranging from 18 to 24 hours. Broadcast programs all strive for novelty and originality. Stereotyped material is fatal and could force a network out of business. Broadcast programs fall roughly into three main categories: news, entertainment and service. News programs include news, commentaries, press summaries, discussions and talks on political issues, forums and reports on international events.

Entertainment programs include music, songs, jokes, small humor, drama series and western adventures, as well as programs depicting sex and crime. With the development of the television industry, recorded reports and radio dramas, which used to be very popular, seem to be giving way to television. At present, most of the AM broadcasting stations specialize in music programs. FM is more suitable for classical music. FM broadcasts have gone stereo in recent years and have become very popular.

The service programs of American broadcasting stations are many and varied. Commercials are service programs. They are also the source of revenue of commercial stations. For this reason, the broadcast programs are heavily interpolated with commercials of every description. In addition, there are also listeners' mailbags, weather forecasts, local traffic reports and other programs which are aimed at serving the listeners.

A local radio station in the United States thus stipulates in its work regulations: "Remember that your listeners are tuning in while otherwise engaged in their kitchens, bedrooms, bathrooms and cars. Bear this special point in mind." I once visited a radio station in Washington. It was during the morning rush hour and traffic congestion was reported somewhere near the station. A reporter was immediately dispatched to fly a helicopter and report on the traffic condition to the station so that the drivers could be informed not to take this road and waste their time.

Three Major External Broadcasting Stations

With a view to serving the global strategy of American foreign policy, more than 10 external broadcasting stations have been set up in the United States. They belong to four systems: government, army, "civilian" and church. Among them, the major ones are "Voice of America," "Radio Free Europe" and "Radio Liberty."

The "Voice of America" (VOA for short), established in February 1942, is the only radio station run by the U.S. Federal Government. It only carries external broadcasts. For the past 40 years, it has been loyally serving U.S. foreign policy. During the cold war, its chief task was to "fight communism." It preached that aggression was justified, vilified the national liberation struggles in some countries and regions and publicized the American way of life. During World War II, it belonged to the U.S. Wartime Information Bureau. In August 1953, the U.S. Information Service was set up for the purpose of conducting a global "psychological warfare" and VOA came under its leadership. Over the years, the U.S. Government has steadily increased funds for VOA. In the early post-war years, the annual outlay only amounted to about $8 million; now it has gone up to $110 million. During the Carter administration, VOA was put under the International Communication Agency, a merger of the USIS and the Education and Cultural Affairs Bureau. President Reagan proposed a reduction in administrative expenses shortly after he assumed office, but the outlay for VOA was not cut. Not long ago, President Reagan announced that he was going to propose a modernization of the U.S. international broadcasting system so that American broadcasts could be heard by more people throughout the world.

VOA has more than 2,100 employees (one-third of them are foreign nationals). Its director is appointed by the President himself and acts in unison with him. It has 109 transmitters (about two-thirds are overseas), with a total transmitting power of 21,840 kilowatts. It began broadcasting programs via satellite in 1977. At present it is broadcasting to the whole world in 41 languages, with total air time of 950 hours per week. Aside from direct broadcasts, it also supplies foreign radio stations with music programs, musical tapes and scripts. It is said that nearly 4,000 broadcasting stations in various parts of the world are relaying or repeating its programs.

Since the beginning of the 1970's, the contention between the Soviet Union and the United States has steadily intensified and America's position of strength has gradually weakened. Along with this change, VOA modified its propaganda tactics and methods and no longer barefacedly preaches "aggression is justified" as it did in the past. According to the "Regulations for VOA" passed by the U.S. Congress on 12 July 1976, VOA "must win the attention and respect of its listeners," its new broadcasts "must clearly and effectively expound American policies," and so on. Not long ago, the new VOA director John Hughes, said VOA will strengthen propaganda aimed at reflecting U.S. Government views. ICA boss Charles Wick said he intended to make VOA "acquire the velocity of an artillery shell" in order to counter Soviet propaganda.

Each language section of VOA is headed by a diplomat who is replaced every 3 years. The staff of the VOA policy room is directly appointed by the State Department. Various language sections must broadcast commentative programs approved by the policy room. All translations must be absolutely faithful to the original and no deletion or change is allowed. Script writers and engineers have to be screened by the Federal Bureau of Investigation before they can be hired by VOA. In terms of languages offered, stress is laid on nonallied countries. For example, its Asian broadcasts do not include Japanese and its European broadcasts are not beamed to countries like West Germany, France, Britain, Spain or Italy.

Before the shah of Iran was overthrown, broadcasts to Iran were suspended because relations between the two countries were harmonious. As soon as political power changed hands in Iran, VOA resumed its broadcasts to that country. Air time increased from 1/2 hour per day to the present 6 hours. After the Polish incident broke out, VOA increased its Polish broadcasts from 2-1/2 hours to 7 hours per day. After the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, VOA broadcasts to the Soviet Union increased both in terms of air time and in terms of language types.

"Radio Liberty" and "Radio Free Europe" were set up by the United States after World War II for the purpose of conducting propaganda toward the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe. They are products of the cold war. A characteristic of these two radio stations is that they both appear as "civilian" setups. Actually, in the early years, 85 percent of their funds came from the Central Intelligence Agency and only 15 percent from private donations. Since 1971, they have been getting appropriations from the federal budget. Both stations are under the Board for International Broadcasting in Washington. They have their broadcasting centers set up in Munich, West Germany. The principal responsible persons are Americans and most of their staff are immigrants who have worked in or are in some way associated with intelligence departments. In 1976 the two stations merged. At present they have 1,730 people working in Munich. Among this number, about 400 are researchers and auxiliary staff members of "Radio Free Europe," about 250 belong to "Radio Liberty" and the rest are technicians.

"Radio Liberty" broadcasts round the clock to the Soviet Union in Russian and 17 other nationality languages. According to 1978 statistics, total air time amounted to 455 hours per week. "Radio Free Europe" broadcasts to East European countries in six languages. Total air time amounted to 554 hours per week.

Both stations widely make use of news releases of Western, Soviet and East Europeans news agencies. They also produce programs specially catering to the interests of scholars and mid-ranking officials. Since the 1970's, the two stations have been making changes in their content and form of broadcast. The directors have been trying to convince their listeners that they are tuning in to a local station rather than to a foreign one.

BEIJING FILM RECEPTION MARKS USSR ANNIVERSARY

OW211251 Beijing XINHUA in English 1246 GMT 21 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 21 (XINHUA) -- The Chinese People's Association for Friendship With Foreign Countries and the Sino-Soviet Friendship Association gave a film reception here this afternoon marking the 60th anniversary of the founding of the Soviet Union. Soviet Ambassador to China Ilya Sergeyevich Shcherbakov and his wife and other diplomatic officials of the Soviet Embassy here were present. Also present were Wang Bingnan, president of the Chinese Amity Association, and Qian Qichen, vice-minister of foreign affairs. Wang Bingnan extended festival greetings to the Soviet people. Shcherbakov expressed thanks in his toast. A Chinese colored feature film "Tea House" was shown.

Vice Foreign Minister Qian Qishen attended the party.

Chairman of the Chinese People's Association for Friendship with Foreign Countries Wang Bingnan and Soviet Ambassador to China Shcherbakov, respectively, delivered toasts at the party. Wang Bingnan indicated that the Chinese People's Association for Friendship With Foreign Countries and the Sino-Soviet Friendship Association will, as always, persistently work hard for the development of the friendship between the Chinese people and the Soviet people.

Other diplomats in the Soviet Embassy and their wives were also invited to the party.

BEIJING CITES TIKHONOV STATEMENTS IN FINLAND

OW171033 Beijing in Russian to the USSR 1800 GMT 13 Dec 82

[Text] On 11 December, Tikhonov, chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers, completed his visit to Finland and left Helsinki for home.

Speaking at the dinner organized in his honor by the president of Finland, Tikhonov said that the Soviet Union does not demand unilateral disarmament from anybody and, it goes without saying, that nobody should demand this of the Soviet Union either.

It was stated, in the communique published at the completion of the visit, that talks were held between Tikhonov and President of Finland Koivisto on the international situation and bilateral relations between the Soviet Union and Finland. It was said in the communique that the two sides expressed deep concern over the aggravation in the world situation, the growing threat of nuclear war and the continuing accumulation of arms. It was noted in the communique that the Soviet Union supported proposals on proclaiming north and south a nuclear-free zone [as heard].

At the dinner organized in honor of Tikhonov, the president of Finland stated that Finland supported the calling of a disarmament conference in Europe to discuss questions of military security.

FEDORCHUK NAMED USSR INTERNAL AFFAIRS MINISTER

OW171922 Beijing XINHUA in English 1910 GMT 17 Dec 82

[Text] Moscow, December 17 (XINHUA) -- Chairman of the Committee of State Security (KGB) Vitaliy Fedorchuk was appointed minister of internal affairs, the TASS reported today. The report said Nikolay Shchelokov, former minister of internal affairs, was relieved of his post and will be assigned a new job. Viktor Chebrikov, who has served as vice-chairman of the KGB for 14 years, replaced Fedorchuk as chairman of the agency, it said.

[Text] Moscow, December 16 (XINHUA) -- Mikhail Kapitsa and Victor Kimplektov have been appointed deputy ministers of foreign affairs of the Soviet Union, the SOVIET NEWS AGENCY TASS reported today. Mikhail Kapitsa had been Soviet ambassador to Pakistan and held the posts as chairman of the Department of South-East Aisa, and the First Far Eastern Department at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. Viktor Kimplektov had served as head of the Department of the United States at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

WEINBERGER PROPOSES F-16 DEPLOYMENT IN JAPAN

OW171932 Beijing XINHUA in English 1614 GMT 17 Dec 82

[Text] Tokyo, December 16 (XINHUA) -- The United States Wednesday reiterated its proposal to deploy F-16 fighter-bombers in Misawa Base, northern Japan, to improve the military balance in the Far East.

In an interview with KYODO NEWS SERVICE in Washington on December 15, U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger said that the Soviet Backfire bombers deployed in the Far East recently "can only be countered by an adequate and effective early warning and air defense posture."

Misawa, he said, is the best choice for basing F-16's in view of its strategic location and its potential for base expansion to accommodate the new squadrons without reduction in other military activities. However, he added, the Misawa deployment is in no way a substitute for required Japanese air defense nor is it a substitute for any units already in South Korea.

JAPAN SOCIALIST PARTY HOLDS 47TH CONGRESS

Leadership Reshuffled

OW172010 Beijing XINHUA in English 1921 GMT 17 Dec 82

[Text] Tokyo, December 17 (XINHUA) -- The Japan Socialist Party (JSP) today concluded its 47th national congress after a leading body reshuffle and the passage of a batch of documents. The reshuffle involved all members of the party's top leadership except Chairman of the Central Executive Committee Ichio Asukata, who has retained his post.

Takeshi Hirabayashi, a representative of the Socialist Study Society, became general secretary to replace Masashi Ishibashi [as received]. Hirabayashi, 61, was general sercretary of JSP's Committee on Diet Policy and has been a Diet member for many years.

Ina press interview this afternoon, Asukata said that with this reshuffle, the party has completed the process of adopting a confrontational position against the Nakasone cabinet. He stressed the necessity to consolidate the party's unity in anticipation of the "decisive political battle in 1983" which will center around the unified local election and the upper house election.

A document of guidelines for the party's action adopted by the congress pointed out that the intensified arms race between the United States and the Soviet Union has aggravated their economic situation, which, in turn, has brought more difficulties to them in their pursuit of the "position" of strength policy.

The document stressed that the party will adhere to the neutral policy of non-armament and non-alliance and develop relations with socialist countries. It also demanded the abolition of the Japan-U.S. Security Treaty and the signing of a Japan-U.S. peace and friendship treaty.

As set forth in the document, the goal of the party's struggle in the next year will include prevention of tax increases and the administrative reforms with the Liberal Democratic Party as its prime mover, improvement of the current economic policy and campaigning against nuclear weapons and the arms race.

A resolution passed at the congress criticized the government for distortion of history as is shown by the toning down of the war crimes committed by Japanese militarists during World War II. It said that the criticism from China, Korea and other Asian countries is justified as they see the dangers of a revival of Japanese militarism. It said that the mistakes committed by Japan in the past must not be repeated.

Action Program Reported

OW190537 Beijing in Japanese to Japan 2130 GMT 18 Dec 82

[Text] The Japan Socialist Party [JSP] has confirmed at its national congress that it will continue to carry out activities for Japan-China friendship.

The 47th JSP National Congress was held in Tokyo for 3 days from 15 to 17 December and the action program for next year, adopted at the congress, states that the JSP will strive to deepen Japan-China Treaty of Peace and Friendship in accordance with the Japan-China joint statement and the Japan-China Treaty of Peace and Friendship. It also states that the JSP will send a delegation to China and, at the same time, invite a delegation from China to help deepen exchanges.

The JSP's action programs for next year also clarify its support for the independent, peaceful reunification of Korea, its demand for the withdrawal of U.S. forces from South Korea and its call for normalization of diplomatic relations between Japan and the DPRK.

DAILY: RELEASE SOUTH KOREA'S KIM TAE-CHUNG

HK210850 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 21 Dec 82 p 6

["Short Commentary:" "Kim Tae-chung Should Be Released Immediately"]

[Text] On 16 December, the South Korean authorities suddenly announced the transfer of patriotic and democratic personage Kim Tae-chung from prison in Chongju to Seoul National University Hospital. The authorities also added that if Kim Tae-chung himself or his family members were willing, he might go to the United States for medical treatment. This is a trick played by the Chon Tu-hwan clique in order to maintain its reactionary rule.

Kim Tae-chung has demanded democracy and hoped that the 50 million Korean compatriots could live and work in peace and contentment and be freed from the agony of separation. Should he be found guilty because of this? However, over the past 9 years, he has been arrested and put under house arrest by the South Korean reactionary authorities on 4 occasions. A host of charges such as "conspiracy to instigate civilian uprising," "opposing the government" and so forth were fabricated against him. The Chon Tu-hwan clique should fully restore the freedom of Kim Tae-chung. It is a futile effort to try to deceive world public opinion by allowing him to receive medical treatment outside the prison.

Circumstances forced the Chon Tu-hwan clique to make the above-mentioned decision. World public opinion has condemned the South Korean authorities for persecuting Kim Tae-chung. This has turned the South Korean authorities into defendants. This year, South Korea has encountered an increasingly serious economic depression and the rule of the Chon Tu-hwan clique is unstable. During the first half of this year, Chon Tu-hwan was compelled to change his "cabinet members" on five occasions. It is expected that he will have a very hard time next year.

Under such circumstances, the Chon Tu-hwan clique has tried to ease up the condemnation of the world public opinion by allowing Kim Tae-chung to receive medical treatment outside the prison in order to stabilize its reactionary rule.

However, peace-loving and justice-holding people throughout the world have demanded the Chon Tu-hwan clique not only immediately release Kim Tae-chung, but also end its fascist rule. The Chon Tu-hwan clique is playing tricks in order to maintain its reactionary rule. However, nobody will be taken in.

CHEN MUHUA MEETS WITH DPRK TRADE DELEGATION

Hosts Banquet

OW191554 Beijing XINHUA in English 1512 GMT 19 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 19 (XINHUA) -- Chen Muhua hosted a banquet here this evening in honor of the government trade delegation from the Democratic People's Republic of Korea led by Choe Chong-kun, minister of foreign trade.

In her speech, Chen, state councillor and minister of foreign economic relations and trade, said that during their visit to China, Minister Choe and his party will discuss and sign a goods exchange protocol for 1983 between China and Korea.

She said: "The people of China and Korea are comrades-in-arms sharing weal and woe. The two countries have done what they can to support and help each other in their socialist revolution and construction. The trade relations between our two countries are developing smoothly. This conforms to the fundamental interests of the people of China and Korea."

Minister Choe said the two sides will sign a goods exchange protocol in Beijing following the conclusion of a long-term trade agreement last October. He said that the coming negotiations between the two sides would be successful.

The Korean delegation arrived here earlier today.

QINGHAI UNIVERSITY DELEGATION VISITS DPRK

Agreement With DPRK School

OW172016 Beijing XINHUA in English 1631 GMT 17 Dec 82

[Text] Pyongyang, December 17 (XINHUA) -- Another pair of Chinese and Korean universities became sister universities today as a token of friendship between the two socialist countries.

Zhang Sijing, head of the delegation of China's Qinghai University, and Om Chang-muk, vice president of Kim Chaek Polytechnic University, signed here today an agreement under which the two universities will exchange lectures, seminars, teaching materials and books and cooperate in scientific research.

Beijing University and Kim Il-song University became sister universities in June, 1981. The four universities are among the best in their own countries.

During a meeting with Zhang Sijing here Thursday afternoon, Korean Vice Premier Chong Chun-ki said that almost every Korean department is making efforts to implement Kim Il-song's often-repeated instruction to strengthen Korean-Chinese friendship.

Delegation Meets Kim Chong-il

[Text] Comrade Chong Chun-ki, alternate members of the KWP Central Committee and vice premier of the DPRK State Administration Council, met on 16 December with the delegation of China's Qinghai University.

In the meeting, he said that President Kim Il-song and Secretary Kim Chong-il have been telling them to make efforts to strengthen friendly relations with China and that many sectors of Korea are making every effort possible to strengthen Korea-China friendship.

Comrade Chong Chun-ki also said that the Korean people are very happy about the high successes being registered in socialist construction in China. Noting that the 12th congress of the CPC will be a new milestone for the Chinese revolution, he said that the Korean people truly wish that the Chinese people will maintain the four fundamental principles, implement the line of the four modernizations and register greater success in the struggle to return Taiwan. Zong Kewen, PRC ambassador to the DPRK, attended the meeting.

On 17 December, the Qinghai University of China and Kim Chaek Industrial College of Korea signed agreement on cooperation in the fields of education and technology at the Pyongyang Hotel.

NODONG SINMUN HITS U.S.-S. KOREAN EXERCISE

OW171325 Beijing XINHUA in English 1108 GMT 17 Dec 82

[Text] Pyongyang, December 17 (XINHUA) -- NODONG SINMUN in a commentary here today said that the eighth annual U.S.-South Korea "Team Spirit 1983" military exercise is a military provocation against the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and against the entire Korean people.

According to reports quoting a spokesman for the United Nations command in Seoul, the U.S.-South Korea joint military exercise will be held from early February to mid-April next year in South Korea with some 118,000 South Korean and 79,000 U.S. troops taking part.

The U.S. participants will include not only the 40,000-men force stationed in South Korea but also troops from the Pacific command and the continental United States.

THAI GENERALS COMMENT ON KAMPUCHEA SITUATION

OW181824 Beijing XINHUA in English 1515 GMT 18 Dec 82

[Text] Bangkok, December 18 (XINHUA) -- The Thai border troops have a high morale and are capable of controlling the area bordering Kampuchea, said Lt Gen Phat Uraildet, commander of the First Army Region of Thailand, here yesterday.

The reinforced border troops have also prepared for helping the local people in the forthcoming late-rice harvest, he said.

Addressing a meeting of the Thai Teachers Occupational Association yesterday, Lt Gen Chawalit Yongchaiyut, assistant chief of staff of the Thai Army, said that the threat to Thailand's security comes from Indochina, especially Vietnam, according to a press report here today.

Commenting on the present political and economic situation in Vietnam, he stressed that in its unjust war of aggression against Kampuchea, Vietnam has been confronted with the strong Kampuchean resistance forces.

BANGKOK POST REPORTS THAI TROOPS ON ALERT

OW180848 Beijing XINHUA in English 0749 GMT 18 Dec 82

[Text] Bangkok, December 18 (XINHUA) -- Thai troops near the Thai-Kampuchean border have been put on the alert following the latest round of fighting inside Kampuchea, reported the BANGKOK POST today quoting Thai field military sources.

The sources said that as the fighting opposite the Thai villages of Non Chan, Nong Samet and Ban Sa-ng intensified, the Second Army division responsible for guarding the Prachin Buri border was put on the alert for any spillover.

According to the sources, the Vietnamese were reported to be moving reinforcements and artillery from Thmar Puok, some 20 kilometres from the Thai border north of Ta Phraya District, into the area near the border. The movement of troops from the Vietnamese second border defence regiment, who patrol the area near the Thai border opposite Aranyaprathet, has also been detected, the sources added.

The sources disclosed that Thai troops with the Second Army Region, in charge of the security along the Sisaket, Buriram, and Surin borders with Kampuchea, have also been placed on the alert.

Meanwhile, heavy fighting has reportedly continued into the seventh day on Highway 502 near the Phanom Mark Huen Mountain in Kampuchea, south of the Thai District of Aranyaprathet.

The Democratic Kampuchean (DK) guerrillas and the Vietnamese-Heng Samrin forces were engaged in rocket and mortar duels in the area only five kilometres from the Thai border. Both the DK and Vietnamese forces had been pouring reinforcements into the battle. Thai soldiers are now protecting farmers in the border area who have just finished harvesting 30 per cent of their paddy crops.

COOPERATION PROTOCOL WITH PHILIPPINES SIGNED

OW162151 Beijing XINHUA in English 1831 GMT 16 Dec 82

[Text] Manila, December 16 (XINHUA) -- China will undertake 12 Philippine projects and the Philippines will engage in 10 for China in a year of scientific and technological cooperation between the two countries during 1983.

This is contained in a protocol signed here today following the conclusion of the fifth session on scientific and technical cooperation between the governments.

Wei Yuming, vice-minister of the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade for China and Ramon Cardenas, deputy minister of economic planning and deputy-general of the National Economic Development Authority of the Philippines signed the protocol on behalf of their respective governments.

Under the protocol, Philippine teams will study breeding techniques and management of freshwater fish in China, the participation of blind and deaf mute people in social production and massotherapy (a medical treatment by massage), cotton growing, harvesting, processing and pest control, development of acupuncture anaesthesia, and the methods and techniques used in measuring volume of soil erosion, surface run-off, and water holding of small watershed areas.

The Philippine side will undertake such Chinese projects as tobacco preparation and flue-curing, earthquake activity, observation and research, control of citrus virus and prawn breeding technology.

At the fifth session on scientific and technical cooperation, the two sides reviewed with satisfaction the implementation of the scientific and technical cooperation between them for the year 1982.

During their stay here, the Chinese delegation to the meeting visited Bataan export processing zone, the international rice research institute and the Philippine heart center for Asia.

The visit of the delegation has further promoted friendship and unity between the armies and peoples of the two countries.

During their stay in Pakistan, the Chinese guests visited the Pakistan army headquarters and some military academies and units.

PAKISTAN TIMES HAILS ZIAUL HAQ'S U.S. VISIT

OW202349 Beijing XINHUA in English 1544 GMT 20 Dec 82

[Text] Islamabad, December 20 (XINHUA) -- The PAKISTAN TIMES today described President Ziaul Haq's recent tour of the United States and Canada as "successful beyond expectation".

The paper, in an editorial, said President Ziaul Haq had achieved his basic objective in the visit: projection of Pakistan's point of view in an important part of the world and establishment of closer ties with old friends.

"An immediate gain for Pakistan," it said, "has been the reassurance received from the U.S. on the 3.2 billion dollars aid package concluded last year."

The editorial said Afghanistan was a priority issue in the visit, and Pakistan was able to secure a re-endorsement of its principled stand on the issue. "Pakistan's care for the three million Afghan refugees has won new and increased appreciation," it added.

On the nuclear issue, the editorial said, President Ziaul Haq was able to remove doubts and misgivings planted in the Western mind, and reaffirmed the peaceful nature of Pakistan's nuclear research program.

It noted that President Ziaul Haq's bold advocacy of Palestinian rights had particular importance in the fact that "it was made in a land known for its blind partiality for the Zionist entity."

"President Ziaul Haq also delcared unambiguously that Pakistan would not be drawn into any military scheme drawn up for the Gulf area, nor would it lend itself to furtherance of the global strategy of any superpower," it added.

ZIAUL HAQ DISCUSSES AFGHAN PROBLEM SOLUTION

OW180950 Beijing XINHUA in English 0756 GMT 18 Dec 82

[Text] Ottawa, December 17 (XINHUA) -- Pakistani President Mohammad Ziaul Haq said here today that the Afghan problem must be solved on the principle that "the foreign intervention by one hundred thousand Russian troops must finish."

The visiting president said at a press conference that Pakistan has been trying to solve the Afghan problem on the principle that "the Soviet troops must withdraw, 2.8 million refugees in Pakistan must return to their home to live with honor and dignity, and the status of non-aligned Afghanistan, which has been disturbed by a superpower, must be restored to its original form."

"We wish to let the Afghan people select what type of government they want," said Zia.

He said the 50 million Afghans refused to accept a person who has come riding on the tanks. He refuses to negotiate directly with the Soviet-backed regime and said he is convinced the Soviet invasion will not be permanent.

He made clear his intention to continue to accept the refugees, adding that the Pakistani people are on guard against any retaliation from the other side of the border.

During his five-day visit to Canada aimed strengthening bilateral relations, Zia and Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau discussed bilateral and multilateral issues. [as received] According to a high-ranking Canadian official, Trudeau and Zia spent mot of their time discussing the situation in Afghanistan and the refugees in Pakistan.

During Zia's trip, the Canadian International Development Agency approved a contribution of 120,000 Canadian dollars (about 100,000 U.S. dollars) to help identify and promote industrial joint ventures with Pakistan.

PAKISTAN PAPER ON PRAVDA'S 'HOT PURSUIT' CLAIM

OW202347 Beijing XINHUA in English 1535 GMT 20 Dec 82

[Text] Islamabad, December 20 (XINHUA) -- The danger of a Russian attack on Pakistan has become "more ominous" as a recent PRAVDA commentary hinted the "right of hot pursuit" of Afghan guerrillas, Pakistan paper JANG writes, in an editorial today.

It says: "Numerous incidents of Afghan troops barging into Pakistan territory occurred in the past but Pakistan had ignored these. Now, however, it would be intolerable for Pakistan if Afghan soldiers start violating Pakistani borders constantly with Russia's backing and it would be forced to adopt every measure considered necessary to safeguard the sanctity of its borders."

"PRAVDA'S effort to justify an aggressive action by Russian and Afghan forces on the basis of international laws is a crude attempt," it points out.

"In relying on wrong logic," the editorial says, "PRAVDA forgot that it is precisely the Russian armed intervention that is violation of all international laws and the United Nations' Charter. The Russian forces not only disputed internal peace by entering a neighboring country but also committed massacres of hundreds of thousands of Afghan citizens. Due to their intervention, millions of Afghans were forced to flee to Pakistan and Iran."

The Pakistan paper JANG was refuting a commentary of Soviet newspaper, PRAVDA, on December 17 which claimed that the Soviet Union has the right to chase the Afghan mojahedin across the Afghan border into Pakistan.

USSR CHEMICAL ATTACK IN AFGHANISTAN REPORTED

OW192002 Beijing XINHUA in English 1850 GMT 19 Dec 82

[Text] Islamabad, December 9 (XINHUA) -- Soviet troops in Afghanistan used chemical and toxic weapons and killed many innocent civilians in a mopping-up operation launched in Lowgar Province from November 26 to December 3, according to AAP today.

A report from that province said that on December 2, Soviet helicopter gunships dropped chemical bombs in Badkhab Shana area, about 30 kilometers from the provincial headquarters, killing 84 people.

White-bluish gas, eye witnesses said, spread over the area and the affected persons died within several minutes.

The bodies of the dead were disintegrated and the effects of the chemical gas remained in the stricken area for many days, the witnesses added.

Meanwhile, the Afghan information and documentation center today quoted defected Afghan Lt General Siddiq as saying that the chief of Khad (Afghan intelligence agency) in Bamian Province once told him in a letter that poisonous gas had been used in that province as well. Siddiq sought refuge in Peshawar of Pakistan recently after defecting from the Karmal troops.

RENMIN RIBAO ON AFGHAN RECRUITMENT PROBLEMS

HK180731 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 18 Dec 82 p 6

["International Jottings" by Zheng Xue [2398 1331]: "At the End of Their Rope"]

[Text] According to reports, the Karmal regime recently ordered universities to delay student enrollment for the sake of expanding the army to 170,000 men; thus a large number of December high school graduates would have no choice but to await the draft. That the Karmal regime even has designs on secondary school students for the sake of expanding its army shows that it has reached a grave situation of being at the end of its rope for troop resources.

The Karmal regime has carried out a recruiting drive every year since the Soviet Union invaded Afghanistan, yet its army has grown smaller every year; it fell to only 30,000 or 40,000 men compared with an original 90,000. This year the Karmal regime has repeatedly amended the draft law and resorted to all means such as dispatching large numbers of military police to engage in street "press-ganging," relaxing the age limits for military service, extending the term of service, and raising military pay and awarding military ranks to entice young people to join the army, and so on. As a result, after enormous efforts, the army's manpower only rose to 45,000. Now, at the orders of its Soviet masters, this regime is again coming out with new tricks in a vain attempt to forcibly draft, in the form of a disguised "press-gang," a number of secondary school graduates into the army. However, even if the army is increased to 170,000 men by next March according to plan, Karmal cannot be at all certain that this despondent and unpopular puppet army will enable the Soviet aggressor troops to complete their dirty business.

REAGAN, PORTUGAL'S PREMIER DISCUSS DEFENSE ISSUES

OW171946 Beijing XINHUA in English 1902 GMT 17 Dec 82

[Text] Washington, December 16 (XINHUA) -- Portuguese Prime Minister Francisco Pinto Balsemao ended a two-day visit today with the Reagan administration strongly committed to helping modernize Portugal's armed forces. The two leaders said after a meeting yesterday that they found substantial agreement on defense cooperation between the two North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) allies.

Balsemao said, "Portugal is a reliable partner, which wants to fully assume our responsibilities in security terms and interests." At his meeting with Reagan, Balsemao asked for U.S. military and economic aid, U.S. investment in Portugal and more opportunities to increase Portuguese exports to the United States.

Mr Reagan said, "Portugal and the United States share a common responsibility for the defense of the West, and our security relationship is important to both countires as well as to the NATO alliance." He said both sides agreed that the negotiations on the Azores base rights, which expire in February, "should lead to an early and mutually satisfactory conclusion."

The Azores base, set up in line with a common defense treaty signed by Portugal and the United States in September 1951, has been used as a re-fueling station for U.S. aircraft on their way to Europe, the Middle East and Africa.

RENMIN RIBAO ON U.S.-EUROPEAN ECONOMIC CONFLICTS

HK200431 Beijing Renmin Ribao in Chinese 19 Dec 82 p 6

["Special Yearend Article" by Zhang Yunwen [1728 0336 2429]: "U.S.-European Economic Contradictions of the Past Year"]

[Text] Throughout 1982, trade wars between the United States and Europe have emerged wave after wave. The main reason for these wars is 3 consecutive years of world economic recession. As the two parties are closely related, they both seek a compromise amid the conflict.

One of the special features of U.S.-European relations in 1982 is the contradictions and conflict between the two parties in the economic field throughout the year and the unprecedentedly fierce trade war. At the very beginning of the year, Western press circles forecast that trade would become a "major issue" in 1982. Former U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig called 1982 a "year of economic crisis for the allies" and a "year of confrontation." The development of the situation this year has proved that this forecast is not groundless.

As soon as 1982 began, three contradictions emerged between the United States and Europe on the issues of steel, agricultural products and natural gas pipeline and these contradictions have gradually intensified. On 11 January, seven U.S. steel corporations jointly appealed to the court against the EEC countries for dumping iron and steel at a low price by means of providing large amounts of subsidies by the governments of these countries. Western Europe rejected this accusation. The United States decided to levy an excessive "punitive" anti-dumping tax on steel and iron imported from Western Europe. Western Europe called this "economic aggression" and threatened to retaliate.

After more than 10 months of haggling negotiation, the two parties were barely able to make a forced compromise 2 hours before the time that had been fixed by the U.S. Department of Commerce for the beginning of the levy of the additional heavy tax. At the same time, the two parties clashed on the issue of natural gas pipeline less than 1/2 month after the summit meeting of the seven Western countries in Versailles. This clash developed into a confrontation because President Reagan announced the expansion of the embargo. The U.S. press exclaimed that nearly every Western leader had been "involved in this daily aggravating conflict." It was not until a month ago that this "unprecedentedly" fierce dispute in the history of the allies began to ease a little. Western Europe gave a general promise to coordinate the policies on the trade between the West and the East in exchange for the United States' lifting of the embargo.

For a time, the dispute of the two parties over the trade of agricultural products was convered by their difference on steel trade and natural gas pipeline issue. At the beginning of the year, United States Trade Representative Brock declared that the United States would criticize the EEC for its policy of subsidizing the export of agricultural products at the GATT meeting scheduled to be held in November this year. Before the confrontation related to steel and the natural gas pipeline was solved, the contradiction had already become fierce. The United States accused the EEC of giving excessive subsidies to facilitate the export of agricultural products and thus squeezing the United States out of its traditional market. It called this a violation of the principle of "competition on an equal footing" in international trade and demanded that the EEC countries reduce these subsidies step by step. The EEC, on the other hand, declared that agricultural subsidies conform to the regulations of the GATT and pointed out that the United States itself subsidized its export of agricultural products by an annual amount of $11 billion and enjoyed a considerable surplus in its trade of agricultural products with the EEC countries. On this problem, the United States adopted a tougher policy than that of any previous U.S. administration. This dispute became one of the major topics at the recent GATT meeting of 88 countries. During the meeting, the EEC firmly rejected any suggestion of the revision of its policy of subsidizing export of agricultural products and stressed that the common agricultural policy was the cornerstone of the EEC. The United States threatened to dump $3 billion of milk products onto the international market. The meeting passed only a concluding statement of "ambiguous wording" and ended in discord.

As soon as the meeting ended, the United States launched a trade attack. The international press is of the opinion that the meeting failed to hinder the development of world-wide trade protectionism. On the contrary, it aggravated the agricultural products trade war between the United States and Western Europe.

The U.S.-European economic contradictions are of long standing, but in this year, they have developed to a fierce extent. The main reason for this is the 3 successive years of world economic recession. In all Western countries, quite a lot of production capacity lies idle, the output of production is dropping, the market contracting, some enterprises have closed down and the number of unemployed has risen sharply. The problem of unemployment has become one of the most serious economic and social issues since the Great Depression in 1929. According to the most recent statistics, the number of unemployed in the United States has already reached 12 million, setting a record for the past four decades. Reagan called this a "sustained tragedy." The number of unemployed in the EEC now totals 11 million, setting a record for the postwar period.

Economic recession leads to a fall in international trade. World trade reduced by $30 billion last year and may decrease by an additional $80 billion this year. This is the first time in 30 years thatthe total amount of trade in the capitalist world has dropped. The prosperity after the war in the Western countries, especially the major European industrialized countries, depends on export growth.

That is why, for Western Europe, "trade is vital." In the United States, 5 million jobs are provided by foreign trade, but the trade deficit of the United States will soon exceed the $42.3 billion record set in 1978. The economies of the Western countries are closely related. In order to break away from the economic recession, all the countries have adopted selfish methods to restrict imports, protect their markets at home, expand exports, invade into other countries' markets and desperately scramble for a larger share of the international market. As a result, protectionism prevails and the trade wars have become increasingly intense, causing the worsening world economy to sink into a vicious circle.

The policy of high interest rates adopted by the United States to cope with inflation is another major factor that has aggravated the economic contradictions between the United States and Europe. The interest rate in the United States once reached the high of 21.5 percent and has averaged around 16 percent this year. In order to prevent outflow of funds, the Western European countries are forced to raise their interest rates and have thus led to a contraction of investment and an end to the hope for economic recovery. The leaders of Western Europe called the U.S. high interest rate the chief factor that has caused a world economic slump and regarded it as "actually lethal." The Western European countries have expressed their strong indignation against this and time and again demanded that the United States lower its interest rates. The high interest rate has led to a rise in the value of the U.S. dollar. During the past 2 years, the exchange rates of the U.S. dollar to major European currencies have risen by 40 percent and set historical records. This has greatly aggravated the Western European countries' burdens of expenditures in importing energy and raw materials and further worsened their situation of international receipt and payment. The United States has rejected its European allies' request for interfering in the financial market and stabilizing the U.S. dollar. As the U.S. budget deficit has already reached as high as $150 billion, in spite of the drop in interest rate during the latter half of this year, Western Europe still worries that the interest rate may rise again and allow the U.S. dollar to remain strong. Thus, the tense economic relations between the two parties cannot basically ease.

Because of the continuous depression in the Western economy, the U.S. press is of the opinion that the U.S.-European economic contradictions are a "core issue" even more glaring than the issue of installing medium-range ballistic missiles in Europe and other issues, and that disputes in this respect will time and again break out in the future. Indeed, Europe militarily depends on the United States and the economic interests of the two parties are "too closely mixed." Therefore, French President Francois Mitterrand is of the opinion that the continuance of the economic wars will "make it difficult to maintain an alliance" and that "a minimum unity" must be sought. It seems that the two parties will seek compromise in their conflicts. This is well shown by the atmosphere of reconciliation of the American and European delegates who recently attended the talks on trade of agricultural products in Brussels. Neither party can sustain the continuous escalation of trade wars. However, it is obvious that the room for compromise is very limited.

BRITAIN'S POLITICAL, ECONOMIC SITUATION REVIEWED

OW211027 Beijing XINHUA in English 0755 GMT 21 Dec 82

["Review of Britain's Political and Economic Situation in 1982 -- By Correspondent Yang Yi" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] London, December 21 (XINHUA) -- Harsh economic problems, frequent industrial actions, increasing violence in North Ireland and the Malvinas (Falklands) issue have put the British Conservative Government to a serious test in the outgoing year of 1982.

Unemployment registered an all-time high of over 3 million at the start of this year, up 140 percent from the time when it came into office more than two years ago. In mid-January, 25,000 railway workers staged a 6-week long strike which caused a loss of over 2 hundred million sterling. [as received]

Against this background, opinion polls conducted early this year gave the government only a more than 20 percent approval, while the Social Democratic-Liberal Alliance and the leading opposition, the Labour Party, were given much more support.

In local government elections held at the turn of 1981, the Social Democratic-Liberal Alliance won 125 seats while the Conservatives lost 57 seats in the contests for 235 seats.

This situation came to a turn only after the April Malvinas conflict when the government's hard line seemed to have gratified the strong "national sentiments" aroused by the conflict.

In local by-elections last May, the Conservative Party won 18 more seats, creating a by-election record for a ruling party in post-war Britain. However, the factors affecting Britain's political situation still remain.

On the Malvinas issue itself, though Britain has taken back the islands at a high price, the issue is far from being resolved. Argentina's sovereignty claim over the Malvinas islands has won the support of Third World countries, particularly the Organization of American States (OAS) and the Non-aligned Movement. On the other hand, the British action on the disputed islands not only damaged its political and economic relations with the Third World countries but also weakened NATO's defence to the discontent of other allies.

At home, people of insight called on the government to show a sensible attitude and agree to accept the U.N. November resolution which urged Britain to resume negotiations with Argentina to seek a just and fair solution to this issue left over by colonialism.

An Economy of Stagflation

In the economic field, the British Government has made some adjustment in its financial policy in this year's budget and, therefore, eased the opposition from inside and outside the ruling party. The monetarist policy followed by Mrs Thatcher in the last three years has yielded some results. For instance, the inflation rate has dropped from the peak of 21.9 percent to the present 6.3 percent, the lowest in a decade, and the minimum lending rate has fallen from 16 percent in October 1981, to the present 10 percent. Money supply and public borrowing have been brought under control and productivity has shown some improvement. However, what has been achieved, though at a high cost, still can not stop the decline of Britain's economy and the continuous swelling of its dole queues.

The chief symptom of the "British disease" is "stagflation." It is estimated that this year the gross domestic production will increase by one percent and industrial production will increase 0.5 percent only. Except for oil industry, manufacturing output will remain at last year's level.

In fact, the October figures show the manufacturing industry was down to its lowest ebb in 15 yea s. Besides, British manufactured goods are not very competitive in both domestic and international markets and, as a result, the balance of payments in the trade of manufactured goods was in the red for the first time in more than a century. As imports grew faster than exports, the balance of international payments surplus this year was less than half of last year's. Meanwhile more and more enterprises are threatened with bankruptcy.

According to official forecasts, Britain's inflation rate next year is likely to come down to 4-5 percent and the interest rate may drop to single figures. However, there can hardly be any effective remedies for Britain's two "chronic maladies" -- unemployment and stagnation of production.

The deterioration of Britain's economy has also aggravated its contradictions with its allies. Not long ago, Britain, which had always been more unanimous with the U.S. on foreign policies, took concerted actions with other Western European countries on the issue of supplying equipment to the Soviet natural gas pipeline in defiance of the U.S. sanctions. Within the European Community, Britain also had clashes with other member countries on some problems of vital interests.

Forthcoming General Election Year

The forthcoming 1983 election year is expected to make a considerable impact on the domestic political and economic scene.

The Conservative Party, while vowing to stick to its monetarist policy, has in fact begun to make some adjustments to stimulate the sagging economy in an effort to win electoral support. Tax reductions and credit measures to increase investment by hundreds of millions of pounds are planned in next spring's budget. Free market economic theory will be pushed further by denationalising more state-owned enterprises in the hope of achieving better economic results, further curbs on trade union powers and delineation of constituency boundaries are also being considered. All this are designed to gain a better position for the Conservative Party in an election year.

The opposition Labour Party and the Social Democrat-Liberal Alliance have also been geared up for the election by attacking the Conservative policies. However, neither the Labour Party nor the Social Democratic-Liberal Group has produced any inspiring formula as to how to revitalise the economy.

As the Conservative Party's adjusted economic policies still need time to be put into effect, most observers here predict that next October would most possibly be chosen for the next election. But, some government officials regard June as the best time because they fear the increased Conservative popularity resulting from the Malvinas (Falklands) war with Argentina could disappear as time passes.

As to the results of the election, most political analysts choose to assume a cautious attitude till the economic situation becomes clearer.

WEST EUROPEAN POLITICAL CRISIS ANALYZED

OW180926 Beijing XINHUA in English 0702 GMT 18 Dec 82

["Year-ender: West European Politics Rocked by Economic Crisis" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, December 18 (XINHUA) -- The outgoing year has witnessed changes of governments in a series of West European countries highlighted by the fall of the West German Government under Helmut Schmidt in October. This is rare in West Europe's post-war history.

This political unrest can be traced back to the same root cause -- effects and impacts from a long-drawn-out economic crisis.

Since mid-1980, one West European nation after another has been hit by economic recession, now in its third year. To various degrees they all suffer from declining production, running inflation, rising unemployment and other "economic illness." Even Switzerland, known as the "haven of peace", is no exception. Grave economic woes and the resulting social problems have given rise to endless squabbles and sharpened conflicts in these countries between the ruling and opposition parties and even within the ruling parties themselves.

In West Germany, to chart its way out of a slumping economy, the Social Democrats called for large-scale borrowings from abroad and higher taxes while the Free Democrats favoured a cutback in social welfare funds and encouragement of private investment. As both sides held to their propositions, the two parties broke up their 13-year coalition.

In Italy, differences within the government over economic policy found expression in an endless quarrel between former Christian Democratic Minister of the Treasury Beniamino Andreatta and former Socialist Minister of Finance Rino Formica. This led to the collapse last month of Italy's 42nd post-war and three-month-old cabinet.

In the Netherlands, the tripartite coalition government formed in September last year was twice pushed to the brink of collapse because of sharp differences over budget and economic policy. It had to call general elections in September this year, two years and eight months ahead of schedule.

The Danish minority government formed late last year resigned last September after failing to reach agreement with the opposition parties over the country's austerity economic package plan.

Economic difficulties are also a key issue in the wranglings among political parties in West European countries this year. In the Spanish general elections last October, the Socialist Workers' Party made use of the country's economic problem to defeat the ruling party, the Democratic Center Union, and rose to power for the first time in the 43 years after the Spanish civil war.

In Sweden, as the central-liberal coalition government failed to extricate the country from recession, many disappointed Swedes switched their allegiance to the Social Democratic Party. As a result, the Social Democrats, defeated at polls six years ago, swept back to power in the elections last September.

Haunted by economic crisis, the European Economic Community (EEC) faltered on the road of "integration" in the passing year. Protectionism is gaining ground within the community, and member states are squabbling over issues like the community budget, agricultural and fishery policies. Meanwhile, rifts over trade with the United States and Japan have surfaced one after another. The economic troubles have also slowed down the pace to enhance the NATO's military potentials, as the alliance's most member states were unable to meet the set target on military spendings. The governments in Western Europe have tried every possible means to find a way out of economic straits. However, no panacea is yet at hand.

The Mitterrand government of France, in power since May 1981, resorted to an inflationary policy, including state intervention, increasing public spendings and stimulating consumption. But the policy has also led to two devaluations of the franc currency, a decline in foreign exchange reserves, mounting foreign trade deficits and higher unemployment rate. On the contrary, the British Conservative Government has been following an austerity policy of public spending cuts and tighter control on monetary supplies. It is true that inflation has been brought under control, but the number of jobless people has jumped to more than three million, topping all other West European countries. The former West German Government, which took a middle road, also failed to pull the economy out of the recession.

Looking into the next year, there is no reason to be optimistic. A recent EEC commission report predicted a fourth year of recession for the West European countries. Given the gloomy picture in economy, there can hardly be plain sailing in the political situation of Western Europe in the coming year.

ITALY ORDERS SOVIET MILITARY ATTACHE TO LEAVE

OW182000 Beijing XINHUA in English 1931 GMT 18 Dec 82

[Text] Rome, December 18 (XINHUA) -- The Italian Foreign Ministry has expelled Deputy Military Attache of the Soviet Embassy Ivan Mikhailovich Scelch because he had conducted "activities unmatched to the status of a diplomat," the press here reported today. According to the reports, the Foreign Ministry told the Soviet Embassy December 16 that Lieutenant Colonel Scelch was "persona non grata" and should leave Italy within 48 hours.

Soviet Ambassador Nikolay M. Lunkov told reporters yesterday that Scelch had left Rome because "his official duties here have been accomplished."

Scelch came to Italy to work for the Soviet Embassy in April 1979.

SPANISH COMMUNIST PARTY CONFERENCE ENDS

OW201127 Beijing XINHUA in English 1103 GMT 20 Dec 82

[Text] Madrid, December 19 (XINHUA) -- General Secretary of the Spanish Communist Party Gerardo Iglesias reaffirmed at a party conference closing here today that the Spanish Communist Party would implement the Euro-communist strategy and proposed that a party congress be called by the end of next year.

Iglesias made the remarks in a report which was adopted Saturday at the national conference of the Spanish Communist Party beginning December 17 and attended by 500 party leaders at various levels.

He called for a change in the party leadership in order to end the party crisis as soon as possible. The Spanish Communist Party, he said, would cooperate with the ruling Socialist Party, but not without conditions. It would "criticize those measures that will be unfavorable to the interest of the working people," he said.

The conference was also focused on municipal elections set for March next year and measures to vitalize the party.

The conference adopted five proposals concerning amendment of the voter's registration law, commemorative activities next year, for the centenary of the death of Karl Marx, and some of the government's economic measures.

DENMARK REJECTS SWEDISH NUCLEAR-FREE ZONE PLAN

OW181836 Beijing XINHUA in English 1512 GMT 18 Dec 82

[Text] Stockholm, December 17 (XINHUA) -- Denmark has rejected a Swedish proposal for a nuclear-free zone running through central Europe, said Danish Foreign Minister Uffe Ellemann-Jensen in Copenhagen today. Uffe Ellemann-Jensen made the announcement at a press conference after his talks with Swedish Foreign Minister Lennart Bodstrom, who was on a one-day visit to Denmark, according to Swedish news agency reports.

The Danish foreign minister said that the Swedish proposal is not a good one because it specifies one particular zone and is not a global solution to the issue of nuclear disarmament. "We fear that the setting up of such a limited zone would render the disarmament talks currently going on in Geneva between the United States and the Soviet Union even more difficult," the Danish foreign minister said.

Concerning the talks on a nuclear-free zone in north Europe between the foreign ministers of Sweden and Denmark, Uffe Ellemann-Jensen said north Europe does not claim any nuclear weapons in the first place and Denmark is not inclined to change the situation. Therefore, he said, no agreement is needed to confirm the status quo.

U.S. OFFERS $200 MILLION AID TO TURKEY

OW201339 Beijing XINHUA in English 1258 GMT 20 Dec 82

[Text] Ankara, December 20 (XINHUA) -- The United States has extended 200 million dollars to Turkey in the form of grant-in-aid, according to an agreement signed between the two countries last Friday. Official sources here said that the grant, part of the U.S. economic aid for 1983, will be used to improve Turkey's balance of payments. U.S. economic and military aid to Turkey has increased dramatically in the last few years. It was 753 dollars [as received] in 1982 as against 450 million in 1980 and 547 million in 1981.

ROMANIA'S CEAUSESCU ADDRESSES CP CONGRESS

OW180343 Beijing XINHUA in English 0109 GMT 18 Dec 82

[Text] Bucharest, December 17 (XINHUA) -- President and Communist Party leader Nicolae Ceausescu delivered a long speech at the Romanian Communist Party National Conference opened here today. The conference will appraise the present situation and prospects for development of socialist Romania, and work out programmatic development policies, he said.

In the period since its liberation in 1945, industrial production has increased about 49 times, agricultural production 2.5 times, and national income 14 times, he said. In the 1970-1980 period industry grew about two times and agriculture some 50 percent. In 1982 fixed assets totaled more than 2,000 thousand million lei, of which over 80 percent were made in the past 15 years, he said. The great achievements Romania has made fully shows the correctness of its policies, he said.

Ceausescu said Romania plans to pay off half of its foreign debts by the end of 1985 and the whole of them in the first two or three years of the 1986-1990 five-year plan.

Talking on the implementation of the current five year plan (1980-1985), he said in the first two years gross industrial product grew by some 7 percent and commodity output by some 5 percent. In agriculture, he continued, farm output in 1982 was 7 percent more than in 1980 and recorded for the first time a per capita 1,000 kg of cereal production. But he pointed out that some industrial departments have leaned a bit too much on imports and have not tackled difficulties in the spirit of self-reliance, and there has been disproportionateness among the various branches of national economy.

Meanwhile, international economic crises have gravely affected the Romanian economy, he said.

He said stress should be put on solving problems in the spirit of self-reliance even at the cost of speed in development. In the report Ceausescu also stressed the importance of raising the socialist consciousness of the masses and strengthening of theoretical and educational work.

Talking about the international situation, Ceausescu said in view of the prevailing gravity of the situation, people must further enhance international cooperation, relax world tensions by solving disputes through negotiations, stem arms race and set to work for disarmament, primarily nuclear disarmament. He called on NATO and Warsaw Pact member states to withdraw their forces and dismantle their military bases in other countries. The two military blocs should solemnly commit themselves not to deploy any kind of nuclear weapons on the soil of other countries, nor to use such weapons against countries that possess no such weapons.

Romania wished, he said, all countries in the two blocs, and the Soviet Union and the United States in particular, should understand their responsibility for the arrest of arms race and the preservation of world peace. Ceausescu stressed that hegemonism and power politics which engender interference in the internal affairs of small and medium-sized countries in various forms should be brought to an end.

Anyone or any nation, no matter how powerful he is, cannot claim the right to issue orders, instructing another nation what to do and what not to do.

He said power politics and the policy of domineering must be eliminated and the right of the peoples to choose their own road of economic and social development be absolutely respected.

Ceausescu Report Approved

[Text] Bucharest, December 18 (XINHUA) -- A two-day national conference of the Romanian Communist Party [RCP] ended here this afternoon after unanimously endorsing General Secretary Nicolae Ceausescu's report. Also approved at the conference were a number of resolutions and documents including the program for self-supply and self-administration and the resolution of the national conference.

CP Conference Concludes

OW190748 Beijing XINHUA in English 0702 GMT 19 Dec 82

[Text] Bucharest, December 18 (XINHUA) — The national conference of the Romanian Communist Party closed here today with emphasis on the development of energy, raw material production and agriculture.

The closing session unanimously adopted the report delivered by General Secretary Nicolae Ceausescu at this session and his report made at the plenary session in June this year on the work of socialist construction, theoretical and ideological problems and political education. The session also adopted the program on energy production in the 1981-85 five-year plan period and development of the country's energy base until 1990, as well as six other programs. The session elected nine new members to the party Central Committee, including former Premier Manea Manescu, and 25 new alternate members.

Ceausescu emphasized increased production in his closing speech. He said, "We have already eliminated exploitation and oppression. However, what we should build is a socialism of prosperity, not of poverty."

Stressing the importance of developing agriculture, he said, "that a certain number of peasants may become too rich is nothing to be worried." He added that anyone can make money and get rich "only if he achieves this through his own labor." Ceausescu called for a reform of the present system of agricultural cooperatives to lift the restrictions on the number of livestock kept by the peasants.

On the achievements of industrial production, Ceausescu said, "Without such a powerful industry, we couldn't have coped with the difficulties in the world economy." He also stressed the importance of stimulating production so that the laboring people and all citizens will be able to increase their income as much as possible.

"We can declare with confidence that the Romanian Socialist Republic has demonstrated her own strength and vitality. She has the ability to surmount all hardships and difficulties to advance towards her strategic aims," he said in conclusion.

POLAND'S PLANS TO SUSPEND MARTIAL LAW NOTED

OW200310 Beijing XINHUA in English 0259 GMT 20 Dec 82

[Text] Warsaw, December 19 (XINHUA) -- The Council of State of the People's Republic of Poland decided today that martial law will be suspended. The decision was signed by Council President Henryk Jablonski.

Martial law was first enforced on December 13, 1981 and will have lasted 383 days when it is lifted by the end of the year.

State of Siege Slated To End

OW190744 Beijing XINHUA in English 0708 GMT 19 Dec 82

[Text] Warsaw, December 18 (XINHUA) — The Polish National Assembly (Sejm) met again today and adopted two bills on the suspension of the state of siege. The suspension date will be announced by the Council of State.

The first bill stipulates that the Council of State has the right to suspend or restore the state of siege on the recommendation of the Council of Ministers.

The second bill says that during the period of suspension of martial law, most of the present legal restrictions will be no longer valid. This means that people will no longer be jailed or interned without formal charges; travel restrictions within the country will be lifted; censorship and telephone bugging will no longer be routinely carried out; the decree on banning strikes and protest actions will be lifted, but these actions must abide by other laws concerning them; and restrictions on organizing gatherings, sports events and entertainment, as well as militarization in most factories and enterprises, will be lifted.

Before adopting the bills, the Sejm heard and discussed some restrictions that will continue to be valid after the suspension of martial law.

Workers Disband Factions

OW191546 Beijing XINHUA in English 1502 GMT 19 Dec 82

[Text] Warsaw, December 18 (XINHUA) -- All factional organizations within the ruling Polish United Workers' Party are to be disbanded in the interest of the party, its Politburo has decided.

The Politburo considered improper the continual existence of inner-party associations and clubs whose doings have weakened the party and benefited no party unity in its political, ideological and organizational work, said press reports here today.

In a decision on the strengthening of the party's unity and discipline made Friday, the politburo also instructed its central organs to do "a comprehensive study" of journals that have made differences of opinion and activities of certain ideological, scientific and educational institutions.

In the past few years of disturbances, there emerged in the party many associations and clubs backed by various factions of different political colors, press reports said.

ZHAO FLIES TO EGYPT, FIRST LEG OF 10-NATION TOUR

OW201357 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1136 GMT 20 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, 20 Dec (XINHUA) -- Zhao Ziyang, premier of the State Council, left Beijing by special plane this morning for Cairo, capital of Egypt, starting his official friendly visit to 10 African countries.

He was seen off at the airport by Hu Yaobang, general secretary of the CPC Central Committee; Wan Li, vice premier of the State Council; Ulanhu, vice chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress; Chen Muhua, state councillor and minister of foreign economic relations and trade; Hu Qili, member of the secretariat of the CPC Central Committee; and Ji Pengfei, state councillor.

After Egypt, Premier Zhao Ziyang will visit the nine other African countries of Algeria, Morocco, Guinea, Zaire, Congo, Zambia, Zimbabwe, Tanzania and Kenya.

Accompanying premier Zhao Ziyang are Gu Mu, state councillor; Wu Xueqian, minister of foreign affairs; Gong Dafei and Wen Yezhan, vice ministers of foreign affairs; Lu Xuejian, vice minister of foreign economic relations and trade; Wang Ziyi, advisor to the Ministry of Machine Building Industry; and Wang Letian, deputy director of a department under the General Staff headquarters of the PLA [zong can fu bu zhang 4920 0639 0479 6752 2022]

Premier Zhao Ziyang told reporters that the purpose of his visit is to further mutual understanding, friendship, unity and cooperation between China and the 10 African countries. He said: All African countries have merit and experience worth studying. This visit will provide me with an opportunity to learn from African countries and their people.

The weather in the capital is fine today. Premier Zhao Ziyang wore a thin wool overcoat. He shook hands warmly with, and said goodbye to, Hu Yaobang and other comrades, as well as envoys from the 10 African countries and Pakistan and other diplomatic officials at the ramp.

Also seeing the premier off at the airport were Du Xingyuan and Chen Chu, secretary general and deputy secretary general of the State Council; Yang Dezhong, deputy director of the general office of the CPC Central Committee; Yao Guang, vice minister of foreign affairs; Han Nianlong, advisor to the Ministry of foreign affairs; He Zhengwen, deputy chief of the General Staff of the PLA; Zheng Tuobin, vice minister of foreign economic relations and trade; and Shen Tu, director general of the Civil Aviation Administration of China.

Envoys and diplomatic officials from various countries, who saw the premier off at the airport were: Ambassador Harkett from Morocco; Ambassador Mwondela from Zambia; Ambassador Odanga from Kenya; Ambassador (Qisaisai) from Zimbabwe; (Mubeina), charge d'affaires ad interim from Tanzania; (Xialabi), charge d'affaires ad interim from Egypt; (Meiawubi), charge d'affaires ad interim from Algeria; (Duer), charge d'affaires ad interim from Guinea; (Jiyelei), charge d'affaires ad interim from the Congo; (Dongjia), military attache of the Embassy of the Republic of Zaire in China; and (Geli), charge d'affaires ad interim from Pakistan.

After the plane took off, Hu Yaobang and Wan Li met with the foreign envoys and diplomats present at the airport and extended greetings to them.

Arrives in Egypt

[Text] Cairo, December 20 (XINHUA) -- Zhao Ziyang, premier of the State Council of the People's Republic of China, arrived here this afternoon for an official and friendship visit to Egypt at the invitation of the Egyptian Government.

This is the first leg of his four-week Africa trip which will help enhance friendship and promote cooperation between China and African countries.

Statement at Cairo Airport

OW201618 Beijing XINHUA in English 1504 GMT 20 Dec 82

[Text] Cairo, December 20 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang said here today that "China enjoys friendly relations with Egypt and various other countries in Africa." "The purpose of my visit is to promote understanding and friendship, strengthen solidarity and cooperation and learn from the African people." Premier Zhao Ziyang made the statement this afternoon at Cairo airport upon his arrival on an official and friendly visit to Egypt.

The Chinese premier said that "I am very glad to have the opportunity to come to Egypt and Africa on a visit. This is my first visit to Egypt, a country with a long history and ancient civilization and also my first visit to this awakened continent full of vitality.

"As I set foot on this beautiful land, I wish to extend, on behalf of the Chinese Government and people, our high respects and warm greetings to the Egyptian Government and people."

He said, "I am looking forward to friendly talks with his excellency President Mubarak and leaders of other African countries, and to the exchange of views with them on bilateral relations as well as on international issues of common concern.

"We are also looking forward to seeing for ourselves the efforts made and achievements scored by the Egyptian people and the people of other African countries in their cause of safeguarding their national independence and building up their respective countries."

"I hope that my current visit will further promote the friendly relations and cooperation between China and Egypt and other African countries and be conducive to the maintenance of world peace," he said.

Further Report on Arrival

OW201856 Beijing XINHUA in English 1833 GMT 20 Dec 82

[Text] Cairo, December 20 (XINHUA) -- Premier Zhao Ziyang of the State Council of the People's Republic of China arrived here this afternoon on an official and friendship visit to Egypt at the invitation of the Egyptian Government.

Premier Zhao and his entourage were accorded a ceremonious welcome by President Husni Mubarak and ranking government officials.

The four-day visit to Egypt is the first leg of a ten-nation African tour, the first in 19 years made by a Chinese premier since the late Premier Zhou Enlai's ten-nation African tour in 1963-1964.

The special plane carrying Premier Zhao Ziyang and his entourage that included Councillor Gu Mu of the State Council and Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian touched down at Cairo airport at 16:30. As Chinese premier descended from the plane, he was warmly greeted by President Husni Mubarak at the ramp side.

With the premier and the president stepping on a red-carpet-covered platform, a welcoming ceremony befitting a head of state took place. 21 salvos were fired both the five-star Chinese national flag and the triple-color Egyptian flag fluttered in the winter breeze. The national anthems of the People's Republic of China and the Arab Republic of Egypt were played. Accompanied by President Mubarak, the premier previewed a guard of honor.

Present at the airport to welcome the Chinese premier were Egyptian Prime Minister Ahmad Fu'ad Muhyi ad-Din, deputy leader of the National Democratic Party Mustafa Khalil, speaker of the People's Assembly Soufi, Abu Talib, speaker of the Shura Council Subhi 'Abd al-Hakim, Deputy Premier for Production Ahmad 'izz ad-Din Hasan Hilal, Deputy Premier and Minister of Foreign Affairs Kamal Hasan 'Ali, Deputy Premier and Minister of Defense 'Abd al-Halim Abu Ghazalah, and deputy premier for services Mustafa Kamal Hilmi.

Also present at the airport were diplomatic envoys of various countries and representatives of Chinese residents in Egypt as well as Chinese Ambassador Ding Guoyu, who is also a member of the premier's entourage during his visit to Egypt.

After the welcoming ceremony at the airport, Premier Zhao Ziyang, in the company of President Mubarak, drove to the Al-Qubbah Palace in the city center.

Zhao, Mubarak Confer in Cairo

OW201928 Beijing XINHUA in English 1852 GMT 20 Dec 82

[Text] Cairo, December 20 (XINHUA) -- Egyptian President Husni Mubarak held private talks with Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang at the Al-Qubbah Palace here this evening soon after his arrival in Cairo.

According to sources concerned, during their warm and friendly talks, President Mubarak expressed warm welcome to Premier Zhao's visit and wished it successful.
The two leaders expressed their satisfaction with the development of the friendly relations between Egypt and China.

Accompanied by President Mubarak, Premier Zhao drove from the Cairo international airport to the Al-Qubbah Palace, the residence of the distinguished Chinese guest.

National flags of Egypt and China were flying on the lamp posts all along the route from the airport to the palace. Enthusiastic masses were standing on the roadside to greet the Chinese guests.

The Al-Qubbah Palace was brightly illuminated this evening. The green trees in the beautiful garden of the palace were decorated with multi-colored bulbs. A huge streamer with big Chinese characters "Welcome to the Distinguished Chinese Guests" was strung at the entrance of the palace.

Premier Zhao had a stopover at the Karachi international airport on his way to Cairo to begin his ten-nation Africa tour. He was greeted at the airport by Lt General S.M. Abbasi, governor of Sind Province, M.M. Usamani, commissioner of Karachi Division, and Niaz A. Naik, representative of the Pakistani Foreign Ministry. Chinese Ambassador to Pakistan Wang Chuanbin and Consul General in Karachi Wang Disan were also present.

More Talks With Mubarak

It was disclosed by authoritative sources that they discussed the problems of the Middle East, Africa, Afghanistan, Kampuchea and South-South cooperation as well as bilateral relations. The two sides held identical or similar views on many important international problems. They are satisfied with the development of Sino-Egyptian relations. The two sides both willing to strive for the further promotion of their friendship [as received]. The Sino-Egyptian friendship conforms with the common wishes of the two peoples and is beneficial to the maintenance of world peace.

CHINA DAILY Comment on Trip

["Opinion" column by CHINA DAILY commentator: "A Visit to Friends"]

[Text] Premier Zhao Ziyang is leaving for a round of visits to 10 African countries. They are Egypt, Algeria, Morocco, Guinea, Zaire, the Congo, Zambia, Zimbabwe, Tanzania and Kenya. He will also make a brief stop-over in Gabon.

Since the late Premier Zhou Enlai made his first extensive visit to Africa in 1963, great changes have taken place in the continent. There are now 50 independent countries instead of the 34 two decades ago, and the number of countries that have diplomatic relations with China has grown from a dozen to the present 45.

The entry into the international arena of more African and Third World countries is an event of primary importance of our times. They have become increasingly more formidable a challenge to imperialism, colonialism, hegemonism and expansionism, so much so that the superpowers can no longer manipulate the destinies of the world at will.

Socialist China belongs to the Third World. China and the African countries have undergone similar painful experiences in winning their national independence, and they are facing the same tasks of safeguarding state sovereignty and national honour, developing their national economy and improving the lot of their people. In view of this, their mutual assistance and support is of special significance.

Open Policy

China always formulates her foreign policy independently in line with the interests of her own people and those of defending world peace and promoting human progress. China will continue unswervingly her policy of opening to the outside world and expanding economic and technical exchange with foreign countries on the principle of equality and mutual benefit. Such exchange is aimed at enhancing China's capability of self-reliance, and China will see to it that it will in no way bring harm to her economy.

China is herself a developing country that shares a common fate and will forever be true friends with Third World countries. The Chinese people always loathe the idea and behavior of adulating the haves and abhorring the have-nots, of bowing to the strong and bullying the weak. China will never seek hegemony. As her socialist modernization advances, her friendly co-operation with Third World countries is bound to be closer and closer.

The 10 African countries the premier will visit have all made remarkable progress along their different roads of economic development. China has much to learn from each of them. China's economic and technical cooperation with these countries, as part of the "South-South cooperation," is not only mutually beneficial, but also of great strategic importance in establishing a new international economic order. Needless to say, China has her own experiences which other Third World countries may share to their benefit.

Common Task

These African countries and China have the common task of preserving the world peace against hegemonism. China firmly stands by the African people in their struggle against South Africa's apartheid and expansionism. China will always adhere to her principled position of supporting the struggle of the Arab people to recover their lost territory from Zionist Israel and the right of the Palestinian people to return to their homeland and establish their own state.

There are still discords and disputes among some African countries which sadden their true friends and gladden their real foe. It is hoped that the countries concerned will seek common ground while reserving minor differences, strengthen their solidarity and avoid outside interference so as to secure the stability of peace in Africa and concentrate their efforts on economic development.

Uganda Paper Hails Tour

OW160815 Beijing XINHUA in English 0713 GMT 16 Dec 82

[Text] Kampala, December 15 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang's African tour scheduled to start next week is timely and will further strengthen the relations between Africa and China, the government-owned newspaper UGANDA TIMES said in an editorial today.

The paper said: "China stands out as the most important partner in the development of Africa in particular and developing world in general." The reason, it added, is obvious: "The same colonial yoke we wore is also what China wore. We are today together with China in the Third World."

It also said, "The end of his visit will see a fast swing in relations for the better between Africa and China. It will also herald a new and strong base of cooperation between the two sides."

GUANGMING RIBAO SCORES U.S. ROLE IN MIDDLE EAST

HK201115 Beijing GUANGMING RIBAO in Chinese 12 Dec 82 p 4

[Newsletter from GUANGMING RIBAO staff reporter in Cairo Fang Jianxin [2455 1696 2450]: "What Role Does the U.S. Play in the Middle East?"]

[Text] A signed article published by Egypt's AL-AHRAM on 12 November said: Some people hold that the United States is playing three vital roles in the Middle East simultaneously: "Full partner, lawyer and spokesman of Israel and translator." The writer also holds that the United States is also Israel's "missionary" and the Arab people often have come to grief and have been fooled because they are not clear on this point.

Even in the recently published Carter memoir, this former president also admitted that in the course of the U.S.-Egyptian-Israeli talks, Egyptian Pressident as-Sadat showed too much faith in the American people.

Not long ago, when the Arab summit delegation visited America, the United States refused to receive the PLO representative and insisted on the unilateral recognition of Israel by various Arab countries -- including the PLO -- as a precondition for dialogue with the PLO. On the other hand, the United States only lightly "censured" Israel verbally for the outrageous building of settlements on the West Bank of the Jordan River and the Gaza Strip. Not only did it not exert any political and economic pressure on Israel, but also it warned the Arab delegation that failure to agree on the recognition of Israel might lead to annexation of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip during this year.

Chairman 'Arafat recently pointed out: In the agreement for PLO withdrawal from Beirut, the United States assumed the responsibility of guaranteeing the safety of the Palestinian refugee camps. However, the massacre at the Beirut refugee camps took place just a few days after the PLO withdrawal. Now people are worried whether or not sending U.S. special envoy Habib to Lebanon this time again will force the Lebanese Government to accede to the Israeli condition for withdrawing its troops and thereby cause further disaster to the Arab people.

Even now Israel still refuses to leave the last part of the territory it has occupied in Egypt. It also has delayed talks on the border dispute and insisted peremptorily on the return of the Egyptian Ambassador to Israel as a condition for the talks. Moreover, it is still building a hotel in the Taba [1044 1572] area. Vice Prime Minister ('Ali Kamal Hasan) of Egypt recently issued a solemn statement in Washington; In the talks for the complete Israeli withdrawal from Egyptian territory, the United States has undertaken the responsibility and should not be noncommital on the Taba question.

Facts have taught the Arab countries that the hegemonists' words are unreliable. They are always saying one thing and doing another. This AL-AHRAM article calls on all Arab countries to help one another and to speak with one voice to the U.S. authorities and Israel. They must firmly oppose the "brinkmanship policy" waged by the United States and Israel in the talks. Egyptian Minister of Defense Abu Ghazalah recently also appealed to Arab countries to strengthen their national defense capacity and to cooperate in military production. He holds that only by relying on the manpower and resources of the Arab people themselves can they have reliable backing for the peace talks.

UN AGAIN DEMANDS MIDDLE EAST SETTLEMENT

OW202351 Beijing XINHUA in English 1944 GMT 20 Dec 82

[Text] United Nations, December 20 (XINHUA) - - The U.N. General Assembly today renewed its demand for a just and comprehensive settlement of the Middle East question.

A resolution, adopted today with a vote of 113 in favor and 17 against with 15 abstentions, reaffirms the main principles for a just and comprehensive settlement of the Middle East problem, that are: The immediate, unconditional and total withdrawal of Israel from all the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem; the full exercise by the Palestinian people of its inalienable national rights including the right to return and the right to establish an independent sovereign state in Palestine and the participation on an equal footing of all the parties to the conflict, including the Palestine Liberation Organization, the representative of the Palestinian people.

It condemns Israel's aggression and practices against the Palestinian people in and outside the occupied Palestinian territories, particularly Palestinians in Lebanon, including the expropriation and annexation of territory, the establishment of settlements, and the imposition by Israel of its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Golan Heights, its annexationist policies and practices.

On December 16, the General Assembly adopted five other resolutions relating the situation in the Middle East.

UN Urges Israeli Withdrawal

OW202353 Beijing XINHUA in English 1952 GMT 20 Dec 82

[Text] United Nations, December 20 (XINHUA) -- The U.N. General Assembly today called for Israel's complete withdrawal from Palestine and other occupied Arab territories.

In a resolution adopted with a vote of 123 in favor and two (Israel and U.S.) against with 19 abstentions, the General Assembly demanded that Israel withdraw completely and unconditionally from all the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since June 1967, including Jerusalem, with all property and services intact. The resolution reaffirms the inalienable legitimate rights of the Palestinian people, including the right to self-determination and the right to establish an independent state in Palestine. It says Israeli annexation of the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories, including Jerusalem, is a violation of international law and of the relevant U.N. resolutions.

The document recommends that, following the Israeli withdrawal from the occupied Palestinian territories, those territories should be subjected to a short transitional period under the supervision of the United Nations. During the period the Palestinian people would exercise its right to self-determination. The assembly urged the Security Council to facilitate the process of Israeli withdrawal and to take early action to promote a just and comprehensive solution to the question of Palestine.

'ARAFAT CLAIMS PLO, JORDAN AGREE ON CONFEDERATION

OW181832 Beijing XINHUA in English 1547 GMT 18 Dec 82

[Text] Beirut, December 18 (XINHUA) -- The Palestine Liberation Organization and Jordan have agreed on a future confederation between an independent Palestinian state and Jordan, PLO leader Yasir 'Arafat said in an interview published today. In an interview with Beirut weekly AN-NAHAR ARAB AND INTERNATIONAL, 'Arafat said the two sides have reached agreement on the creation of a Palestinian state on the Israeli occupied West Bank. "We will be two united countries not one," he said. "Two people carrying two separate identities, but under a united state."

"Arafat also told the weekly the PLO will cooperate with the Lebanese Government to impel Israeli forces to withdraw from Lebanon.

On U.S. President Reagan's Middle East peace plan, 'Arafat said it was the first time a U.S. President refers to the West Bank and the Gaza Strip as Israeli-occupied and says they must be freed. He said it was also new for a U.S. President to say the future of Jerusalem could be negotiated. But 'Aragat noted that the Reagan plan failed torecognize the PLO, and made no mention of an independent Palestinian state or the right of the Palestinians to return to their homeland. 'Arafat called on Arab people not to "give up military option"while waging a political struggle. "Otherwise," he said, "there would be no peace for Arabs."

Speaking yesterday at the opening ceremony of the 11th Congress of the Radio Broadcasting Federation of Arab States held in Tunis, 'Arafat stressed that the Palestinian revolution will not stop moving forward. The Palestinian people will continue their struggle until Jerusalem is liberated, 'Arafat said.

RENMIN RIBAO ON 'DETERIORATED' ISRAELI ECONOMY

HK170930 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 17 Dec 82 p 6

[Article by Le Shan [2867 1472]: "The Israeli Economy Is Tied to the Chariot"]

[Text] Israel's economy has deteriorated as a result of its protracted aggression and expansion against other countries, especially its recent war of aggression against Lebanon.

According to an announcement by the Bank of Israel on 10 November, Israel's foreign debts in 1982 amounted to $18.6 billion. Israel has to pay $3 billion each year for debts which are due and for interest on existing debts. The Israelis now have become the people most heavily in debt. They owe foreign debts amounting to $5,000 per capita -- higher than the per capita national income.

Israel's inflation rate is the highest in the world. In early 1981 it was 131.5 percent, surpassing the inflation rates of Turkey and Argentina, which respectively were 118 percent and 112 percent. It rose to 132 percent soon afterward. Now, as a result of the war in Lebanon, it again has increased to 135 percent.

Due to the continued Western economic recession Israel's diamond exports, which account for 30 percent of its gross export commodity value, have greatly declined. Tourism has been the principal source of Israel's hard currency, earning $917 million in 1981. The number of tourists has decreased by 20 percent since the outbreak of the war in Lebanon and the massacre in Beirut. Israel's foreign trade deficit has continued to increase. Its trade deficits, excluding the purchase of military equipment, amounted to $2.8 billion, topping that in 1981 by $500 million. They would hit the $40 billion mark if the purchase of military equipment were included.

As a result of military aggression, Israel's annual military expenditure accounts for 31 percent of its budget. It is estimated that its direct and indirect military expenditures on the war in Lebanon amounts to anywhere between $2 billion and $3 billion and eventually total may total $4 billion.

The heavy debts, appalling inflation and increasing foreign trade deficits are economic difficulties caused by the Begin clique's policy of aggression and expansion. The Begin clique now relies wholly on the United States to sustain its rule. This year the United States has given Israel $2,585 billion in aid: $1.9 billion in military aid, half of it gratis; $2.1 billion of it economic aid given gratis [figures as published]. The United States will give aid amounting to $3.1 billion to Israel during the 1983-84 period.

Implelled by the militarization of the economy, the munitions industry has become the most important trade in Israel's economy. Its arms exports account for 40 percent of the total value of its commodity export. Israel is now the capitalist world's fifth largest munitions merchant, ranking only behind the United States, France, Britain and West Germany. Its higher education also has been brought into line with the war industry. Nearly 1/3 of the 60,000 students of its 7 institutes of higher learning are studying science and engineering courses related to the munitions industry.

CHINESE YOUTH DELEGATION LEAVES JORDAN FOR EGYPT

It was received by Ma'n Abu Nuwar, Jordanian minister of culture, youth, tourism and antiquities.

RENMIN RIBAO NOTES AFRICAN ECONOMIC UNITY SUMMIT

HK200912 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 20 Dec 82 p 6

["Short Commentary": "Contributing to 'South-South Cooperation'"]

[Text] The heads of state and plenipotentiaries of 11 east and south African countries held a 2-day meeting in Lusak, the capital of Zambia, and decided to intensify economic cooperation among member countries of the preferential trade region in east and south Africa to develop the establishment of an economic community in the region. The meeting was a great effort by countries of the region to promote national economy and consolidate political independence, and also contributed to the promotion of "South-South cooperation."

Many countries in east and south Africa long were oppressed and exploited by imperialism and colonialism. After winning independence they all are faced with the urgent task of promoting national economy. Hard-won political independence can hardly be consolidated without economic independence. Speaking precisely, President Kaunda of Zambia pointed out: "Our political independence is jeopardized for the time being because of our failure to take an independent stand in the economic field."

Certain developed countries -- particularly the superpowers -- are unwilling to change the old world economic order and to let the developing countries be extricated from their influence, especially at a time when Western countries continuously are economically depressed and find it difficult to make a breakthrough in global economic negotiations. To promote national economy and be independent economically, the developing countries should strengthen their own economic cooperation, depend on their own strength and become self-reliant through common efforts. Countries in east and south Africa are rich in natural resources with spacious land. Among them are common experiences worth learning from each other. This provides them with a good basis for cooperating with one another. Such mutual cooperation surely will help them surmount current economic difficulties and advance forward together.

President Kaunda described the meeting as a "good example of South-South cooperation," We believe that member countries of the preferential trade region in east and south Africa, with common design and determination and in line with the principle of mutual benefit, surely will make contribute greatly to "South-South cooperation."

FURTHER COVERAGE OF FIFTH SESSION OF FIFTH NPC

Xi Zhongxun's Speech

HK200941 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 16 Dec 82 pp 1, 3, 4

[Speech by Xi Zhongxun, vice chairman of NPC Standing Committee and concurrently chairman of the Legislative Commission, explaining four draft laws delivered on 6 December 1982 at the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC]

[Text] Fellow deputies:

The PRC Constitution adopted by the current NPC session has laid down a series of new important stipulations on the structure of the state in order to perfect the institutions of the state leadership and our political structure, develop socialist democracy and strengthen the socialist legal system. At the same time, some new conditions and new problems have also emerged in practice. Therefore, it is necessary to revise or rewrite a few laws governing the structure of the state in accordance with the constitution. The "Draft Organic Law of the NPC," which is to be submitted to the current session of the congress for deliberation, was drawn up by the General Office of the NPC Standing Committee and the Legislative Commission on the basis of the "Organic Law of the NPC" adopted in 1954. The "Draft Organic Law of the State Council" was rewritten by the State Council on the basis of the 1954 "Organic Law of the State Council." "The Organic Law of the Local People's Congresses and Governments" and "The Electoral Law for the NPC and the Local People's Congresses" were revised in 1979. This time, the Legislative Commission has worked out a draft resolution on the revision of the laws and has made some necessary revisions in accordance with the new constitution. At the same time, in order to maintain the stability of our laws, we have not revised those parts whose revision was optional. In October of this year, these draft laws were sent to various central departments, provinces, autonomous regions and municipalities directly under the central government for the soliciting of opinions and were further revised according to opinions from all parties concerned. They have been deliberated over by the NPC Standing Committee at its 25th session and it was then decided to submit them to this congress session for deliberation.

Now, I would like to explain the main contents of these four draft laws in order as follows:

I. "The Organic Law of the NPC (Draft)"

This "Draft Law of the NPC" has summed up the experience of work since the NPC was founded in our country and has included some major alternations and additions made to the NPC Organic Law of 1954 in accordance with the relevant provisions of the new constitition. This is mainly reflected in a series of concrete stipulations on the organization and working procedures on the NPC and its Standing Committee.

1. The Examination of Deputies' Qualifications

In the past, the qualifications of the NPC deputies were examined by the Credentials Committee after the opening of the first session of each congress. According to the relevant provisions of the constitution, this has been revised in the new draft law that stipulates that the qualifications of NPC deputies will henceforth be examined by a Credentials Committee set up by the NPC Standing Committee, which conducts the elections, and the list of deputies will be published before the convocation of the first session of each congress. In this way, the work of examining deputies' qualifications will be completed before the formal convocation of the congress. This will be more convenient.

2. Deputations

Because the number of NPC deputies was large, for many years in the past, it was mainly through deputations or deputy groups that the NPC deliberated various motions. Now the draft law affirms this effective measure and stipulates the position and role of deputations in the NPC. Before the convocation of formal NPC sessions, they will discuss the preparatory matters raised by the NPC Standing Committee. During the congress sessions, they will deliberate all motions submitted to the congress. Heads of deputations or representatives chosen by deputations may state their views on the motions deliberated at Presidium meetings or plenary meetings. They may consider and talk over the list of candidates for leading posts of state organs nominated by the Presidium. Deputations can also function as units to submit motions and bills of recall and inquiry to the congress.

3. The Presidium

For many years, the Presidium has played an important role and has done a series of work from submitting motions to deputations for deliberation to working out corresponding draft resolutions through revision and addition. According to this practical experience, the draft law stipulates that the Presidium will preside over all NPC sessions; decide the formal list of candidates for leading post of state organs that will be finally decided by the congress through election; decide the deliberation procedures for dealing with motions and bills of recall and inquiry submitted by deputations and deputies during congress sessions; and draw up draft resolutions that are to be deliberated and approved by plenary meetings. All these stipulations are necessary for guaranteeing the smooth and effective work of the congress.

4. Motion

Motions deliberated by the NPC should generally be submitted by the NPC Standing Committee, the State Council and other state organs after sufficient preparation. At the same time, the draft law stipulates that a deputation or a group of deputies with more than 30 people can also submit motions that will be subject to the decision of the Presidium on whether they should be included in the NPC sessions' agenda or will first be scrutinized by a special commission that will then put forth its opinion on whether the motions should be included into the congress agenda. At the same time, it also stipulates that members of the NPC Standing Committee can, through prescribed procedures, submit motions to the NPC Standing Committee. Here it specifies that deputations, deputies and members of the Standing Committee must follow prescribed procedures to submit their motions, because the bills and motions deliberated and approved by the NPC or its Standing Committee will all have a certain binding force and some of them will be established as laws. This practice is different from the previous one in which deputies submitted a large number of motions at each NPC session. These motions were mainly suggestions and critical opinions that covered all fields of work and many of them involved problems that did not fall within the scope of the functions and powers of the NPC. For this reason, the congress did not adopt substantial resolutions on these motions but only transferred them to the quarters concerned for study and settlement. Now, the draft law stipulates that henceforth when deputies raise suggestions and critical opinions on the work in all fields to the NPC or its Standing Committee, these will all be transferred to organs and organizations concerned for study and to be dealt with. These relevant bodies will be responsible for reporting back to the deputies. These suggestions and opinions will no longer take the form of motions of the NPC. This is a realistic stipulation that can enable deputies to make suggestions and express opinions that will be properly dealt with and answered and can also simplify the working procedures of the congress.

5. Election and Recall

The draft law stipulates that candidates for leading posts of state organs should be nominated by the Presidium. For many years, state leaders elected by the NPC were generally nominated by the Presidium after consideration and before that, the central leadership of the CPC first consulted with various democratic parties and made its proposals. In discussing the nomination of the Presidium, deputations could raise different opinions or suggest other candidates. After deliberation and consultation of deputations, the Presidium would decide on the formal list of candidates according to the majority's opinion. The draft law affirms this successful practice.

With regard to bills of recall, the draft law stipulates that three or more than three deputations and one-tenth or more deputies can render bills to recall members of the NPC Standing Committee, the president or vice president of the People's Republic, members of the State Council and of the Central Military Committee, the president of the Supreme People's Court and the procurator general of the Supreme People's Procuratorate and the bills should be submitted to the congress for deliberation through the Presidium. The draft law lays down a fairly strict procedure for dealing with the bills of recall, because these bills are related to some extremely serious matters and need to be treated meticulously.

6. Concerning the Motions To Address Inquiries

In accordance with the stipulation of the constitution that the deputies have the right to address questions to the State Council or the ministries and commissions under the State Council, the drafts have made the following provisions for the procedures through which the deputies propose motions to address questions and the questioned organs answer the questions: A deputation or 30 or more deputies can propose a motion to address questions. The Presidium decides whether the question should be given a written answer by the questioned organ, or be answered orally by the leaders of the questioned organ at the Presidium meeting, a meeting of the special commission concerned or the meeting of the deputation concerned. In addition, it is provided that the NPC can propose motions to address questions through the proper procedures. The provisions make it convenient for the deputies and members of the NPC Standing Committee to exercise their rights to address questions and facilitates the smooth addressing of the questions. In addition, they help the NPC and its Standing Committee promote their roles in supervising the state and help the questioned organs make responsible answers.

In the past year, in the process of considering the motions, the deputations or the deputies frequently put forward questions that they did not understand or comprehend to ask the organs concerned to explain. In the future, it will still be necessary to do the same thing. Thus, in addition to providing for the procedures through which the deputies make motions to address questions, the drafts have also provided that the deputies may ask questions and the questions are answered by the people sent by the organs concerned at the group meetings of the deputies or at the meetings of the deputations.

7. Concerning the Special Commissions

In accordance with the stipulations of the constitution concerning the establishment of the special commissions of the NPC, the drafts have correspondingly given the provisions for the common task of the special commissions. Principally, these are: to consider the motions and to address questions presented by the NPC or its Standing Committee; to draft the motions concerned that are presented to the NPC for consideration; to study and investigate the problems related to the special commissions and that are within the limits of the NPC's or its Standing Committee's functions and powers.

The drafts provide that in addition to exercising the common powers of office enjoyed by the special commissions, the nationalities committee can study and investigate the question of strengthening national unity and make suggestions. It can also consider and report to the Standing Committee of the NPC on the regulations regarding autonomy in the autonomous regions and the specific regulations presented by the autonomous regions to the NPC Standing Committee for approval.

In order to facilitate the upholding of the unity of the legal system and to avoid incoherence and contradictions between the laws, the drafts provide that the legal commission is responsible for the unified consideration of the draft laws presented to the NPC or its Standing Committee. The other special commissions can give their opinions and make suggestions to the legal commission on the draft laws that concern them.

Since the special commissions are the component parts of the NPC that exercise part of the powers of office of the NPC and its Standing Committee, the drafts thus provide that the members of the special commissions should be elected from the deputies to the NPC. In addition, since experts are needed in the work of the special commissions, the drafts provide that the NPC Standing Committee can appoint experts who are not deputies as part or full-time advisers. These advisers can attend the meetings of the special commissions as nonvoting delegates, express their opinions and make suggestions to the motions considered by the special commissions.

In addition, the drafts provide that the NPC Standing Committee can establish a working committee as work requires. The working committee is the administrative body of the NPC Standing Committee that works in accordance with the decisions of the NPC Standing Committee. However, it cannot exercise part of the powers of office of the organs of state power as the other special commissions can. Precisely for this reason, the posts of chairman, vice chairmen and members of the working committee are not limited to the deputies to the NPC.

II. Concerning the "Organic Law of the State Council (Draft)"

The "Organic Law of the State Council (Draft)" drawn up this time is based on the "Organic Law of the State Council" formulated in 1954 and on the practical experience of government work over many years and on the State Council's experience in reforming the organs in the past year that are summarized in accordance with the related stipulations of the constitution. In order to further perfect the organization of the State Council and the work systems and promote the work efficiency and quality and quantity of work of the state administrative organs, the drafts have made some important amendments and supplements to the old organic law. Principally, they have made the following points:

1. Concerning the organization, powers of office and leading system of the State Council: In order to avoid repeating the articles of the constitution, this aspect of the articles was not written down in the old organic law. This time, in order to make the Organic Law of the State Council more complete, provisions have been made for the organization of the State Council, the responsibility system of premiership practiced and the duties of the state councillors and the secretary general have been formulated in accordance with the relevant stipulations of the constitution and the actual needs.

In accordance with the constitution, the drafts provide that the auditor general is a member of the State Council. As for how the accounting organs concretely organize and carry out their work, since we do not have enough experience, the drafts have thus not made concrete provisions.

2. Concerning the system of meetings of the State Council: The old organic law provides that the State Council must hold a plenary session once a month. Resolutions and orders issued by the State Council must be passed by the plenary session of the State Council or the standing session of the State Council. As for the time and features of the meetings of the State Council, according to the practical experience of the past years, it is not good to lay down hard and fast rules. Thus, the drafts have made the following provisions in principle: "Important issues in the State Council's work must be discussed and decided by the standing session of the State Council or the plenary session of the State Council."

3. Concerning the installation of the ministries and commissions: The old organic law listed all the ministries and commissions of the State Council. In the past 20 or more years, there were many changes in the installation of the ministries and commissions and, in the future, with the gradual carrying out of the reforms in the state administrative management system and the economic management system, there will be more changes. In order to maintain the stability and solemnity of the laws, the drafts have not enumerated the names of the ministries and commissions, however, it is provided in principle that: "The installation, removal and combination of the ministries and commissions of the State Council should be proposed by the premier and decided by the NPC; when the NPC is not in session, the issues should be decided by the NPC Standing Committee."

4. Concerning the installation of the organs directly under the State Council: It was provided in the old organic law that the installation of the organs directly under the State Council should be approved by the NPC. This has been changed to the decisions being made by the State Council in the drafts. This is because the responsible persons of the organs directly under the State Council are not members of the State Council, their appointment and removal does not have to be approved by the NPC Standing Committee, thus, it is not necessary to report the installation of these organs to the NPC Standing Committee for approval.

5. Concerning the number of the leading persons: In order to consolidate the results of reform in the government organs, adhere to the principle of being small in number but highly trained, improve work efficiency and get rid of bureaucracy, it is provided in the drafts that: "There is 1 minister and 2 to 4 vice ministers in every ministry and 1 minister, 2 to 4 vice ministers and 5 to 10 members in every commission." "There are two to five leading persons in every organ directly under the State Council."

6. Concerning the power of office of the ministries and commissions: In order to maintain unity in the political orders, prevent the phenomenon of too many people issuing orders, expand the power of office of the ministries and commissions and reduce the work of the State Council, it is provided in the drafts that: "The ministries and commissions should report the principle, policies, plans and important administrative measures of their work to the State Council and ask for instructions. Decisions should be made by the State Council. The ministries and commissions may issue orders, directives and rules and regulations within the limit of their powers in accordance with laws and the decisions of the State Council."

III - Draft Resolution on the Revision of Some Provisions of the "Organic Law of the Local People's Congresses and Governments"

The "Organic Law of the Local People's Congresses and Governments", adopted in 1970 at the Second Session of the Fifth NPC, has now been in practice for 3 years and is, by and large, applicable. Most of the clauses in the revised draft resolution have been revised in conformity with the constitution. At the same time, in the light of the suggestions and actual needs of various localities, we have made revisions and supplemented the following three points:

1. It was originally stipulated in the "local organic law" that the organs of state power of provinces, autonomous regions and municipalities directly under the central government have the right to enact local statutes. Quite a few localities proposed that, in addition to municipalities directly under the central government, it is also necessary for some relatively big cities that have a relatively important political, economic and cultural status to enact local statutes in the light of the local conditions. In the light of the actual needs of these cities and in conformity with the provision of the constitution that only provinces, autonomous regions and municipalties directly under the central government have the right to enact local statutes, an additional provision has been made in the draft specifying that both the cities that are the seats of people's government in provinces, autonomous regions and municipalities directly under the central government and, with the approval of the State Council, the standing committees of people's congresses of relatively big cities may enact draft local statutes needed for the cities. These local statutes should be submitted to the standing committees of the people's congresses of provinces, autonomous regions and muncipalities directly under the central government for formulation and promulgation and reported to the NPC Standing Committee and the State Council for the record.

2. With respect to appointments and removals of secretaries-general, provincial department heads, bureau heads, directors and section chiefs in the local people's governments, it was originally stipulated in the "local organic law" that they should be submitted for approval to the government at the next higher level after a decision has been made by the standing committee of a people's congress at a corresponding level. Quite a few localities propose that, according to this stipulation, appointment and removals of provincial department heads, bureau heads, directors and section chiefs should be reported to the government at the next higher level for approval, while those of vice governors, vice mayors and deputy county heads need not be reported to the government at the next higher level for approval after a decision has been made concerning them by the people's congress or its standing committee at a corresponding level. Comparatively speaking, this is inappropriate. At the same time, after a decision on appointments and removals has been made by the standing committee at a corresponding level, it is also inappropriate to directly report it to the government at the next higher level for approval because it is still necessary to report to the government at the same level for approval. This is a tedious procedure. In accordance with the suggestions of various localities, the draft has changed the provision from reporting to the government at the next higher level for approval to reporting to the government at the next higher level for the record.

3. With regard to the electoral method of leading personnel of local people's governments, forming the standing committee of people's congresses, presidents of people's courts and chief procurators of people's procuratorates, it was originally stipulated in the "local organic law" that the number of candidates is generally greater than the number of people to be elected. If too many candidates have been recommended, a preliminary election may be held in order to determine the namelist of formal candidates in accordance with majority opinion. It was suggested by some localities that, in addition to the provision of allowing the electoral method of difference of votes, it is advisiable to adopt the method of first determining the namelist of candidates through preliminary election and then conducting an election. This provision, which is relatively more flexible, is adaptable to different and complicated conditions. Consequently, it has been revised in the draft as follows: "In an election, the method of having a greater number of candidates than the number of people to be elected may be adopted: It is also advisable to determine the namelist of candidates through a preliminary poll and then conduct an election."

IV. Draft Resolution on the Revision of Some Provisions of the "Electoral Law for the NPC and the Local People's Congress"

The "Electoral Law for the NPC and the Local People's Congresses" adopted in 1979 at the Second Session of the Fifth NPC is still applicable in principle. However, there are also some specific problems on which some additional provisions should be made. There are six points on which the revised draft resolution has made additional regulations and revisions:

1. It was stipulated in article 6 of the "electoral law" that regulations governing the election of overseas Chinese deputies shall be made separately. Practice has proved that it is inadvisable to elect overseas Chinese deputies separately. They should be elected in regional elections from among the returned overseas Chinese. It is inadvisable to formulate a separate electoral method. Therefore, in the draft, this clause has been changed into: there should be a suitable number of returned overseas Chinese deputies in the NPC and the local people's congresses in regions where a relatively large number of returned overseas Chinese reside.

2. It was stipulated in article 10 of the "electoral law" that the number of deputies to the people's congresses of a county and an autonomous county shall be distributed in accordance with the principle that the number of people represented by one deputy in a rural area is equal to four times the number of people represented by one deputy in a town. It was reported by various localities that some towns directly under the county authorities have a particularly large population or that the number of staff and workers in enterprises and other institutions not under the leadership of the people's governments below the county level accounts for a considerable proportion of the total population in the county. The number of deputies in the rural areas is too small if it is distributed according to the above-mentioned proportions. Therefore, an additional provision has been made in the draft specifying that, with respect to a county and an autonomous county that have the two above-mentioned special circumstances, at the decision of the standing committees of the people's congresses of provinces, autonomous regions and municipalities directly under the central government, the proportion between the number of people represented by one deputy in a rural area on the one hand and the number of people represented by one deputy in town or in enterprises and other institutions on the other can be smaller than 4 to 1 up to 1 to 1.

3. It was stipulated in article 16 of the "electoral law" that where the population of a national minority is less than 10 percent of the total population in the area, the number of people represented by each of its deputies may be less than the number represented by each deputy to the local people's congress, but it shall not be less than one half. Although certain preferential treatment has been given to minority nationalities with less population, it is still unable to completely suit the actual needs in some national autonomous regions. Moreover, some autonomous counties practicing regional national autonomy have reported a national minority with an especially small population, such as the Elunchun Autonomous Banner and the Ewenkizu Autonomous Banner. According to this stipulation, the number of deputies distributed to the nationalities practicing regional autonomy is still too small. For this reason, in the draft, the figure "10 percent" in the stipulation that where the population of a national minority is less thatn "10 percent" of the total population in the area has been changed to "15 percent;" an additional stipulation has also been made, specifying that with respect to autonomous counties practicing regional national autonomy where there is a national minority with an especially small population, at the say of the standing committee of people's congresses of provinces, autonomous regions and municipalities directly under the central government, the number of people represented by each deputy of the nationality practicing regional autonomy can be 50 percent less than the number of people represented by each deputy of the local people's congress.

4. It was stipulated in article 30 of the "electoral law" that all parties, organizations and voters may publicize their candidates for deputies with various forms of propaganda. This enables voters to relatively fully understand the candidates. In the course of practice, however, we note that this stipulation has not been sufficiently precise and is liable to different understanding. Therefore, a more specific stipulation has been made in the draft specifying that the election committee should introduce the circumstances of the candidates and that the parties, organizations or voters that recommend and represent the candidates can also introduce, at group meetings of voters, the circumstances of the candidates they recommend.

5. It was stipulated in clause 3 of article 38 of the "electoral law" that when the number of deputy candidates who have obtained more than half of the ballots falls below the number of deputies to be elected, another election shall be held for the balance of the deputies to be elected. In practice, it sometimes happens that after the second election, the number of deputy candidates who have obtained more than half of the ballots still falls below the number of deputies to be elected. If another by-election is held, the work load is very heavy and the voters also consider it a burden. Therefore, an additional stipulation has been made in the draft, specifying that with respect to the balance of the deputies to be elected, another election should be held among the candidates who fail to be elected; those who obtain the most votes are elected but the number of votes should not be less than one-third of the votes.

6. The draft has made an additional stipulation on article 42 of the "electoral law," specifying that the credentials of deputies automatically come to an end when deputies to the local people's congresses at various levels are transferred or moved out of the administrative regions during their term of office; and that another by-election shall be held to make up for the vacancy. As these deputies have left their jobs in the original areas, they cannot do their duties as deputies. It is only appropriate to make such an additional stipulation.

It is hoped that the meeting will consider the above four draft laws.

Jiang Hua's Report

HK201047 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 17 Dec 82 p 2

[XINHUA: "Report by Jiang Hua, President of the Supreme People's Court, on the Work of the Supreme People's Court; Delivered on 6 December 1982 at the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC" -- capitalized passages published in boldface]

[Text] Fellow deputies: I am fully in favor of the "Report on the Draft of the Revised Constitution of the PRC" made by Peng Zhen, vice chairman of the Committee for the Revision of the Constitution, and the "Report on the Sixth 5-Year Plan" made by Premier Zhao Ziyang.

Since the Fourth Session of the Fifth NPC, the Supreme People's Court and local people's courts at various levels have, in accordance with the "Resolution on the Report on the Work of the Supreme People's Procuratorate" adopted by this session, and in line with the policies, principles, laws and decrees of the state, tried and handled large numbers of criminal and civil cases as well as large numbers of cases involving disputes over economic contracts and appeal cases.

In order to strengthen the trial of criminal cases, the Supreme People's Court held the third national conference on the trial of criminal cases last November to examine the work of the people's courts in carrying out the criminal law and the law of criminal procedure, sum up their experiences in this respect and set tasks for the future. After the conference, the people's courts at various levels continued to conscientiously implement the criminal law and the law of criminal procedure.

From October 1981 to September 1982, more than 203,000 criminal cases were tried and brought to a conclusion, most of them being concluded within the legal time limit. Judging from the general situation, through the trial of criminal cases, the people's courts have dealt timely and forceful blows at counterrevolutionary criminals and serious and active criminal offenders.

Over the past year or so, the people's courts at various levels have strengthened their work in handling civil and economic cases. According to statistics, from October 1981 to September 1982, more than 767,300 civil cases and a number of cases involving disputes over economic contracts were handled by the people's courts at various levels. Through the handling of these cases, they solved large numbers of problems involving family and marriage issues and disputes over property ownership and large numbers of big and difficult long-standing problems between some enterprises involving disputes over economic contracts and also such disputes as emerged in the recent readjustment of the national economy. After the promulgation of the "law governing economic contract of the PRC" and the "law of civil procedure of the PRC (trial provisions)," the Supreme People's Court issued a circular in March this year which demanded the people's courts at various localities to organize cadres and police to conscientiously study and publicize the two laws, to strengthen the trial of civil and economic cases, to clearly check and handle the long-pending cases, to make experiments and acquire new experiences and to make preparations for the implementation of the two laws. Over the past several months the people's courts at various localities have, in accordance with the provisions of the law governing economic contract and the law of civil procedure (trial provisions), gained some initial experiences through experiment. In July and September this year, the Supreme People's Court separately convened the third national conference on the trial of civil cases and the forum of the presiding judges of the economic courts of some higher people's courts, in which the new situation and new problems of the present civil cases were discussed. Through exchanging experiences and discussing the situation of the trial of economic cases, especially through discussing the situation of the trial of economic cases, especially through discussing the problems in implementing the law of civil procedure (trial provisions), the participants had a better understanding of the importance of handling civil cases.

Over the past year or so, the people's courts at various levels have attached more importance to and firmly grasped the handling of the people's letters, visits and appeal cases and have scored remarkable achievements. From October 1981 to September 1982, more than 180,600 appeal cases were handled by local people's courts at various levels (of which over 173,200 concerned criminal and more than 7,300 concerned civil cases). More than 124,200 letters of appeal were handled (of which more than 112,000 concerned criminal and more than 12,200 civil cases), and people who lodged appeals were received on more than 30,000 occasions (of which more than 17,700 occasions concerned criminal, and more than 12,300 occasions concerned civil cases), by the Supreme People's Court. Through handling these cases, some frameups and wrong sentences were corrected.

During April and March this year, the Supreme People's Court held two forums separately for Hebei and six other provinces and for Jilin and seven other provinces (regions) on the work with regard to the people's letters, visits and appeals. They discussed the problem of long-pending appeals received by the people's courts, focusing on the handling of long-pending appeals lodged by the people who had frequently come to Beijing for this purpose. After carefully studying such cases, the two forums suggested that they should be dealt with by the relevant people's courts as soon as possible or be jointly dealt with by the relevant people's courts and cadres sent by the Supreme People's Court. By the end of September, of the 957 cases which had been submitted to the people's courts at lower levels, 538 were properly handled, in which 185 frameups and wrong sentences were corrected. Through joint efforts by the people's courts at various levels, the number of appeals, letters and visits concerning criminal cases has been reduced. In comparison with the corresponding period last year, the appeals concerning criminal cases received by local people's courts at various levels from January to September this year were reduced by 24.2 percent, letters concerning this received by the Supreme People's Court were reduced by 23.7 percent and visits were reduced by 24.6 percent.

Through various judgment activities as mentioned above, the people's courts at all levels have, with the cooperation of other departments, punished criminals and protected the people. They have played an active and promotive role in strengthening social order, preserving stability and unity, consolidating the people's democratic dictatorship and ensuring the smooth development of the economic readjustment and the construction of the four modernizations.

Fellow deputies! At the beginning of this year, the CPC Central Committee urged us to carry out struggles against serious criminal activities in the economic field and made it a central task this year for the whole country. On 8 March, the 22nd session of the Fifth NPC Standing Committee adopted a "Resolution for Severely Punishing Criminals Who Do Great Damage to the State Economy." On 13 April, the CPC Central Committee and the State Council adopted a "Resolution on Hitting at Serious Criminal Activities in the Economic Field." These two resolutions clearly put forward the policies and principles for hitting at serious criminal activities in the economic field, which provided a substantial legal basis for punishing criminals who do great damage to the state economy. I would like to continue by reporting to the NPC session about the work of the people's courts at various levels throughout the country in implementing the above-mentioned two resolutions and handling economic criminal cases.

On 15 March, the Supreme People's Court issued a circular on resolutely carrying out the "resolution" of the NPC Standing Committee, which demanded that the people's courts at all levels conscientiously study and resolutely implement the "resolution" and give first priority to the handling of economic criminal cases. At the forum for presidents of all higher people's courts and special people's courts, which was held in July, arrangements were further made for hitting at serious criminal activities in the economic field. Through studying the two "resolutions," the judicial officers of the people's courts at all levels improved their understanding of the urgency and necessity of the struggle and took an active part in it. According to statistics, from January to September this year, 24,636 economic criminal cases were handled by the local people's courts at various levels and the railway transport courts. By the end of September, 22,331 cases had been brought to a conclusion, of which there were 186 cases of smuggling and selling smuggled goods, 5,243 cases of graft, 1,138 cases of bribery, 2,011 cases of speculation and profiteering, 2,278 cases of swindling of public property, 10,290 cases of stealing public property, 32 cases of stealing and selling valuable cultural relics and 1,153 other cases. Some 26,227 criminals were sentenced and punished.

In handling the economic criminal cases, the local people's courts at various levels have paid attention to handling them in order of importance and urgency and have given priority to the handling of major and serious cases. They have concentrated strength on the handling of the cases involving large sums of money and active and serious cases, especially those committed by cadres in the state organs, enterprises and institutional units, including responsible cadres occupying some important posts, as well as those committed by these cadres in collusion with lawless people in society and they have passed more serious and swifter sentences on them according to law, after ascertaining the facts. According to statistics, from January to September this year, of the economic criminal cases handled by the local people's courts at various levels, there were 250 cases which involved more than 100,000 yuan each. There were 1,062 criminals whose illicit incomes were all over 10,000 yuan, of whom 3,706 were originally state personnel (including 29 county-level cadres). Severe punishment and heavy sentences were given to those who committed serious and major cases according to the criminal law and the relevant provisions in the "resolution" of the NPC Standing Committee.

In handling cases of economic crimes, the regional people's courts at various levels have seriously carried out the criminal law and the "decisions" of the NPC Standing Committee, upheld the traditional guideline of hitting out at the minority and striving to split off and transform the majority of people from the enemy camp, and implemented the fundamental policy of combining punishment with leniency and taking a lenient approach to those who confess their crimes and a severe attitude to those who refuse to. Those who committed crimes before the implementation of the "decisions" and who gave themselves up before 1 May this year, or those already arrested who frankly confessed all their crimes and who also reported criminal facts about other criminals, have been treated with leniency according to the relevant laws before the implementation of the "decisions." This was to encourage a number of criminals in the economic field to give themselves up and confess their crimes. Those who continued to conceal their crimes and refused to give themselves up, or who refused to confess all their crimes and also failed to report the criminal facts about other criminals before 1 May this year have been severely dealt with by resolutely following the "decisions" and the provisions of the criminal law. Thus, a small number of criminals disrupting the economy have been given severe punishment.

In handling criminal cases in the economic field, the regional people's courts at all levels have seriously carried out the law of criminal procedure. They insist on taking facts as the basis and the law as the criterion, investigating facts and verifying evidence. Concerning those complicated cases covering a wide scope, they go deep among the masses to make investigations. Thus, facts are established, evidence is clearcut, the verdicts are accurate, the punishment meted out is appropriate, and the procedure is legitimate. In handling criminal cases in the economic field, the people's courts in various areas have tried cases openly and pronounced verdicts openly in accordance with the laws. Together with the propaganda departments, they have also made public the results of judgment on major and important cases and have combined these cases with the propagation of the legal system. This has effectively dealt blows to the pride of criminals in the economic field and has provided the masses of cadres and people with education and inspiration. In light of the problems existing in the work of certain relevant units, as reflected in criminal cases in the economic field, some people's courts have also made suggestions to these units. This has played a stimulating role in improving the work of these units, perfecting their rules and regulations, plugging the loopholes and preventing crimes.

In judging criminal cases in the economic field, the people's courts at various levels, while meting out punishment according to the law, pay attention to recovering stolen money or property. Where the need arises, a fine is imposed and property is confiscated in addition to a prison term being given. According to incomplete statistics, from January to September this year, the state recouped an economic loss of more than 38,468 million yuan from appropriated funds and stolen goods recovered, fines imposed and property confiscated through the people's courts.

Since May this year, the Supreme People's Court has given timely guidance in regard to policy execution and the application of laws for the people's courts in various areas in judging a number of major and difficult criminal cases in the economic field. Through analyzing and studying every case, they have paid attention to distinguishing the line between economic criminal acts and errors in work and between the unhealthy practices in the economic field and violations of the economic laws. In pronouncing verdicts, a distinction is made between personal corruption and cases of sacrificing the interests of the big collective to the small collective. This is to prevent the blurring of the line between what is a crime and what is not a crime and imposing a too light or too heavy a sentence.

In the second half of this year, the Supreme People's Court and some higher people's courts also selectively edited and published some data on typical cases of economic crimes where relevant policies and laws have been carried out in a relatively satisfactory manner. This data is for the reference of people's courts in various areas in handling cases. This work has provided the regional people's courts at all levels with some guidance in handing out correct verdicts and improving the quality of judgment.

On the whole, in the past year, the people's court at all levels throughout the country have been resolute, positive and serious in carrying out the two "decisions" in handling criminal cases in the economic field. The quality of the cases handled is basically good. Through trials, severe punishment has been meted out to criminals seriously disrupting the economy -- criminals convicted of smuggling and illegal peddling, corruption, bribery, speculation, deception, and the theft of state and collective property. This has played a definite role in correctly implementing the policy of opening the country to the world and enlivening the economy at home and safeguarding socialist modernizations. Of course, of the criminal cases in the economic field handled by the people's courts, there are also a small number, where facts have not been clearly established, criminal evidence has not been verified, or the line between what is a crime and what is not a crime has been blurred, or too light or too heavy a sentence has been imposed. We must pay adequate attention to these defects and problems and strive to correct them.

Resolutely cracking down on serious criminal activities in the economic field is a major long-term task. It is an important guarantee for our doggedly following the socialist road and carrying out modernization and also an important measure for upholding the policy of opening the country to the world and enlivening the economy at home. At present, this struggle is deepening. The people's court at all levels throughout the country must continuously carry out these two "decisions" and further tackle the following several tasks well:

1. WITH A CRACKDOWN ON PRIORITY CASES IN MIND, WE MUST CONTINUE CONCENTRATING FORCES ON THE PROPER HANDLING OF MAJOR AND IMPORTANT CASES. In handling cases of this kind, we must be fair and impartial and strictly observe the law. On the basis of finding out the criminal facts, we must resolutely mete out severe punishment according to the law and make the relevant case known to the public, thus strengthening the propagation of the legal system. Only in this way can we more effectively crack down upon and control criminals, inspire and enlighten the masses of cadres and people and improve the results of judging cases.

2. WE MUST CORRECTLY CARRY OUT POLICY AND LAWS, DISTINGUISH BETWEEN WHAT IS A CRIME AND WHAT IS NOT AND ACCURATELY CRACK DOWN ON CRIMINALS WHO SERIOUSLY DISRUPT THE ECONOMY. Those who violate the criminal law and have been found guilty must be solemnly dealt with according to the law concerning those general offenses against the law not serious enough to constitute crimes. It is suggested that the departments deal with the persons concerned in accordance with relevant party discipline, administrative rules of discipline, or administrative laws and regulations. Those proper economic activities that agree with relevant policies and laws should be resolutely protected. To guide the people's courts at the lower levels in better carrying out relevant policies and applying laws, the Supreme People's Court and various higher people's courts must continuously do a good job of selecting and providing typical cases.

3. WE MUST STRICTLY HANDLE CASES IN ACCORDANCE WITH JUDICIAL PROCEDURES. In judging criminal cases in the economic field, the people's courts must seriously make investigations and studies, do their work conscientiously and set store by evidence instead of readily accepting confessions. Those criminals facts and evidence on which a conviction is based must be seriously checked and verified as true, so that a judgment can stand the test of history.

Concerning major and important cases, we must especially go deep among the masses to seek verification and listen to the masses' views on how to handle them. Economic crimes which are complicated, cover a wide scope and have a bearing on policy take time and effort in their handling. Therefore, judgment must be strict and in line with the judicial procedure to ensure the quality of the cases tackled.

4. WE MUST COMBINE THE HANDLING OF CASES WITH FURTHER EFFORTS IN MAKING JUDICIAL SUGGESTIONS. Criminal elements often take advantage of certain loopholes in the work pattern or system of certain organs, enterprises and units serving the people to carry out criminal activities disruptive to the economy. Therefore, the people's courts must not only handle cases according to the law but also make a point of analyzing the features and causes of economic crimes. They must make relevant suggestions to the relevant units in light of the problems reflected in given cases and urge the latter to strengthen political and ideological education among the cadres and workers to establish and perfect regulations and systems, to improve economic management and to plug the loopholes in order to prevent and reduce the incidence of crimes.

5. IN THE STRUGGLE TO CRACK DOWN ON SERIOUS CRIMINAL ACTIVITIES IN THE ECONOMIC FIELD, WE MUST TEMPER AND TEST THE RANKS OF CADRES AND POLICEMEN OF THE PEOPLE'S COURTS. We must conduct education among policemen and cadres impressing upon them the need to maintain communist purity and oppose decadent capitalist ideas. Those judicial personnel who are firm in their stand, honest and faithful in serving the public, just and impartial in judgment and strict in upholding the law must be cited. Concerning personnel whose offenses against the law have been exposed in the course of struggle, we must seriously get at the facts and solemnly deal with them.

Fellow deputies, this session has adopted the new constitution. This is a great event in our country's effort to create a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization. This constitution based on the four fundamental principles has profoundly summed up our country's experience of over 30 years of socialist revolution and construction. It takes into consideration not only existing realities but also future development. It is a new constitution of a long-term and stable nature which has the features of China and is geared to the needs of socialist modernization. It is a main charter for a stable government in the new historical period of our country. The approval and implementation of this constitution will greatly strengthen the building of our country's socialist democracy and socialist legal system, further promote the political stability and unity of people of various nationalities, and stimulate the development of the cause of socialist modernization, enabling our system of people's democratic dictatorship to be further consolidated. The cadres and policemen of our people's courts at all levels must, under the guidance of the spirit of the 12th CPC National Congress, strive to study the new constitution, energetically preach it, strictly observe it and resolutely carry it out. Within the limits of the constitution and the law, they must strive to do their own duties well, making proper contributions toward the gradual realization of the great goal of socialist modernization defined at the 12th CPC National Congress and turning our nation into a highly civilized and highly democratic socialist country.

Concerning the above report, all deputies are asked to examine and correct it.

[Editorial: "Make More Contributions to the Victorious Fulfillment of the Sixth 5-Year Plan — Greeting the Victorious Closing of the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC"]

[Text] The 15-day Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC victoriously concluded yesterday.

The Fifth Session of the Fifth CPPCC National Committee was also convened at the same time and all members of the CPPCC National Committee attended several meetings of the NPC as nonvoting delegates and discussed state affairs together with the delegates of the NPC. As a result of the strenuous efforts made by all delegates of the NPC and the members of the CPPCC National Committee, the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC adopted the new constitution, exmained and discussed the report made by Premier Zhao Ziyang on the development of the national economy and the Sixth 5-Year Plan and made corresponding resolutions. We warmly hail all these remarkable achievements made by the conference.

The new constitution adopted by the conference is the fundamental law for governing the country and giving it security in the new period and the best one since the founding of the PRC. It not only sums up the historical experience of China's socialist development, but also absorbs the wisdom of the people of various nationalities throughout the country. We must conscientiously study, vigorously propagate, and resolutely carry out the new constitution, thus pushing the construction of China's socialist democracy and legal system to a new stage and ensuring the smooth progress of socialist construction for modernization.

The formulation and implementation of the Sixth 5-Year Plan is an important step to achieve the strategic objective of our country's economic construction put forth by the 12th CPC Congress and the foundation to achieve the goal of quadrupling the annual output value of China's industrial and agricultural production by the end of the century. The basic task of the Sixth 5-Year Plan is that we must continue to carry out the policy of readjustment, reform, reorganization and upgrading, further solve various problems left over by history which hamper economic development, achieve a decisive victory in bringing about a basic turn for the better in the financial and economic situation, and lay down a better foundation and create better conditions for the national economy and social development in the Seventh 5-Year Plan. This is a 5-year plan which ensures our country's national economy will embark on a road of healthy development and represents a new road of developing the socialist economic construction for modernization full of Chinese characteristics. Various technical and economic targets formulated by the plan are not only inspiring but also practical, giving us grand expectations and invincible confidence in the future of our country's national economy and social development.

What shall we rely on in order to successfully accomplish this plan? First, we must rely on gradual implementation of reform in the economic system and serious implementation of various guiding principles and policies in economic construction. Second, we must rely on science and technology, the basis of which lies in education. Only by treating education, science and technology as a strategic point in economic development, can we continuously raise economic results, strive to reach a higher speed of development and bring about economic prosperity in our country. The development of education, science and technology is also an important part in strengthening the construction of socialist spiritual civilization.

In the Sixth 5-Year Plan, the state has greatly increased its investment in education, science, culture, public health, and sports, compared with that in the Fifth 5-Year Plan. Meanwhile, specific stipulations have been made in developing university education and the continuous reform of the secondary educational structure, in striving for the basic popularization of primary school education in the vast majority of counties and the popularization of junior middle school education in cities throughout the country by 1985, in promoting effectual remarkable scientific and technical achievements, in tackling key scientific and technical problems, in strengthening the research of applied science and basic science, in paying great attention to the development of social science, and in developing literature and art, movie production, television, broadcasting, journalism, publishing, libraries, museums and cultural centers, and public health and sports.

All these stipulations have fully showed that the Sixth 5-Year Plan is a comprehensive plan for the national economy and social development which includes both the construction of material and spiritual civilization. This once again shows that we have, since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee and the elimination of "leftist" ideology, greatly improved our understanding of the objective laws of national economy and social development. The Sixth 5-Year Plan provides us a glorious prospect and puts forth more difficult and glorious tasks to intellectuals in the country. The burden is heavy and the road is long. Vast numbers of intellectuals must, under the leadership of the party Central Committee and the State Council, make more contributions to victoriously fulfilling the Sixth 5-Year Plan together with all workers.

Our country's intellectuals have already made great contributions to the five 5-year plans which have been fulfilled. It is not necessary to conceal that fact that due to the influence of the "leftist" ideology and the neglect shown by the small production habitual forces in education, science and knowledge since the late 1950's, and the "Cultural Revolution" in particular, it was impossible for the vast number of intellectuals to bring into full play their enthusiasm for building a powerful socialist motherland and give full play to their talent and wisdom. Since the third plenary session, the party and the state have carried out a series of measures to bring order out of chaos, taken many effective measures to develop education, science and culture, and attached importance to bringing into full play the role of intellectuals. The 12th CPC Congress and the present 5th Session of the 5th NPC went a step further to treat the development of education and science as one of the important strategic points in the development of China's economy. The Sixth 5-Year Plan has also made corresponding stipulations. Particularly, the new constitution has, in the form of a fundamental law, affirmed the role of China's intellectuals as a backbone force in socialist construction, which creates good conditions for our country's intellectuals to bring into full play their proper role. "The wide sea allows the fish to leap about and the vast sky the birds to fly." In the course of fulfilling the Sixth 5-Year Plan and fighting for the realization of the strategic goal in the development of the national economy which was formulated at the 12th CPC Congress, intellectuals of our country may make greater contributions and give full play to their abilities. This is indeed inspiring and encouraging.

Of course, many efforts have to be made in order to carry out the policy of intellectuals and bring into full play their role due to some historical reasons. And many difficulties and obstacles may arise in developing education and science as a result of the limitations imposed by the present material conditions. However, we believe that the vast number of intellectuals, educated by the party for quite a long time, will certainly, with an enterprising spirit, an indomitable will and all their wisdom and energy, overcome difficulties and hardships in the process of marching forward, create a new situation in the fields of education and science and make more contributions to developing our country's education, science and culture, to capturing one stronghold after another in the scientific field, to developing the national economy and to raising the scientific and cultural level of all the people, thus proving themselves to be a part of the working class. Jiang Zhuying and Luo Jianfu are exactly the examples for us to follow.

Since the convocation of the 12th CPC Congress, the whole country has become more energetic and confident. The new constitution adopted by the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC has legalized our fighting goal and the adopted Sixth 5-Year Plan has made it more concrete. We believe that with the joint and concerted efforts made by the vast number of intellectuals and the people throughout the country, the new constitution will certainly be carried out in real earnest, the Sixth 5-Year Plan will certainly be fulfilled to all satisfaction and our great motherland will certainly become more and more prosperous.

PROPAGANDA DEPARTMENT CIRCULAR ON CONSTITUTION

OW180423 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1148 GMT 11 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, 11 Dec (XINHUA) -- The CPC Central Committee Propaganda Department recently issued a circular on publicizing the new constitution.

The circular pointed out that the "Constitution of the PRC" is an extremely important historical document. The new constitution reflects the common wishes and fundamental interests of the people of all nationalities of the country and bears the greatest authoritativeness and the highest legal effect. It is the general program for running the country and ensuring stability for the new period in China and the fundamental norms of activities of the people of all nationalities of China, all state organs and armed forces, all political parties and social organizations as well as all enterprises. Therefore, we must attach great importance to and conscientiously do a good job in publicizing the new constitution and organize the people all over the country to conscientiously study it. We must let the vast masses of people understand the underlying spirits and the various important stipulations in the new constitution through propaganda and education, and through organized study let them understand the importance of the constitution in the nation's political life and the necessity of abiding by the constitution so as to make everyone form the idea and habit of abiding by and upholding the constitution. In particular, the vast number of party members, cadres at all levels of the party and the workers of state organs at all levels should take the lead in studying and publicizing the constitution, understanding the substance of the constitution, strengthening the concept of rule by law, conscientiously upholding the dignity of the constitution and setting examples in implementing and abiding by the constitution in their work.

The circular said that the publicizing and study of the constitution should center on the "Constitution of the PRC" and the "Report on the Draft Constitution Revision" made by Comrade Peng Zhen. We should also link such publicizing and study with the publicizing and study of the documents of the 12th party congress. The constitution is the integration of the party's correct propositions and the will of the people and the nation, and is consistent with the spirit of the 12th party congress documents. The general tasks of the people all over the country in the new period, the fundamental guidelines for the building of a socialist economy, spiritual civilization and socialist democracy and legal system, and the principles that play a leading role in the state's and party's political life and the requirement that the party must act within the provisions of the constitution and law set forth in the documents of the 12th party's congress are all incorporated in the constitution. In particular, the constitution has systemized and legalized the underlying goals and tasks of building a high level of socialist democracy set forth in the documents of the 12th party congress. This will bring the development of China's socialist democracy and legal system into a new phase. Therefore, the two can be completely combined in publicizing and study.

The circular said: The following key points should be emphasized in publicizing the constitution: 1) the importance of the constitution in the state's political life, in socialist construction and in building socialist democracy and a socialist legal system; 2) the substance of the constitution, the general guiding ideology of the constitution, including the four basic principles, and the important stipulations on China's politics, economy, cultural system, the basic rights and obligations of the people, the system of people's congresses and the state organs; 3) the whole party and the people of all nationalities of China should abide by the constitution, uphold the dignity of the constitution and fight against all acts which undermine the constitution, for this is the underlying guarantee for implementing the constitution.

Through publicizing and study we should strengthen the people's concept that all state power belongs to the people, strengthen the people's consciousness of themselves as the masters of the country and strengthen their sense of responsibility for the state's work and social undertakings.

The circular pointed out: In publicizing the constitution we should pay attention to two aspects. First, we should explain the meaning, the main spirit and the basic principles of the constitution and the importance of the constitution to the building of a socialist democracy and legal system politically and theoretically. Since relatively comprehensive propaganda work was done earlier when the draft of the revised constitution was discussed by the people of the whole country, we should now explain it in a more penetrating manner in the light of the spirit of the documents of the 12th party congress and the mental outlook of the people both within and outside the party. Therefore, various newspapers may publish some deep and weighty key articles. Second, we should carry out propaganda work on knowledge of the constitution by integrating realities. We should explain the substance of the constitution in a systematic, specific, precise and simple manner. We should explain the constitution chapter by chapter, section by section and every important article in it in order to make every household and all the people understand the important stipulations of the constitution. The people of our country, including the broad masses of party members and cadres at all levels, and in particular the younger generation, generally lack a concept of a legal system and knowledge of law. The report of the 12th party congress pointed out: "It is necessary to repeatedly conduct propaganda and education work on the legal system among the people of the whole country" and "it is necessary to strengthen education on the constitution, civil rights, civil obligation and civil morality."

We should now conduct extensive and penetrating education on the legal system for the people of the whole country through publicizing the constitution. In addition to the newspapers, we should explain the constitution orally and use other forms in our propaganda work. Departments concerned should publish some booklets written in simple language on the explanation of the constitution for use by grassroots level units in urban and rural areas in giving lectures to the masses or as reference materials in studying the constitution.

SONG RENQIONG SPEECH ON PARTY RECTIFICATION

HK200300 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 18 Dec 82 pp 1, 4

[Speech delivered by Song Renqiong [1345 0117 4522] on 19 November 1982 at national conference on educating party members: "Educate the Party Members in the New Party Constitution, Make Ideological Preparations for Party Rectification" -- reprinted from HONGQI issue No 24]

[Text] Comrades, this national conference on educating party members is an important meeting for implementing the 12th party congress spirit, studying and making arrangements for education of party members in accordance with the demands of the new party constitution, and preparing for party rectification. I now want to give some views.

I. The New Party Constitution Is the Best Since the Founding of the Party

The new party constitution since its promulgation has drawn a strong response inside and outside the party and at home and abroad. Many comrades hold that the new party constitution "is the quintessence of the party's historical experience and of the wisdom of the whole party" and is "the weapon for rectifying and building the party." The new party constitution affirms in charter form the correct line since the third plenary session, and there are great prospects for our party and our cause.

A number of foreign publications and press agencies have also held that the new party constitution is "sober and realistic in tone," "expresses the resolve to refurbish the party work style," and has laid down a "Chinese-style path for building socialism."

How should we judge whether a communist party constitution is good or not? There can only be one criterion and that is whether it is solved well or not the question of integrating Marxism-Leninism with the practice of a country's revolution. I will now apply this criterion to analyze the question of why we say that the constitution of the 12th party congress is the best since the founding of the party.

1. The new party constitution meets the needs of the governing party. Ours has been the governing party for more than 30 years. The constitution of the eighth party congress touched on this question. However, as the state had not been in existence long at that time, the conditions for solving this question were not sufficiently ripe. The constitution of the 12th party congress takes full consideration for the position of the governing party and has appropriately made a series of specific regulations for ensuring that the organizations at all levels of the governing party and all its members have rules to follow. The party constitution includes for the first time the stipulation that "the party must conduct its activities within the framework of the constitution and the law." Ours is the governing party that leads political power in the whole country. The party's line, principles and policies are the concentrated expression of the common interests and will of the people of all nationalities throughout the land. Through the constitution and the laws formulated by the state organs of power, our party's leadership of the people of the whole country is also the concentrated expression of the common interests and will of the people of all nationalities throughout the land, and has also become the will of the state. Hence, under our socialist system, the will of the people, the state and the party are identical. For Communist Party members, no matter what post they hold, practicing and adhering to the constitution means carrying out the will of the party. Any tendency of setting the constitution and the law against the tasks of the party, of weak concept of law and discipline, or of failure to observe the law or to strictly enforce it will weaken the position of the governing party. All such tendencies are intolerable. Everyone still remembers the incident that occurred a few years ago: The masses asked us "whether the constitution or the county CPC committee is the greater." This is a simple question and also a sharp criticism. The new party constitution has now made a totally unequivocal reply to this question. The position of the governing party poses new demands not only on the framework of the party's activities but also on the party members and cadres. The constitution of the 12th party congress lays down regulations suited to the position of the governing party with regard to the rights and obligations of party members, the basic conditions for party cadres, and the tasks of the party organizations at all levels. The new party constitution demands that the party members "always be ordinary members of the laboring people," that "party cadres are the people's servants," that "apart from individual interests and work duties within the framework stipulated by the system and policy, no party member may pursue any private interest or special powers," and that "the party's leading cadres at all levels, whether they were democratically elected or appointed by the leading organs, do not hold their posts for life, and all of them can be transferred or relieved of their posts." The appearance of these stipulations in the new party constitution shows that our party has become a mature governing party.

2. The new party constitution meets the needs of bringing order out of chaos. Many of the clauses of the new party constitution can be described as correcting the mistakes of the 10 years of internal disorder and consolidating the results of bringing order out of chaos.

The new party constitution gives a complete and scientific outline of the party's ideological line: "Proceed from reality in everything, link theory with reality, seek truth from facts, and test and develop the truth in the course of practice." This is a summation of the party's positive and negative experiences in ideological line for a long time in the past, and is also the ideological weapon for continuing to bring order out of chaos in all respects in the future. The new party constitution stipulates that "the party prohibits any form of personality cult." This shows that our party has absorbed the serious lessons of indulging in personality cult in the past and is resolved to establish correct relationships between the leadership and the party and between the leadership and the masses in accordance with the historical materialist viewpoint. The new party constitution also stipulates that "no party member, no matter how high or low his post, may decide himself on major issues." This has always been our party's consistent principle. It has also been put forward in the light of the serious damage suffered by the party in the past as a result of the individual autocracy with "one person having the say" that appeared in our party for a time in the past.

3. The new party constitution suits the needs of socialist modernization. In accordance with the main contradictions in Chinese society, the party's general task in the present stage, and the focus of party work, the new party constitution gives prominence to socialist modernization. This is the first time that a party constitution has assigned such an important position to the task of modernization. The new party constitution also stipulates that "party leadership is mainly political, ideological and organizational leadership." This has thus solved in principle the major question of how to uphold party leadership in the cause of China's socialist construction, and has prevented lack of division of party and government and of party and enterprises, with low work efficiency, from continuing to affect the progress of the cause of socialist construction. The new party constitution stipulates that the rank of party cadres must be revolutionized, younger, better educated and more specialized, that the party cadres must "undergo party training, investigation and examination," and that the leading cadres at all levels must meet six basic criteria. The party's cadres are a backbone force in the socialist modernization cause, and building a high-quality cadre force is precisely a stipulation of strategic significance that our party has laid down in order to meet the needs of the new period.

4. The new party constitution suits the needs of building socialist spiritual civilization and socialist democracy. Enhancing the masses' communist awareness, so that the people will genuinely become the masters of the country, is an expression of the superiority of socialism, and is also an historic task shouldered by the party. The new party constitution points out in its general program: "While leading the people to build a high degree of material civilization," the party "leads them to build a high degree of socialist spiritual civilization," and it must "lead the people to develop socialism, put the socialist system on a sound basis, and consolidate the people's democratic dictatorship." The new party constitution therefore puts forth a whole series of specific demands regarding the stipulations on the tasks of party members, party cadres and party organizations at all levels.

5. The new party constitution suits the needs of achieving a fundamental turn for the better in party work style. The three basic demands put forward by the new party constitution regarding a high degree of ideological and political unity, wholehearted service for the people, and the upholding of democratic centralism express in concentrated form the strong will of our party to achieve a fundamental turn for the better in its work style. In order to fulfill the three basic demands in party building, the new party constitution lays down a whole series of regulations in the chapters on party members, party cadres, the party's organizational system, the party's grassroots organizations and the party's discipline.

The five "suitings" mentioned above show that the reason why the new party constitution is good is because it fully embodies a high degree of integration of Marxism-Leninism with the practice of the Chinese revolution, and a high degree of integration of Marxist-Leninist doctrine on the vanguard force of the proletarian with the practice of party building. The entire contents of the constitution's 10 chapters and 50 articles are closely linked to our target of endeavor, to the destiny of the state and people, and to the tasks of revival and reform facing us. Engels said that the value of the resolutions of a party congress depends on their scientific nature. The five "suitings" we have spoken of as properties of the new party constitution are precisely the outstanding hallmarks of the scientific nature of this party constitution.

Engels was one of the writers of the "Communist Manifesto." Throughout his life, he took part in revising, examining and approving many party constitutions and programs. In this respect, he gave some very pithy expositions. He once held the viewpoint that the history of a party is the best exposition on the party's constitution. In our previous passages, we evaluated the party constitution approved by the 12th party congress from the angle of its scientific nature. Now we are going to use this viewpoint of Engels' and proceed from the evolution of the party's history and of its previous constitutions to look into the question of whether the 12th congress' constitution is one of the best party constitutions since the founding of the CPC. During the 61 years since the founding of the CPC, it has formulated 12 party programs and constitutions (all are party constitutions, except the one approved by the first party congress which was called the "Program of the CPC.") In the 24 years from the founding of the party to the time before the seventh party congress was held, six party programs and constitutions were formulated with the direct assistance and guidance of the Comintern. This was a result of the international and domestic political conditions at that time. The constitution of the seventh party congress was the first party constitution that was independently formulated by our party after the dissolution of the Comintern. It was an exercise in integrating Marxism-Leninism with China's revolutionary practice and was a party constitution that facilitated the prosperity and development of the party and guided the revolution in vigorously developing until nationwide victory was achieved. The constitution of the eighth party congress was the first party constitution that was formulated after we seized state power. It inherited the strong points of the seventh congress' constitution and put forward new requirements for the party in order to make sure its position as a party in power. What is especially valuable was that the report on the revision of the party constitution given at the eighth congress fully expounded on the question related to the personality cult. The eighth congress' constitution was a good one. It was a pity that some of the regulations of this constitution were not carried out. The constitutions of the 9th and 10th party congresses reflected our party's mistakes during the "Great Cultural Revolution." The 11th congress' constitution was formulated not long after the smashing of the "gang of four." As the party was not sufficiently mentally prepared for the overall elimination of the "leftist" mistakes, this party constitution was not free from the guidance of the "leftist" ideology, though it had played some positive roles. It was precisely through drawing on both the positive and negative experiences of the previous party constitutions and through making further developments and improvements on the basis of the 7th and 8th congresses' constitutions that the constitution of the 12th congress was formulated through 3 years of collecting the wisdom of the whole party. Compared with all the previous party constitutions, the 12th party congress' constitution deserves to be regarded as being the best one since the founding of the CPC.

A recent report reflects the idea of some people that regarding the 12th congress's constitution as the "best party constitution since the founding of the CPC" will lead to negating the history and give rise to difficulties in evaluating the party constitution of the 13th and 14th party congresses. This idea is wrong. By regarding the 12th party congress' constitution as the best one, we mean that it inherits the previous constitutions and facilitates further development. Since it inherits the previous ones, it certainly does not negate the past nor the party's history. On the contrary, it scientifically confirms the history of the party. Since it facilitates future development, it has not yet been 100 percent perfect and should be tested in practice. If it is found that some of the stipulations of this constitution are not suitable or need additions, the 13th and 14th party congresses must and can revise it, add something to it and develop it in order to improve it. These comrades' apprehension for negating the party's history precisely proves that they are not familiar with the party's history and their fear of a harmful influence on precisely evaluating the future shows that they do not really understand our infinitely bright future.

II. A Good Party Constitution Is Formulated To Be Implemented. Therefore, We Must Act in Accordance With the New Party Constitution.

"A step of actual action is more important than a dozen programs." ("Selected Works of Marx and Engels" Vol 3, p 3) This well-known saying by Marx tells us that we should not pay attention only to the formulation of the program but fail to practice it. It is very relevant to use these words of Marx to explain the importance of implementing the new party constitution. Since the founding of the CPC, 12 party constitutions have been formulated. None of the victories of our revolution could have been achieved if our party had not formulated and implemented its correct constitutions.

Since its promulgation, the new party constitution has been unaminously well received, both at home and abroad. However, there are some people who have expressed their worries that some of the stipulations in the constitution cannot possibly be carried out. These worries are not completely groundless. Quite a few of the correct stipulations in the eighth party congress' constitution have not been satisfactorialy carried out and soon after the congress there emerged the movement of fighting against rightist deviation and then the 10 years of civil disorder caused by the "Great Cultural Revolution." Should we allow, then, people's worries to continuously exist? No, we should not. We have to do some work in order to establish in people's minds confidence in the unquestionable implementation of the 12th party congress' constitution. We should tell people that the implementation of the 8th congress' constitution was hindered beause of certain historical conditions. These historical conditions were: 1) dogmatism and personality cult seriously fettered the party's ideology; 2) the "leftist" tendency seriously existed in our party; 3) the inner-party political life, especially the political life of the high-level leading stratum, was abnormal and democratic centralism was undermined; and 4) though the shift of the emphasis of the party's work had been put forward, it could not have been carried out because of the "leftist" mistakes in the theory and practice related to the problem of class struggle. Now all these problems have been sorted out and resolved. First, ideologically speaking, we have broken away from the long-standing serious fetters of dosmatism and personality cult and have reestablished the ideological line of Marxism-Leninism. Second, we have already sorted out and eliminated in an overall manner the "leftist" mistakes arising during and before the "Great Cultural Revolution." Third, inner-party democratic life has already embarked on a route of normal development. In this respect, the CPC Central Committee has taken the lead in setting an example. Fourth, we have already carried out a systematic criticism of and eliminated the erroneous theory of "regarding class struggle as the key link" and "carrying on the revolution under the proletariat dictatorship" that was put forward during the "Great Cultural Revolution."

The emphasis of the party's work has already been shifted on socialist modernization. The new party constitution and all other important documents of the 12th party congress were formulated by the party after profoundly summing up its historical experience, comprehensively analyzing the actual conditions and evaluating all the favorable and unfavorable conditions. Our full confidence in the implementation of the new party constitution is scientifically based. In my opinion, if we clearly explain to these comrades the above-mentioned reasons, they will be confident rather than worried about the implementation of the new party constitution.

As for a few others, they have confidence neither in the implementation of the new party constitution nor in any of our causes and communism. Often these people cannot be convinced by mere reasoning. We should allow them to watch for 1 year or several years and then let them use facts to correct their mistakes in understanding by themselves. However, this only applies to the people outside the party. Our party members are not allowed to spread any erroneous ideas that may injure the serious nature of the new party constitution. Nor are any of our party members allowed to refuse to implement the party constitution on the excuse of lacking confidence. This is the discipline of the party.

The implementation of the new party constitution begins on the day when it was approved, that is, 6 September 1982. This is effective on a large scale for every party organization and member. It cannot be delayed until confidence is established or until the party rectification is carried out. Our publicizing and implementing of the new party constitution is aimed at laying a foundation for the party rectification next year. We should first carry out education and then examine the results. At a later time after education we will evaluate whether a party member is qualified or unqualified and criticize him for his shortcomings, and thus we will be able to make them gladly accept criticism and evaluation. When we were in Yanan, we rectified the party work style first and then held a party congress. After the party rectification, we unified the thoughts of the whole party and formulated a correct line. As a result, the seventh congress became a congress of unity and victory. This time, we held the 12th party congress first and then began to carry out party rectification. Our party is such a big party that in order to satisfactorily carry out party rectification, we have to spend some time in publicizing and educating people on the party constitution after the congress was held before we carry out an overall party rectification. We must very carefully do all the preparatory work and must pay extremely close attention to this work. It is wrong to think that this work can be delayed until next year when the party rectification has begun and thus slacken our efforts at present. Of course, during and after party rectification, we should continue to study and publicize the new party constitution. We must clearly explain this to all the comrades of party committees at all levels and to comrades of the propaganda, organization and discipline inspection departments of these committees.

III. In Order To Implement the New Party Constitution, We Should First Grasp Education

In order to implement the new party constitution, we should conscientiously pay attention to educating our party members. In the document concerning the strengthening of education among party members, a very comprehensive stipulation has been made on the requirements of educating party members in the party constitution. The problem now is to satisfactorily carry out this stipulation.

Our party has more than 39 million members who are organized into more than 2 million basic party branches. To carefully, vigorously and soundly organize party members to study and implement the new party constitution is a very arduous task.

We all know that our ideological education and our work of education among the party members is still a weak sector. In other words, we have a lot of outstanding work in this field. It is precisely for this reason that we have to make great efforts to lay a foundation for satisfactorily doing this work. Otherwise some party members will remain ignorant of the stipulations of the new party constitution a few months, or even 1/2 or 1 year after the new party constitution came into force. As a result the instances of violating the party constitution will frequently occur and even become a common practice. This will actually aggravate some people's doubt about the possibility in carrying out the new party constitution.

The joint investigation report on the situation in the education among party members in 19 provinces, municipalities and regions that was made by the organization and propaganda departments of the CPC Central Committee in June and July of this year has raised a question that calls for deep thought: Why have our party members failed to play the same great role that they did at the initial period after the founding of the PRC, since the proportion of party members in the national population now is 1 to 25, which is four times the 1 to 100 proportion of that period? In his report to the 12th party congress, Comrade Yaobang answered this question. He said that this was because we have as yet failed to completely eliminate the pernicious influence of the 10 years of civil disorder, because under the new conditions the corrosive influence of the various kinds of ideology of the exploiting classes have aggravated the situation and because the problem still exists of impurity in ideology, work style and organization in our party. The document on strengthening education among party members points out that the actual reflection of this problem tells us that in order to create an overall new situation in our socialist modernization, we should first create a new situation in our party building and in educating our party members.

In this article, we are going to recommend a good experience of satisfactorily carrying out education among party members. This is the experience of the Hunan Changling oil refinery in developing the education movement of "becoming qualified party members." Through careful investigation, the party committee of this factory has learned of the problems among the ranks of party members there. How should these problems be solved? After repeated analysis, they found through repeated discussion an idea that made a breakthrough. This idea is that they should put an end to the previous practice of paying attention only to the people at both ends and neglecting education among those people who are in the intermediate state, and instead, they should pay attention to educating those party members who are in the intermediate state and who form the majority of the party members. They organized party members to study the documents about party building and systematically expound for them on the basic knowledge about the party. Then every party member compared what he had studied with his own behavior and found what requirements he had satisfied and what requirements he had failed to satisfy, and then fixed a goal for him to make further efforts to achieve. During the process of study and comparison, the cadres of the party committee and branches engaged in heart-to-heart talks with the party members and consciously help those whose work performance, work style and thoughts were in an intermediate state to catch up with the advanced. Then they carried out the evaulation and comparison movement of "becoming qualified party members." After this educational activity, 1,000 of the 1,100 party members who were in an intermediate state in the factory remarkably raised their level of awareness and 300 of them caught up with the advanced party members. The change in the intermediate party members greatly shocked the originally-backward party members. The old "isolation of the advanced" has already been put to an end and the practice of "vying with one another to become advanced" has greatly developed.

This factory has, furthermore, extended the movement of "becoming qualified party members" and turned it into an education movement of "becoming four qualified," that is, "becoming qualified cadres," "becoming qualified CYL members" and "becoming qualified workers." The change in party work style has brought a change in the general mood in the factory and the erroneous idea of "looking for money in everything" has gradually lost its market.

To be effective, education among the party members should be relevant and should be carried out in the manner of being particular about methods. There is still a great deal of the remnant influence of "leftism" in our methods of ideological and political work. In one of his speeches, Comrade Yaobang pointed out that in exposing, criticizing and investigating, many localities still adopt the old methods of the "Great Cultural Revolution." Are there now any old fetters and conventions of old ideology in the methods of some of our people in considering problems, inspecting people and doing ideological work? I think there are. For example, some areas are still using the "leftist" methods of indiscriminately carrying out criticism in an unfair and exaggerated manner. Of course, we must oppose the liberalist practice of keeping on good terms with everybody and maintaining peace at the expense of principle. The combat effectiveness of ideological and political work lies in its relevance, but maintaining its relevance is aimed at effectively stirring up rather than injuring the initiative of our party members. In carrying out education among party members in some localities, there has emerged a practice of calling some people party members of the "Great Cultural Revolution." This depressed the comrades who joined the party during the "Great Cultural Revolution" and hurt their feelings. The party members who joined our party during the "Great Cultural Revolution" constitute 40 percent of our party's total membership.

Indeed, there are some of them who were abruptly admitted into the party, but we should not indiscriminately say that none of them is qualified or indiscriminately call every of them a rebel. There are indeed among them many good party members. Of course, there are also some who have committed mistakes, some even serious ones. However, these mistakes were committed under the historical conditions at that time. If only they are not the "three kinds of people," we should not hold them individually responsible for these mistakes. These comrades should be helped and educated with meticulous care, both in the educational activities of studying the new party constitution now and in the party rectification next year. Thus, we will make them feel the warmth of the party organizations' concern and become more close to the party organizations. As for those who joined the party before the "Great Cultural Revolution," during the educational activities of studying the new party constitution, we should tell them that the longer one has been educated by the party, the better one should take the lead in implementing the new party constitution. We should make them understand that "qualified party members" cannot always remain unchanged and that a qualified party member of the past may become an unqualified one under the new conditions if he fails to make efforts to study and implement the new party constitution.

IV. The Key to the Implementation of the New Party Constitution Lies in Cadres

By treating cadres as the key to the implementation of the new party constitution, we mean that party cadres, especially leading cadres at all levels, must pay attention to and be good at educating party members. Moreover, they should set examples in taking the lead in implementing the new party constitution.

Reflected in the sphere of party building, the tendency to neglect ideological and political work means neglecting education among party members.

Seeing that the 12th congress documents stress ideological and political work, the construction of socialist spiritual civilization and the education among party members, some cadres have put forward the question of "policy and education, which is more powerful? "What they mean is that since we have the policies of enlivening the economy at home and opening to the outside world and the various policies related to politics, culture, education and cadres, it is enough to rely on giving play to the force of these policies and there is no need to stress ideological and political work or education among party members. This is, of course, an incorrect view. Indeed, correct policies are powerful. However, the implementation of these policies depends on the ideological and political work publicizing and explaining these policies. This is the first point. The second is that ideological and political work shoulders an even more important task than publicizing the current policies. This task is to train people to foster communist ideology. Comrade Mao Zedong said that political work is the lifeline of all economic work. The political work he meant here is ideological and political work that is also very powerful. Both the view of regarding policies as being so powerful as to enable us to dispense with ideological and political work and that of regarding ideological and political work as being so powerful as to enable us to dispense with policies are one-sided views. We suffered quite a lot in the past because of these two one-sided views. Now we must be vigilantly on our guard against them. There has been yet another view that holds that ideological and political work is weak by nature and therefore we cannot rouse people to pay attention to it in spite of our emphasis on it. This, in fact, misunderstands ideological and political work. Comrade Zhou Enlai once sharply criticized the practice of looking down upon ideological and political work. He said, "It is never a fault of the political work itself that our political work becomes empty talk. The blame lies in our political workers' failure to carry out genuine revolutionary political work." ("Selected Works of Zhou Enlai" vol 1, p 93) This has made a point for us that our cadres should not only pay attention to ideological and political work and to the education among our party members, but should also learn to be good at doing this work and do this work very effectively. Have we not said that we should "strike a chord in people's hearts?" When our ideological and political work and our education among party members can strike a chord in people's hearts, this work and education can be regarded as highly effective.

The report to the 12th party congress points out that the construction of socialist spiritual civilization relies on four contingents: the contingents of ideological and political workers, cultural workers, scientific workers and educational workers. The education among the party members relies mainly on the contingent of ideological and political workers. According to a rough calculation, this contingent consists of more than 3 million people. This is quite a large number, but the trouble is the insufficient political quality of this contingent. The responsible comrade of the Helongjiang Provincial CPC Committee has gone down to investigate the situation. He has found that some party committee secretaries could speak quite a lot about the production, but could not give any clear idea about political work or education among party members. He called these comrades "directors of factories in the true sense, but false secretaries." I think that this is a reasonable criticism. Of course, a director of a factory should also do ideological and political work. It will not do for a "director in its true sense" to fail to do ideological and political work. It seems that some people have a few muddled ideas on the problem of being professionally competent. Originally, our advocation of being professionally competent meant that our cadres should be experts in their jobs. This means that those who take charge of management should be management experts, those who undertake horticulture should be expert horticulturists, those who engage in education should be education experts and those who do ideological and political work should be expert ideological and political workers.

If a secretary of a party committee or a director of the propaganda or organization department does not understand the basic theory of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought, is not familiar with the history of the party, does not have basic knowledge about the party, does not know how to talk with the masses, give party lectures or do ideological and political work, he cannot be regarded as being professionally competent. This should be included in future evaluation regulations. We should gradually form an idea that ideological and political work and the work of education among party members is a type of science. It is a science for running the party and the state. The millions of cadres holding posts in this work should strive to become versed in this science, and thus a large number of them will become experts in doing ideological and political work and will be able to fulfill the task assigned them in the new period.

The idea that the key to the implementation lies in cadres has another even more important implication, that is, our cadres must take the lead in observing and implementing the new party constitution. For a long time, some of our comrades had a kind of erroneous idea. It seemed to them that the ideological and political work meant only how to educate the masses and it seldom struck them that this also meant that leading cadres must first of all receive education. This had already been made very clear in Comrade Yaobang's article entitled "On The Problem Related to Ideological and Political Work." We must correct this erroneous idea. In the northeast, there is a country called Sunwu County where a loud cry for changing the party work style was raised for a long time. But no substantial results were achieved. Later, the criticism of the masses made the comrades of the county CPC committee see their errors. The masses said that the committee spoke loudly about changing the party work style, but it was "anxious only in words and slack in deeds and it only blew the bugle but never began its march a step forward." In accordance with the masses' criticism, the county CPC committee first rectified itself. It sorted out and corrected one by one all the unhealthy practices of the leading group of the committee in the past few years, including using public funds to give banquets, embezzling public property and shifting the rural residence register of their relatives into nonrural residence registers. The committee published all this, making the news available to the whole county. The leadership disclosed without reserve to the masses all its unhealthy practices and how these practices were being corrected and requested the lower levels and the masses to supervise it. This showed a Marxist's breadth of vision and was also the best method for education. By doing this, the leadership, in fact, called on the lower levels and the masses as if saying "I have corrected my errors, now what are you going to do?" However, this time the call was no longer given in vain because it was not a call criticized by the masses for being loud in words but slack in deeds. This method is very effective. Now in Sunwu County, a new situation in party work style and the general mood of the people has already emerged.

Some comrades who have studied the ideological and political work have given the following viewpoint: The argument that can teach people is half formed by words and half formed by deeds. I think that this is a correct viewpoint and it confirms to the argument that those who educate others in Marxism must themselves receive education first. If an educator acts in a way different from what he orally advocates, he criticizes the people from the platform, but is criticized by them behind his back, what right does he have to teach the others? Here I should furthermore mention that the cadres whom we regarded as being the key to the implementation of the party constitution are not only the cadres in charge of ideological and political work, but are also all the cadres, especially the leading cadres of the party at all levels. In July this year, the Shanghai Municipal CPC Committee held a forum of fine party members. At this forum, Comrade Ding Shie, a well-know Shanghai opera actress, presented a very moving idea.

She said: "First, I must treat myself as a party member and I should not treat myself as being an artist first," thus I will be able to overcome the tendency of treating myself as being special and becoming self-important. Here, she has put forth a very poignant question: Should our party members who are engaged in theoretical, educational, scientific and technical or literary and art work, or who hold leading posts, treat themselves first as being party members or first as being experts, well-known personages or leading cadres? Indeed, this question is worth the deep consideration of some of our comrades. In this activity of education in the new party constitution that is being carried out throughout our party, we should remind those comrades who do not observe the party constitution and disregard party discipline that the criteria for a "qualified party member" is the same for any party member and that our party welcomes those of its members who are brave to correct the mistakes they have committed, but will not allow any special party members, who cling to refusing to implement the party constitution, to remain in the organization of the pioneers of the proletariat.

PLA CIRCULAR ON MILITARY, CIVILIAN WORK TRAINING

OW181118 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0705 GMT 18 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, 18 Dec (XINHUA) -- The PLA General Political Department recently issued a circular on the experience of a certain division under the Nanjing PLA units in training competent personnel for both military and local work, calling on all PLA units to pay serious attention to this task of great strategic significance.

The circular says: The 12th party congress called for vigorous efforts to strengthen cultural and ideological construction, develop education of various types and at various levels and train specialized personnel in all fields. Deng Xiaoping, chairman of the Military Commission of the CPC Central Committee, pointed out: "Our armed forces should become more lively. It is not enough to focus only on the needs of the armed forces own development, we must also pay attention to what will be required of cadres and fighters when they are demobilized or transferred to civilian work in the localities." "It is necessary to acquire knowledge in many fields. Training should enable our cadres and fighters not only to fight but to work for socialist construction." Training cadres and fighters to be competent personnel for both military and local work is a major task of strategic significance in building up the armed forces in the new period, and an important task of political work. Party committees and political organs at various levels should make it an important part of the work to create a new situation in army-building and make serious efforts to do it well in conjunction with implementing the guidelines of the 12th party congress.

The circular points out: In training competent personnel for both military and local work, it is necessary to take communist ideology as the guidance and put the stress on army-building. Cadres and fighters should be taught to diligently acquire military, political and general knowledge for building a powerful, modern and regular revolutionary armed force and, on the premise of guaranteeing to do their own jobs well and to fulfill their training and preparedness-against-war tasks, acquire some specialized knowledge and skills which will be needed when they are demobilized and transferred to civilian work in the localities, tempering themselves into revolutionary fighters with lofty ideals, moral integrity, education and a sense of discipline, and competent personnel who can be both soldiers and civilians and can work for both the armed forces and the localities, so that our armed forces will become not only a great wall of steel guarding the socialist motherland but an important force in building the socialist material as well as spiritual civilization.

The circular calls on all units to proceed from the actual situation, adopt many forms, develop more opportunities for learning, make progress in an orderly way and step by step, raise educational standards gradually, and encourage cadres and fighters to study and become educated on their own. Importance should be attached to the learning of general and basic knowledge. It is necessary to strengthen investigation and study, earnestly solve new problems arising in the course of learning, grasp the typical examples and sum up experiences. Special attention should be paid to bringing into play the assistant role of the CYL organizations and the role of the revolutionary army men's committees to do this work conscientiously and well.

LEADERS VISIT PLA AFFORESTATION EXHIBITION

OW161407 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1520 GMT 15 Dec 82

[Excerpts] Beijing, 15 Dec (XINHUA) -- Leading comrades of the central authorities including Wang Zhen, Yang Shangkun, Yang Dezhi and Yu Qiuli today visited the all-army afforestation exhibition.

The broad masses of commanders and fighters of the whole army have launched mass activities of planting trees inside and outside military camps in an extensive way in response to the call issued by Deng Xiaoping, chairman of the Military Commission of the CPC Central Committee, and are determined to implement the "Resolution on Launching Voluntary Tree-Planting Movement by the Whole People" adopted at the Fourth Session of the Fifth NPC.

The central leading comrades gladly visited the exhibition with interest and repeatedly said: "Very good, very good." They encouraged the commanders and fighters to sum up experience, develop their achievements, continue their efforts and make still greater contributions to the afforestation movement in the coming year.

Together with the central leading cadres, Hong Xuezhi, chairman of the all-army afforestation committee, also visited the exhibition.

Write Inscriptions

[Text] Beijing, 16 Dec (XINHUA) -- Deng Xiaoping, chairman of the Military Commission of the CPC Central Committee, and Ye Jianying, Xu Xiangqian, Nie Ringzhen and Yang Shangkun, vice chairmen of the commission, wrote inscriptions for the all-army afforestation meeting, which will summarize achievements in afforestation and commend outstanding army units and individuals. They urged the PLA commanders and fighters to enhance revolutionary vigor and fulfill China's tree planting target.

Comrade Deng Xiaoping's inscription reads: "Plant trees to cover the motherland with greenery for the benefit of future generations."

Comrade Ye Jianying's inscription reads: "Strive to fulfil the grand target of covering the motherland with greenery."

Comrade Xu Xiangqian's inscription reads: "Regard the work of covering the motherland with greenery as a long term strategic task for socialist construction and do it well."

Comrade Nie Rongzhen's inscription reads: "Sum up our experience, carry forward our achievements and strive to create a new situation in afforestation."

Comrade Yang Shangkun's inscription reads: "All PLA commanders and fighters should learn from the outstanding units and individuals in afforestation and play an exemplary leading role."

Wan Li Addresses Meeting

OW171215 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1134 GMT 16 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, 16 Dec (XINHUA) -- Wan Li, vice premier of the State Council and chairman of the Central Greening Committee, praised the PLA for responding to the call of the party Central Committee and the State Council to plant trees everywhere and make the country green and for playing an exemplary, leading role in this regard throughout the country.

Wan Li made the remark at an all-army meeting to sum up experiences in planting trees and commend advanced units and persons in this regard, which opened today.

He said: The PLA has always been a pace setter and file leader in the socialist revolution and construction of the motherland. The "Resolution on Launching a Nationwide Obligatory Tree-Planting Campaign" adopted by the Fourth Session of the Fifth NPC last year called for everyone to voluntarily plant three to five trees a year. The PLA has taken the lead in overfulfilling this task, thus playing the role as a file leader once again. He expressed thanks to all PLA commanders and fighters for this on behalf of the State Council.

This meeting was sponsored by the all-army greening committee. At the meeting, Hong Xuezhi, chairman of the all-army greening committee, read out the inscriptions written by the chairman and vice chairmen of the CPC Central Committee's Military Commission for this meeting.

In their speeches at the meeting, Yang Shanghkun, Yu Qiuli and Yang Dezhi emphatically pointed out: It is a common duty for the people throughout the country to plant trees, and our army should march ahead of others in this regard. First of all, PLA members should play an exemplary, leading role in planting trees and making their base areas green. At the same time, they should play an exemplary, leading role in supporting local people in planting trees. In addition, they should also play an exemplary, leading role in cherishing and protecting forests. Yang Shangkun, Yu Qiuli and Yang Dezhi called on all PLA units to make even greater contributions in 1983 to planting trees everywhere and making the country green.

Present at the meeting were Jiao Ruoyu, chairman of the Beijing greening committee; Yong Wentao, vice chairman of the Central Greening Committee; and responsible persons of various PLA general departments and the Ministry of Forestry.

WANG ZHEN AT YOUTH LITERARY AWARDS CEREMONY

OW180523 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1403 GMT 17 Dec 82

[Excerpts] Beijing, 17 Dec (XINHUA) -- At a meeting held this morning to give "'4 May' youth literature prizes" for short stories, Wang Zhen, member of the CPC Central Committee Political Bureau, cordially encouraged young literary workers to "study and study again, make progress and make more progress because literary workers are an indispensable force in the drive for the four modernizations and the struggle for the realization of communism."

Soliciting of short stories for the "'4 May' youth literature prizes" was sponsored by the editorial department of the ZHONGGUO QINGNIAN journal. The journal's notice soliciting contributions for short stories received an enthusiastic response from large numbers of young people. Since the publication of the notice in May of this year, the journal received more than 51,000 short stories.

When Wang Zhen, a revolutionary of the older generation, He Jingzhi, deputy director of the CPC Central Committee Propaganda Department, as well as noted writers and critics Ding Ling, Feng Mu and Wang Yuanjian presented prize-winning writers with prizes, more than 200 young literary workers, literature lovers and veteran writer members of the appraisal and selection committee gave them warm applause. Those present congratulated the prize-winning writers on their having taken a gratifying step in literary creation.

On behalf of the Chinese Writers' Association, Feng Mu, noted critic and vice chairman of the association, extended warm greetings to the prize-winning writers.

In his speech at the meeting, Chen Haosu, member of the appraisal and selection committee and secretary of the CYL Central Committee, said: Socialist literature should promote heroism and idealism and portray model heroes of our times with communist ideas so as to educate and influence people and to help them understand and build a happier life. He called on literary workers to write more about young people, CYL life and CYL cadres.

Guan Zhihao, director and chief editor of ZHONGGUO QINGNIAN, presided over the meeting, and members of the appraisal and selection committee were present.

SONG RENQIONG ATTENDS LITERARY AWARDS CEREMONY

OW160955 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1511 GMT 15 Dec 82

[Excerpts] Beijing, 15 Dec (XINHUA) -- The six writers who had won the Mao Dun literature prize, holding the bronze medals in their hands, extended greetings to the people who had come to congratulate them. Six hundred people of the literary and art circles attended the first Mao Dun literary prize awarding ceremony in the Great Hall of the People today.

Ba Jin, who has been ill, wrote a message to the awards ceremony. He noted that he was glad to see that a sound foundation has been laid in the field of literary creation and that many talented people are engaged in this field. He and other writers have been studying the best way to improve the quality of long novels. He has earnestly advised budding young writers to familiarize themselves with real life, learn from their predecessors' experiences and turn out literary works that are worthy of the people and can stand the test of history.

Addressing the ceremony, Zhou Yang put forward an important topic for discussion: uphold the principle of letting a hundred flowers blossom and a hundred schools of thought contend and advance the work of art criticism. He said that literature and art can flourish only through discussions and competitions and that the variety of forms and styles of art and a deepgoing study of the problems in art will help writers to have an ease of mind and a sense of social responsibility. He emphasized the need to cherish talented people so that there will be greater breakthroughs in literary creation.

Attending the ceremony were Song Renqiong, Deng Liqun, He Jingzhi, Zhu Muzhi, Zhou Weizhi, Wang Bingnan, Li Yimang, Bai Jiefu, Xiong Fu, Tao Dun, Cao Yu, Ding Ling, Wei Junyi, Feng Zhi, Feng Mu, Ai Qing, Liu Baiyu, Zhang Guanghua, Sha Ding, Chen Qixia, Chen Huangmei and Xie Yongwang.

LEADERS MEET DAIRY FARMING SPECIALISTS

OW171924 Beijing XINHUA in English 1503 GMT 17 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 17 (XINUUA) -- Chinese Communist Party and state leaders Wan Li, Xi Zhongxun, Wang Zhen, Yu Qiuli and Hu Qili this afternoon received in the Great Hall of the People 500 dairy farming specialists from across the country.

The meeting spotlighted the central leadership's concern for milk production now falling behind demand in most provinces.

The specialists had attended yesterday's inauguration meeting of the China Dairy Farming Association. This is a mass organization which, operating under the Ministry of Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Fishery, will coordinate scientific research in China and promote use of both Chinese and foreign scientific research results to increase milk output.

Zhang Linchi, former vice-minister of state farms and land reclamation, was elected president of the association.

China now has more than 700,000 milch cows. Of the 29 provinces, municipalties and autonomous regions on the Chinese mainland, supply of milk is ample only in Xinjiang. Heilongjiang and Fujian.

PLA DEPARTMENTS ISSUE FAMILY PLANNING DOCUMENTS

OW182318 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1200 GMT 18 Dec 82

[Text] With the approval of the Military Commission of the CPC Central Committee, the General Staff Headquarters, the General Political Department and the General Logistics Department of the PLA recently jointly issued two documents. One is entitled: "The Division of Responsibilities Between the Army's Family Planning Leading Groups at All Levels and the Relevant Departments." The other is entitled: "Temporary Provisions on Several Issues Regarding Family Planning in the Army."

The three general departments have also issued a circular on the implementation of these two documents, calling on all party committees to firmly strengthen their leadership over family planning work. The circular points out: All departments concerned must closely cooperate with each other to take a firm grip on family planning work and strive to create a new situation in doing such work in the army.

MAIN POINTS OF FAMILY PLANNING MONTH CIRCULAR

OW180305 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1306 GMT 9 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, 9 Dec (XINHUA) -- The Propaganda Department of the CPC Central Committee and eight other organizations issued to the whole country a "Circular on Carrying Out National Family Planning Propaganda Month Activities" on 6 December. At the same time, they also issued "The Main Points in Propaganda for Implementing the Guidelines of the 12th CPC National Congress and Further Controlling Population Growth." Excerpts of "the main points" are as follows:

1. Family Planning Is a Basic Policy of Our State

The 12th CPC National Congress has decided on family planning as a basic policy of our state. This is an important strategic policy decision that the congress made after summing up our experience and lessons with our population problem in the 3 decades and more since the founding of the People's Republic.

For a considerable period after the founding of the PRC, we put undue emphasis on the advantages of a large population. As a result, our population has grown excessively fast and incommensurately with our national economic development. In the past 32 years, our population has increased by 459,400,000 persons. The increase is double the population of the United States or four times the population of Japan. During the period we made tremendous development in the national economy. Comparing 1981 with 1953, our GNP rose by 450 percent, but our per capita income increased by only 220 percent; our total grain output increased by 94 percent, but per capita grain increased by only 14 percent. Although our total grain output has exceeded that of the United States, our per capita grain is far below that of the United States and it is also below the world average of 800 jin per person. From 1953 to 1981, our total consumption funds (the national expenditures on the people's livelihood) increased by 390 percent. The increase was not small, but our per capita consumption increased by only 190 percent.

We have recently had a very large increase in rural population, causing the farmland area per capita to diminish year by year. A large population with insufficient farmland has become a very acute problem in the countryside. The per capita food ration and cash income among the rural people are also comparatively low.

The urban residents are also encountering great difficulties in housing, transportation, education, employment and public health.

China's population will exceed 1.3 billion by the end of this century if we let it grow at the average annual growth rate of the last 9 years. Moreover, the total number of births in China is now at its peak and the peak will last as long as 15 years. Therefore, to enforce family planning will be a long-term and strenuous task. It is entirely correct for the party and the government to make it a basic policy of our state.

2. We Must Strive To Keep Our Population Within 1.2 Billion by the End of This Century

To keep our population within 1.2 billion is an indispensable and important condition for achieving the objective of quadrupling our total annual industrial and agricultural output value by the end of this century. If we cannot effectively control the population growth, our industrial and agricultural growth will be offset by the over-rapid population growth, directly affecting our investment for expanding reproduction and causing difficulties in achieving the objective of quadrupling output value. According to the national census data, in the 18 years since 1964, 30 percent of our increased means of subsistence and 52.7 percent of our grain increase were consumed by the newly-added population.

We must keep our annual population growth rate under 9.5 per thousand in the next 18 years if we are to keep China's population within 1.2 billion by the end of this century. However, our present situation is that our population is large, with young people accounting for a large proportion -- 500 million people, or 50 percent of the total, being persons under 21. From now on, some 11 million young couples will reach the marriageable and child-bearing age each year. Therefore, we must popularize the practice of one child for each couple, strictly control second births and resolutely prevent additional births. We should also promote family planning among national minorities, but we may relax the demands for them as appropriate.

The marriageable age stipulated by "the marriage law" is the minimum marriageable age. In order to enable young people and study in a still better way, slow down the population growth and improve the quality of the population, we should continue to advocate late marriage, late childbirth, fewer births and eugenics. Family planning should be achieved primarily by contraception. Contraception is a responsibility shared by both husbands and wives. It is a lopsided view to regard contraception as solely the responsibility of women. We should resolutely avoid marriage among close relatives because it produces many harmful effects. We should pay attention to examinations for hereditary diseases so that the children will grow well and healthily into persons of ability.

3. Enforcing Family Planning Is an Important Task of Building Socialist Spiritual Civilization

Family planning is an important content of the socialist spiritual civilization with communist ideology at its core. We can consciously practice family planning only if we foster communist ideals and morality and break with old thinking, old habits and old traditional ideas and at the same time constantly raise our educational level and popularize scientific knowledge and population theories. We should all strive to raise our consciousness of communist ideology, overcome the old view that males are better than females and do away with the decadent idea that "only sons are the successors." In some localities today, women are left out in the cold by the whole family if they bear daughters. Some of them are even persecuted. This is impermissible because men and women are equal in our country and women's economic, political and cultural rights are protected by law. We should understand the truth that "the times have changed and now men and women are the same." If we have borne a daughter, we should also take good care of her.

Someone says that we are now "farming our own land, eating our own grain and if we bear more children, we ourselves will raise them." It is wrong to view childbirth as a private business. In our socialist country, we have to rely on the state and the collective to raise a child. For instance, we cannot solve alone such problems as a child's education, medical care and daily necessities and his employment when he grows up. We will inevitably increase the burdens of the state and the collective if we have more children.

At present, some people in some rural areas think that "a family must have more children in order to become rich." This is not correct either. A child cannot become a producer until he is at least 15 or 16. He is primarily a consumer before this age. Therefore, it is unrealistic to depend on more children to become rich. The problem of a large population with insufficient farmland has become very acute in our country. If the population grows further, the per capita land share will become even smaller. Therefore, it is impossible to rely on more family members to become rich.

4. CPC and CYL Members and Cadres at All Levels Must Take the Lead in Practicing Family Planning

All CPC and CYL members and all cadres must foster a correct outlook on marriage and childbirth, resolutely implement the principles and policies concerning family planning and take the lead in practicing family planning. They should educate and urge their relatives to marry late and exercise birth control. At the same time, they should take the initiative to understand the thinking of the masses around them, actively and patiently publicize and promote family planning among the masses and lead the masses in enforcing family planning well together. This is a solemn demand for family planning set by the party for CPC and CYL members and cadres. This is also the key to whether or not we can make a success of family planning work. We surely can achieve the objective of keeping our population within 1.2 billion by the end of this century if the whole nation, from the leadership to the masses, has a unified understanding, makes joint efforts and resolutely implements the basic national policy of practicing family planning laid down by the 12th CPC National Congress.

BANK ISSUES THIRD QUARTER MONETARY STATISTICS

OW190138 Beijing XINHUA in English 0123 GMT 19 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 19 (XINHUA) -- China's monetary statistics for the third quarter of 1982 was published today in the 24th issue of BANKING IN CHINA, a financial monthly published by the People's Bank of China.

China's gold reserves at the end of September were 12.67 million troy ounces, 0.13 million less than at the end of the third quarter of 1981, and foreign exchange reserves were 9,228 million U.S. dollars, 5,410 million more.

Total deposits amounted to 209,377 million yuan (RMB) at the end of the third quarter, 26,699 million more than at the end of the third quarter of 1981.

Total loans came to 276,671 million yuan, 28,697 million more than at the end of the third quarter of 1981. Of this, short and medium term loans for buying equipment were 12,135 million yuan, 5,625 million yuan more than at the end of the third quarter of 1981. Industrial and commercial loans to collective and individual enterprises in cities and towns went up to 11,381 million yuan, 2,510 million yuan more than in the same period of last year.

Deposits in rural credit cooperatives by the end of the third quarter were 31,033 million yuan, 6,682 million yuan more than at the end of the 1981 third quarter, and loans from the credit cooperatives came to 16,588 million yuan, 3,445 million yuan more than in the same period of last year.

1982 PLAN FOR POWER OUTPUT PREFULFILLED

OW201115 Beijing XINHUA in English 0839 GMT 20 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 20 (XINHUA) -- China topped its 1982 plan for power output 12 days ahead of time, the Ministry of Water Resources and Electric Power announced here today.

The ministry said that by December 19, China had produced 313.6 billion kWh of electricity. The ministry estimates that compared with 1981, the overall 1982 output of electricty will rise by 5.6 percent.

The annual plan for hydro-electricity was completed 85 days ahead of schedule with an output of 70.2 billion kWh -- 15.2 billion kWh more than the target, which is equivalent to nine million tons of coal, the ministry added.

Power generating equipment with a total capacity of about two million kW is to be added this year, the ministry said.

OIL PROSPECTING, PRODUCTION PLANNED TO INCREASE

OW181810 Beijing XINHUA in English 1543 GMT 18 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 18 (XINHUA) -- China will step up its search for petroleum to fuel the country's economy -- set to quadruple the gross industrial and agricultural output value by the turn of this century -- according to Xia Guozhi, vice-minister of geology and minerals. Speaking at a petroleum geology conference being held in Beijing, he said that the target for the survey is to locate sufficient reserves to produce 200 million tons of oil by the year of 2,000, double the present output. "This is possible," he told participants at the meeting.

Such a goal means extending the present survey from continental strata to marine ones, from Mesozoic and Cenozoic to Palaeozoic era, from north to south, and from eastern coastal areas to western parts of China.

Moreover, the vice-minister added, drilling will be deeper, beyond 3,000 meters, and the search will shift from outcrops and shallow, simple oil and gas bearing structures to complex ones.

54-year-old Xia Guozhi, an expert in geophysical prospecting, pointed out this would be the second round of large-scale oil prospecting conducted in the country. China began oil prospecting following nationwide liberation in 1949. Since then, Chinese geologists have located more than 300 sedimentary basins, with sedimentary rocks covering 4.5 million square kilometers. Over 270 oil and gas fields have been found, pushing China's annual oil production from some 100,000 tons in the early years after liberation to the present 100 million tons.

COAL MINE SAFETY CONFERENCE OPENS IN BEIJING

OW181854 Beijing XINHUA in English 1634 GMT 18 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 18 (XINHUA) -- A total of 625 million yuan (about 312 million U.S. dollars) has been allocated to improve safety in the country's coal mines since 1979 when the readjustment of China's national economy began.

Ye Qing, Chinese vice-minister of coal industry, announced the figure at a national conference on safe operation of coal mines, which opened here today. He said the amount was more than 11 times the 1978 figure.

Some 380 people who are responsible for the safety operations of coal mines in various parts of the country are attending the conference.

The vice-minister said that since 1979, the country's coal mines have completed or are still working on 1,143 major safety projects, which have resulted in fewer accidents each year.

In the 1979-1982 period, Ye Qing said, coal mines across China restored, improved or introduced safety regulations and rules. Mines have also introduced a safety responsibility system to the leaders and technicians and engineers at all levels.

In the four years, he said, training courses were sponsored on safety information and safety regulations and rules. More than 700,000 people from the country's major coal mines received such training and they included 80,000 coal production leaders and 260,000 technicians.

To strengthen guidance over the safety efforts, the vice-minister added, the Ministry of Coal Industry set up a safety supervision department in 1980 and similar agencies were established in various parts of the country. Today, the state owned mines have a total of 160,000 miner-supervisors.

CHINA DAILY EDITOR DISCUSSES NUCLEAR POLICY

HK210207 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 21 Dec 82 p 4

["Letter to the Editor" column: "The Question of Nuclear Arms"]

[Text] Editor:

China's position that both the US and the USSR should drastically cut their armaments is admirable, but its refusal to change its own nuclear weapons policies until they do does not serve the cause of peace.

The only use of nuclear weapons is to deter one's opponents from using them against oneself. China has sufficient weapons for this purpose. There is no need for China to produce one more nuclear weapon or to develop new types of weapons. Thus, there is no need to test any more nuclear weapons.

Atmospheric nuclear weapons testing produces fallout. It causes cancers in a percentage of the population that it falls upon. This has been proven by the great increase in cancers in the populations downwind from the U.S.'s atmospheric nuclear tests in the 1950s and 1960s.

China, by continuing to test its weapons in the atmosphere shows a disregard for the health of its own citizens and those of other countries on which the fallout might drop (often the U.S.).

If China would announce a cessation of testing and a freeze on current nuclear weapons it would add great weight to its calls, and those of the rest of the world, for the two superpowers to limit their own nuclear arsenals. The people of the world are calling on the superpowers to stop this madness; China could well serve the cause of world peace by taking these steps without any sacrifice on her part.

[signed] Douglas Foxvog

Hefei Polytechnical University

Hefei, Anhui.

Dear Mr Douglas Foxvog:

We welcome your letter which discusses a major international problem.

The Chinese Government has always stood for the complete banning and thorough destruction of nuclear weapons to be followed by the prohibition of nuclear tests.

As a first step, an agreement should be reached by all the nuclear states not to use nuclear weapons. Pending such an agreement, each nuclear state should, without attaching any conditions, undertake not to use nuclear weapons against non-nuclear states, and not to be the first to use such weapons against each other. It is quite clear that to ban nuclear weapons, is the most realistic step for lessening the danger of war.

At present the two superpowers, on account of their long-drawn-out arms race, possess over 95 per cent of the world's nuclear arsenal, which they use as a tool for expansion and hegemony.

This constitutes a serious threat to world peace and the safety of the people all over the world. Thus the threat of nuclear war can be eliminated only if the two superpowers take the lead in reducing their nuclear arms.

In 1978, the "Final Document" passed by the first special session of the UN General Assembly on disarmament pointed out that "countries with the most important nuclear arsenals" should "bear special responsibility" toward disarmament. If no distinction is made and all countries are required to bear the same responsibility, then to limit the development of the defence capabilities of the others against the nuclear threat of the two superpowers -- whose nuclear arsenals greatly surpass theirs -- will obviously help these two powers maintain and strengthen their nuclear monopoly, conduct nuclear blackmail and prepare for nuclear war, thus seriously impairing world peace and international safety.

China was compelled to develop nuclear weapons for defence. We have conducted a very limited number of tests since 1964. In the past three years we have conducted only one. When we conducted nuclear tests, we adopted many measures to prevent as much as possible the pollution of the environment. But according to data published by the Atomic Energy Commission, from 1945 to 1969, nuclear test fission in the earth's atmosphere was equivalent to a total of 203.24 megatons of explosives; and 94.55 per cent of this came from tests by the United States and Soviet Union. Currently the United States and the Soviet Union have turned to underground nuclear testing, but mishaps often cause a great deal of radioactive pollution.

You wish that China would declare a cessation of nuclear testing and a freeze on current nuclear weapons so as to push the two superpowers to limit their nuclear arsenals. We thank you for your trust in China and for your evaluation of China's role. But we believe that the arms race between the two superpowers is determined by their foreign policies of world hegemony. In order to carry out such policies, they must have military superiority. Chinese initiative in arms reduction would in no way affect their arms race.

China declared in 1964 that it will not be the first to use nuclear weapons. In the 18 years since that time our nuclear testing has been very limited. Nor have we taken part in the arms race.

In June 1982 at the second special session of the UN General Assembly devoted to disarmament, we pledged "three stops and one decrease" (see Huang Hua's speech), which amply showed the good faith of the Chinese Government in international peace and safety, and in nuclear disarmament and a nuclear test ban. But the superpowers have no intention of restraining themselves; they are still intensifying their nuclear effort. Nevertheless, China will continue to align itself with the majority of the world's peace-loving people in our effort to attain the common goal.

37TH UN GENERAL ASSEMBLY SESSION ENDS 21 DEC

OW220236 Beijing XINHUA in English 0228 GMT 22 Dec 82

[Text] United Nations, December 21 (XINHUA) -- The U.N. General Assembly, concluded its three-month regular meetings of the 37th session today, stressed its role in maintaining peace and security of the world.

Many small and medium-sized countries expressed deep concern over the deteriorating political and economic situation of the world.

They directly and indirectly accused the two superpowers of rivalry for world hegemony regardless of the interests of other nations.

President of the General Assembly Imre Hollai pointed out in his closing statement today, that the session "has reflected the tensions, divisions, and dangerous tendencies that characterize the contemporary international scene."

Imre Hollai told a press conference this morning that the General Assembly had resisted the temptation to "become an arena where the spirit of confrontation rules" and had made it possible to discuss a number of items and to reach conclusions that are "forward-looking" and "constructive."

But the president also said: "The session has not been immune from the tensions and confrontational stance that are, regrettably, so apparent on the international scene."

UN SECRETARY GENERAL DELIVERS YEAREND MESSAGE

OW220244 Beijing XINHUA in English 0232 GMT 22 Dec 82

[Text] United Nations, December 21 (XINHUA) -- U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar today called for efforts to make the United Nations an "effective instrument for the maintenance of international peace and security."

In an end-of-the-year message, Perez de Cuellar described 1982 as a year full of conflicts and disruption. Stressing the importance of international co-operation, he said, "We must use our present capacities to the fullest and develop new techniques of co-operation and negotiation, when necessary, to take the place of violent confrontation."

He noted that protagonists in the conflicts should make critical decisions to solve their problems even if they refuse to communicate with one another at the beginning.

On world-wide economic recession, the secretary-general said: "We must initiate a decisive turn in international economic policies and structures designed to foster, through co-operative effort, economic development and a recovery and re-organization of the world economy."

In conclusion, he called on the world community to create "a better world for ourselves and our children."

UN CALLS FOR USSR WITHDRAWAL FROM AFGHANISTAN

HK200651 Beijing BEIJING REVIEW in English No. 50, 13 Dec 82 pp 6-7

[Article by Ren Yan: "Call for Immediate Withdrawal of Soviet Troops From Afghanistan']

[Text] After three days of heated debate, the 37th UN General Assembly on November 29 adopted by an overwhelming majority a resolution calling for the immediate withdrawal of foreign troops from Afghanistan.

The resolution, the fourth of its kind since Soviet troops invaded Afghanistan in 1978, was approved by a vote of 114 to 21 with 13 abstentions. It once again showed the international community's strong demand for an end to the military aggression and occupation of Afghanistan by the Soviet Union.

Common Condemnation

Most of the international community had condemned Moscow for its invasion and cruel suppression of the Afghan people and has strongly rejected the Soviet pretexts and rationalizations for its aggressive action. Many UN members have also stressed that the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan is the root cause of the tensions in southwest Asia that have made this region a new focal point of international conflict. The Soviet Government has obstinately refused to implement the UN resolutions demanding Soviet withdrawl from Afghanistan. It also refuses to abandon its southward thrust strategy. Its invasion not only violates the principles of the UN Charter, but also seriously jeopardizes the peace and security of the world, of southwest Asia in particular.

The question of Afghanistan is, in essence, one of armed invasion and military occupation of a Third World, non-aligned and Islamic country by a superpower. Representatives of some countries said that aggression by a larger military power against a weak and small neighbouring country can no longer be tolerated.

Correct Political Settlement

One current trend worth noting is the tricks by which the Soviet Union is attempting to extricate itself from its Afghan quagmire. By emphasizing other major world events it tries to draw attention away from the Afghan question, hoping the international community will forget this issue. On the other hand, it glibly proposes a "political settlement" to the Afghan problem as a ruse to disguise its intended permanent occupation of Aghanistan.

The Soviet representative to the UN described the August 24, 1981 proposal of the Karmal regime as a "sound basis" and "opportunity" for political settlement of the Afghan question. However, this proposal calls the foreign invasion an "internal matter of Afghanistan" which cannot be discussed by the United Nations. The Soviet representative also said that there must be a guarantee against outside aggression before the Soviet Union can withdraw its troops from Afghanistan.

This Soviet scheme was immediately exposed and rejected by the representatives of many countries who pointed out that the prerequisite and only correct way to any political settlement is the immediate withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan. The Afghan people, they argued, must be allowed to exercise their right to self-determination without external interference and pressure and to restore Afghanistan's independence and non-aligned status. At the same time, Afghan refugees must be allowed to return home safely.

Afghan People Supported

The growing resistance forces of the Afghan people are seriously hurting the Soviet invaders. It is imperative for all peace-loving and justice-upholding states and peoples of the world to continue to support the Afghan people's struggle against aggression. The Soviet Union must be pressured to implement the UN resolutions on the Afghan issue.

Afghanistan is a neighbour of China. The Soviet invasion of Afghanistan and deployment of its troops along the Sino-African border constitute a grave threat to China's security. To end the suffering of the Afghan people and restore peace and stability in southwest Asia, the Chinese people, who firmly support the Afghan people's struggle against the Soviet hegemonists, together with all peace-loving peoples of the world continue to press for an early implementation of the UN resolutions on the Afghan problem.

SOVIET WAR CRIMES IN AFGHANISTAN CONDEMNED

OW220155 Beijing XINHUA in English 1514 GMT 21 Dec 82

[Text] Paris, December 20 (XINHUA) -- The People's Permanent Tribunal, made up of leading lawyers, historians and scientists from many countries, today condemned the Soviet Union for violating the rules of war in Afghanistan.

The tribunal, after hearing testimony in the past five days, concluded that Soviet soldiers tortured their captives and killed their prisoners of war as well as civilian Afghans.

A report submitted by an investigation mission said Soviet troops burned alive 105 villagers last September 13.

From evidence collected so far, the use of chemical weapons by the Russians in Afghanistan could not be dismissed, the tribunal said.

The tribunal is moral body set up in Italy in June 1976. It condemned the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan at an earlier sitting in Stockholm in May 1981.

UN RESOLUTION URGES END TO NAMIBIAN OCCUPATION

OW220422 Beijing XINHUA in English 1110 GMT 21 Dec 82

[Text] United Nations, December 20 (XINHUA) -- The U.N. General Assembly today adopted with an overwhelming majority a resolution calling for an immediate end to South Africa's illegal occupation of Namibia.

The draft recommended by the U.N. Council for Namibia was adopted by a vote of 120 to 0 with 23 abstentions. China, together with most of the Third World countries, voted for it. Most Western countries abstained.

The resolution, entitled "Situation in Namibia Resulting From the Illegal Occupation of the Territory by South Africa", strongly condemns South Africa for obstructing the implementation of U.N. resolutions concerning Namibia.

It criticizes certain Western countries for supporting South Africa and creating obstacles to the early realization of independence of Namibia.

The resolution calls upon the international community to give full support and assistance to the Namibian people in their struggle against South Africa's occupation.

The resolution reaffirms "the inalienable right of the people of Namibia to self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia", "as well as the legitimacy of their struggle by all means, including armed struggle, against the illegal occupation of their territory by South Africa."

"The South West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO), the national liberation movement of Namibia, is the sole and authentic representative of the Namibian people," it says. It declares that all attempts by South Africa to annex Walvis Bay and the offshore islands of Namibia are "illegal, null and void".

It demands that all assistance by certain Western countries to South Africa in the political, military and cultural fields "be immediately terminated."

The resolution also strongly condemns South Africa for its persistent acts of subversion and aggression against Angola, including the occupation of a part of Angola's territory. Today's resolution also urges the Security Council to immediately impose comprehensive mandatory sanctions against South Africa.

Along with this resolution, other four resolutions concerning the question of Namibia were also adopted today by the General Assembly. One of them condemns the attempts to link the independence of Namibia with totally extraneous issues, in particular the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola.

UN FAILS TO LAUNCH ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT TALKS

OW211107 Beijing XINHUA in English 0821 GMT 21 Dec 82

[Text] United Nations, December 20 (XINHUA) -- The United Nations today announced that it had still not succeeded in launching global negotiations on international economic cooperation for development.

The U.N. General Assembly this afternoon accepted a proposal by its President Imre Hollai to keep open its agenda item on the launching of global negotiations to allow informal consultations to continue after the suspension of the session tomorrow.

It decided that it would reconvene on short notice to any agreements that might emerge from those consultations. Many representatives, particularly those from developing countries, regretted that it had been impossible to overcome the deadlock concerning the launching of global negotiations at this session.

They pointed out that the prime reason for the deadlock was the stubborn position of some Western nations against the establishment of a new world economic order and their unwillingness to promote the solution of the economic problems of the developing countries.

JI PENGFEI MEETS NEW THAI, NIGER ENVOYS

OW211257 Beijing XINHUA in English 1210 GMT 21 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 21 (XINHUA) -- Chinese State Councillor Ji Pengfei met here this afternoon on separate occasions with Orachun Tanaphong, new Thai ambassador to China, and Pierre Aussiel, new Niger ambassador to China.

U.S. SAYS ANDROPOV MISSILE PROPOSAL UNACCEPTABLE

OW220742 Beijing XINHUA in English 0734 GMT 22 Dec 82

[Text] Washington, December 21 (XINHUA) -- The United States today rejected the latest Soviet proposal on reducing intermediate-range nuclear force (INF) as "unacceptable". Only hours after Soviet leader Yuriy Andropov made his offer to reduce Soviet medium-range missiles in the Soviet European territories to the number possessed by France and Britain, the State Department said in a statement it is "unacceptable because it would leave the Soviets with several hundred warheads on SS-20s, while denying us the means to deter that threat."

The statement, read by spokesman John Hughes, indicated that the U.S. still insists on President Reagan's "zero option" proposal under which the Soviet Union must dismantle all its SS-20 missiles in exchange for the halting of the NATO plan to deploy Pershing 2 and cruise missiles in Europe. The statement said, "We cannot accept that the U.S. should agree to allow the Soviets superiority over us because the British and French maintain their own national deterrent forces."

The Soviet Union has deployed more than 300 highly mobile SS-20 missiles, each with 3 warheads, together with hundreds of older SS-4s and SS-5s also capable of hitting Western Europe.

"Nor can we agree", the statement added, "that INF limits should apply only in Europe." "This would leave the Soviets free to threaten our Asian friends as well as to maintain a highly mobile missile force that can be moved at any time into position to threaten NATO," it said. "In sum, we hope the Soviets will now come to realize that we cannot give up the means to counter the nuclear threat they post to NATO unless the threat is eliminated altogether," the statement said.

In a background briefing on the U.S. response to the new Soviet proposal, a senior U.S. official said Andropov's proposal is an attempt to drive a wedge into U.S.-European relations. "It is an attempt to get the U.S. nuclear presence out of Europe, and then take advantage of the consequences," he said.

Commenting on Andropov's call for an agreement with the U.S. to renounce the first use of both nuclear and conventional weapons, the official said it was "a purely rhetorical statement."

REAGAN URGES FOREIGN TROOPS TO LEAVE LEBANON

OW190925 Beijing XINHUA in English 0813 GMT 19 Dec 82

[Text] Washington, December 18 (XINHUA) -- President Reagan today urged all foreign countries to withdraw their troops from Lebanon, saying that the main thing now is "to get the armies of occupation" out of that country. In a radio interview, Reagan said that before he sent special envoy Philip Habib back to the Middle East, he told him, "we're no longer talking about a peace plan, we're talking about action."

"Let's get the forces withdrawn so that we can proceed with the other steps" of the U.S. Middle East proposal, he said.

In a speech broadcast before the interview, Reagan said, "The United States will redouble its efforts to restore sovereignty to Lebanon, and to renew negotiations for an end to turmoil and bloodshed in the Middle East."

The White House confirmed yesterday that President Reagan has sent a letter to Israeli Prime Minister Menahem Begin, the details of which were not disclosed. It was reported to be an attempt to prompt faster action by Israel in withdrawing its troops from Lebanon.

REAGAN, JORDAN'S HUSAYN DISCUSS MIDEAST PEACE

OW221005 Beijing XINHUA in English 0728 GMT 22 Dec 82

[Text] Washington, December 21 (XINHUA) -- U.S. President Ronald Reagan and King Husayn of Jordan met here today to exploit possibilities for Jordan to join Egypt and Isreal in the Middle East peace talks. Their talks in the White House focused on the peace process in the Middle East. It is known that Reagan believed Jordan could play a key role in moving his September 1 initiative forward, and he hoped chat Jordan could enter a broader peace process as soon as possible.

A senior U.S. official said he did not expect a "dramatic breakthrough or announcement" about Jordan's intention whether to join the negotiations or not.

After the meeting President Reagan said that he and King Husayn "shared a sense of urgency" to succeed at the commitment to a lasting peace in the area. Reagan also said during the meeting Husayn reviewed his efforts to help in the peace process, "particularly his effort to encourage the Palestinians to join him in efforts to take bold steps toward peace."

Husayn before leaving the White House, reaffirmed his "commitment for the establishment of a just and durable peace in the Middle East" and, promised to "continue to do our utmost" to move the peace process forward.

According to the U.S. official, the king made it clear during the meeting that continued Israeli settlement activity was viewed as "irreputable evidence of the unwillingness of the Israeli Government to enter negotiations in good faith."

Close advisors to both Reagan and Husayn will continue their discussions today and tomorrow and the two leaders themselves will meet again later this week before the king leaves Washington Thursday.

U.S. VOTES AGAINST BANNING HARMFUL EXPORTS

HK220832 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 22 Dec 82 p 6

["International Jottings" by He Jiang [0149 3068]: "Inglorious Isolation"]

[Text] By a 146-to-1 vote without abstentions, the UN General Assembly adopted a resolution urging various countries not to export prohibited goods that are harmful to the health or environment of other countries. The only country that cast a negative vote was the United States.

It was not accidental that the United States took such a stand. A case was exposed in the United States in 1977: A U.S. manufacturer exported a type of children's wear treated with chemicals. The sale of such goods had already been banned in the United States. Later, President Carter issued an administrative decree in order to prevent the occurrance of accidents in the future. However, President Reagan maintained that this was a "unnecessary decision."

This was tantamount to the U.S. Government's announcement to the world that it would persist in exporting goods that are harmful to the people of other countries. The U.S. Government, bent upon profits, does not care whether other people live or die. The United States has gone so far as to bring such an attitude of benefiting itself at the expense of others to the forum of the United Nations in such an arrogant way. No wonder the United States has fallen into a passive position. But this is an inglorious isolation.

U.S. FARMERS 'BESET WITH DIFFICULTIES'

OW220157 Beijing XINHUA in English 1534 GMT 21 Dec 82

["Roundup: U.S. Farmers in Difficulties" — XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, December 21 (XINHUA) -- The United States has reaped a bumper harvest this year, but many American farmers are beset with difficulties. In recent years, some major grain-producing nations have gathered good harvests and grain output in the world has increased considerably. Meanwhile, as the major capitalist countries are gripped by recession, their need for grain has declined sharply. In addition, because some developed countries have shifted their crisis onto others, many developing countries are having financial difficulties and have to cut their imports. Therefore, large quantities of grain are kept in stock. According to the U.S. magazine TIME, 216 million tonnes of grain have been overstocked in the world in 1982. The overstocking is more serious in the United States due to the unfavourable impact of the rise of the exchange rates of the dollar. One-third of U.S. corns, half of its beans and two-thirds of its wheat are for export, but by the end of fiscal 1982, which ended on September 30, the export of U.S. farm products declined by 4.7 billion dollars as compared with the previous year.

The second problem confronting American farmers is the heavy losses they suffer in production. The large amounts of overstocked grain have forced down grain prices. It was reported that by October this year, grain prices in the U.S. have fallen seven times within 15 months. As many of the small and medium American farmers rely heavily on loans in running their farms, the high interest rate and soaring costs in irrigation and machinery have boosted the cost of grain production by a big margin. According to the estimates of the U.S. National Association of Wheat Growers, the average cost of wheat production in the United States is 224 dollars per ton this year -- more than double the selling price. The U.S. Agricultural Department assumed that the selling price of cereal crops were no more than two-thirds of their production costs. This year, the net income of the 2.4 million American farms is estimated at 15 billion dollars, the lowest since the Great Depression of the 30's, after taking inflation into account. With smaller incomes and swelling expenditures, many farmers are heavily in debt. The gross borrowing of American farmers is reported to have reached 200 billion dollars already. As many farmers could not repay their debts, the number of debtors in arrears have tripled to 218,000 in the last three years, with debts totalling more than 14 billion dollars. During the first 10 months of fiscal 1982, nearly 7,000 farmers have gone bankrupt. The so-called surplus crisis in U.S. grain production is a product of the inherent contradictions of capitalism and cannot be solved fundamentaly despite various moderating measures taken by the U.S. Government. In fact, the U.S. Agricultural Department has predicted that 1983 will be another ominous year for American farmers.

ANDROPOV SAYS USSR TO COUNTER U.S. MISSILES

OW211628 Beijing XINHUA in English 1616 GMT 21 Dec 82

[Text] Moscow, December 21 (XINHUA) -- Soviet leader Yuriy Andropov declared today that the Soviet Union would counter the U.S. challenge by deploying corresponding Soviet weapon systems.

In his speech marking the 60th anniversary of the founding of the Soviet Union, he said: "We will be compelled to counter the challenge of the American side by deploying corresponding weapons systems of our own -- an analagous missile to counter the MX missiles, and our own long-range cruise missile, which we are now testing, to counter the U.S. long-range cruise missile."

U.S. policy has escalated world tension to a dangerous level, said Andropov, who became Soviet Communist Party general secretary after Leonid Brezhnev died Nov. 10. "No program of further (U.S.) arms buildup will ever force the Soviet Union to make unilateral concessions," he said.

Talking on the medium-range Euromissiles, Andropov said Moscow would "retain in Europe only as many missiles as are kept there by Britain and France."

The Soviet Union would reduce one-fourth of its strategic weapons, but the U.S. should make corresponding reduction, he added. "Along with this there must also be an accord on reducing to equal levels on both sides the number of medium-range nuclear-delivery aircraft stationed in this region by the USSR and NATO countries," he said.

On domestic affairs, Andropov said the Soviet nationalities issue has not disappeared from the daily agenda and called on the Soviets to combat supremacy of certain nationalities and the disrespect of other nationalities. Andropov made his speech at a Kremlin gathering attended by delegates from 15 Soviet republics and delegations from various countries. Chinese Ambassador Yang Shouzheng attended the meeting at invitation.

ULANHU, HUANG HUA AT SOVIET ENVOY'S RECEPTION

OW221159 Beijing XINHUA in English 1157 GMT 22 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 22 (XINHUA) -- Soviet Ambassador to China Ilya Sergeyevich Shcherbakov gave a reception at the embassy here this afternoon in celebration of the 60th anniversary of the founding of the Soviet Union.

Among the guests were Ulanhu, vice-chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress, Huang Hua, state councillor, Qian Qichen, vice-minister of foreign affairs, Xu Xin, deputy chief of the General Staff of the Chinese People's Liberation Army, and Wei Yuming, vice-minister of foreign economic relations and trade. Diplomatic envoys of various countries to China were also present.

NEW SOVIET LEADERSHIP APPOINTMENTS DISCUSSED

OW211317 Beijing Russian to the USSR 1800 GMT 19 Dec 82

[Text] In the little over a month since Andropov succeeded Brezhnev as the general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, the Soviet Union has replaced some of the central apparatus cadre workers [kadrovykh].

As reported by TASS on 17 December, Fedorchuk, who in May of this year replaced Andropov in the position of the chairman of the USSR Committee for State Security, has been appointed minister of internal affairs.

Shchelokov, who for 16 years occupied the post of minister of internal affairs, is released from the responsibilities of that office in connection with his transfer to another job. Chebrikov, who has worked as a deputy chairman of the KGB since 1968, has been appointed its chairman.

Before this, Tyazhelnikov, chief of the Propaganda Department of the CPSU Central Committee, was released from that position. He was replaced by Stukalin, former chairman of the state committee for publishing houses, printing plants and the book trade.

Pastukhov, former secretary of the Komsomol Central Committee has been appointed a chairman of this committee. Mishin has been elected first secretary of the Komsomol Central Committee. Pavlovskiy, minister of the USSR railways, was removed from his post. He has been replaced by Konarev, former first deputy minister. Khitrov, minister of rural construction, has retired. His post has been taken by Danilenko, first deputy minister.

Kapitsa, chief of the First Far Eastern Department of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Komplektov, chief of the United States of America Department of the USSR Ministry of Foreign Affairs have been appointed deputy minister of foreign affairs of the Soviet Union.

According to other Soviet press reports a lot of leaders, including members of the Bureau and Secretariat of the republics' Central Committee and ministers of governments were subjected to personal criticism at recent plenums of the party's Central Committee of different republics.

USSR ECONOMY PROGRESSES AT SLOWER PACE

OW220118 Beijing XINHUA in English 1940 GMT 21 Dec 82

[Text] Moscow, December 21 (XINHUA) -- The Soviet economy has made some progress in 1982 but it moves at a slower pace than last year, according to Moscow press reports.

National income has increased by 2 percent to reach 460 billion rubles (638.9 billion U.S. dollars), and industrial output value by 2.8 percent to reach 722 billion rubles (1,002.8 billion U.S. dollars). Both percentages are smaller than the respective planned figures of 3 and 4.7 percent.

Natural gas, agromachinery, meters and instrument, auto-machine tools and their parts, TV sets and furniture increased by more than 5 percent in the first 10 months of 1982 than the same period of last year. However, the output of coal, chemical fertilizer, steel and cement dropped in the same period, according to official statistics.

The output of grain, oil-bearing crops, potatoes and beet roots has surpassed that in low-yielding 1981, but it falls far short of the planned quotas. Grain output is estimated at 180 million tons -- a far cry from the planned 238-243 million tons.

The Soviet economy has slowed down in the past decade or more. The annual increase of national income dropped from 6.2 percent in 1965 to 3.2 percent in 1981. Meanwhile, industrial output value dropped from 8.7 percent to 3.6 percent.

JAPANESE PREMIER URGES INCREASED DEFENSE FUNDS

OW211209 Beijing XINHUA in English 1101 GMT 21 Dec 82

[Text] Tokyo, December 20 (XINHUA) -- Japanese Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone yesterday expressed his intention to increase Japan's defense spending by 7 percent next fiscal year to "honor a pledge" Suzuki made in Washington last May.

Nakasone visited the coastal city of Toyama to support his ruling Liberal-Democratic Party candidate for a House of Councillors election.

Referring to Japan's defense friction with the United States, Nakasone, who succeeded Zenko Suzuki as Japanese prime minister November 26, told reporters in Toyama yesterday that he did not regard outlays as "sacrosanct". But he said that Japan must take "appropriate" steps in order to maintain favorable international relations.

According to a KYODO report, U.S. President Ronald Reagan's administration has been pressing Japan to shoulder an increased burden in the defense of the nation to meet what it called a Soviet military buildup in this part of the world."

Nakasone is scheduled to visit Washington in mid-January for his first meeting with Reagan. He said his government would try its utmost to map out the Japanese fiscal 1983 budget before the end of this year.

The Suzuki administration had budgeted 2,500,000 million yen (about 10,000 million dollars) for defense in the current fiscal year ending next March 31. This amount was 0.93 percent of Japan's gross national product (GNP) and represented an increase of 7.56 percent from the 1980 fiscal year's defense budget.

If Japanese defense spending next fiscal year reached the seven percent level, as the United States has been urging, it would amount to about 2,700,000 million yen (about 10,800 million dollars).

KYODO reported yesterday that "the Japanese Finance Ministry has been reluctant to boost defense spending that much, citing the current deficit in Japanese state finances."

ASEAN STATES CITED FOR SOLIDARITY, COOPERATION

OW211115 Beijing XINHUA in English 0737 GMT 21 Dec 82

["Year-ender: ASEAN States Strive To Safeguard National Economic Interests" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Hong Kong, December 21 (XINHUA correspondent Zhang Junli) -- The year 1982 has witnessed continued solidarity and cooperation among the five members of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations in their effort to safeguard their economic interests against the developed countries' attempt to shift their economic crisis on to them.

In contrast to the 1970's when they registered an average annual economic growth rate of 7.6 percent and were called "the green land" in the capitalist world, all the five ASEAN states -- Thailand, Singapore, Malaysia, the Philippines and Indonesia -- have been adversely affected by the economic recession of the West.

They are now in a difficult time of slow economic growth and their economic difficulties have worsened this year. The chief manifestations are stagnant production, sluggish trade and sharp drop in economic growth rate. The actual average annual growth rate for 1982 fell 2.6-6.0 percent. Exports declined markedly, international payments deficits increased, foreign debts further piled up, and inflation deteriorated.

ASEAN's economy is based on exports. Export items are mainly agricultural, forest and mining raw materials, primary products and certain light industrial products, all of which heavily depend on Western markets. It is reported that ASEAN exports to Japan, the U.S. and Western Europe account for 75-90 percent of their total exports. In these circumstances, the forcing down of the prices of raw materials and primary products, the practice of protectionism and the import cuts by the Western countries constituted a hard blow at ASEAN's economy.

In face of the deteriorating economy of the West, the ASEAN states have increasingly taken concerted actions to combat protectionism and the discriminatory trade policies of the industrialized countries. At the 14th ASEAN economic ministers conference last month, Singapore Prime Minister Lee Kuan Yew stressed that the ASEAN states, as trading nations, will not tolerate exclusion from international markets. They demanded observance of the principle of free trade by the industrialized countries. At the recent ministerial conference of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) in Geneva, the five jointly pressed for the elimination of all non-tariff measures inconsistent with GATT provisions, a halt to new tariff and non-tariff barriers against exports, and a time limit for the phasing out of the remaining trade restrictions, especially those affecting the exports of the developing countries.

The ASEAN states have entered into dialogue this year as a single unit with the United States, Japan and the EEC to seek better trade terms with these countries, expand ASEAN exports and introduce foreign capital and advanced technology. In face of America's dumping of its stockpiled tin on world markets, the ASEAN tin-producing countries -- Malaysia, Thailand and Indonesia -- have repeatedly called for an end to the dumping. The ASEAN states have also pressed for a favorable revision of the buffer stock price range together with other rubber-producing countries to ensure a stable income for rubber-producing countries. They have taken a common stand against the protectionist measures taken by the West in the export of such ASEAN products as textiles, garments, iron and steel, marine products, timber and tropical fruit.

They are also working for the conclusion of an international agreement on the export of tin, rubber, vegetable oil, cane-sugar, cocoanut oil, palm oil and textiles to deal with the increasing pressures of protectionism.

To strengthen and expand regional economic cooperation is yet another major step taken by the ASEAN states to safeguard their economic interests, tariff preferences have been put on 8,563 export items within the ASEAN region, and tariff cuts have been raised from the original 10 percent to the present 20-25 percent. Last month, they approved an overall tariff cut of 20-25 percent for any imported product totalling more than 10 million U.S. dollars. To expedite their pace of industrial cooperation, they have recently signed a basic agreement on industrial joint ventures to stimulate ASEAN private enterprises and foreign investors to join the ASEAN regional program on industrial cooperation. This is another progress in ASEAN economic cooperation.

The ASEAN states have actively readjusted their external trade policies this year and enhanced their economic ties with other Third World countries. They have despatched high-ranking officials, economic and trade elegations to many countries in Asia, Africa, Latin America, the South Pacific region and Eastern Europe to investigate and study market trends, and held international fairs in a bid to open up markets for ASEAN products. To expand exports, they are working for the establishment of an international trade center, an increase in exports processing zones, restructuring of exported products, offering of various export preferences and simplification of export formalities. Now the ASEAN states have established joint committees and other economic cooperation bodies with other Third World countries and held regular meetings to study new areas of cooperation. Joint venture projects have become a major form of economic cooperation between the ASEAN and other Third World countries in recent years and have made rapid development. Singapore has established joint venture projects with Sri Lanka and Bangladesh; Indonesia with India and Pakistan; Malaysia with Kuwait, Bahrain and the United Arab Emirates; the Philippines with Saudi Arabia and other countries. This will be conducive to promoting economic growth in the countries involved.

All these efforts made by the ASEAN states will not only serve to minimize ASEAN's economic dependence on Western states and develop their own national economy in an independent way, but also as an impetus to the ultimate establishment of a new international economic order.

RECEPTION MARKS 10 YEARS OF PRC-AUSTRALIAN TIES

[Text] Beijing, December 21 (XINHUA) -- The 10th anniversary of the establishment of diplomatic relations between China and Australia was marked at a reception given by the Chinese Ministry of Culture today in the Beijing hotel.

Attending were Hugh Alexander Dunn, Australian ambassador to China and more than 100 Australians in Beijing.

Also present were Zhu Muzhi, minister of culture, and Han Xu, vice-minister of foreign affairs.

After the reception, an Australian color feature "Breaker Morant" was shown.

NEW ZEALAND LEADER HOPES TO FURTHER PRC TIES

OW220153 Beijing XINHUA in English 1511 GMT 31 Dec 82

[Text] Wellington, December 20 (XINHUA) -- New Zealand Prime Minister Robert D. Muldoon today said his country and China have made "notable progress in developing political and economic links" since establishing diplomatic relations in 1972.

He expressed, in a press statement, his confidence for "a further expansion of these ties."

Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang has accepted an invitation to visit New Zealand next year, Muldoon said, and Foreign Minister Warren E. Copper will visit China in March.

Muldoon met Zhao during his visit to China in September 1980 and said he expects to continue discussions with the Chinese premier on cooperation between the two countries and international issues.

AFGHAN REBEL ATTACKS ON USSR TROOPS REPORTED

OW171952 Beijing XINHUA in English 1912 GMT 17 Dec 82

[Text] Islamabad, December 17 (XINHUA) -- The Afghan guerrilla forces scored fresh successes in their recent attacks on the Soviet-Karmal troops, the AGENCY AFGHAN PRESS (AAP) reported today.

On December 6, the freedom fighters in Samangan Province ambushed a moving military convoy consisting of tanks and armored cars in large numbers. They killed 50 Soviet-Karmal soldiers, destroyed six tanks with rocket launchers, and finally forced their enemies to retreat to their stronghold at Mazat Sharif. The freedom fighters also succeeded in shooting down a helicopter gunship as the enemy aircraft started bombing the battle front in revenge.

Early this month, a 450-men guerrilla contingent launched a surprised attack on a strong Soviet-Karmal convoy proceeding from Kabul to Qandahar. In the 13-hour battle, the freedom fighters destroyed many tanks and armored cars. The enemy troops retreated towards Ghazhim after picking up the dead bodies in the evening. After their defeat, however, the Soviet-Karmal troops bombed the area, destroying houses and shops along the road and killing many cattle.

On December 5, guerrilla units captured 12 trucks in their attack on a Soviet convoy at Kaji in Lowgar Province. Seven Soviet soldiers and 15 militiamen were killed in the clash.

PAKISTANI FOREIGN SECRETARY ON TALKS WITH INDIA

OW220128 Beijing XINHUA in English 1944 GMT 21 Dec 82

[Text] Islamabad, December 21 (XINHUA) -- The forthcoming Pakistan-Indian secretary-level talks in New Delhi "would give further impetus to the efforts of India and Pakistan to have an understanding accomodation," said Pakistan Foreign Secretary Niaz Naik here this evening.

Addressing a press conference at the Foreign Ministry, Naik said that the subjects in his talks in New Delhi would include the drawing up of an agreed draft for a joint ministerial level commission and consideration of Pakistan's draft for a non-aggression treaty and India's draft for a treaty of peace, friendship and cooperation.

The establishment of the joint ministerial commission was decided upon between Indian Prime Minister Mrs Indira Gandhi and President Ziaul Haq during their meeting in New Delhi on December 1. Asked what were the objectives of the joint ministerial commission for which he and his Indian counterpart would prepare the agreed text, Naik said the aim was to strengthen understanding andpromote cooperation in specific fields.

Replying to a question whether the signing of a treaty of non-aggression or of friendship would affect the position of the two sides of the Kashmir dispute, Naik said that, as already agreed upon between the two countries at foreign minister's level, the conclusion of any treaty between the two countries would neither add to nor subtract from their existing stands under the Simla agreement. Foreign Secretary Naiz Naik will leave here for New Delhi tomorrow to hold talks with his Indian counterpart on December 23 and 24.

UK'S THATCHER REJECTS USSR MISSILE REDUCTION PLAN

OW220122 Beijing XINHUA in English 1949 GMT 21 Dec 82

[Text] London, December 21 (XINHUA) -- British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher today rejected an offer from the Soviet Union to reduce its number of medium-range nuclear missiles in Europe to match those deployed by Britain and France.

Speaking in the House of Commons this afternoon, Mrs Thatcher dismissed the offer as designed to leave the United States without any medium-range nuclear weapons in Europe while the Soviet Union would still have "a very considerable number left."

She stated that the effect of the offer would be to destroy the balance of nuclear power between East and West. "That does not seem to me to keep the essential balance which is required for our security," she added.

Earlier, French External Relations Minister Claude Cheysson also rejected the Soviet offer, proposed by Soviet leader Andropov in a Kremlin speech to mark the 60th anniversary of the Soviet Union. Moscow wanted to divert attention from the imbalance of nuclear weapons in Europe, Cheysson said.

Britain has a fleet of submarines armed with 64 Polaris missiles while France has five operational nuclear submarines, each with 16 missiles.

EAST EUROPE MAKES ECONOMIC PROGRESS IN 1982

OW220953 Beijing XINHUA in English 0822 GMT 22 Dec 82

["Year-ender: East European Countries Make Economic Progress" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, December 22 (XINHUA) -- Bulgaria, Hungary, Poland, Czechoslovakia and the German Democratic Republic have made economic progress in varying degrees in 1982 and official statistics show that most of them will fulfil or overfulfil their annual economic plans.

The national income of Bulgaria is expected to surpass the planned target with a 4.8 percent increase over that of 1981. Industrial output value is expected to have a 5.3 percent increase against the planned 4.5 percent. The country reaped a second good harvest in 1982 after that of 1981. The average annual growth rate of agriculture in the past two years is 5.1 percent, or 1.7 percent over the planned target. The output of grain, meat, milk and other farm and livestock products all registered considerable increases. Labor productivity and net output value are higher than those of last year. Foreign trade increased by 9.0 percent, bringing the country a favorable balance.

In Hungary, a communique recently issued by the Council of Ministers said that the major targets of the annual economic plan have been fulfilled. National income is estimated to have a 1.0 percent increase. Industrial output value is estimated to increase by 2.0 percent, slightly behind plan. Progress was also made in the mining, electricity, machinery and foodstaff industries. But the building material, chemical and light industries remained at last year's level. The metallurgical industry suffered a slight decline. However, Hungary reaped a good harvest this year. Grain output is estimated at 14 million tons, the highest record in the history of the country, and the total value of farm produce increased by 5.0 percent. Foreign trade went up 3.0 percent in the first nine months of the year.

Poland's economy has taken a turn for the better this year. Industrial production, which had decreased for two straight years, began to rise last August. In the past four months, the stateowned industries increased one, four, five and eight percent respectively as compared with the corresponding periods of last year. The continuous decline in the processing industry has also stopped in the past three months, with production picking up month after month. The country's foreign trade has also been improving, exports in the first 11 months increased 8.9 percent and imports decreased 11.4 percent as compared with the same period of last year. There was a huge trade deficit last year, but the first ten months of this year have registered a considerable favorable balance of trade. At present, the country can guarantee supplies of rationed goods, but is still short of other commodities, especially industrial goods.

According to the Czechoslovak press, Czechoslovakia can "expect a fulfilment of the targets of the economic plan for this year". What is most important is that the target for economizing in basic raw materials can be reached. Under the present five-year plan, this year is to save fuels by two percent and metals by five percent. Czechoslovakia has also made some achievements in the development and application of science and technology, in the reform of industrial structures and in increasing the output of new products and improving the quality of products.

In the first half of this year, new products accounted for 15.4 percent of all industrial products of the country, sophisticated products made up 11 percent, and low-quality products dropped 8.3 percent. There is also an increase in foreign trade over last year. Total agricultural output value is estimated to have a 3 percent increase. However, grain output is 7 percent behind plan.

Industrial production in the German Democratic Republic in the first ten months this year is 4.2 percent more than the same period of last year. Productivity increased 3.5 percent and productive national income in the first six months is 3 percent more than the same period of last year. It is believed that some major targets of the annual plan can hardly be reached. However, the country's speed of economic development is comparatively higher among the East European countries. The German Democratic Republic has achieved some gains in improving foreign trade. Exports to the West are estimated to have increased 10 percent while imports dropped 3 percent, thus winning a favourable balance of 3.8 billion marks in foreign exchange. Foreign debts have also dropped markedly.

XINHUA REVIEWS YEAR OF MARTIAL LAW IN POLAND

OW220237 Beijing XINHUA in English 1602 GMT 21 Dec 82

["Year-ender: One Year of Martial Law in Poland" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Warsaw, December 2 (XINHUA correspondent Jing Wuwu) -- A little over one year since the imposition of the state of siege in Poland last December 13, the Polish Council of State today decided to "suspend" the martial law in the country on December 31, 1982. At the time when the Polish authorities declared martial law, the country was faced with a most dangerous political and economic situation since World War II. Therefore, at the beginning of the martial law, the authorities interned more than 5,000 Solidarity union leaders at all levels as well as other opposition personages, outlawed all activities of the trade unions and other mass organizations, banned strikes, demonstrations and mass rallies, and placed over 200 state enterprises and economic units under military control. But some of the Solidarity leaders and activists went underground to unfold "resistance movements". The Polish authorities hoped to attain two major aims by declaring the martial law: First, "to realize stability in the country" and second, "to bring the economy out of the crisis." Thanks to the year long efforts, the serious economic recession has been initially checked, and tensions in the country relaxed. However, many more difficulties have yet to be overcome before the said two aims can be fully attained.

Since the beginning of this year, the Polish authorities have adopted one measure after another to effect political and economic reforms in order to improve the seriously imbalanced economy, cope with the Western economic sanctions and solve the problems arising from drastic cut in raw material imports and the serious under-capacity operation of the processing industry. Under the pre-condition of "ensuring the leading role of the United Workers' Party", the authorities pushed ahead with a program for "enlarging the government's social bases." They allowed more leaders of other parties, organizations and religious organizations to take part in the government with a view to promoting social understanding. With the assistance of the Citizens' Committees for National Salvation in various places of the country, a new united front organization -- the Patriotic Movement for National Rebirth -- was established to carry on the program of national understanding and consultation which was introduced at the Ninth Congress of the Polish United Worker's Party.

In addition to these measures, government representatives tried several times at the beginning of the martial law to have talks with interned Solidarity union leader Lech Walesa on the future and role of the trade unions. Later they had contacts and dialogues with underground Solidarity leader Zbigniew Bujak and others through church persons. But no result was achieved owing to their very big differences. On October 8 this year, the Polish National Assembly (Sejm) adopted a new "trade union law", outlawing all trade unions including the Solidarity union and deciding to reestablish trade unions. Through these measures, the authorities brought the situation under their control. Since the people longed for stability, the over a dozen street demonstrations and clashes with police in the past year did not spread and develop into nation-wide unrest. As the situation relaxed, the authorities lifted the curfew all over the country and some other martial law restrictions and restored activities of most of the mass organizations beginning from last May.

In the economic field, industrial production, which had dropped drastically since 1980, began to turn for the better last February and started to rise last August. The country got a rich grain harvest this year. Its foreign trade has also been improved with a rapid increase in export and a slow-down in the dropping of import. The huge trade deficit last year turned to become a surplus of 61.8 billion zloty (about 710 million U.S. dollars) in the first ten months of this year. Some experts put this year's GNP at only one percent or two percent lower than that of last year. However, all this does not mean that Poland, now in deep crises, will begin to go smoothly in every field. The reason is obvious: All kinds of social contradictions have not been resolved, the society is far from regaining its confidence in the authorities, the problem of Solidarity union is not solved with the adoption of the new trade union law and the establishment of new unions, and the underground activities of the Solidarity will not die down. What is more, Poland's economy is still very difficult. Market supplies are short, inflation and the decline of the people's living standards have not been stopped but are worsening. All these are elements of instability.

In a word, Poland's road in the future will not be easy though a local paper says: "A dim light has been seen at the end of the tunnel."

Present at the rally were Pan Yan, commander of the Beijing Garrison; Zhang Bingyu, adviser to the Foreign Affairs Bureau of the Ministry of National Defense; Sava Obradovic, Yugoslav ambassador to China, and Col Joze Turk, armed forces attache of the Yugoslav Embassy.

A documentary film on the growth of the Yugoslav People's Army was shown at the rally.

ZHAO ZIYANG CONTINUES VISIT TO EGYPT

Zhao, Mubarak Talk

OW212347 Beijing XINHUA in English 1849 GMT 21 Dec 82

[Text] Cairo, December 21 (XINHUA) -- Egyptian President Husni Mubarak and Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang discussed international problems, the Middle East issue in particular, and bilateral relations during their second round of talks here this morning.

The talks held at the Al-Qubbah Palace proceeded in a warm and cordial atmosphere.

Present on the occasion on the Chinese side were State Councillor Gu Mu and Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian; on the Egyptian side were Prime Minister Ahmad Fu'ad Muhyi ad-Din and Deputy Premier and Foreign Minister Kamal Hasan 'Ali.

The president and the premier shared each other's views on many international issues. They held that in order to settle the Middle East question, Israel must withdraw from the occupied Arab territories, the national rights of the Palstinian people must be restored, and the Arab people must adhere to their unity and get ready for a protracted struggle.

President Mubarak said the visit to Egypt by a leader fromfriendly China manifests profound friendship between the two countries and the sincere feelings of the Chinese people towards the Egyptian people.

President Mubarak praised China's position on the question of Afghanistan and Kampuchea.

Premier Zhao Ziyang said that China and Egypt have many points in common and their friendship is blessed with a solid foundation. The Chinese Government has noted with satisfaction the development of relations between the two countries in the past 20 years, he added.

He said China and Egypt have always sympathized with and supported each other. Both of them follow a foreign policy based on independence and self-reliance, oppose imperialism and hegemonism, stand for an all-round and just solution of the Middle East question, oppose acts of expansion and aggression by Israel, support the struggle of the Palestinian people for national rights, and support the struggles of the Afghan and Kampuchean peoples against foreign invasions.

Premier Zhao Ziyang expressed thanks for Egypt's support to China's restoration of her legitimate rights at the United Nations and to her cause of reunification.

Zhao said that it is China's consistent policy to develop Sino-Egypt friendship. He noted that the economic and technological cooperation between the two countries has had a very good beginning.China will make efforts to further develop this cooperation on the basis of the principles of equality and mutual benefit, better practical results, more diversity in form andmutual development, and is ready to explore new areas and new ways of cooperation between the two countries.

Joint Press Conference Held

OW212320 Beijing XINHUA in English 1839 GMT 21 Dec 82

[Text] Cairo, December 21 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang and Egyptian President Husni Mubarak held a joint news conference at the Al-Qubbah Palace here this afternoon. They answered questions put by reporters.

On the Middle East question, Premier Zhao Ziyang reaffirmed China's support for the efforts by Arab states towards a just and all-round solution to the Middle East question. He stressed that Israel must withdraw from the Arab land it had occupied since 1967 and that the Palestinian people must regain their right to self-determination.

The Chinese premier expounded in particular China's consistent foreign policy.

At the news conference, Egyptian President Mubarak made a high appraisal of the friendship and cooperative relations between Egypt and China. He said Premier Zhao Ziyang's visit is a success.

Mubarak Notes Friendly Ties

[Text] Cairo, December 21 (XINHUA) -- Egyptian President Husni Mubarak made a high appraisal of the friendship and cooperative relations between Egypt and China at a press conference he held jointly with Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang here today.

Answering a question put by a XINHUA correspondent, Mubarak said that the friendly ties between Egypt and China have a long history. Egypt is the first Arab country which established diplomatic relations with China. Since then the two countries have continuously developed their friendship. He said that he himself had visited China twice and each time he received a warm welcome in China and each time it was a success.

Expressing welcome to Premier Zhao Ziyang's visit, Mubarak said, "The current Egypt visit by the Chinese premier embodies the friendship between the two countries. From year to year, our friendship has grown and our relations have been strengthened."

He pointed out that the talks between the two sides have been constructive. Judging from the results of the talks, Premier Zhao's visit is a success, he said. He expressed the conviction that the relations between the two countries will continue to grow steadily.

At the press conference, Premier Zhao Ziyang said he fully agreed with President Mubarak's appraisal of the Egyptian-Chinese relations and of the current visit.

Zhao Supports Palestinians

OW211734 Beijing XINHUA in English 1630 GMT 21 Dec 82

[Text] Cairo, December 21 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang reaffirmed here today China's support for the right of the Palestinian people to national existence and establishment of a state as well as for all the efforts by Arab states to seek an just and comprehensive solution to the Middle East issue.

Premier Zhao reiterated China's position at a news conference held jointly with President Husni Mubarak at the Al-Qubbah Palace here this afternoon.

Answering questions on the Middle East, Zhao said, "What pleases us is that Arab states universally hold that Israel must withdraw from the Arab land occupied since 1967 and that the Palestinian people must regain their national rights including the right to national self-determination and the right to establishment of a state."

Zhao said, "China appreciates and supports all proposals and efforts that are helpful to a just and reasonable settlement of the Middle East question. As for what a concrete plan to take, China respects the choice made by Arab states and the Palestine Liberation Organization. China does not like and will not make indiscreet remarks on this matter."

Referring to the proposal on the settlement of the Middle East issue which was adopted at the Arab Fes summit, Premier Zhao reaffirmed China's support for the proposal and said that China considers the proposal as reasonable and realistic and the "basis on which to bring about a just and comprehensive solution to the Middle East issue." He said that the reason why China supports the Fes proposal is that it "conforms with China's consistent position" and that "the Fes summit marks the unity of the Arab countries which is very precious."

Premier Zhao said: "On the basis of Israeli withdrawal from all Arab lands it occupied in 1967 and the restoration to the Palestinian people of their national right to existence, all the Middle East countries including Israel will have the right to independence and existence." He said: "But, the right of all countries to independent existence and mutual recognition by each other are two different concepts. It is common knowledge which needs no explanation."

Then, President Mubarak said: "On the Middle East issue China has always supported the Palestinian people's rights including the right to return to their own native land, self-government and self-determination".

Zhao on Foreign Policy

OW212316 Beijing XINHUA in English 1832 GMT 21 Dec 82

[Text] Cairo, December 21 (XINHUA) -- "China's foreign policy is consistent, with two basic points: First, to oppose hegemonism and maintain world peace; and second, to firmly unite and cooperate with the broad section of Third World countries," said Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang here this afternoon.

Speaking at a news conference held jointly with President Husni Mubarak, Premier Zhao said: "This policy was reiterated at the 12th National Congress of the Communist Party of China. The first countries I visit after the 12th party congress are Egypt and other African countries. This shows that China will further carry out the policy of firmly strengthening unity and cooperation with the Third World countries, as was reiterated at the 12th party congress."

Zhao said, "China has always highly appreciated the role of the Non-aligned Movement in international affairs, and firmly supported the principles of independence, self-determination and non-grouping of the Non-aligned Movement and its position of opposing imperialism, colonialism, racism, hegemonism and any form of foreign domination. China will continue to take this stand in the future."

Referring to Sino-Indian relations, he said: "China and India are two big Asian nations. The two peoples have a long-standing friendship. In the 1950s, there existed very good relations between the two countries. Subsequently, there was an unhappy historical period between China and India, but in terms of the long-standing friendship between the two peoples, this is a very short period. Now that the relations of the two countries have been improved, both sides share the desire to strive for further improvement of these relations. The main obstacle to the development of the relations between the two countries is the border issue which, of course, is a problem left over by history."

He said, "We hold that it is not so difficult to have the problem solved so far as both sides work in the spirit of mutual understanding and mutual accommodation and through friendly negotiations."

"Sino-Indian friendship is in the interest of the people of both countries and beneficial to stability in Asia," he said.

Turning to Sino-Soviet relations, Premier Zhao said, "China hopes to maintain a normal relationship with the Soviet Union on the basis of the five principles of peaceful co-existence. This hope of China is sincere. We hope the new Soviet leadership will make new efforts to remove the obstacles in bilateral relations."

[Press conference held by Egyptian President Muhammad Husni Mubarak and PRC Premier Zhao Ziyang on 21 December at Al-Qubbah Palace in Cairo -- Zhao speaks in Mandarin with superimposed translation -- recorded]

[Text] [unidentified moderator] In the name of merciful and compassionate God, we open the press conference with President Husni Mubarak and PRC Premier Zhao Ziyang. On behalf of the Egyptian press and the foreign press in Egypt, we welcome the visit of the distinguished Chinese guest.

The first question is from Hamdi Fu'ad from AL-AHRAM.

[Question] Mr Premier, you are visiting Egypt on the first leg of a tour that will take you to 10 African and Arab states. Will China -- under the new leadership and after the recent changes -- return to the Third World, and what is China's position toward nonaligned states in general?

[Zhao Ziyang] The foreign policy which is being pursued by the Chinese Government is firm. It is based on [words indistinct]. First, China adheres to its struggle against hegemony and for safeguarding world peace. The second thing is that China adheres to its solidarity and cooperation with the [words indistinct] of the Third World states. The 12th national conference of the Chinese Communist Party, which was held not long ago, affirmed this policy. After the conference, I left for Egypt on the first leg of a tour that will take me to some Arab and African states -- which proves how the Chinese Government has designed its foreign policy, that is, to implement what was stipulated at the 12th national conference on the Chinese Communist Party. We stand firmly on the side of the Third World countries. China always appreciates highly the role that the Nonaligned Movement plays in international affairs. China always supports the position of the Nonaligned Movement states on independence, nonalignment and the struggle against colonialism, imperialism, racism and all forms of foreign domination and hegemony. China will continue to follow this policy and adopt this position.

Question by the XINHUA correspondent in Cairo. The question is addressed to His Excellency President Muhammad Husni Mubarak. On the occasion of the visit of Premier of the PRC State Council Zhao Ziyang to Egypt, can His Excellency the president shed light on the development of friendship between China and Egypt?

[Mubarak] Actually we and China have been linked by very strong relations for a long time. Egypt, as the brother premier of the State Council said, was the first Arab state to establish relations with China 26 years ago -- I believe in 1955. Relations between Egypt and China since have developed for the better. When I was vice president I visited China in April 1976 at the request of the late president of the republic. The visit was successful. During the visit we exchanged views on international issues, the Middle East issue and bilateral relations. The visit was successful. A warm welcome was accorded by China to a representative of the Arab Republic of Egypt. My second visit was in January 1980, and it too was successful. It was a continuation of the strong relations which existed between the two countries.

The visit of the premier of the State Council to the Arab Republic of Egypt is within the framework of the friendship between the two countries -- a friendship that grows stronger year after year and relations that develop year after year. I consider this visit, after the talks we have held, to be very successful, and it has led and will lead to a better and stronger development in relations between the two countries in all fields. I welcome the brother premier of the State Council, and I always look to better relations between us and China.

[Question by Sana' Sa'id] The question is to President Husni Mubarak. What is your visualization regarding the role that a state like China can assume in the Middle East peace process, especially since you see that the cards of the Middle East issue have been and are still in the hands of the United States?

[Interjection by an unidentified Chinese speaking in Arabic] I have a suggestion. I think that such a question which pertains to the Middle East issue does not belong to one news agency, but perhaps there are many other news agencies that have the same question. Therefore, I think that it would be better if we grouped all the questions on the Middle East problem and then they can all be answered together.

[Mubarak] Are there any other questions on the Middle East? Is there any one who has another question on the Middle East?

[Khalil al-Jumaini from Egyptian radio] The question is addressed to the State Council Premier Zhao Ziyang. The seven-member committee formed by the Fes summit conference under the chairmanship of King Husayn recently visited China. Does China see in the Fes conference resolutions a reasonable basis for the achievement of a comprehensive settlement, and what are the most important points of these resolutions which China considers as the reasonable basis for a settlement?

[Unidentified AL-AKHBAR correspondent] Mr Chinese Premier, before you left Beijing you stated that all the Middle East states have a right to independence and existence. You also expressed support for the Fes conference resolutions. In addition you stated that Israel has the right -- that you are ready to recognize Israel provided it withdraws from all the territories it occupied in 1967. Does this mean that China recognizes Israel? Does this mean that the Chinese Government recognizes Israel?

['Asim Abd al-Muhsin from REUTER] The question is to the Chinese premier. There currently are three plans for the solution of the Palestinian issue -- President Reagan's initiative, the Fes conference plan and the Egyptian-French plan. Does the premier think that one of these plans represents the most exemplary solution for the Palestinian issue, or is it necessary to merge the three plans and come out with a new plan to solve the problem?

[Mubarak] We shall now answer these questions and then we shall consider others.

[Zhao Ziyang] China is very satisfied to see that all Arab states are insisting that Israel withdraw from the Arab territories occupied in 1967 and that the legitimate national rights of the Palestinian people be restored -- including their right to self-determination, to a return to their homeland and to the establishment of a state in it. China [word indistinct] and (?supports) all the proposals and plans which lead to the finding of a just and fair solution of the Middle East issue. As for choosing a specific plan to be adopted by the Arab states, actually [words indistinct] China always respects the decision which the Arab states and the PLO adopt in this respect. China does not want to make any [word indistinct] or (?comment) about this.

Regarding the visit of the seven-member Arab committee under the chairmanship of King Husayn: During the delegation's visit to China it explained the Fes conference resolutions in detail.

After we heard this explanation we expressed our appreciation and support of these resolutions, because we consider that these resolutions are reasonable and realistic and constitute a basis for a comprehensive and just solution of the Middle East issue. China also thinks that these resolutions agree with what China always advocates for a solution of the Middle East issue. Furthermore, the Fes conference resolutions have contributed to the establishment of unity and solidarity in the Arab East.

At Beijing airport, I said that Israel must withdraw from the Arab territories it occupied in 1967 and that the national rights of the Palestinian people must be restored. On this basis all states in the Middle East will enjoy the rights of independence and existence -- of course, all states in the area, including Israel. For a state to enjoy this right is one thing and recognition of a state is something else. These are two different concepts. This [words indistinct] which I do not think it would be necessary for me to explain in detail.

[Mubarak] With regard to Mrs. Sana' as-Sa'id's question on China's role, I think that China's role is clear from the answers of the State Council premier to the previous questions. I want to say that when any international issue is raised, strong support by the other states becomes necessary. With regard to the Middle East issue, the Palestinian issue, China supports a just solution of the Palestinian issue. It often has reiterated the need for the restoration of the national rights of the Palestinian people, including their right to self-determination and to establish their own state. This requires international support. China is one of the states which has supported this right since the beginning of the Palestinian problem. China has supported this right in all international organizations -- in the United Nations and in all the forums in which China takes part. It supports the right of the Palestinian people to achieve their legitimate rights and their right to self-determination.

[Question] The question is for the president and the premier. What is your opinion about the most important results achieved by the Chinese premier's visit to Cairo, and what do you predict regarding the future of Egyptian-Chinese relations?

[Mubarak] At the beginning of my statement I gave an idea about the talks which took place between me and the brother Chinese State Council premier. I said that the talks were constructive. I spoke about Chinese-Egyptian relations, and I said that we are always working to develop them. I reviewed part of the history of our relations with China and the beginning of our diplomatic relations with China. As for the results of the visit, I expect that they will be excellent, although it has not ended yet. Why speculate? If we talk about the results of the visit today, what about the rest of the days? Let us wait until the end of the visit and then [words indistinct]. Thank you.

[Question by Hamdi Fu'ad from AL-AHRAM] Again I would like to ask the Chinese State Council premier his opinion about the improvement of relations between Beijing and India, on the one hand, and between Beijing and Moscow on the other. I also would like to hear responses from the president and the premier on the possibilities of beginning peace talks between Israel and Lebanon with the participation of the United States. What are the opinions of the president and the premier on this subject?

[Zhao Ziyang] China and India are considered two big states in Asia. Traditional friendship has existed between the two peoples for a long time, and especially in the 50's relations between China and India were excellent. However, for a certain period of time relations between China and India witnessed unhappy developments, but this period was short compared with the long history of friendship between China and India.

Relations between China and India now have improved and the two countries wish to exert further efforts to improve their relations. The main factor keeping the problem between China and India alive is the question of borders. This problem was left by history. We are confident that as long as the two countries adhere to the spirit of mutual understanding, mutual [word indistinct] and friendly consultation, it will not be difficult to find a solution to this problem. We see that Chinese-Indian friendship agrees with the joint desire and basic interests of the two peoples and also serves the achievement of stability and peace in that area and the world.

China hopes to establish cordial neighborly relations with the Soviet Union on the basis of the five principles for peaceful coexistence. This desire by China is genuine. China looks forward to the exertion of new efforts by the new Soviet leadership for the removal of obstacles that stand in the way of improved relations between China and the Soviet Union.

[Unidentified speaker] A question on Lebanon concerning the opinion of the Chinese state council premier and the Egyptian president regarding possibilities for the start of talks between Lebanon and Israel with the participation of the United States within the coming few days, which is a very important development in the area.

[Mubarak] Possibilities for the resumption of relations?

[Question] The negotiations.

[Mubarak] Let us wait until we see what Habib will do, and then we shall comment on this subject. I do not see any point in commenting on anything until we see Habib and until after King Husayn's talks in Washington and Habib's return to the area and see what Habib's efforts will produce regarding the talks or the withdrawal of the forces from Lebanon. I think that it would be better for us to wait. This is my opinion.

With this, we consider the conference closed. Thank you.

Mubarak Hosts Banquet

OW212354 Beijing XINHUA in English 2235 GMT 21 Dec 82

[Text] Cairo, December 21 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang's visit to Egypt will open new prospects for the enhancement of relations between the two countries in all domains, said Egyptian President Husni Mubarak at a banquet in honor of the Chinese premier here this evening.

President Mubarak expressed his warm welcome to the Chinese premier. He attached high importance to the fact that Egypt is taken to be the first station of the Chinese premier's African tour.

He praised the Chinese people as "faithful brothers and sincere and honorable friends who have always remained true to their pledges, dedicated and genuinely committed to principles and values, while remaining bound to the very essence of solidarity among all peoples of the Third World."

Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang said that in the past two days, he had held talks with President Mubarak in a sincere and friendly atmosphere on the comprehensive and just settlement of the Middle East question and other international issues of common concern as well as on ways to further develop Sino-Egyptian friendly relations.

"Our talks are fruitful," he said, adding that "both sides hold identical or similar views on many major international issues. We are both satisfied with the development of Sino-Egyptian relations and are ready to continue our efforts to further promote Sino-Egyptian friendship." Zhao Ziyang said, "Thanks to our joint efforts, my visit has been crowned with success."

The banquet proceeded in an extremely warm and friendly atmosphere.

Egyptian Prime Minister Ahmad Fu'ad Muhyi ad-Din, Deputy Premier and Foreign Minister Kamal Hasan 'Ali and other cabinet ministers as well as Speaker of the National Assembly Sufi Abu Talib were present at the banquet.

Chinese State Councillor Gu Mu, Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian and other members of Premier Zhao's entourage as well as Chinese Ambassador Ding Guoyu were also present.

Zhao Cites Egyptian Ties

OW212340 Beijing XINHUA in English 2202 GMT 21 Dec 82

[Text] Cairo, December 21 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang said here this evening that his visit to Egypt "has been crowned with success."

Speaking at a banquet given in his honor by Egyptian President Muhammad Husni Mubarak at the Ab'din Palace, Zhao Ziyang said, in the past two days, "our talks are fruitful". "Both sides hold identical or similar views on many major international issues. We are both satisfied with the development of Sino-Egyptian relations and are ready to continue our efforts to further promote Sino-Egyptian friendship."

After recalling the long history of friendly relations between China and Egypt, the premier said, "The historic meeting at the Bandung Conference in 1955 between the late President an-Nasir and Premier Zhou Enlai, two outstanding leaders of our countries, brought Sino-Egyptian relations to a new stage. Egypt was the first among the Arab and African countries to establish diplomatic relations with China. Over the past 26 years since the establishment of diplomatic ties, friendly relations and cooperation between our two countries have developed satisfactorily, our mutual understanding has been enhanced steadily and the scope of cooperation broadened daily."

Premier Zhao said, "Situated astride the continents of Asia and Africa, Egypt has a glorious history of struggle. The Egyptian people have waged protracted and heroic struggles to achieve national independence and safeguard state sovereignty. In April this year, Egypt recovered its own territory the Sinai Peninsula. Now, under the leadership of President Mubarak, Egypt is striving to realize the three major objectives of ensuring security, building up national defence and stepping up economic construction. Egypt is a founding member of the Non-aligned Movement and it has always supported the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people, supported the Afghan and Kampuchean peoples in their just struggles against foreign aggression and actively developed its friendly relations and cooperation with other Third World countries, thus playing an important role in international affairs."

Premier Zhao recalled the remarks made by the late Premier Zhou Enlai when he visited Egypt and other African countries at the end of 1963: "The morning sun of freedom has risen and the colonial system of imperialism on the African continent is inevitably heading towards disintegration."

Zhao said, "We are pleased to note that profound changes have taken place in Africa over the 19 years since then. Africa has stood up, full of vigour and vitality and is now a powerful component of the Third World. This is the trend of history which no one can hold back. Gone are the days when imperialism, hegemonism and colonialism could wilfully manipulate the destiny of the world."

The Chinese premier went on, "In the present tense and turbulent international situation, the trouble-ridden Middle East commands the attention of the world. The development of the Middle East situation has a bearing on the vital interests of the peoples in this region and the interest of world peace as well. Israel has long clung to its policy of aggression and expansion, which gravely upsets tranquility and stability in the Middle East and the world at large.

The question of Palestine is at the core of the Middle East issue. The Palestinian and other Arab peoples have fought heroically to recover their lost territories and regain their national rights."

Premier Zhao declared, "The Chinese Government and people have always stood on the side of the Palestinian and other Arab peoples and firmly support them in their just struggle against Israeli aggression and expansion. In order to achieve a comprehensive and just solution to the Middle East question, Israel must withdraw from the Arab territories occupied since 1967, including the Arab Jerusalem; the Palestinian people must regain their national rights, including their right to return to their homeland, the right to self-determination and the right to establish their own state. And on this basis, the countries in the Middle East are entitled to the right of independence and existence."

Premier Zhao said "China has embarked on a road of healthy development in all aspects of its national construction." "To build up our country, we want peace, friendship and cooperation. This is a desire shared by the people all over the world. The Chinese Government has consistently pursued an independent foreign policy of peace and is ready to develop relations with other countries on the five principles of mutual respect for each other's sovereignty and territorial integrity, mutual non-aggression, non-interference in each other's internal affairs, equality and mutual benefit, and peaceful co-existence. We will, as always, work unswervingly with the people of all other countries to combat hegemonism and maintain world peace."

"As a member of the Third World," Premier Zhao stressed, "China attaches special importance to its friendship with the Arab, African and other Third World countries and works to strengthen its unity and cooperation with other Third World countries. During his visit to Africa in 1963-1964, the late Premier Zhou Enlai put forward five principles guiding China's relations with the African and Arab countries. These principles are: China supports the Arab and African peoples in their struggle to oppose imperialism and colonialism and to win and safeguard national independence; it supports the pursuance of a policy of peace, neutrality and non-alignment by the governments of the Arab and African countries; it supports the desire of the Arab and African countries to achieve unity and solidarity in the manner of thier own choice; it supports the Arab and African countries in their efforts to settle their disputes through peaceful consultations; and it holds that the sovereignty of the Arab and African countries should be respected by all other countries and that encroachment and interference from any quarters should be opposed. We will continue to abide by these principles."

The Chinese premier said that his Africa visit is aimed at "learning from the African people, promoting understanding and friendship and strengthening solidarity and cooperation." "The understanding, friendship, solidarity and cooperation between the Chinese and African peoples are not only of great importance to the building of our respective countries, but also in the interest of the maintenance of world peace," he noted.

Text of Zhao Speech at Banquet

NC212034 Cairo MENA in Arabic 1905 GMT 21 Dec 82

[Text] Cairo, 21 Dec (MENA) -- PRC State Council Premier Zhao Ziyang has called on Israel to withdraw its forces from the Arab territories it occupied in 1967, including Arab Jerusalem.

In his speech at the dinner banquet which President Husni Mubarak hosted in his honor tonight, Zhao Ziyang stressed the need to restore the national rights of the Palestinian people, including their right to return to their homes, determine their future and establish a Palestinian state.

Premier Zhao Ziyang also emphasized that his country, people and government will continue to side with the Palestinian people and all the other Arab peoples and that it firmly supports their just struggle against the Israeli aggression and expansion and for finding a comprehensive and just settlement in the Middle East.

The following is the text of the speech which the Chinese State Council premier delivered at the dinner banquet:

Your Excellency President Muhammad Husni Mubarak, dear friends:

It is our great pleasure to visit Egypt at the beginning of our African tour. As soon as we set foot in your beautiful land we were accorded a warm and sincere welcome by your government and people. His excellency the president is now hosting this grand banquet, an occasion which has deeply touched us. In the name of the Government of China and our people and on my own behalf and that of my colleagues, permit me to express our profound gratitude to his excellency President Husni Mubarak and the Government of Egypt and its people.

Both China and Egypt are states with an ancient civilization and history; the Great Wall and the Pyramids have become symbols of the two shining civilizations. A long time ago -- more than 2,000 years ago -- the Chinese and Egyptian peoples initiated friendly contacts which contributed to the spread of man's civilization and its interaction. In modern times our peoples have continued to exchange affection, support and encouragement in their struggle against imperialism and colonialism and for the sake of attaining and safeguarding national independence. Thanks to the historic meeting which took place between the departed prominent leaders of our countries namely, President Gamal 'Abd an-Nasir and State Council Chairman Zhou Enlai at the Bandung Conference in 1955, Chinese-Egyptian relations entered a new stage. Egypt was the first Arab and African state to establish diplomatic relations with China.

In the 26 years since the establishment of diplomatic relations, the ties of friendship between our countries have developed satisfactorily, mutual understanding has deepened increasingly and the scope of cooperation has expanded with the passage of time.

Egypt, which is located at the juncture of the Asian and African continents, is famous for a glorious history of struggle. The Egyptian people have waged a valiant and long struggle to win and keep national independence and sovereignty of the state. Egypt regained its territory in the Sinai Peninsula last April. Under the leadership of President Husni Mubarak, Egypt now is struggling hard to realize three great goals: providing security stability, developing the defense capacities and strengthening the economic structure.

Egypt is one of the states which founded the Nonaligned Movement. It always supports the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people and backs the Afghan and Cambodian peoples in their just struggle against external aggression. It actively develops ties of friendship and cooperation with all the Third World states and plays an important role in international affairs.

Friends, at this exciting and happy moment we cannot but remember what Zhou Enlai, the departed chairman of the State Council, said when he visited Egypt and other African states as the Chinese people's messenger of friendship in 1963.

He said then: The dawn of freedom has broken forth and the colonialist system of imperialism in the African continent is now heading toward its inevitable collapse. We note with satisfaction that deep changes have taken place in Africa in the 19 years since then. Africa is now standing on its feet and it is full of activity and vitality. It has become a great power in the Third World. This is the historic course which no one can resist. The days when imperialism and the trend of hegemony and colonialism played havoc with the fate of the world have gone forever. The current international situation is marked by tensions and disturbances. The Middle East is considered an area fraught with events on which the world's attention is focused. Developments in the Middle East have a bearing on the interests of world peace, in as much as they have a bearing on the vital interests of the peoples of the various countries in the Middle East.

Israel has been adhering stubbornly to an expansionist and aggressive policy for a long time. This constitutes a serious threat to peace and stability in the Middle East. The Palestinian question is the core of the Middle East question. The Palestinian and all the other Arab peoples have waged heroic and unbendable struggles to regain their usurped territories and restore their national rights. China -- both government and people -- always stands on the side of the Palestinian people and the other Arab peoples. It firmly supports their just struggle against Israeli aggression and expansion and for finding a comprehensive and just settlement. Israel must withdraw from the Arab territories it occupied in 1967, including Arab Jerusalem. The national rights of the Palestinian people must be restored, including their rights to return to their homes, determine their future and establish their state. On this basis all the states in the Middle East will enjoy the right to independence and existence.

China, oh friends, is a developing socialist state. In recent years we constantly have summed up experiences and lessons and amended and completed the policies concerned. We have started proceeding along the sound path of development in various fields of construction. Our aim is gradually to modernize our industry, agriculture, national defense, science and technology in an effort to attain a comfortable standard of living and culture for our people before the end of the 20th century. This is a great and difficult task. We will continue to exert utmost efforts and carry out our duties in a sincere and balanced way. We are confident that we will attain our goal.

To build our country we need peace, friendship and cooperation. The peoples of the world share this desire with us. The Chinese Government always pursues an independent foreign policy based on peace. It is eager to develop its relations with the various states of the world on the basis of the five principles represented in the reciprocal respect of sovereignty and territorial integrity, nonaggression and noninterference in domestic affairs, equality, mutual benefit and peaceful coexistence.

We will strive firmly, as in the past, to resist hegonomy and safeguard world peace in cooperation with the peoples of the various states of the world.

In its capacity as a member of the Third World, China gives special attention to its friendship with the Arab and African states and the various states in the Third World. It works hard to strengthen solidarity and cooperation with the Third World states. During his visit to Africa in 1963 and 1964, the departed leader of the State Council Zhou Enlai announced the five principles guiding China's relations with the African and Arab states.

They are: Supporting the peoples of the Arab and African states in their struggle against imperialism and colonialism and in order to win their national independence and safeguard it; supporting the policy of peace, neutrality and nonalignment which the governments of the Arab and African states pursue; supporting the desire of the Arab and African states to achieve unity and solidarity the way they choose; supporting the efforts of the various Arab and African states to settle their disputes through peaceful consultations; and advocating that the sovereignty of the Arab and African states must be respected by all and that aggression and interference by any side must be opposed. We will continue to adhere to these principles.

This is my first visit to Egypt and Africa. Our objective is to learn from the African peoples, increase understanding and friendship and strengthen solidarity and cooperation. China and the African states had similar bitter experiences in the past. Today they confront difficult common tasks. Understanding, friendship, solidarity and cooperation between the Chinese people and the African peoples not only are very important to the construction of all our countries but also serve the cause of safeguarding world peace. I hope that this visit by me and my colleagues will contribute usefully to further strenghening and developing the friendly relations which exist between China and Egypt and the other Arab and African states.

Finally, I wish prosperity and well-being to the Arab Republic of Egypt and happiness to its people. I also wish constant development to the relations of friendship and cooperation between China and Egypt and good health to President Muhammad Husni Mubarak and to the friends who are present here.

Zhao Lays Wreaths

[Text] Cairo, December 21 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang this afternoon laid wreaths at a memorial of unknown soldiers and the tombs of the two late Egyptian presidents.

Accompanied by an Egyptian protocol corps, the Chinese premier drove from the Al-Qubbah Palace to a 30-meter-high, pyramid-style memorial at the Nile embankment in Nasr City to commemorate those who had devoted their lives to the defense of their motherland in the October, 1973 war against Israel.

Premier Zhao observed a one-minute silence as a tribute to the memory of the fallen Egyptian soldiers.

He then went a few yards off to place a wreath at the tomb of the late President Muhammad Anwar as-Sadat. Afterwards, he drove to the tomb of the late President Gamal 'Abd an-Nasir and laid a wreath there. He signed on the visitors' book.

Comment on Tour'Significance'

[Station Commentary: "A Visit of Great Significance"]

[Text] Premier Zhao Ziyang of the PRC State Council will start a visit to Africa from 20 December at the invitation of the government of 10 African countries. This is a major event in China's relations with Africa and is of great significance for strengthening China's relations with Third World countries, especially African and Arab countries.

The purposes of Zhao Ziyang's visit to Africa are to enchance mutual understanding and friendship, strengthen unity and cooperation and learn from the African people. As a member of the Third World, China consistently has carried out an independent foreign policy and sided firmly with the Third World in opposing hegemonism and safeguarding universal peace. To strengthen unity and cooperation with the Third World is the foundation of China's foreign policy. Continuing to implement the five principles on China's relations with African and Arab countries -- proclaimed by Premier Zhou Enlai during his trip to 10 African countries 19 years ago -- China consistently has supported the African and Arab countries' struggles against imperialism, colonialism and hegemonism and against Israeli expansion and racism in South Africa. China also has received effective support from the African countries in safeguarding national sovereignty and building the country. Premier Zhao Ziyang's visit will further strenghtn friendly relations and cooperation and enhance friendship and unity between China and the African countries.

Gratifying achievements have been made in economic and technical cooperation between China and African countries. This cooperation is of special importance at present. Due to the economic crisis in the capitalist world in the past few years, the capitalist countries have adopted -- through manipulating the existing unreasonable international economic order -- various measures unfavorable to the Third World in order to shift the crisis into Third World countries thereby causing them serious losses. While consolidating their political independence, Third World countries have developed and achieved economic independence by relying on themselves and strengthening mutual economic cooperation, learning from others' strong points to offset their own weakness, and helping each other. Talks between Premier Zhao Ziyang and the leaders of the African countries and their joint efforts to explore the forms and fields of economic and technical cooperation actively will contribute to the enhancement of self-reliance and the promotion of the national economy by both sides.

May Premier Zhao Ziyang's trip to Africa be successful!

MOROCCAN KING RECEIVES ENVOY, VIEWS ZHAO VISIT

OW220418 Beijing XINHUA in English 1108 GMT 21 Dec 82

[Text] Rabat, December 20 (XINHUA) -- King Hassan II said today that he welcomes the forthcoming visit to Morocco by Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang and will "hold fruitful talks with him."

He made the statement tonight in Marrakech, the ancient capital of the country, when receiving the credentials of Chinese Ambassador to Morocco Qin Jialin.

In a cordial and friendly atmosphere, King Hassan said, "I don't know your premier, but I used to know the late Premier Zhou Enlai very well."

He stressed, "The relations between our two countries have always been excellent. No African or international problems can influence our bilateral relations."

Earlier, Moroccan Prime Minister Maati Bouabid and minister in charge of foreign affairs Mohemed Boucetta have received the Chinese ambassador separately.

TRADE UNION DELEGATION ENDS VISIT TO PANAMA

[Text] Panama City, December 19 (XINHUA) -- A delegation of the All-China Federation of Trade Unions ended its visit to Panama and left here for home today.

During the visit, the delegation, led by Wang Xun, alternative secretary of the federation, had talks with officials of the Ministry of Labor and Social Welfare, the National Central Union of Panamanian Workers and other trade unions. The delegation also visited factories, workers' training centers and some places in the countryside.

The delegation which arrived here on December 14 is the first Chinese trade union group that visited Panama in more than 30 years.

PERU'S FOREIGN MINISTER MEETS JOURNALISTS

OW220337 Beijing XINHUA in English 1627 GMT 21 Dec 82

[Text] Lima, December 20 (XINHUA) -- Peruvian Foreign Minister Javier Arias Stella today stressed the need to further develop regional cooperation by Latin American countries and enhance their positions with industrialized nations.

Speaking to a visiting Chinese journalists group, the minister said improvement of cooperation was needed to establish a new international economic order and deal with serious negative impact of the economic recession in the capitalist world.

Arias said Peru had taken an active part in the work of the organizations of regional cooperation in Latin America. For Peru, he continued, the most important was the Andean Pact organization which is seeking a common market and developing industry through common efforts of its members countries. Even though the world economic crisis has impeded the process, the countries would work to revitalize the Andean Pact organization, he added.

On Peru-China relations, Arias said there has been considerable development between the two countries in the cultural, financial and economic fields. He hoped technological cooperation would be opened up as well.

The Chinese group arrived here December 16 for a 10-day visit to Peru.

FURTHER COVERAGE OF 11TH CYL NATIONAL CONGRESS

Hu Qili Speech

OW210634 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1452 GMT 20 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, 20 Dec (XINHUA) -- Congratulatory speech by Hu Qili at the 11th National CYL Congress on 20 December 1982: "Ardent Expectations."

Comrades! The 11th National CYL Congress opened today. In the past 4 years since the 10th National CYL Congress, the CYL, as the core of young people across the land and as the party's close assistant, has worked hard on various fronts as our country has undergone a historic change. With the development of national construction and reform, gratifying changes have taken place in the mental attitude of young people and the conditions of CYL organizations. CYL activities have now become an increasingly active factor in the political life of our country. The party and the people have shown great concern for and attached great importance to your present congress. Entrusted by the party Central Committee, I extend warm congratulations to the congress and extend cordial regards to CYL members vigorously working on various fronts, to the young people of all nationalities and to youth workers.

More than 3 months ago, our party held its 12th congress which will produce a far-reaching influence on the course of Chinese history. The 12th party congress summarized the party's rich experiences in bringing order out of chaos in the period of great historic change and laid down a correct program for bringing about a new situation in socialist modernization. This program reveals a magnificent picture of the new historical period before the people and youths of all nationalities across the land. The Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC, which has just come to a victorious conclusion, adopted the new "Constitution of the PRC," the general charter for running the country and bringing it stability, as well as the Sixth 5-Year Plan which is of great significance for achieving the strategic objective for the next 20 years. Thus, in building a modern socialist country with a high degree of civilization and democracy, we have a definite objective as well as political, ideological and organizational guarantees for achieving the objective; we have a correct road to follow in undertaking socialist modernization with Chinese characteristics, as well as a set of principles, policies and methods adopted according to our country's actual conditions. A situation of greater economic prosperity and greater political unity and progress is now before us. The convening of the 11th CYL Congress immediately after the 12th party congress and the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC to discuss the new situation and new tasks facing the CYL and the younger generation is very timely. This shows that the party fervently hopes that young people will make bigger contributions on the new historic march. It also shows that the CYL is loyal to the party's cause and is determined to be the first to rise with force and spirit and to shoulder the new heavy responsibility with which the times has entrusted the CYL and young people.

Under new historical conditions and in the course of bringing about a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization, it is more necessary now than any previous period for the party and the state to call on young people to be conscious, work hard and inherit and carry forward the fine traditions fostered by the party in carrying out the youth movement. In the more than 60 years of struggle since the "May 4th" movement in 1919, young people in our country have indeed performed numerous heroic and moving deeds. Two important historical conclusions are inscribed on the glorious record of the youth movement in our country. The first historical conclusion is: To lead the revolution and construction to victory, our party must arouse the consciousness of young people, rely on their strength and give full play to their role as a vanguard and shock force in all undertakings.

The second historical conclusion is: To accomplish something in revolution and construction, young people must accept the party's leadership and Marxist-Leninist guidance, be one with the people and keep to a firm and correct political orientation. A firm and correct political orientation was different, specific contents in different historical periods. Today, a firm and correct political orientation means upholding the socialist road, the people's democratic dictatorship, party leadership and Marxism- Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought. These four fundamental principles are a concentrated expression of the will of the people, a choice made by history and a common scientific conclusion reached by numerous truthseeking young people after summarizing their different experiences in struggle. In carrying out the great task of bringing about a new situation in all fields, members of today's younger generation must vigorously carry forward the glorious traditions of the youth movement and keep this historical conclusion firmly in mind.

All the progressive young people in China are motivated by a firm and boundless scientific belief in the cause of the party and people, the socialist society we are building, and the communist movement which has been put into practice. With this belief, one sees the full meaning of life, has the hope for a bright future, and is capable of defying and overcoming all difficulties on the road of advance. Without this belief, one is vulnerable to various shades of ideological corrosion by the exploiting class, leads a spiritually empty and unfulfilled life, or even goes astray. With this immortal scientific belief, one has a tough mind and is full if vigor, never wavers in the face of difficulty or setback, and, fearless of enemy and danger, is ready to sacrifice personal interests, even life itself, in the interests of the people. This is not a moment's impulse, nor religious belief. The revolutionary martyrs and the older generation brought this faith to great victory. We will resolutely take over the torch and continue the struggle to win greater victories.

Comrades, the 12th National CPC Congress and the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC pointed out the direction and road for China's youth. The party has put forth the call for striving to bring the ranks of cadres to become more revolutionary, younger in average age, better educated and more professionally competent. This call explains that the fulfillment of the magnificent goal to quadruple China's annual industrial and agricultural output value by the end of this century and the country's future advance after the goal is fulfilled have, to a great extent, become the historical task of the current generation of young people. Their attitude toward work, study and life in general will determine the outlook of our great motherland from now until the end of this century and will determine whether we will be able to create a great socialist China with modern industry, agriculture, national defense, and science and technology, and a high level of material and spiritual civilization and democracy. As the older generation of revolutionaries often said, the future belongs to the young people. This truth has never been more concretely and explicitly put forward before the Chinese youths than today. The CYL's task is to unite and lead the young people of the whole country in advancing bravely and with a high sense of responsibility toward the motherland and people, and in shouldering this great historical task.

Needless to say, we have made conscious efforts and scored outstanding achievements in this aspect. However, to a large country with 250 million young people, our work still obviously lags behind the needs of history and reality. There are only 48 million CYL members throughout the country, less than 20 percent of the total youth population. Due to inadequate work and other social factors, a good number of CYL members have failed to play the leading model role. The number and quality of CYL members cannot cope with the needs of the arduous task they shoulder.

After the current congress, CYL organizations at various levels must, while recruiting new members, intensify the ideological and organizational building of the league in order to strengthen the CYL as an advanced mass organization and continuously recruit thousands upon thousands of qualified CYL members from all regions, nationalities and fighting posts in all trades and professions throughout the country. They will, like seedlings full of vigor and vitality, unite and lead the youth of the whole country, blossom and bear fruits on the good earth of the motherland, and become an invincible force in revitalizing the country.

In order to fulfill the task of uniting and educating the youth, the CYL must proceed from the actual situation of the young people's labor, work, study and life, consider their characteristics and enthusiastically and vigorously carry out independent CYL activities by seeking truth from facts. It must strive to achieve effective and good results in all of its ideological work and in its service to youth. Young people are full of vigor, vitality and initiative, but they generally lack the experience of social life and political struggle. Therefore, some of them are easily deceived when they are under the influence and corruption of decadent capitalist thinking and the thinking of other exploiting classes. In view of these weaknesses of the young people, the CYL should make great efforts to strengthen ideological and political work, and guide and help young people to foster lofty communist ideals, correctly understand and handle various problems in their real life and enhance their ability to resist various erroneous thinking. The CYL organizations at all levels should become "homes of the youth" and the CYL cadres at all levels should be "friends of the youth." We should assume a clearcut stand to support and help the advanced youth, fairly and reasonably help youth solve various questions concerning ideological understanding and enthusiastically help some backward youth. We should sincerely be concerned about the small number of youth and juveniles who have committed mistakes; help, enlighten and respect them; believe that they will mend their ways; help them develop confidence in life; pluck up their courage to advance; "bid farewell to yesterday;" and keep pace with the onward march of others. The Young Pioneers are flowers of the motherland and tomorrow's CYL members. The CYL organizations should carry forward the traditions of "the whole CLY leading the Young Pioneers" and firmly strengthen their leadership over the work of the Young Pioneers. While uniting and educating the youth and juveniles, the CYL organizations should strengthen their own building. All CYL organizations, from the central organ down to grasseoots organizations, should work in a revolutionary spirit. From among the CYL ranks we should train one group after the other of persons of action who are politically dependable, ideologically up to the mark, diligent in study and capable of creating a new situation in work.

Comrades! While solemnly pointing out the historical mission of the young generation and the CYL, we also fully understand the important responsibility of the party leadership. It has always been our party's fine tradition to be concerned about the future of young people and attach importance to the work of the CYL. At this crucial moment when our party wants to fulfill its general tasks in the new period amid the cooperation between new and old cadres and amid the succession of the new to the old, we hope that the party committees at all levels will work with communists' foresight and sagacity, a sense of responsibility to the party's cause and firmly strengthen and improve their leadership over the work of the CYL, particularly the work of the CYL organizations in the countryside. The party committees at all levels should take the consolidation of the rural grassroots CYL organizations as a part of the all-round consolidation of the party organizations and seriously strengthen CYL building in the countryside organizationally and ideologically. The leading party cadres at all levels should keep close contacts with the youth, understand them and personally do ideological work among them.

The leading party cadres should show concern for the youth politically and ideologically and for their life as well to ensure their healthy growth, and do all they can to help the youth solve various practical problems. We should pay attention to discovering and training persons of ability from among young people and open a broad avenue for them to become qualified persons. We should seriously assign outstanding young party members to do CYL work and timely recruit party members from among outstanding CYL members that meet the qualifications of the party membership in order to bring into full play the role of the CYL as a reserve force of the party.

To be concerned about young people and CYL work is an important task for the whole party, as well as an important task for the whole society. All party and government departments, all democratic parties and mass organizations and all public figures who are concerned about the future of the motherland and who love the youth and youngsters, particularly the teachers of various schools and the personnel doing ideological and political work in various enterprises, should share the work and closely cooperate with each other to actually support CYL work, create good conditions for the healthy growth of youth and juveniles, and do their utmost to train tens of millions of successors to the revolutionary cause.

Then, in our great socialist motherland, our young people will love their country while the country nurtures them. They will love the party while the party leads them to a bright future. Remembering from where their happiness comes, they will respect the revolutionaries of the older generation while the revolutionaries of the older generation, with great foresight, help them surpass the oldtimers. Then, our society will be a moving scene and the new relationship among people will increase the Chinese nation's great rallying force and creativeness ten-fold or even one hundred-fold and thus promote the development of socialist modernization daily.

All CYL members and youth of various nationalities throughout the country, enhance your vigor and strive to forge ahead! The glorious future of the socialist motherland belongs to you! The honor belongs to the young generation that turns its face to the communist future!

RENMIN RIBAO 20 Dec Editorial

[Editorial: "To Reinvigorate China Requires the Awakening and Struggle of Young People -- Greeting the Opening of the 11th CYL National Congress"]

[Text] The 11th CYL National Congress opens today. We warmly hail the victorious convocation of the congress and congratulate, in advance, its success.

Not long ago, the 12th CPC Congress formulated a fighting program to create a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization, pointed to us a road of socialist construction for modernization that is full of Chinese characteristics and provided a grand and glorious prospect to the people of various nationalities and the younger generation throughout the country. The recently concluded Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC approved the new constitution and the Sixth 5-Year Plan and formulated a general program for us in governing our country and giving it security, as well as a short term plan for fulfilling the fighting goal in the coming 20 years. The 11th CYL National Congress is now being held in the wake of the two historic congresses of the party and the state, which means that in the great undertaking of building socialist modernization, the party and the state cherish great expectations for the younger generation in the belief that the young people will act as pioneers in order to stand in the forefront of the struggle.

We are convinced that the members of the CYL, as the close associate and reserve force of the CPC, will never let the party and people down but will, with their loyality to the party's cause as in the past, unite the broad masses of the young people and play their role as pioneers and shock workers in the new historical march.

Our country is now in a new period of historical development and is confronting new, heavy tasks of construction and reformation. The young people's consciousness and fighting, their adherence to the party's glorious tradition are required more now than before so as to push forward the great cause initiated by the veteran revolutionaries. The contemporary youth movement in our country has all along developed under the leadership of our party, and the historical destiny of the Chinese youth and the party's cause have stood together through thick and thin. History has already shown that the Chinese youth, as an important force in the whole revolutionary movement led by the party, have always accepted the advanced ideas of Marxism-Leninism and the program and proposal of the CPC above all, and fought courageously in the forefront of the revolutionary ranks to make great contributions to the people's revolution and socialist construction, whether in war years or in the period of peace construction.

The present younger generation in our country has grown up under a special historical situation. As a result of the historical wounds caused by the 10 years of internal disorder and the new tests brought by the policy of opening up to foreign countries, not only some people who harbor vicious ideas have cherished the self-imposed illusion about the so-called "crisis of faith" of the Chinese youth, but also some kind comrades once worried about the ideological tendency of some young people. Accompanying the great historical changes since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, young people in our country have ideologically experienced a process of bringing order out of chaos and the development of old things replaced by new ones. The party's concern, education and guidance have given young people confidence, courage and strength. Many people have, in the practice of study and exploration, continuously corrected their direction in order to march forward and consciously corrected some wrong ideas. The young people have seen with their own eyes the great changes which have taken place in the national life over the past 4 years and the resolute measures taken and practical progress made by the party in eliminating both the "leftist" and right incorrect tendencies, in rectifying party style, in hitting hard at serious economic crimes and in safeguarding the sovereignty of the state. They have firm faith in the party and socialism and resolutely support the party's line, guiding principles and policies since the third plenary session. The carrying out of the mass movement of "five stresses and four beauties" and "three loves," and the emergence of thousands upon thousands of "shock workers in the new Long March" fully show the revolutionary initiative of the broad masses of the young people. The 12th CPC Congress pointed out: "Although the 'Cultural Revolution' did them immense harm during their formative years, the overwhelming majority of them are good politically and they have made marked progress in the past few years; the negative features displayed by a small number of young people can be changed through education." Just as what the CPC Central Committee expected 4 years ago, facts have more and more clearly shown that the younger generation in our country is a promising generation which can give full play to its abilities.

To open a new situation in socialist modernization, the key lies in our efforts to train our young people of this generation to be new socialist people who have ideals, morals and knowledge and observe discipline. We should educate and encourage young people to carry out creative labor in all places and posts which the motherland needs and to study hard in order to master knowledge and skills needed in the modernization drive and to become vanguards in effecting a fundamental turn for the better in standards of social conduct.

In the practice of labor, study and struggles, we should truly do well in training and educating youths so that many of them will successively become various kinds of talented personnel who have both communist consciousness and professional knowledge. This is a matter of primary importance which will determine the success or failure of our four modernizations and the face of our party and state in the future. Therefore, the CPC Central Committee shows special concern for the CYL work and the convening of its national congress. The CPC Central Committee has issued a series of important instructions in this connection. Party committees at all levels should attach importance to youth work and resolve to change the present situation in which youth work lags behind the requirements in practical life. With communist foresight and sagacity and a sense of full responsibility for the party cause, party committees at all levels should truly strengthen and improve their leadership over CYL work. Responsible cadres of the party and government should get in touch with youths, understand them and personally do ideological work for them. Young people are simple-minded and enthusiastic, but lack experiences of political struggle and social life. Hence, they can be easily influenced by the bourgeois decadent ideology and the ideology of other exploiting classes. While setting demands on youths and assigning tasks to them, we should pay attention to their immediate interests, provide them with more guidance in life and take active measures to serve them. The entire party should attach importance to youth work and the whole society should show concern for their growth. This is our party's fine tradition and a specific manifestation of the advantage of our country's socialist system. All departments, organizations and units should do their best in this respect.

The convening of the 11th CYL National Congress is an important matter in the political life of our country. The congress will become an important milestone in our country's youth movement, which is developing vigorously. Under the leadership of the CPC Central Committee, let us closely unite with youths of various nationalities throughout the country to march toward the bright future of socialist modernization and contribute all our youth, wisdom and strength to the prosperity, thriving and unity of our motherland.

JOURNAL URGES REFORMING CADRE PERSONNEL SYSTEM

HK220122 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 22 Dec 82 p 4

["Opinion" column "From the Monthly TALENT": "Present Cadre System Needs Reforming"]

[Text] Reforming the existing personnel system is an arduous, but urgent task. The present drive to readjust the nation's economy requires a corresponding change in the personnel and management system. Problems such as "feeding at the public trough," "the iron rice bowl" (job security) and life-long tenure are obstacles to the country's modernization drive.

The existing channels for employing cadres are: through state assignment, through transfers and through nationwide and local examinations.

However, the present system is in disorder. For instance, some cadres are employed or promoted arbitrarily, and some vacant posts are filled by the children of retired cadres.

As a result, the ranks of cadres has swelled to some 20 million, but quality of cadres is dropping. All these errors should be corrected.

We should clearly define "cadre" and make a distinction between cadre and professional.

More than 20 million cadres can be put into two categories. One category is the executive workers in the party and government bodies or institutions. They can be divided into those in leading posts and those in charge of routine work. The second category is the professionals: researchers, teachers, doctors, nurses, actors, engineers, technicians and so on. The first group should be called cadres, while the second are generally called intellectuals.

The number of executive cadres should be restricted but the professionals should be increased as much as possible.

Hiring

We should develop regulations for hiring cadres. All candidates should undergo strict examination before they are hired.

And there should be a standard set of job qualifications that candidates must meet before they are hired or promoted.

We should also encourage self-study. Those with special abilities, or whose education has reached university levels through self-study can be employed if they pass the examination. They should be given titles and wages commensurate to their ability and jobs.

A checking system is necessary for the reform of the existing cadre system as an important means of cultivating qualified cadres.

Such a system would also provide records for transfers, promotions, demotions, raises, bonuses, and fines.

Such a system should include cadre's political consciousness, professional knowledge, ability and work record.

For scientific and technological professionals the emphasis should be on their professional ability and achievements; for cadres in the party and government agencies, it should be their work and their political and ideological awareness; while for those in leading positions, the assessment should be based on the results of their work and the comments of others.

Movement

The movement of professionals from one industry to another should be subject to the needs of the country's economic readjustment. Professional technicians may go from scientific research institutions to industry, from military to civilian industries, from state-owned enterprises to collectively-owned ones, and from places with a strong technological force to places where technicians are lacking.

Professionals can also be engaged for part-time jobs, say, as advisers or teachers.

Those with no tasks in their factories or institutions can be lent, through contracts, to where they are badly needed.

Places or units in need of technicians can seek, through advertising, qualified applicants.

Units in remote areas can attract professionals by offering higher wages. The income of the professionals already working there should be raised, too.

Experts working on the country's key projects can choose their partners and assistants from other sources with the permission of the departments concerned.

A law should be worked out to protect talented professionals. To discover talented people, make full use of them and protect them should be regarded as important tasks of personnel and discipline inspection departments.

BAN YUE TAN ARTICLE ON EDUCATING CPC MEMBERS

HK220801 Beijing BAN YUE TAN in Chinese No 23, 10 Dec 82 pp 6-8

[Article by Qu Jianchong [2575 1696 1504] and Yuan Wenzhong [5913 2429 1813]: "Be Worthy of the Glorious Title of a Communist -- Sidelights on the National Conference on Education of Party Members"]

[Text] "We communists should be worthy of the glorious title of a party member." This was the common aspiration of all comrades who attended the national conference on the education of party members.

Our party is the pioneer force of the Chinese working class. It loyally represents the interests of the people of all nationalities and is the leadership core of China's socialist cause. It has already had more than 39 million members. All the participants at the meeting were of the opinion that the question of whether all comrades in our party can consciously practice the various requirements put forward in the new party constitution and be qualified party members is of great significance in fulfilling the magnificent mission of the party in the new historical period. Therefore, strengthening the ideological construction of the party and doing a good job of educating party members becomes a major issue of strategic importance.

During the meeting they discussed the significance of strengthening education among party members and exchanged their experiences. During the past 4 years, experiments of party rectification have been carried out one by one in Heilongjiang Province. After rectification and education, most party members in the units where the experiments were carried out could play exemplary roles, the number of the party members who could not play such roles was greatly reduced, the combat effectiveness of party organizations and the party's prestige increased greatly and both work and production took a turn for the better. Li Jianbai, secretary of the Heilongjiang Provincial CPC Committee said that practice has proved that doing a good job of educating party members is indeed the key to party rectification. In the future, we should further strengthen, on the basis of summing up our experiences, our leadership of this work in order to score even greater achievements in this work.

Through practice, the Huichang County CPC Committee of Jiangxi Province has gradually understood that the education of party members is the foundation of work in our rural areas and is one of the committee's long-term fundamental tasks. In order to put an end to the previous malpractice of the party failing to run the party, they have adopted three measures: 1) an appropriate division of labor between party and government. The party committee concentrates its energy mainly on the implementation of the party's line, principles and policies. It pays attention to the party's ideological and political work, the construction of party organizations, major production issues and the inspection and enforcement of financial and administrative discipline. The day-to-day economic and administrative work should be done by the government and its relevant departments in order to give full play to the roles of the government departments; 2) putting an end to the long standing practice of assigning members of the county CPC committee standing committee long-term responsibility for the work of certain areas of the county and making them de facto heads of areas.

They have divided up their labor anew according to the daily work of the standing committee and given priority to the party's ideological and political work. As a result, they have overcome the malpractices of indiscriminately paying equal attention to both important and unimportant affairs and of party organization failing to run the party or pay attention to party building; 3) it was stipulated that the party committees at the county and commune levels must hold at least one discussion on the problem of educating party members every 3 months. Zhong Yaoting, secretary of the county CPC committee said that during the first half of this year, the committee specifically held six discussions on the education of party members. Because of the great attention that they have paid to educating party members and building up basic-level party organizations, they have comparatively smoothly carried out the party's line and policies, brought a remarkable turn for the better to the party work style and general mood of the people and society throughout the county and relatively quickly developed their production, setting a new record for the county's grain output last year.

During the meeting many comrades mentioned that in order to strengthen the education of party members, we must grasp communist education as the core. During the past few years, we have carried out more education among our party members in the situation and tasks and in the party's line, principles and policies. This education has played an important role in heightening party members' sense of policy and eliminating the influence of "leftism." However, we have yet failed to systematically teach our party members basic knowledge and theory about the party and especially to carry out sufficient communist education. In the future, we must focus on carrying out communist education with revolutionary ideals, morality and discipline as its main content.

The comrades from the Shgnahai municipal party committee said that since the 12th party congress, the municipal party committee had organized the party members, cadres and masses to study the new party constitution and had carried out education in communist ideology. As a result, the party members have a firmer confidence in communism and the masses have rallied closer around the party organizations. This new atmosphere is heartening. According to statistics from 12 higher education institutions, the number of party constitution study teams has increased from 172 before the 12th party congress to 563 now and the number of their members has increased from 1,900 to 5,700. Quite a few comrades have handed in an application for party membership. In Henan Province, in addition to sending some party members to attend courses in batches in the party schools, more than 1.5 million party members were organized to take part in the education activities of learning from the deeds of Zhao Chune, a good party member. This has satisfactorily promoted raising the communist awareness of the broad ranks of the party members and heightening their party spirit.

In the past, people often thought that education of party members meant the education among the ordinary party members in the basic level units such as factories, villages, schools and shops. Some party member leading cadres also thought that the task of a leader was educating others, but they themselves did not need to receive any education. The participants at the meeting were of the opinion that this time during the education among party members, we should of course pay attention to the education among the broad ranks of ordinary party members. However, we should pay particular attention to the education among our party member leading cadres and require them to take the lead in performing the duties of party members, observing the party constitution and acting as qualified party members. This is the key to improving our party work style.

Huang Zhengxu, director of the Propaganda Department of the Shenyang Municipal CPC Committee said that in carrying out the education in party spirit, discipline and work style which centered on rectifying party work style, the committee stressed starting from the leadership, starting with itself. It treated the leading groups of the organizations directly under the municipal authorities and the county and district organizations as the focal points, grasped the work and set examples levels by level. The municipal CPC committee took the lead in examining its unhealthy practices. It took the lead in making self-criticism in meetings of all the leading cadres of the municipal departments and districts, in correcting unhealthy practices and in returning what had been unlawfully taken or compensating for it. Because the municipal committee adopted a resolute attitude, it has basically put an end to the unhealthy practices which the masses resent of giving meals and presents, getting jobs and housing through pull and embezzeling public property. It has educated the party members and to a certain extent satisfied the masses. Many facts have proved that if the departments and units pay attention to educating party member leading cadres, the education among party members there is more effective.

In exchanging experiences, they mentioned that in carrying out education among our party members, we should proceed from reality, have a definite object in view and pay attention to effect. Zhang Hongrong, Liaocheng Prefectural CPC Committee deputy secretary, said that Liaocheng Prefecture is situated in the northeast plain of Shandong Province and that in the past the prefecture depended on the state for grain supplies and lived on relief funds from the state for a long time. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, there have been great changes in their prefecture and the total prefectural industrial and agricultural output value this year was to be double that of 1978. The masses happily say: "In the past, dried pumpkins were our main foodstuff, our hens were our banks and the commune members were as poor as church mice. Now, our grain store is abundant, oil fills our jars and we have new clothes and houses. Even those who have been single for a long time have married. Our life grows increasingly prosperous." The cadres and masses have expressed the view that there have been a few developments that they never imagined would happen. They never imagined that the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee would have such a powerful influence. They never imagined that the responsibility system would be so effective. They never imagined that changes would be so rapid and the situation could be so wonderful. How has this wonderful situation come about? He said that it is mainly the result of education in the party's line, principles and policies formulated since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee which has been carried out in the manner of taking into account the state of affairs of the party members' and cadres' minds. It is also the result of the elimination of the influence of the "leftist" ideology, the readjustment of the internal structure of agriculture to suit local conditions, the implementation of the policy of overcoming the tendency of engaging in unitary undertakings and paying attention to both grain and cotton production centering on cotton production and the conscientious implementation of the agricultural production system. Our cadres and masses unanimously expressed the view that: "The responsibility system and the cultivation of cotton are the two cures for Licheng's poverty." Zhang Sijing, deputy secretary of the CPC committee of Qinghua University, said that during the period of the great historical turning point, a part of the party member intellectuals did not, for a time, understand the principles and policies formulated since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. They worried that they might commit rightist mistakes and lacked confidence in the prospects of the four modernizations. In order to solve these problems, since 1979, the university CPC committee has time and again educated their party members in "the situation, line, prospects and confidence" centering closely on maintaining political identity with the party Central Committee.

As a result, they have helped some comrades to eliminate the influence of the "leftist" and rightist ideology, draw a demarcation line between a series of rights and wrongs and strengthen their confidence in the party and in socialism.

The comrades who attended the meeting unanimously experssed their determination to implement the spirit of this meeting in their actual work, do a good job of educating party members and strive to create a new situation in the work of educating party members.

HONGQI ON POLITICAL UNITY WITH CENTRAL COMMITTEE

HK200400 Beijing HONGQI in Chinese No 23, 1 Dec 82 pp 7-9

[Article by Liu Zhijian - [0491 1807 1017]: "Be More Conscientiously and Resolutely Politically in Line with the CPC Central Committee"]

[Text] It is a matter of prime importance for the whole party, the whole army and the people of all naticnalities throughout the country to study, publicize and implement the documents of the 12th CPC National Congress. At present, the vast number of commanders and soldiers in our army are conscientiously studying these documents. They are making efforts to unify understanding and action in the light of the program, policies and principles put forward by the 12th party congress, and are striving to fulfill the glorious tasks the party and the people have entrusted to them and to make more contributions in safeguarding and building our socialist motherland. We have much work to do. But to the people's army, which is under the leadership of the party, the most important thing to do is to keep political unanimity with the CPC Central Committee. This is a principle of party spirit, which all communist party members and party organizations at all levels must adhere to. It is also a political principle and an organizational principle that all cadres and fighters must abide by. Consciously keeping political unanimity with the party Central Committee is an important sign of whether we are conscientiously studying and implementing the documents of the 12th party congress and an important guarantee for creating a new situation in modernizing and regularizing our revolutionary army under the leadership.

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, in accordance with the directives of the CPC Central Committee and the Central Military Commission, the CPC committee of our PLA units has repeatedly emphasized that keeping political unanimity with the CPC Central Committee is a matter of fundamental importance that must be firmly grasped in doing party committee work and political work. It has also put forward concrete demands and measures on this fundamental problem and has done much work. Judging from the overall situation, since this problem has been grasped firmly and consistently, most cadres and soldiers are able to conscientiously implement the party's line, policies and principles in the prcess of shifting the focal point of our party's work, and marked progress has been achieved in various aspects of our work. However, we must not be satisfied with these achievements. Instead, we must realize that the 12th party congress has set a higher demand for us on the question of keeping political unanimity with the CPC Central Committee. We must further do a good job in this respect.

In order to create a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization, the CPC Central Committee pointed out that it is necessary to strengthen party building and enhance the fighting strength of the party to suit the needs and characteristics of the new historical period. Ours is a party of militancy. In order to make it a strong core of leadership in socialist modernization construction, it is necessary to preserve a high degree of centralism and unity in our party. This is a matter of great importance. We must practive democracy within the party, but we must also have a high degree of centralism on the basis of a high degree of democracy.

Only thus can the whole party take concerted action in fighting for the common goal, and only this type of party is really militant.

The fighting strength of the party is chiefly displayed through the role played by the core of the party leadership. But how does the core of party leadership display its role? First it must work out and implement a correct line and correct policies and principles, and must do a good job in organizational work as well as in propaganda and education. Second, it must give play to the exemplary role of all party members in various jobs and in social life. A Marxist political party attaches great importance to the formulation of a correct program, for it is a banner from which the masses of people can recognize the party and decide whether they support it. Simultaneously, a Marxist political party also attaches great importance to concrete action. It holds that, in a sense, concrete action is more important, for only when the whole party takes concerted action in fighting for the realization of the party's program can it rally its determination and win real support and the faith of the broad masses of people. For this reason, all party members must take the requirements of making concerted efforts in the whole party as a fundamental principle in dealing with relations between the individuals and the party organization. They must firmly and consciously keep political unanimity with the party Central Committee. If this principle is sabotaged by unorganizationed and indisciplined action, the unity and fighting strength of the party will be undermined and the fundamental interests of the people will be damaged.

Political unanimity must be achieved on the solid basis of ideological unanimity with the party Central Committee. The organizational principle of our party has always been: The individual is subordinate to the organization, the minority is subordinate to the majority, the organizations at lower levels are subordinate to those at higher levels, and various organizations of the whole party and all party members are subordinate to the party's national congress and the Central Committee. This principle and discipline of democratic centralism was established on the ideological basis of a high degree of consciousness. The line, policies and principles of our party are formulated by integrating Marxist-Leninist principles with the concrete conditions of our country. They were from, and are adhered to by, the masses of people. Therefore, without the masses' deep understanding and conscientious support, the party's program and its policies and principles cannot be well implemented merely by means of administrative orders and organizational measures. Thus, when we emphasize the importance of keeping political unanimity with the party Central Committee, it is first necessary to require that all party members have a profound understanding of the party's line, policies and principles both in theory and in practice so that their consciousness can be enhanced in implementation. In other words, we must not only organizationally obey the spirit of the central authorities and make a statement to show our resolute support of it, we must also change our past attitude of knowing only the how without knowing the why and change the status of having only half of the knowledge. Only when political unanimity with the party Central Committee is achieved on the basis of unified understanding and a high level of political consciousness can it be firm and reliable and be able to withstand the test of tortuosity and complications in the process of practice. Now, the 12th CPC National Congress has already put forth fighting programs and tasks for the new historical period and has formulated a series of policies, principles and measures. We must first endeavor to get a deep understanding of the essence of these programs, policies and principles, and grasp their spirit so that we can solve various problems in our recognition by linking them with practice and unifing our understanding in light of these policies and principles.

There is another question that needs to be clarified. When we emphasize the basis of ideological unanimity, we do not mean that if we do not understand the party's policies and principles, we can disregard them and do whatever we like. On the contrary, it means a higher demand for keeping unanimity with the party Central Committee in action. Being Communist Party members, both our words and actions must always be in keeping with the party Central Committee and the Central Military Commission. We must not say or do anything that is not in keeping with, or is even against, the central authorities. This is the political discipline which we must abide by.

We must take concrete action to keep political unanimity with the party Central Committee. Keeping unanimity with the party Central Committee is not an empty slogan, but a principle of concrete action. A fine tradition of our party is that when we say it, we must do it. The proletarian political party and the people's army always act on they have said. This shows that they are highly responsible for the people. We must resolutely carry out the fighting program of the 12th CPC National Congress and adhere in a down-to-earth manner to the party's line, policies and principles display the spirit of fearing neither hardship nor death, and do our bit for the rejuvenation of the country and the people's happiness. When we say or do anything, we must take the spirit of the 12th CPC National Congress as our guide, take the documents and directives of the party Central Committee as our standard, and obey the unified leadership of the party Central Committee. All party members must unexceptionally and resolutely carry out the principle of democratic centralism which the new party constitution has reiterated, that is, "various organizations of the whole party and all party members are subordinate to the party's national congress and the Central Committee." We will not allow such practices as saying yes but meaning no, complying in public but opposing in private, overtly agreeing but covertly opposing, feign compliance and implementing this principle according to one's likes and dislikes. We will not allow any factional action. We will not allow any pragmatic attitude toward the directives of the central authorities, that is, implementing only that part of the central directives that conforms to the partial interests of some people or their units. We resolutely oppose the trend of ultra-democracy and the decadent behavior of liberalism.

We must actively and creatively implement in our practical work the spirit of the directives of the central authorities. Keeping unanimity with the party Central Committee does not mean to blindly and mechanically carry out the directives of the Central Committee. Instead, it means to implement them in the light of the concrete conditions in our localities and units. We must carry out the directives of the Central Committee in a correct way rather than copy them mechanically in a simplified way. Only thus can we create a lively new situation in our practical work. The CPC Central Committee ardently expect that the PLA will continue to be a great wall of steel guarding our socialist motherland in the great struggle of creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization and be an important force in the building of socialist material and spiritual civilization. We must, in light of the actual conditions of the army, make concrete efforts to score new achievements in various aspects, such as in strengthening military and political training and enhancing the fighting strength of the army, in carrying out a long-term activity of learning from the advanced units and individuals in building socialist spiritual civilization, in training a generation of new people who have ideals, morality, cultural knowledge and sense of discipline, in speeding up construction of the frontier defense and in fulfilling the arduous tasks of guarding the frontier and guarding the four modernizations construction. We must make new contributions through our actions for the realization of the party's program and tasks.

In order to keep political unanimity with the party Central Committee, it is necessary to overcome all obstructions of the "leftist" and right erroneous tendencies.

As to various wrong words and deeds, we must carry out education or criticism, sometimes even necessary struggles against them, according to the seriousness of the errors. The present political situation of stability and unity is one of the best in our country since it was established. Permanent stability is an inevitable trend. However, since the pernicious influence of the "Great Cultural Revolution" has not yet been completely eliminated, and due to the corrosive influence of bourgeois ideas and the remnants of feudal ideas, various erroneous ideological trends still exist to different extents within our party, our revolutionary ranks and society. Some people who have been more seriously influenced by "leftist" ideology or bourgeois liberalism do not quite understand the party's line, policies and principles mapped out since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. Proceeding from "leftist" or right ideologies, they have misinterpreted, doubted and even resisted the party's policies. A small number of people with ulterior motives have adopted an antagonistic attitude toward the party's present policies. Some of them are trying to preserve the erroneous practices of the "Great Cultural Revolution," and some are fundamentally opposing the four basic principles. There are actually a small number of the remnants of the Lin Biao clique and the "gang of four" who are still occupying some leading posts, waiting for an opportunity to make trouble and opposing the correct line of the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. We must keep a clear head toward all this. We must make a concrete analysis of these problems with the scientific methods of Marxism and treat different problems in different ways. Problems of recognition must be solved through persuasion and education; but obstructions from either "left" or right must be resolutely removed, or struggled against if necessary.

Emphasizing political unanimity with the party Central Committee is the need of safeguarding the fundamental interests of the party and the people, and the need of implementing the spirit of the 12th CPC National Congress and creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization. It is also a common desire of the broad masses of cadres and soldiers. The unity between the people of all nationalities throughout the country achieved on the basis of the whole party keeping political unanimity with the party Central Committee is a fundamental guarantee of the victory of our socialist modernization drive. We must fully understand this and take effective action.

RENMIN RIBAO ON REFORM OF ECONOMIC SYSTEM

HK170807 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 15 Dec 82 p 5

[Report by Jing Zhiping [2529 5268 1627]: "Actively and Properly Accelerate the Reform of the Economic System -- On the Forum Held by the State Commission for Reforming the Economic System"]

[Text] At a forum recently convened by the State Commission for Reforming the Economic System, some economists and responsible comrades of economic departments in Beijing enthusiastically supported the strategy put forth by Premier Zhao Ziyang at the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC -- to actively and properly accelerate the reform of the economic system.

The comrades participating in the forum held that it was correct to place the focus of reform on three tasks -- substituting taxes for delivery of profits, giving full play to key cities and reforming the commercial circulation system -- in the next 3 years. If we can make a breakthrough in these fields, we will not only be able to help forward the whole economic system reform but also create a completely new state of affairs in the economic situation throughout the country.

Our existing economic system has so many weaknesses that it simply must be reformed. For example, such conventional practices as "everybody eating from the same big pot" and "everybody keeping a secure job" and the phenomena of enterprises showing no concern for society's demands and the development of technology, divorce between rural and urban areas and between departments and regions, and so on have seriously obstructed our country's economy from rapidly developing. Therefore, how to conscientiously make use of the law of value and to give full play to the roles of various economic levers such as salary, price, taxation, credit and so on within the scope of planned economy has become an important problem in the reform of the economic system. Our economists hold that, under the present circumstances of the infeasibility of thorough reform being carried out in such fields as the pricing system and so on, it is a correct and completely feasible measure to quicken the pace in substituting taxes for delivery of profits. For this reason, they emphasize that we must train a great number of economic management personnel in such branches as statistics, accounting, taxation and so on, and improve our work in collecting the basic appropriate information.

Our economists hold that we must be more courageous in carrying out the reform. We must take those cities with a relatively developed economy as key cities, help forward the neighboring rural areas, unify production planning and circulation and thus build up different types of economic zones with different scales. In those areas with a relatively developed economy, we must merge perfectural organs with municipal organs and entrust the cities with the leadership over those counties around them. All existing enterprises subordinate to provinces should be administered instead by the cities where they are located. All the above-mentioned measures are examples of bold reform. These steps of great significance will surely have influence on various economic sectors. Also, if this experiment succeeds, the productive force will be greatly liberated and a new situation will certainly emerge in the socialist relations of production in our country.

At present, a prosperous socialist market is emerging. The key link to enhancing commodity circulation between rural and urban areas is to make production, exchange, distribution and consumption form a real benign cycle. In a certain sense, the problem of commerce has become the major contradiction in our present economic work. The State Commission for Reforming the Economic System has, following the directive of Premier Zhao Ziyang, organized the practitioners and theorists concerned to work out and examine the draft plan for reforming the commercial circulation system.

The responsible comrades of the State Commission for Reforming the Economic System hope that theorists and practitioners of the economic circles throughout the country will actively engage in the theoretical studies in the economic system reform and in the practice of various reform experiments. The economic system reform, which is the basic guarantee for the realization of the strategic goal put forth by the 12th CPC Congress, urgently needs the joint efforts of all people in our country who are determined to carry out the reform.

This forum was presided over by Comrade An Zhiwen, vice chairman of the State Commission for Reforming the Economic System. More than 20 comrades, including Yu Guangyuan, Xu Dixin, Pan Yao, Yang Jun, Zhou Taihe, Tong Dalin, Liao Jili, Wu Junyang, Lin Zili, Jiang Yiwei, He Kuang, Yang Peixin, Wang Jue, Wang Daming and Shang Backun, participated in the forum.

REPORT ON ECONOMIC, SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT SYMPOSIUM

HK211125 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 17 Dec 82 p 5

[Academic report by Jiang Yingguang: [5592 2503 0342]: "Eleventh Symposium on Problems of Economic and Social Development Strategy Held"]

[Text] On 22 December the symposium on problems of economic and social development strategy held its 11th forum. The discussion centered on the problem of economic development strategiesin China's agriculture.

Those comrades who delivered speeches all held that since the third plenary session, the party has taken a series of important measures to shift priority from heavy industry to that of agriculture in economic work. The bumper harvests in 4 consecutive years promoted the development of the consumer goods industry and the upturn in heavy industry has significantly changed the economic situation. Confronted with the new situation in the economic development of agriculture, we are therefore required to make new breakthroughs in all fields of industry and commerce. Agriculture is the essential element to make the national economy get onto the track of a benign circle. Meanwhile, industry, commerce and other trades must be centered on the track of treating agriculture as the basis. While talking about agriculture, we must give consideration to industry and commerce as well. Otherwise, it is still the view of small agriculture.

In order to achieve the strategic goal of economic development in the coming 20 years, a basic changed is needed in the economic development strategy of agriculture.

1. We must have a clear understanding of modern agriculture, which consists of both the part of the overall development of grain, industrial crops, forestry, animal husbandry, sideline production and fishing, and the part from production to processing, and the further development from industry, agriculture to circulation. Modern agriculture is developing toward specialization and socialization. We must change our previous agricultural idea which put grain above everything else into the present conception of large agriculture. This change may rectify the previous work style of pressing for sowing and harvesting and reporting disasters and good tidings, overcome the previous shortcoming of carrying out agriculture by administrative means and prevent the occurence of long-term shortages of some agricultural and sideline products as in the past.

2. We must change the previous practice of merely grasping the 1.5 billion mu of arable land to the proper exploitation and utilization of the total land throughout the country, and resolutely carry out the policy of never relaxing our efforts in developing the production of grain and diversified economy.

3. We must continue to implement the party's various economic policies in rural areas and perfect and develop various responsibility system in agricultural production. Those comrades who delivered speeches stressed that the responsibility system in agricultural production, with the all-round contract system as its main form, has created a new situation in the economic development of agriculture and is a major breakthrough in the economic work in rural areas. Those engaged in the work of economic theory must research this change and go to the practice of the masses to sum up experiences, discover and develop new theories.

4. We must comprehensively utilize science and technology and speed up economic development inagriculture. Sustained development in agriculture needs science. At present many peasants treat science and technology as "the god of wealth." To adapt ourselves to the situation, we must establish and perfect various service systems of agricultural technology, establish agricultural technological centers in various areas and popularize and promote various suitable technologies.

We must establish advanced systems of agricultural education and train agricultural technical personnel in various fields. We must gradually create necessary working and living conditions for the technical agricultural personnel.

5. We must develop commodity production so as to bring about the development of the change from self-sufficiency toward specialization and socialization in our country's agricultural economy, and change the mere production of raw material to the comprehensive operation of agriculture, industry and commerce. It is a big problem that the circulation outlets are not active in rural areas. We must continue to take a more liberal policy, make all channels smooth and enliven the economy in rural areas.

6. We must protect agricultural resources and maintain the ecological balance. There exists a serious problem now in this field with loss of water and erosion of soil, environmental pollution, damage of resources and ecological imbalance. All this has produced disastrous effects on the development of the agricultural economy. It is a very urgent task to protect agricultural resources, including the maintenance of stability of arable land and the establishment of a fine ecosystem.

RENMIN RIBAO ON EXPLOITING RURAL TALENT

[Editorial: "Increase the Exploitation of Intellectual Resources in the Countryside"]

[Text] Increasing the exploitation of intellectual resources in the countryside plays an important role in promoting present agricultural production and has strategic significance in laying the foundations for the long-term development of agriculture.

Exploiting intellectual resources means exploiting talented people. Talented people are the basis for construction. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the situation in the countryside has been flourishing, and there is consequently an extremely urgent need for talented people there. Due to the gradual implementation of the economic responsibility system and other rural economic policies, the peasants' enthusiasm and initiative for production is at an unprecedentedly high level, and the lively situation of learning and applying science has arisen all over the countryside. However, our existing agrotechnological contingent is still too small, and is nowhere near sufficient to cater to the demands of the development of production. The flourishing of diversified economic management, and the appearance of embryonic forms of commodity production such as specialized households, specialized groups and economic associations, has pushed the structure of the rural economy toward the multiple development of agriculture, forestry, animal husbandry, sideline production, fishery, industry and commerce, and brought about a gradual transition toward specialization and socialization of production. The continued exploitation of local people of talent, and bringing fully into play the function of skilled craftsmen and intellectual youth, will take the invigoration of the rural economy a step further; but if the majority of these people have mastered only traditional production skills, they will find it difficult to adapt to the needs of the creation of a new situation in the modernization of agriculture. Only by concentrating our efforts on training a new group of talented people, establishing a contingent of people who have grasped the modernized technology involved in agriculture, forestry, animal husbandry, sideline production, fishery, industry and commerce, and a contingent of people who has grasped the management of agricultural economy, will we be able to promote and guarantee the realization of modernized agriculture.

In order to exploit intellectual resources, we must increase investment in them. In some places people are quite willing to spend money on production and construction, but cannot bear to increase investment in intellectual resources. The result of this is that, due to a lack of talented people and of science and technology and scientific management, much of the investment in production and construction fails to produce the economic results it should, and even serious waste occurs. To develop production, investment in production and construction is absolutely necessary, but should be coordinated with investment in intellectual resources, so that the latter can conform to the needs of economic development. Investment in intellectual resources does not produce big returns in a short time, but once a big group is trained and puts its skills to use, it can increase the benefits obtained from investment in production and construction by several times. From the point of view of long-term strategy, investment in intellectual resources is the most economic and the most beneficial form of investment; this has already been proved by the experience of economically developed countries. We must have this sort of farsighted approach, and make investment in intellectual resources a matter of prime importance to their exploitation and to the building of socialist material and spiritual civilization.

Ours is a big country with many people and a poor foundation. Rural investment in intellectual resources must rely on the state, but even more on the economic strength of localities and collectives; all three must be used. Regular schools and institutes of higher education must train talented people at high levels for the countryside, and the economy of localities, countries and collectives must foster them at primary and middle levels. Only in this way can we exploit intellectual resources in the countryside more quickly and satisfy the need for different kinds of intellectual resources there. Shazhou, a relatively economically developed county in Jiangsu Province, used its own money and worked out its own methods to train a group of talented elementary students of polythechnic school standard, threby ameliorating the situation of urgent demand for talented people in the areas of agriculture, sideline production and industry. This country's experience could provide reference material for areas with the same conditions; and counties whose conditions are less favorable than those in Shazhou can, based on their needs and capacities, do whatever and however much they are capable of, so as to gradually create the conditions to increase the exploitation of intellectual resources.

Intellectual resources must be exploited by combining all the special characteristics of the rural areas. When training peasants to grasp science and technology, great attention must be paid, when deciding on content, to their production needs and economic interests. Material must be presented in many forms and in a short time. A minority of key people can take turns to be released from work for study, while the majority of study in their spare time, depending on how busy their are; they should be sent out of the area to study, teachers should be invited in, and so forth. Those young people in the countryside who have graduated from elementary or middle school are our prime targets in the work of investing in intellectual resources and fostering talented specialists.

Our millions of hardworking peasants have rich experience in traditional production and techniques, representing a great and valuable store of knowledge. If we can open up this valuable store and use it to cultivate modernized agricultural science and technology and economic management, it will certainly help in the promotion of the construction of agricultural modernization. Party and government organs at all levels, and all agricultural and educational departments, must exert great efforts toward education in the countryside. The main leading cadres of all provinces, prefectures and counties must strengthen the work of leading the exploitation of intellectual resources in the rural areas and must draw up plans and measures, and make concerted efforts to carry out this strategically significant work well, so that the talented people in our rural areas can come forth in great numbers!

GUANGMING RIBAO URGES CHERISHING INTELLECTUALS

HK210218 Beijing GUANGMING RIBAO in Chinese 9 Dec 82 p 1

[Editorial: "We Must Cherish Still More the Living Jiang Zhuyings and Luo Jianfus"]

[Text] Jiang Zhuying was the most promising scientist of the country in the field of optical research, and Luo Jianfu was an outstanding electronics engineer. Both of them contributed to scientific and technical inventions at the international level, which the country is badly in need of. One was only 43 years old and the other was 47. In respect of the era, they were living in a golden time of scaling new heights in science and technology. What a contribution they could have made to the socialist modernizations if they had been able to continue their work for another 20 or 30 years! However, they suddenly died, and how could people keep from shedding tears! Jiang Zhuying, in particular, was known by the people to be tirelessly studying and working for 20 years and they called him a "perpetual motion machine". Nobody could ever have thought that of him when he was suddenly ill, lying on a hospital bed, when a doctor detected an egg-sized malignant tumor in his liver and other serious symptoms. People were surprised by his sudden death which made us ponder deeply: For many years, the working conditions and standards of living of the intellectuals and the middle-aged intellectuals, in particular, have not improved. They have done a lot of work but their earnings are very low. According to statistics, the death rate is high for middle-aged intellectuals from departments in various areas. An increasing number of living Jiang Zhuyings and Luo Jianfus will die prematurely if we fail to improve their working conditions and their living standards and fail to cherish them. This will greatly affect the four modernizations.

The realization of the four modernizations is based on science and education and the development of science and education depends on intellectuals and their inventive initiative. It is impossible to realize the four modernizations and to fulfill the great task of quadrupling the total annual output in industry and agriculture in this century without the participation of intellectuals. At present, the intellectuals around 40 and 50 years old, in particular, who are shouldering the responsibility of furthering scientific, technical and educational development, are the backbone of various fronts. They are undertaking the arduous task of catching up with advanced international levels of science and technology and raising the scientific and cultural levels of the people of our nation and building a higher degree of material and socialist spiritual civilizations than that of capitalism. To be more concerned for and to cherish the 5 million or so middle-aged intellectuals, in particular, the tens of thousands of living Jiang Zhuyings and Luo Jianfus, is the vital interest of the 1 billion people and is the bright prospect for realizing the four modernizations. To take good care of the middle-aged intellectuals means taking good care of the vital interests of the people and to cherish the middle-aged intellectuals means ensuring the realization of the four modernizations.

It is true that our state is relatively poor, and the working conditions and the living standards of the workers, peasants and cadres engaged in manual labor ought to be improved. However, in respect of work and responsibility, the working conditions and living standards of the intellectuals, and the middle-aged intellectuals in particular, are in need of immediate improvement. Actually, there are bright prospects for improving the working conditions and living standards of the intellectuals in light of the present conditions of the state. Some problems can be resolved easily by spending a little money or not even spending a cent. But why is it that some easy problems have not been handled promptly in various areas and departments?

This is mainly because they fail to attach importance to intellectuals. Precisely as Comrade Nie Rongzhen said: "It is a manifestation of ignorance to underestimate the role of intellectuals, but this prejudice has long existed in the history of our society and of our party." During the 10 years of turmoil, the "gang of four" went far beyond the limit in despising and discriminating against intellectuals. Since the 10 years of internal disorder, the party Central Committee has repeatedly stressed the importance of intellectuals of the country are a component part of the proletarian rank; this was announced by Comrade Deng Xiaoping on behalf of the Central Committee in March 1976. However, up to now, because of the "leftist" tendency which has not yet been eliminated, some comrades have failed to acquire a better understanding of the proposal put forward by the Central Committee and hold that those who have picks in their hands, or those who run the lathes, are workers' and that those who are engaged in scientific research or laboratory work are not laborers; and some comrades even hold that the intellectuals are "living off" others. Now we intend to make all leading cadres as well as the workers understand that all intellectuals are a component part of the proletarian rank and that mental labor has become even more important and plays an irreplaceable role in modernization. If we are clear on this point, we will strive to improve the working conditions and living standards of the intellectuals and we will take the initiative in attaching importance and cherishing the tens of thousands of living Jiang Zhuyings and Luo Jianfus.

In order to take good care of and cherish the intellectuals, the middle-aged intellectuals in particular, we should not only vigorously improve their living standards, but also attach great importance to giving full play to their work skills; in this way, they can give full play to their wisdom. Politically speaking, we should fully trust them and truly regard them as forces on which our party can rely, and take good care of them. Of course, the units in which Jiang Zhuying and Luo Jianfu worked took care of them. However, in various departments and units, there is still a serious situation by which the intellectuals cannot give full play to their skills, and we can see everywhere the phenomena that politically the intellectuals are not respected, and it is very difficult for the intellectuals to join the party. This situation has not changed. Cases of suppressing and retaliating against intellectuals are very common. We should not allow this situation to go on.

The purpose of the party and the state in training talented persons is to encourage them to give full play to their skills and to shoulder the arduous tasks of building socialism. If we pay attention only to their weak points, and neglect their strong points, this will fetter and suppress the enthusiasm of intellectuals, and this will be a great loss to the cause of the party and the state. The waste of talented personnel is the greatest waste. The key to implementing the policy on intellectuals is to encourage them to practice what they have learned. We should clear away all the stumbling blocks and promptly resolve the problem of misemployment, and encourage intellectuals to give full play to their initiative in the socialist modernizations. At the same time, we should take good care of their political enthusiasm and politically encourage them to make progress. We should admit qualified intellectuals into the party. The stirring deeds of the tens of thousands of intellectuals like Jiang Zhuying and Luo Jianfu have incontrovertibly proved that the majority of the intellectuals of the country are a real component part of the rank of the working class and many of them are outstanding representatives of the working class of the country. The party will strengthen its fighting force and raise its prestige among the masses of people if we have even more communists like Jiang Zhuying and Luo Jianfu in our party.

Leading cadres at all levels should, first of all, take the lead in taking good care of and cherishing the living Jiang Zhuyings and Luo Jiangfus, and all workers and the whole of society should also shoulder this unshirkable duty. We should whip up public opinion in taking care of and cherishing the intellectuals throughout the country.

Jiang Zhuying and Luo Jianfu have left us rich spiritual wealth. Their premature deaths have given us a warning: We must take good care of and cherish still more the living Jiang Zhuyings and Luo Jianfus in order to make our socialist country a modern and powerful state.

PARTY, STATE ISSUE DIRECTIVE ON 'DOUBLE SUPPORT'

OW210809 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0733 GMT 18 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, 18 Dec (XINHUA) -- The CPC Central Committee, State Council and Military Commission under the CPC Central Committee have called on the people and armymen throughout the country to promote activities to support the army and give preferential treatment to army dependents, support the government and cherish the people through celebrating the 40th anniversary of the "double support" during the 1983 Spring Festival.

This directive is transmitted by the General Offices of the CPC Central Committee and State Council and office of the Military Commission under the CPC Central Committee in circulating the "Report Concerning the Celebration of the 40th Anniversary of the 'Double Support Movement' and Launching of 'Double Support' Activities" submitted by the Ministry of Civil Affairs and PLA General Political Department.

The Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee, State Council and Military Commission under the CPC Central Committee point out: It has been 40 years since the initiative in 1943, of the annual Spring Festival activities to support the army and give preferential treatment to army dependents, support the government and cherish the people, which have become a fine tradition of our party, government, army and people of all nationalities in the country. However, the close relationship between the army and the government, and between the armymen and the people, was seriously damaged during the decade of internal turmoil. Since the convening of the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, and along with the gradual implementation of various policies and principles, relations between the army and the government and between the armymen and the people have improved markedly through the common efforts of the party, government, armymen and people. The 12th CPC National Congress has formulated the correct program, policies and principles for creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization. To build closer relations between the army and the government and between the armymen and the people and strengthen the unity between them is an important guarantee for accomplishing the gigantic task put forward by the 12th CPC National Congress. During the Spring Festival in 1983, all leading party, government and army organs and trade union, CYL, women's federation and militia organizations at various levels must, in combination with the work to publicize and study the guidelines of the 12th CPC National Congress, and in accordance with the actual situation in each locality and department, conduct extensive and in-depth education on the great significance of supporting the army, giving preferential treatment to army dependents, supporting the government and cherishing the people and other relevant policies and regulations among the masses of people, cadres and PLA commanders and fighters and thoroughly solve some problems left over from history, affecting relations between the army and the government and between the armymen and the people. Local party and government organizations at various levels should take the initiative in helping solve some problems in army building and teach the cadres and people to show concern for, and cherish, the PLA and safeguard its honor. PLA units should make greater efforts to support and assist local construction. For example, PLA units can, in accordance with needs and available resources, give technical guidance at construction projects, help the masses combat and overcome natural disasters and assist and construction of projects strategically located and difficult of access.

It is necessary to advocate the practice of learning from and helping each other between the army and the government and between the armymen and the people in jointly launching the activities on socialist spiritual civilization, establishing and developing new relations between the army and the government and between the armymen and the people reflecting socialist spiritual civilization, and striving to bring about a fundamental change for the better in the country's financial and economic situation, prevailing social practices and the party's style, and for building China into a modern socialist country with a high level of civilization and democracy.

The "report" submitted by the Civil Affairs Ministry and PLA General Political Department said: Around the Spring Festival in 1943, the Shaanxi-Gansu-Ningxia border region government issues a directive on launching a month-long activity to support the army. The rear detachment also proposed a month-long activity to support the government and cherish the people, thereby forming a high tide in "double support." Subsequently, all revolutionary bases launced the activities without exception, thus promoting the grand unity between the party and government and between the armymen and civilians and giving a strong impetus to ensuring the struggle against the enemy and promoting production. The Spring Festival in 1983 will mark the 40th anniversary of the "double support movement" launched in Yanan. During the period around the Spring Festival, the armymen and people throughout the country should launch extensive and in-depth "double support" activities in order to inherit and carry forward the revolutionary tradition, establish and develop new relations between the army and the government and between the armymen and the people, reflecting socialist spiritual civilization, and help promote a new situation in unity between the army and the government and between the armymen and the people.

The "report" calls for carrying out penetrating education on supporting the army and cherishing the people during the "double support" activities in 1983. It is necessary to organize the broad masses of armymen and people to conscientiously study and vigorously publicize the thesis put forth by the report delivered at the 12th CPC National Congress concerning "striving to build a high level of socialist spiritual civilization." It is necessary, in light of reality, to conduct education to love the CPC, socialism and the PLA and on the great significance and glorious tradition of supporting the army, giving preferential treatment to army dependents, supporting the government and cherishing the people as well as other relevant policies and regulations. Party and government leading organs at various levels must pay keen attention to the education of cadres. First of all, leading cadres at various levels must fully understand the significance of building closer relations between the army and the government and between the armymen and the people and strengthening the unity between them under the new situation and effectively correct the idea of some cadres in neglecting "double support" work.

The "report" calls for joint celebration, in various forms, by people's governments, at and above country level, and PLA leading organs, at and above regimental level, around the Spring Festival. Local party and government leading organs should send responsible comrades to visit PLA units to earnestly solicit their opinions on local work and help PLA units stationed locally to solve problems in preparations against war, military training, performance of duty and practical life and educate the masses to maintain the safety of military installations, in order to enable PLA units to smoothly complete various tasks. All localities must also inspect the implementation of the policy to give preferential treatment to army dependents. PLA units should send responsible comrades to visit local party and government leading organs and inspect the implementation of the policy to support the government and cherish the people and other relevant policies and regulations.

It is necessary to actively assist local construction and public undertakings and give technical assistance to the construction of projects strategically located and difficult of access. It is also necessary to help local people build "civilized villages," "civilized streets" and "civilized schools," so that the army can become important in building both material and spiritual civilization for the local people and a reliable force in maintaining social stability. Local and army leading organs at various levels should conscientiously analyze the situation in the unity between local army units and governments and between the armymen and the people, summarize the "double support" work in 1982, revise the "double support" pledges, and study and formulate better measures for carrying out "double support" work.

STATE COUNCIL DECIDES TO ISSUE TREASURY BONDS

OW161325 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0417 GMT 15 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, 15 Dec (XINHUA) -- In order to properly pool financial resources from various quarters to accelerate the development of energy, transport and other priority projects, the State Council has decided: The issuance of treasury bonds will continue in 1983, with a total face value of 4 billion yuan. Of the 1983 issuance, bonds amounting to 1.8 billion yuan will be sold to state and collectively-owned units, while people in both rural and urban areas will be called on to buy the rest, amounting to 2.2 billion yuan. The treasury bonds sold to individuals carry an 8 percent annual interest.

In order to do a good job in the issuance of the treasury bonds, the State Council recently issued a "Circular on the Issuance of Treasury Bonds in 1983."

The circular says: Our national financial situation at present has made a remarkable turn for the better. However, shortage and decentralization of funds is still a conspicuous problem in our economic work. A fundamental way to solve this problem is to strive to develop production, practice economy and improve economic results. At the same time, it is necessary to adopt appropriate measures to raise a portion of the funds from various units and people in both urban and rural areas. It is feasible to continue to sell a certain amount of treasury bonds to people in both urban and rural areas, because their income has remarkably increased and so has their bank savings in recent years. While studying and publicizing the guidelines of the 12th CPC National Congress and the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC, all localities should seriously do a good job in publicizing the issuance of treasury bonds, make the broad masses of people further understand the political and economic significance of buying the treasury bonds and thus make them combine their enthusiasm for fulfilling the party's fighting tasks with actions to support national construction.

The circular emphasizes: In issuing the treasury bonds, we should adhere to the principle of rational distribution and voluntary purchase. The people's governments at all levels should make rational distribution of the bonds according to local situation and the financial ability of the people in both urban and rural areas. The people's governments must first do good ideological work as a basis and adhere to the principle of voluntary purchase. They should not divide the bond equally among the people, nor should they arbitrarily apportion the bonds to the people and then make deductions from the latter's wages.

The circular also calls on newspapers, journals, radio and television stations and other media to give good publicity to the issuance of the treasury bonds.

Regulations on Bonds

OW162330 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0410 GMT 15 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, 15 Dec (XINHUA) -- Regulations governing 1983 Treasury Bonds of the PRC (adopted at the regular meeting of the State Council on 21 September 1982)

Article 1

In order to concentrate the financial power of all quarters for the promotion of socialist modernization, it has been decided to issue 1983 treasury bonds of the PRC.

Article 2

The treasury bonds will be sold to state and collectively owned enterprises, departments in charge of various enterprises, local governments, institutions, mass organizations, PLA units, public undertakings, well-off rural communes and production brigades, and individuals in urban and rural areas.

Article 3

The total amount of treasury bonds will be decided by the State Council. The treasury bonds will be issued beginning 1 January 1983.

Deadline of payments: The payments by various units are to be concluded by 30 June and the payments by individuals are to be concluded by 30 September.

Article 4

Interest on treasury bonds: The treasury bonds purchased by various units will bear an annual interest of 4 percent, while the treasury bonds purchased by individuals will bear an annual interest of 8 percent.

All interest will be calculated from 1 July 1983. Interest will not be paid for the period of payments made before 1 July 1983.

The interest for the treasury bonds will be paid in a lump sum at the time of the repayment of the principal. They will not be calculated on a compound interest basis.

Article 5

The unit of calculation for the treasury bonds will be renminbi. Receipts will be given to various units that purchase the treasury bonds. The receipts may be registered with names and the units that purchase the treasury bonds may report the loss of the receipts for redocumentation. The treasury bonds will be issued to individuals who purchase the treasury bonds. The denominations of the treasury bonds will be 5, 10, 50 and 100 yuan.

Article 6

The repayment of the principal and interest of the treasury bonds will be made starting the sixth year after the issuance of the treasury bonds. Individuals who purchase the treasury bonds will draw lots once for all [yi ci chou qian 0001 2945 2132 4706]. Five annual repayments will be made to individuals in 5 years and 20 percent of the total amount of the treasury bonds purchased will be repaid each time. Various units that purchase treasury bonds will not participate in drawing lots. The total amount of treasury bonds purchased by various units will be repaid in five annual installments in 5 years.

Article 7

The issuance of and the payment of principal and interest for the treasury bonds will be handled by the People's Bank of China and organizations under its jurisdiction.

Article 8

The funds obtained through the issuance of the treasury bonds will be handled and used in a centralized way by the State Council to facilitate the development and stabilization of the national economy.

Article 9

The treasury bonds shall not be used and circulated as bank notes and private buying and selling of the treasury bonds are prohibited.

Article 10

The forgery of treasury bonds or acts that cause damage to the credit of the treasury bonds will be punished in accordance with the law.

Article 11

The explanation of the regulations governing 1983 treasury bonds will be handled by the Ministry of Finance as authorized by the State Council.

COMMENTATOR ON AGRICULTURAL CAPITAL CONSTRUCTION

HK220255 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 19 Dec 82 p 2

[Commentator's article: "Carry Out Agricultural Capital Construction by Relying on the Strength of the Masses"]

[Text] With regard to agriculture, Comrade Hu Yaobang pointed out in his report to the 12th CPC Congress: "Our country has abundant resources of labor power, so we must pay close attention to increasing the investment of labor. In rural areas we must put their rich manpower to good use in agricultural capital construction according to their local conditions." It is a good opportunity to concentrate our forces in carrying out agricultural capital construction during the idle season between winter and spring. We must lose no time in grasping this work well.

In the past few years there has been rapid development and restoration in agricultural production in China. But generally speaking, the basis of agriculture is still weak and we are still a far cry from freeing ourselves from the state of "depending on nature." In order to attain the grand objective of developing the economy put forward by the 12th CPC Congress and to enable agriculture to have a great leap forward, one of the indispensable and important measures is to strengthen all capital construction in agriculture and improve production conditions. Since we have implemented the responsibility system in rural areas there has been a marked increase in labor efficiency and we have large amount of surplus manpower. Through increasing the investment of labor, we will have more favorable conditions to strengthen agricultural capital construction.

When we talk of strengthening agricultural capital construction, some comrades instantly link it with the mistakes of "left" deviation, deem it unnecessary and dare not spend more efforts in carrying it out.

In the past we did do some foolish things that wasted money and manpower; for instance, we did not proceed from reality, run things according to natural law, seek economic results, but practiced formalism, arbitrarily gave orders and engaged in egalitarianism and indiscriminate transfer of resources. We will never do such foolish things again in the future. But we must also be aware that we did score great achievements in agricultural capital construction in the past. Just imagine, without the large amount of farmland water conservation construction since the founding of our country, how could our agriculture have achieved the present results? Therefore, in the days to come, we must continue to strengthen agricultural capital construction and lay a solid foundation for a more rapid development of agriculture. Particularly in recent years, through rehabilitation and in places where the problem of providing the masses with sufficient food and clothing has been basically solved, we must accumulate forces to gradually and fundamentally change the situation of low and unstable yield and strive to transform poverty into prosperity.

At present, agricultural production is operated mainly by each respective family, therefore, there occurs a new problem of how agricultural capital construction can be carried out under this new condition. The practice of some localities shows that it is not difficult to solve this problem provided we consult with the masses. Since we have carried out the system of contracted responsibilities with payment linked to output, good or bad operation has been more closely connected with the interests of the peasants. Those peasants who have grain and money to spare are eager to further increase their yield and income and become richer. Therefore, they are willing to invest money and labor on agricultural capital construction that benefits them economically. They also ask the leadership to help them solve all sorts of relevant problems. Recently, we have witnessed moving stories in a number of places that peasants have formed into joint families and teams to reclaim barren hills, build water conservation projects, set up bases and repair highways. This provides most convincing evidence.

Agricultural capital construction is a mass activity of millions of peasants in building modern socialist agriculture. The range of this activity is wide and the amount of projects enormous; therefore, it cannot and should not be run totally by the state. The investment of the state can only be focused in some large and key projects and the large amount of construction should rely mainly on the strength of the masses themselves. In other words, it would mean to rely on the financial resources of the locality, and draw funds and labor investment from the collective economy and the broad masses. It is imperative to mobilize the peasants to work on the land they contract, built water conservation projects and improve the soil. Through consultation with the masses it is necessary to stipulate a certain amount of working days every year for each family to put into public agricultural capital construction. Therefore, we must adhere to the policy of "whoever benefits should be responsible." The key to accelerating the speed, raising the quality and bringing about early benefits from each construction project is to run the various forms of responsibility system well. Some localities have adopted the systems of "contracting specialized jobs and reckoning payment according to fixed quotas," "fixing the tasks, quality, payment, rewards and punishment," "fixing contracts for teams, tasks for households and output quotas for each household and assigning households full responsibility for task completion" and so on. They have closely combined "responsibility, rights and benefits" together and have achieved relatively good economic results.

In order to do a good job in agricultural capital construction it is imperative to rely on the enthusiasm of the broad masses of peasants. We must connect this job closely with the interests of the masses. We must act according to our capability, pay attention to efficiency and strive to succeed and gain benefits wherever projects are carried out. Provided the masses get benefits, they will make concerted efforts and attain good results in this cause.

STATE'S FARM PURCHASES REPORTED AT RECORD HIGH

OW520159 Beijing XINHUA in English 1542 GMT 21 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 21 (XINHUA) -- Government purchasing agencies throughout China have bought more grain, cotton and cooking oil this year than any previous year, the Ministry of Commerce announced today. By December 15, they had purchased 51,019,500 tons of grain; 5,350,000 tons more than in the same period of 1981. The amount of cotton purchased reached 2,819,000 tons, exceeding the corresponding 1981 figure by 336,500 tons.

Government purchasing agencies had by December 15 procured 2,203,040 tons of edible oil, accounting for 93.8 percent of the annual purchasing quota. Peasants are still selling cooking oil to the government, averaging 3,000 tons a day.

Purchases of pigs, poultry, eggs, vegetables, tea, wool, skins and other products also increased. The government has bought enough vegetables to ensure that people in most northern cities may consume half a kilogram of vegetables per person per day throughout this winter and the next spring.

RENMIN RIBAO REPORTS GRAIN OUTPUT INCREASES

HK520256 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 20 Dec 82 p 4

[Unattributed report: "Qinghai, Tianjin, Guizhou and Hunan Increase Grain Output"]

[Text] Qinghai Province's total grain output this year reached 1,867 billion jin, an increase of 271 million jin, or 17 percent compared with the preceding year -- an output second only to the record of 1.91 billion jin in 1980. This was the second peak year in total grain output since liberation.

The suburbs of Tianjin Municipality triumphed over serious drought this year. Total grain output reached more than 2.4 billion jin, an increase of 11.8 percent compared with the preceding year. Total cotton output reached 930,000 jin, an increase of more than 100 percent over the preceding year. Total output for oil-bearing crops reached 84 million jin, with an average per mu yield of 141 jin. This was the second year of a bumper harvest since the founding of the PRC. Total output of vegetables put on the market reached 1.55 billion jin, an increase of more than 200 million jin compared with the preceding year.

Total grain output for Guizhou Province this year could reach 13.3 billion jin, an increase of more than 1.9 billion jin, or more than 17 percent over the preceding year, exceeding the highest level in history. Total output of rapeseed, a main economic crop, reached 9.2 million dan, an increase of more than 40 percent over the preceding year. Output of flue-cured tobacco showed an increase of approximately 30 percent over the preceding year, and that of tea leaves an increase of 4.4 percent.

Hunan Province this year reaped a bumper harvest for crossbred rice planted in 17 million mu of land. Total output reached 11.5 billion jin, an increase of 1 billion jin compared with last year's peak, with an average per mu yield of 676 jin, an increase of 10 jin over last year.

AGRICULTURE MINISTRY ANNOUNCES MAJOR PROJECTS

OW211427 Beijing XINHUA in English 1123 GMT 21 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 21 (XINHUA) -- Nine major agro-scientific projects that were planned for this year have opened and gone into trial-operation on schedule, a spokesman of the Ministry of Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Fishery confirmed today.

Of these, seven belong to provincial agro-scientific institutions which also serve regional and national needs, and the other two are under the Chinese Academy of Agricultural Sciences. They are all equipped with modern scientific instruments and other facilities, the ministry spokesman said.

A computerized testing center of the Institute of Pedology and Fertilizers under the Chinese Academy of Agriculture Sciences, for example, conducts 500,000 tests of 100,000 samples a year. One testing system is able to resolve trace elements from one-1,000 millionth part of a sample the spokesman noted.

This and four other newly-constructed projects -- the central laboratory of the Sichuan Provincial Academy of Agricultural Sciences, the agricultural testing center of the Hubei Provincial Academy of Agricultural Sciences, the central laboratory of the Xinjiang Uygur Autonomous Regional Academy of Agricultural Sciences and the loess highlands agricultural testing center of the Shaanxi Provincial Academy of Agricultural Sciences -- specialise, entirely or in part, in soil science and fertilizer, indicating the great importance China has attached to soil improvement. Earlier news reports said that since the winter of 1978, soil surveys had been conducted in nearly 1,500 of China's more than 2,100 counties.

At least two projects are devoted to improvement and development of seed strains. One is a seed chamber at the crop strain resource institute under the Chinese Academy of Agricultural Sciences, in which seeds of improved strains may be preserved for a maximum of 30 years without their quality being affected.

The other is the agro-biological genetics and physiological research center under the Jiangsu Provincial Academy of Agricultural Sciences.

The last two projects are the rice institute under the Guangdong Provincial Academy of Agricultural Sciences and the soybean institute of the Jilin Provincial Academy of Agricultural Sciences.

While conducting research and tests, said the Ministry of Agricultural, Animal Husbandry and Fishery spokesman, the nine projects also help train specialists of senior middle ranks. Meanwhile, they serve as centers of international academic exchanges.

The seven projects at the provincial level also serve regional and national needs. The agricultural resting center in Hubei, for example, is designated to serve the Yellow and Red soil areas in southern China, in addition to Hubei Province.

WORK BEGUN ON THREE LARGE PARTICLE ACCELERATORS

OW220857 Beijing XINHUA in English 0803 GMT 22 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 22 (XINHHA) -- Development and construction work on three large particle accelerators have begun in Beijing, Lanzhou and Hefei, said Xie Jialin, deputy director of the Institute of High Energy Physics under the Chinese Academy of Sciences.

The Beijing electron positron collider will be built in the western suburbs of Beijing. The High Energy Research Institute is in charge of the project. Initial designing of the project has been completed, and pre-fabrication research on various key components has been started. The project will be completed in 1987.

The main building of the accelerator will be 325 meters long and more than 80 meters wide. Together with affiliated facilities, the project will cover an area of 60,000 square meters.

The energy of the accelerator's single electron and positron beam will be 2.8 billion electron volts, and its available energy will be 5.6 billion electron volts.

The accelerator will also be able to produce synchrotron radiation as a byproduct, which has many uses. The completion of the accelerator will play an important role for theoretical and experimental research of basic particles and the application of synchrotron radiation, Xie said.

The Lanzhou heavy ion accelerator is to be built by the Lanzhou Institute of Modern Physics under the Chinese Academy of Sciences. Its main part will be a separated sector cyclotron accelerator and the injector will be a sector focused cyclotron accelerator. Between the main accelerator and the injector will be a 60-meter long beam transport system. The beam energy will be 100 million electron volts, the deputy director said.

Construction on the main building for the project was begun in 1978. Production of magnets for the main accelerator, radio frequency cavity, and vacuum chamber with a volume of 90 cubic meters has also been started. All the equipment will be installed and readjusted in 1985 and is expected to go into production in 1987.

The completion of the project will greatly promote China's research of heavy ion nuclear physics, synthesis of new nuclides and application of nuclear technology, Xie said.

The Hefei synchrotron radiation accelerator will be built by the China University of Science and Technology. The accelerator is a multi-purpose large new illuminant, and the beam energy of its main equipment will be 800 million electron volts, the deputy director said.

When constructed, the accelerator will be able to provide X-ray, vacuum ultra-violet light, visible light, and highly intensive and stable synchrotron radiation in the infra-red spectrum. Such radiation can be widely used not only in the research of such basic specialities as physics, chemistry and biology, but also in various technological fields such as materials science, surface science, metrology, medicine, microscopy, and X-ray lithography of large integrated circuits. The completion of the accelerator will promote on a large scale the development of technology of various fields.

The design and pre-fabrication research for the device have now been completed. Work on engineering designing and construction has started. The whole project is expected to be completed in 1987.

1982 COAL PRODUCTION PLAN PREFULFILLED

OW211443 Beijing XINHUA in English 1146 GMT 21 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 21 (XINHUA) -- China completed today the 1982 plan for cutting 625 million tons of coal 10 days ahead of time, according to the Chinese Ministry of Coal Industry.

By the end of this year, the ministry said, the figure is expected to be 642 million tons, 3.2 percent greater than last year's output, or topping that of the record year 1979 which was 635.5 million tons.

Since the start of this year, the ministry recalled, mines across the country topped their targets every month even in February when there was a nationwide four-day holiday as well as in the hot and rainy seasons.

Up to today, China's major coal producers, Shanxi, Inner Mongolia and Heilongjiang as well as 32 mining administrations have completed their annual production plans, according to the ministry.

Shanxi Province, the country's leading coal producer, has already produced 137 million tons more than the figure for the same 1981 period.

China's 1982 plans for the production of dressed coal and for tunnelling have also been completed ahead of schedule.

According to the ministry, improved management upgraded coal production and the rate of gangue in coal was reduced by 0.15 percent. Coal dust dropped by 0.26 percent.

The consumption of wooden mine props and sleepers in producing every 10,000 tons of coal this year was 80.06 cubic meters, 10.29 cubic meters less than in the previous best year of 1980.

JIANGXI'S BAI DONGCAI RETURNS FROM NPC SESSION

OW200636 Nanchang Jiangxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 15 Dec 82

[Excerpts] Dear listeners, the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC has triumphantly ended after 18 days in session. Deputies from Jiangxi will return to Nanchang by a special plane this morning. This is a report from the airport. Welcoming the deputies are responsible comrades of the provincial CPC committee, people's congress standing committee, people's government and CPPCC committee and office cadres.

Dear listeners, the special plane arrives at the airport on time at 1005.

Comrades Bai Dongcai is leading the deputies off the plane, smiling and waving to the welcomers. Zhang Yuqing, (Yang Yongfeng), (An Jian), (Chen Yan), (Shang Fang) and other responsible comrades step forward and shake hands with the deputies.

SHANDONG PEOPLE'S CONGRESS ELECTS PRESIDIUM

[Text] The Presidium of the Fifth Session of the Fifth Shandong Provincial People's Congress held its first session at the banquet hall of the (Nanjiao) guest house on the afternoon of 18 December. The session elected 20 executive members of the presidium. They are Bai Rubing, Zhao Lin, Gao Qiyun, Li Zichao, Wu Kaizhang, Gao Keting, Zhao Feng, Zhang Ye, Li Yuang, Xu Jianchun, Chen Lei, Zhang Zhusheng, Yang Jieren, Zhu Benzheng, Zhang Fugui, Zeng Chengkui, Zhou Zhijun, Wang Jiechen, Wang Baomin and Liu Gan. The session approved a report submitted by the credentials committee on the general situation of deputies and the qualifications of deputies elected in by-elections. It also decided who are to be deputy secretaries general of the congress session, approved the agenda of the fifth session of the fifth provincial people's congress, approved the methods for the adoption of resolutions for this session and approvedthe namelist of nonvoting participants of the congress session.

The session also decided that the deadline for deputies to submit motions will be 1700 hours 23 December. Zhao Lin, chairman of the provincial people's congress standing committee, presided at the presidium session. The credentials committee held a meeting prior to the presidium session.

KUNMING PLA RALLY CONVEYS NPC SESSION SPIRIT

HK190643 Kunming Yunnan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2305 GMT 18 Dec 82

[Text] On the morning of 17 December, the Kunming PLA units held a rally to convey the spirit of the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC. NPC deputy and Deputy Political Commissar Shi Jingban delivered a report. Over 2,300 persons, including cadres and fighters of the leading organs of the Kunming PLA units and units stationed in Kunming, listened to the report.

In his report, Shi Jingban stressed the great importance of the new constitution and the main points of the Sixth 5-Year Plan. He said: The new constitution is a relatively complete, scientific and mature constitution. The new constitution lays down clear-cut stipulations regarding the work and building of the armed forces. It expresses the attention and concern of the state and people for the armed forces.

He stressed: The army is the pillar of the state's political power. Every member of our army is a citizen of the state who has rights protected by the constitution and also the obligation to implement and defend the constitution. The Kunming PLA units are located on the motherland's southwestern border. We shoulder the glorious task of defending the motherland and building up the border region. Hence, every commander and fighter must seriously study, enthusiastically publicize and resolutely implement the new constitution, preserve its dignity and ensure its enforcement.

In implementing the Sixth 5-Year Plan, we must strengthen the building of the army, step up preparedness against war, gain knowledge of science and culture, improve our military and political qualities, strengthen China's national defense force and defend the smooth progress of socialist modernization. We must make contributions to speeding up the army's revolutionization, modernization and regularization and to creating a new situation in socialist modernization.

After this report, Kunming PLA units Political Department Deputy Director Wang Chuanan put forward demands on the units' study of the new constitution.

KUNMING PLA COMMANDER DISCUSSES MILITIA WORK

HK200916 Kunming Yunnan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 19 Dec 82

[Text] At the recent conference on militia work of the Kunming PLA units, Kunming PLA units Commander Zhang Zhixiu and Political Commissar (Xie Zhenhua) spoke on the issues of inspiring revolutionary spirit and creating a new situation in militia building. In his speech, Kunming PLA units Commander Zhang Zhixiu put forward five requirements to do militia work well:

First, it is necessary to inspire revolutionary spirit, have firm devotion to the revolution and have a high degree of a political sense of responsibility. Second, it is essential to foster the revolutionary spirit of plain living, hard struggle, hard work, being able to endure hardship and fearing no martydrom. Third, it is imperative to strengthen building of militia leadership groups at all levels so as to make them meet the needs of the four modernizations as quickly as possible. Fourth, we must improve the leadership work style and the method of work and go deep into realities to conduct investigation and study in a down-to-earth way. We must pay attention to discovering and solving new problems in the course of work. Fifth, we must eliminate the weak links in our leadership work.

In his speech, Kunming PLA units, Political Commissar (Xie Zhenhua) put forth three views:

First, it is necessary to fully understand the role and functions of militia work and further strengthen militia building. Second, it is essential to strengthen the leadership of CPC committees, particularly CPC committees of localities over militia work. Third, it is imperative to grasp seriously and well the building of the force of full-time militia cadres, attach importance to strengthening training of full-time militia cadres and pay attention to enhancing their work level and work ability.

CHENGDU PLA RALLY COMMENDS NEW CONSTITUTION

HK180257 Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 17 Dec 82

[Text] The Chengdu PLA units' leading organs and the units stationed in Chengdu held a rally on the morning of 17 December to convey the spirit of the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC. NPC deputy and Chengdu PLA units Political Commissar Wan Haifeng presided. NPC deputy and Commander Wang Chenghan delivered a report. He demanded that the commanders and fighters of the units strive to be models in studying and implementing the new constitution and make greater contributions to creating a new situation in the work of the units and fulfilling the Sixth 5-Year Plan.

Commander Wang Chenghan said in his report: The new constitution approved by this session is the fundamental law of the land which possesses Chinese characteristics, suits the needs of socialist modernization and has the nature of long-term stability. It is the general charter for governing the land in peace in the new historical period. It is the reliable guarantee for accomplishing the vast goal of socialist modernization.

He said: The Sixth 5-Year Plan approved by the session is a major measure for accomplishing the vast goal of quadrupling industrial and agricultural output value between 1981 and the end of the century. It is the current action program for China's socialist construction and the first bluepirnt for achieving the strategic goal envisaged for the next 20 years. The targets set by this plan are clear, and its measures are effective. It is practical and encouraging.

Political Commissar Wan Haifeng set demands on the PLA units in his speech. He said: We must at all times and in all places uphold the dignity of the new constitution and resolutely struggle against all words and deeds that violate it. The units must actively take part in socialist economic construction, work together with the masses to build a high degree of socialist material and spiritual civilization and make greater contributions to fulfilling the Sixth 5-Year Plan.

[Excerpts] The Fifth Session of the Fifth Nei Monggol Autonomous Regional People's Congress ceremoniously opened at the (Wulanqiate) theater in Hohhot on 19 December. At 0830 Ting Mao, executive chairman of the session and chairman of the regional people's congress, declared the session open. The hall resounded with the majestic national anthem of the PRC. Chairman Ting Mao relayed the guidelines of the Fifth Session of the Fifth National People's Congress at the session.

Ting Mao said: At panel discussions of the Fifth Session of the Fifth National People's Congress, deputies pointed out: With the general program for creating a new situation in all fields set forth at the 12th party congress, with the new constitution for running the country well and for ensuring the state's stability and with Premier Zhao's report -- which is a good program of action for realizing the strategic objective of the four modernizations -- our state has boundless prospects so long as we work unswervingly to implement them.

Ting Mao continued to talk about his personal experiences in the Fifth Session of the Fifth National People's Congress. 1) The economic and political situation of our country has become better and better year after year and has a bright future; 2) the people are full of confidence about implementing the new constitution of long-term stability; 3) the socialist democracy of our country is strengthening and developing day by day and we will create a new situation in democratic work.

Ting Mao said: Having attended the Fifth Session of the Fifth National People's Congress, we deeply felt that the party and the state showed much concern for the people of minority nationalities. The new constitution and Premier Zhao's report have implemented the party's policy on nationalities, embodied socialist democracy, expanded the rights for regional national autonomy and paid much attention to accelerating the development of the economic and cultural undertakings in national minority areas.

At today's session, the delegate's credentials committee made a written report on the examination of the qualification of deputies. The fifth autonomous regional people's congress has 932 deputies. Some 774 of them attended today's session. LIAONING'S GUO FENG REPORTS ON DPRK VISIT

SK200401 Shenyang Liaoning Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 19 Dec 82

[Text] A delegation of Liaoning Province headed by Comrade Guo Feng, member of the Central Advisory Commission of the CPC Central Committee and first secretary of the Liaoning Provincial CPC Committee, visited the DPRK. After the delegation returned home, members of the delegation made separate reports on strengthening the friendship between China and Korea. In the reports, they extolled the great achievements in socialist construction and in the just cause of national unification scored by the fraternal Korean people under the leadership of the KWP [Korean Workers Party] headed by the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song. They emphasized the need to further strengthen the friendship between China and Korea and to cherish the great, blood-cemented friendship and militant unity between the two peoples.

In October 1982 the delegation of the Liaoning Provincial CPC Committee headed by Comrade Guo Feng visited North Pyongan Province and Pyongyang Municipality in the DPRK. The delegation returned home on 25 October. The delegation was warmly received and welcomed by leaders of the KWP and the Korean people. While in North Pyongan Province, the delegation met with Kim Pyong-yul, responsible secretary of the North Pyongan Provincial KWP Committee, and other comrades. Amid a sincere, cordial and friendly atmosphere they talked glowingly of the traditional friendship and amicable cooperative relationship between peoples in the border areas and exchanged information on their respective situations in economic construction. Comrade Kim Hwan, member of the Political Bureau and Secretariat of the KWP Central Committee, received and feted all the comrades of the delegation and held cordial talks with them in Pyongyang.

During the visit, members of the delegation saw for themselves the tremendous achievements scored by the fraternal Korean people in socialist construction and in the just struggle of independent and peaceful unification of fatherland under the leadership of the KWP headed by the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song. The Korean people are industrious, ingenious, civilized and polite and have a high sense of organization and discipline. An atmosphere of prosperity prevails in all places. Two million people of North Pyongan Province, with an area of 12,000 square kilometers, are carrying forward the revolutionary spirit of plain living, hard work and self-reliance. They produce 1.2 million tons of nonferrous metals annually. In addition to meeting its own needs, the province has surplus coal for export. It has built a heavy machinery plant which can produce 2,500-hp internal-combustion engines and 10 cubic meter excavators, the Kusong and Sinuiju textile mills with 100,000 gauze spindles and other projects. In agriculture, the province has already brought all farmland under irrigation and completed the electrification of agriculture and is marching toward overall mechanization and extensive use of chemical fertilizers. According to what they were told, the province's annual grain output is enough for 3 years' consumption.

Education has developed rapidly. There was no college in the province before liberation. Now there are 22 colleges of all kinds. Eleven-year compulsory education is being universally implemented. The people of North Pyongan Province have also achieved great achievements in spiritual construction. Wherever the delegation went, the people it met — whether men or women, old or young -- were all very polite. Factories are paying great attention to production along civilized lines. The factory areas are clean and the workshops are in perfect order. Cities are well constructed and managed and are beautiful, clean and convenient.

After the delegation returned home, Comrade Guo Feng made a report at the enlarged plenary standing committee session of the Liaoning Provincial CPC Committee on his visit to Korea. In the report he first conveyed the cordial greetings of the leading comrades and people of North Pyongan Province. He discussed glowingly and enthusiastically the valuable friendship and amicable cooperative relationship between the peoples in the Sino-Korean border areas and highly appraised the tremendous achievements scored by the fraternal Korean people in the material and spiritual civilizations. Comrade Guo Feng laid out important instructions on ways to strengthen the friendship between peoples in the Sino-Korean border areas. He said: North Pyongan Province and our province are linked by common mountains and rivers. We are as closely related as lips and teeth. The Dandong area is the gateway to this friendly neighbor country. We must follow the CPC Central Committee's instruction and the guidelines of the meetings between the leading comrades of the two parties, maintain closer ties with people in the Korean border areas, help and learn from each other, strengthen our unity and march forward together. He urged party and government organizations at all levels to take effective measures to carry out friendship work in the Sino-Korean border areas in an even better way and to contribute to creating a new situation.

LIAONING'S LI HUANG REPORTS ON NPC GUIDELINES

SK180547 Shenyang Liaoning Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 17 Dec 82

[Excerpts] On the morning of 17 December, Li Huang, permanent secretary of the provincial CPC committee and head of the delegation from Liaoning Province to the 5th Session of the 5th NPC, delivered a report to some 2,000 cadres of the provincial level organizations on the guidelines of the NPC session.

Comrade Li Huang said in his report: The 5th Session of the 5th NPC is another important meeting following the 12th national party congress. The main items on the agenda were to discuss and adopt a new constitution and to deliberate the report delivered by Premier Zhao Ziyang on the Sixth 5-Year Plan. He said: Deputies to the session held that the new constitution is the best one adopted since the PRC's founding. They summed up 10 satisfactions over the new constitution. They were satisfactions over: 1) the interpretation of the four cardinal principles; 2) the restoration of the post of the president of the state; 3) the establishment of the Central Military Commission; 4) the expansion of the NPC Standing Committee; 5) the confirmation of the coexistence of diverse forms of the economy; 6) the expansion of the fundamental rights and duties of citizens and the emphasis on the principle of all men being equal before the law; 7) the expansion of the rights to regional national autonomy and the protection of religious freedoms; 8) the recognition of intellectuals as one of the basic main forces in society; 9) the introduction of tenures for state leaders and the abolishment of the de facto system of lifelong tenure; 10) the stress on building a socialist spiritual civilization.

Comrade Li Huang said: Deputies to the NPC session held that the report delivered by Premier Zhao Ziyang on the Sixth 5-Year Plan, which scientifically summed up both the positive and negative experiences by seeking truth from facts, tallies entirely with the actual situation in our country. The Sixth 5-Year Plan is a plan which leaves some margin and which represents a combination of great ideals and scientific attitude. The report and the plan pointed out that the nature and measures for national economic and social development are positive and reliable. It is entirely possible to fulfill the targets if we work hard.

Comrade Li Huang said in conclusion: The tasks before us are to study the guidelines of the session and implement the resolution of the session. We must earnestly study and publicize the new constitution. We must implement the Sixth 5-Year Plan with concrete deeds, implement the strategic arrangements outlined at the 12th national party congress, carry forward the revolutionary spirit of building up an enterprise through arduous efforts and the workstyle of carrying out one's work in a down-to-earth manner, study hard and work hard to create a new situation for socialist modernization.

GANSU NPC DEPUTIES ON SIXTH 5-YEAR PLAN REPORT

OW191224 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0056 GMT 8 Dec 82

[Excerpts] Beijing, 8 Dec (XINHUA) -- In the past few days, NPC deputies from Gansu have been discussing Premier Zhao Ziyang's report on the Sixth 5-Year Plan and Minister Wang Bingqian's report on the implementation of the 1982 state budget and the draft budget for 1983. They all point out: It is necessary to firmly grasp the key measures of fulfilling the Sixth 5-Year Plan.

Deputy Yan Shutang said: The implementation of the first 2 years of the Sixth 5-Year Plan is encouraging. Thanks to the adoption of a variety of output-related responsibility systems in agriculture, a flourishing situation has appeared; supply of commodities has greatly improved. During the period of the Third Session of the Fifth NPC we were all worried about financial deficits. However, we have stabilized the situation in the past 2 years. Heavy industry has begun to rise again; the several-year trend of steady decreases in state revenue has started to change. All this shows that the work of the government is highly effective. The tendency of the development tells us that the Sixth 5-Year Plan can certainly be fulfilled.

Deputy Kang Kai said: Grasping energy resources well is one of the key measures of fulfilling the Sixth 5-Year Plan. We must not only broaden the sources of energy resources but also reduce their consumption. My suggestions run as follows: 1. It is necessary to institute the plan on the renewal of energy-consuming equipment. Old equipment that consumes too much energy must be gradually replaced. Restrictions must be set on the production of new equipment unless advanced energy consumption targets are met. 2. With regard to the technical transformation in old enterprises, we must pay attention to both technical economic targets and energy consumption targets. Technical transformation is considered unsuccessful if energy consumption exceeds the target. In this case, technical transformation must be furthered. 3. It is necessary to put energy resources to rational and scientific use. Today, China produces 100 million dun of crude oil a year. To make good use of the 100 million dun of crude oil is a great asset to the state. I suggest that the state establish a special organization to tackle this key issue.

Deputy Zheng Guochang said: In his report, Premier Zhao Ziyang pointed out: Improving economic results is the focus; science is the key; education is the foundation. At present, the foundation of China's elementary and secondary education is poor. There are many problems: poor quality of teaching, poor equipment and a shortage of teachers.

I suggest the following: 1. Readjust the ranks of teachers. It is necessary to speed up the training of those who should be trained. It is necessary to strengthen the management and assignment of the graduates of normal schools and institutes. It is necessary to establish an assignment system and discipline. To supplement the sources of teachers and guarantee the quality of teaching, we may consider establishing 4-year rural normal schools in areas where conditions are good. 2. Continuously improve the conditions for teaching and studying. In addition to appropriating a certain amount of state funds, we must greatly advocate and disseminate the experience of running schools by society. It is necessary to advocate the spirit of self-reliance and part-work and part-study systems to solve the shortage of funds for teaching and improve teaching conditions. 3. Maintain the normal order of teaching and study in middle and primary schools. 4. Conduct the education in loving the motherland, the people, labor, science and socialism among teachers and students.

GANSU PEOPLE'S CONGRESS SESSION OPENS 20 DEC

HK210136 Lanzhou Gansu Provincial Service in Mandarin 1125 GMT 20 Dec 82

[Summary] The Fifth Session of the Fifth Gansu Provincial People's Congress opened in Lanzhou on 20 December. Feng Jixin, first secretary of the provincial CPC committee and executive chairman of the session, declared the session open.

NPC deputy and provincial people's congress standing committee Chairman Wang Shitai made a report on the recent NPC session's discussions and adoption of the new constitution. He said: "The constitution is the fundamental law of the land. Ensuring its implementation constitutes a serious issue. In order to ensure the implementation of the constitution in Gansu, we must make efforts to study and publicize it so that everyone will know about the significance of formulating and instituting the new constitution, its basic spirit and main contents. No citizen, be he worker, peasant or leading party and government cadres, and no matter how high his position or great his power, has any special powers transcending the constitution.

All must abide by the constitution. All organizations, that is to say, all state organs, political parties, social bodies, enterprises, undertakings and organizations must without exception take the constitution as the fundamental guideline of their actions. The party has led the people to formulate the new constitution, and it will certainly act with the people of the whole country to uphold the constitution's dignity and ensure its implementation. The people's congress standing committees at all levels in the province must, according to the stipulations of the constitution, strengthen organization and leadership over local legislative work in accordance with actual needs and feasibilities. Together with the judicial, procuratorate and administrative organs at all levels, they must unite the people throughout the province to shoulder the solemn responsibility of ensuring the constitution's implementation, wage resolute struggle against violations of the constitution and make their proper contributions to implementing the constitution."

The session is being attended by 751 deputies. The executive chairmen on 20 December included Wang Shitai, Liu Haisheng, Liu Lanting, Sun Runhua, Li Zhengting, Li Keru, Li Peifu, Li Dengying, Wu Zhiguo and Wu Hongbin.

NINGXIA NPC DEPUTIES DISCUSS 5-YEAR PLAN

OW191324 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0717 GMT 7 Dec 82

[Excerpt] Beijing, 7 Dec (XINHUA) -- The deputies from Ningxia attending the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC have warmly discussed Premier Zhao Ziyang's report on the Sixth 5-Year Plan and Minister Wang Bingqian's report on the state budget. They have unanimously agreed with these two reports and expressed their views on how to implement these reports in close connection with the actual conditions. Deputy Ma Qingnian said: Premier Zhao's report is good in the following four aspects:

1. The task for construction put forward by the report is positive and reliable. It can be fulfilled through our strenuous efforts.

2. The appraisal given in the report on the implementation of the Sixth 5-Year Plan for the first 2 years is realistic.

3. The measures offered by the report to ensure the fulfillment of the Sixth 5-Year Plan sound effective.

4. The report fully reflects the concerns of the party Central Committee and State Council over areas inhabited by people of minority nationalities. It will strengthen the courage and confidence of the cadres and masses in these areas in changing the backward conditions there.

Deputy Ma Xin said: A basic thought runs through Premier Zhao Ziyang's report. That is, during the period of the Sixth 5-Year Plan and from now on, we must rely on further readjustments, restructuring and consolidations to promote technical progress, to tap the potentials of existing enterprises and to improve management in order to vigorously develop our economy. This thinking is extremely important. We must firmly foster this thinking.

Deputy Li Yunhe said: To fulfill the Sixth 5-Year Plan it is necessary to resolutely implement the various measures put forward in Premier Zhao Ziyang's report. To achieve this we must carry out the following tasks:

1. We must make the attainment of better economic results the heart of our guiding ideology.

2. We must actively popularize the economic responsibility systems in industrial enterprises.

3. We must strive to carry out technical transformation and renew the equipment of existing enterprises.

4. We must pay full attention to consolidating enterprises.

5. We must rationally use funds and pay attention to key construction projects.

6. We must positively and reliably carry out the work of reconstruction.

On the part of Premier Zhao Ziyang's report on education, Deputy Yuan Jiaqin expressed her belief that the implementation of the Sixth 5-Year Plan will definitely play a significant role in raising the cultural standards of the Chinese nation. She pointed out:

1. We must make good use of educational funds and truly use the funds for education.

2. We must earnestly help teachers, particularly the young and middle-aged ones, to overcome their actual difficulties and study how to reaffirm the titles of their vocational posts as primary and middle school teachers so as to further whip up the enthusiasm of the broad masses of teachers.

3. We must further train the existing contingent of teachers, especially the primary and middle school teachers, and help them improve themselves.

4. We must adopt measures to consolidate those schools run by the people.

QINGHAI'S LIANG BUTING URGES SELF-CRITICISM

HK171210 Xining Qinghai Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 16 Dec 82

[Text] After recently reading an article carried in the QINGHAI RIBAO on criticizing Henan County for holding an examination, comparison and assessment meeting which produced a very bad influence, Qinghai Provincial CPC Committee First Secretary Liang Buting gave a written instruction saying: I completely agree with the publication in a party newspaper because an unhealthy trend like this, which should be criticized and corrected, exists not only in Henan County, but also in other places. This unhealthy trend is expressed not only in the work style of a meeting, but also in other aspects. By publishing this matter, we can draw inferences about other cases from one instance, receive lessons, promote the improvement of party work style and redeem some comrades. By publishing these three articles, we can encourage people to carry forward the excellent traditions of the party, conduct proper criticism and self-criticism, encourage people to engage in the practice of correcting mistakes if they have committed them and taking a correct view of criticism and encourage party organizations at all levels to vigorously grasp the rectification of party work style and the work style of daring to speak out and exercise control. This kills three birds with one stone.

In his written instruction, Comrade Liang Buting also emphatically pointed out: Such an unhealthy trend of looking but not seeing and listening but not hearing exists not only in Henan County, but also in units and places where grievances cannot be redressed and regulations and rules cannot be enforced and which must take warning from this.

The QINGHAI RIBAO also reported that the propaganda department of the provincial CPC committee had circulated Comrade Liang Buting's written instruction around all press units in our province and around the propaganda departments in all places. It demanded that all press units seriously study and thoroughly implement the spirit of this written instruction and correctly conduct criticism and self-criticism on newspapers and in broadcasts.

LANZHOU PLA'S DU YIDE STRESSES NEW CONSTITUTION

HK190548 Xian Shaanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 0500 GMT 19 Dec 82

[Text] Lanzhou Military Region Commander Du Yide said at an enlarged meeting of the CPC committee of a certain PLA unit stationed in Shaanxi: The unit commanders and fighters must become models in studying the new constitution and examples in implementing it.

Commander Du Yide recently inspected work at this unit. Speaking at the enlarged meeting of the unit's CPC committee, he said: The unit CPC committees at all levels must regard studying, publicizing and implementing the new constitution as their central task this winter and next spring. Simply reading a bit of the new constitution is not enough. We must truly make the new constitution the guideline for the action of every commander and fighter.

Du Yide said: The cadres at all levels must take the lead in implementing the new constitution. The idea that power is greater than anything else is wrong and extremely harmful. Nobody is an exception to acting in accordance with law. Legal sanctions will be taken against anyone who violates this.

SHAANXI MEETING CONVEYS NPC SESSION SPIRIT

HK190608 Xian Shaanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 1130 GMT 18 Dec 82

[Excerpts] The Shaanxi People's Congress Standing Committee held a report meeting in the People's Hall, Xian, on the morning of 18 December. NPC deputy and Shaanxi Governor Yu Mingtao conveyed the spirit of the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC.

In his report, Comrade Yu Mingtao first introduced the proceedings of the session and the process of examining, discussing and adopting the new constitution, the Sixth 5-Year Plan and four laws.

Comrade Yu Mingtao said: In common with the whole country, the economic situation in our province is getting better every year. Bumper harvests have been gained in agriculture despite successive natural disasters. Total agricultural output value in 1981 was 3.3 percent more than in 1980. Total grain output this year is estimated to reach 17.9 billion jin, a 19.2 percent increase over last year. The summer grain harvest set a record. Industry has made some progress amid readjustment. Total light industry output value in 1981 was 9 percent higher than in 1980, and the value from January to October this year showed a rise of 1.1 percent over the same period last year. Heavy industry has shifted orientation and improved as a result of readjustment. Total output value in 1981 was 10 percent below 1980; from January to October this year it showed a rise of 8.2 percent over the same period last year. The living standards of people in towns and countryside are gradually improving.

He demanded that the people throughout the province seriously study and implement the spirit of the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC, spontaneously abide by the new constitution, actively fulfill the tasks set by the Sixth 5-Year Plan and contribute to creating a new situation in socialist modernization.

Provincial people's congress Standing Committee Vice Chairman Chang Lifu presided and spoke at the meeting. Leading comrades of the provincial CPC committee, people's congress Standing Committee, government and CPPCC Ma Wenrui, Chang Ze, Jiang Yi, Lu Jianren and others attended the report meeting. Also present were responsible comrades of the provincial organs, Xian institutes of higher education and units at and above prefectural and divisional levels.

U.S. POLICY CAUSES 'CONFUSION', 'CONTRADICTIONS'

OW170927 Taipei International Service in English 0100 GMT 17 Dec 82

[Station commentary]

[Text] Paul Wolfowitz appeared before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee for questioning on his nomination as U.S. assistant secretary of state for East Asian and Pacific affairs. The United States, he told members of this committee, takes no position on Red China's claim of sovereignty over Taiwan. Is this really so?

The United States has said that it recognizes the mainland as China and Taiwan as a part of China. The mainland is now held by the Chinese Communists. The United States has an embassy in Peking but not in Taipei. If the United States does not take a position on Red China's role in connection with Taiwan, then it might be considered that the U.S. (?really) regards the communist hold on the mainland as someth.ng less than permanent. Yet in connection with Taiwan, the United States said it hoped to reduce arms sales for defensive purposes as the Chinese Communists show signs of seeking Chinese unification by peaceful means.

It all seems rather confusing. The Taiwan Relations Act, which is superior to the August 17th communique between the United States and the Chinese Communists, pledged defensive arms to the people of Taiwan and indicated that an attack on them would be an act unfriendly to the United States. So the Taiwan-mainland situation seems to be confusing.

Ten years ago, President Nixon decided that the Chinese Communists were on the mainland to stay. He signed the Shanghai Communique and exchanged liaison offices with them. In 1978, President Carter formally recognized Red China and withdrew recognition from the Republic of China. The reasons for all this were clear: The administrative branch of the U.S. Government decided that an alignment with the Chinese Communists would be useful against the Soviet Union. This could be called the "1 billion people and 4 million square miles syndrome." The Republic of China is an island of fewer than 19 million people, so Red China looks bigger and more powerful, regardless of its other shortcomings. But the Republic of China is an old friend and ally with millions of friends in the United States.

How could Washington stipulate that the communists were sovereign over Taiwan and invite the handing of more than 18 million people over to communism? It couldn't, and hasn't been able to do so despite the hope of using the mainland against the USSR. This has led to a lot of confusion and a number of contradictions.

CNA REPORTS YOUTHS STEAL GUNBOAT ON HAINAN

OW180343 Taipei CNA in English 0256 GMT 18 Dec 82

[Text] Taipei, Dec. 18 (CNA) -- A band of disenchanted intellectual youths in exile on Hainan Island in southern China robbed a Chinese Communist gunboat recently and planned to sail to Taiwan, sources inside mainland China report, but their effort failed. The sources say that the incident occurred early in February this year, earlier than the several airplane hijackings reported near Shanghai in July. More than 30 young intellectuals who were exiled by the Chinese Communists to Hainan Island robbed the Haikou shipbuilding plant and took away a gunboat undergoing repair after they subdued the guard. On their way to Taiwan, however, their craft was intercepted and destroyed by Chinese Communist gunboats.

GOVERNMENT SPOKESMAN VIEWS INDEPENDENCE MOVEMENT

OW210551 Taipei CNA in English 0250 GMT 21 Dec 82

[Text] Taipei, Dec. 21 (CNA) -- Dr James Soong, director general of the Government Information Office [GIO], told a group of college students Monday that what the Republic of China on Taiwan has always been, both in its spiritual basis and the bare facts of its accomplishments, "more Chinese than that being advocated by the Chinese Communists and more Taiwanese than that being supported by the Taiwan independence elements."

He made the remarks quoting phrases from a letter he received from an overseas Chinese student. He said the ROC bastion on Taiwan represents the true culture and tradition of China on which the future of the whole Chinese people depends.

"All the efforts we have made on Taiwan have been primarily to build a model and create hope for the billions of Chinese people. Our dedication should not be limited to the development and prosperity of this island itself. We must shoulder the responsibility to create free, prosperous, democratic and unified China, enabling the entire Chinese people, with the blessings of the nation, to enjoy an everlasting, prosperous and free way of life," he said.

The cultural tradition and the heritage that the Peiping regime has often bragged of to foreign people, do not belong to the Chinese Communists, he said. The Peiping regime is not entitled to the cultural property belonging to the entire Chinese people. They usurped the nation's rich resources and its diligent people over the past 30 years on the great and beautiful land, Soong reminded his youthful audience, but have not done anything good for the land or the people.

The GIO chief attributed the great tragedy on the mainland to the communist ideology that is contrary to the culture and tradition of China and it is not suited to the Chinese people at all, he said.

Talking about the Taiwan independence movement, he said that what the small group of people has advocated, either from the point of theory or from reality, is a dead end. It is quite apparent that without a free and democratic and unified China, there will be no possibility of having a safe and prosperous Taiwan.

The road the government chooses may be burdensome but is the only way to safeguard the security and prosperity that Taiwan enjoys.

HU YAOBANG 'RECENTLY' INSPECTED ANHUI PROVINCE

HK190223 Hong Kong WEN WEI PO in Chinese 19 Dec 82 p 3

[Dispatch from Beijing: "Hu Yaobang Inspects Anhui, Stresses Helping Peasants To Become Well-off"]

[Text] When recently inspecting work in Anhui Province, Hu Yaobang said that there are 18 years to go to the year 2000, during which everyone should launch an emulation drive and work with great vigor.

He said that doubling first means doubling agriculture; with agriculture improved and the peasants well-off, other things are easy to manage. It is necessary to give free rein to the peasants and lead them to open up new ways of getting rich through hard work. As regards the guiding ideology for agriculture, it is necessary to establish the viewpoint of overall development of agriculture, forestry, animal husbandry, fisheries, and processing industries. Under the premise of not slacking grain production in the slightest, it is necessary to vigorously promote diversification, develop stockbreeding and crop cultivation, and open up more production opportunities. In this way there will be an outlet for surplus rural manpower and the peasants will be able to get rich a bit quicker. Hu Yaobang demanded that leaders at all levels attach importance to and support the specialized households and households engaged in specialized jobs that have emerged in their localities, together with the new economic combines that have been organized in accordance with the principle of voluntariness and mutual benefit. He pointed out that these things all presage the development of division of work within agriculture. The more abundant and developed this division of work becomes, the higher will the commodity rate of agricultural products rise. Social division of work stimulates social exchange.

On the question of streamlining the administration, Hu Yaobang said that in order to do a good job in work, the administrative organs at all levels must be skilled in division of work and in organizing things, and also lay stress on work methods. They should "narrow their powers of command and increase their right to speak."

ZHAO SAYS HONG KONG TO RETAIN CAPITALIST SYSTEM

HK180254 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 18 Dec 82 p 11

[By Donald Cheung: "Zhao Gives Support to Hong Kong"]

[Text] Hong Kong is a better place in which to invest than other Southeast Asian countries and Taiwan.

This is the view of the Chinese prime minister, Mr Zhao Ziyang, who met a local delegation of property developers during their recent visit to Peking.

This was revealed by Mr Gordon Wu, managing director of Hopewell Holdings, in an interview with the SCM POST.

He said Mr Zhao assured the five-member team that Hong Kong would keep its capitalist system. China regarded this as Hong Kong's mainstay after 1997.

Mr Zhao said that the special economic zones were set up to take them out of China's existing national policy and economic system, and China would not force Hong Kong into socialism, according to Mr Wu.

"You have nothing to worry about if you invest in Hong Kong. Just carry on and you will not suffer...we will not allow you to suffer," Mr Zhao was quoted as saying.

"Your investments in China are guaranteed; the investments you have in Hong Kong also have no problems," the delegation was told.

Mr Zhao told the property developers that China would never nationalise investment from Hong Kong in China and this policy would be long-term and stable.

The prime minister was aware of the 1997 worries in Hong Kong, but said that the outflow of Hong Kong capital was "not that much."

He told the developers that Hong Kong could enter into commercial contracts with foreign parties "independently" after 1997.

Under this same principle, Mr Zhao said Hong Kong could "set up its own congress, elect a government, and administer itself."

Although no details about the Sino-British talks were given, China's position was clearly spelt out by Mr Zhao.

He told the group that China had never recognised the unequal treaties relating to Hong Kong and could recover the territory at any time.

But he was quick to add that this definitely would not take place before 1997.

He told the visitors that China's policy is for "Hong Kong people to administer Hong Kong" when it regains sovereignty over the territory.

China had a responsibility to the people of Hong Kong, Mr Zhao was quoted as saying, and it was "unacceptable" for Britain to administer Hong Kong after 1997.

Mr Zhao also told the group that it was necessary to change the flag and quoted Mr Deng Xiaoping as suggesting that Hong Kong can be called "China-Hong Kong."

Mr Wu was also assured by Mr Zhao that there would be no class struggle in Hong Kong after 1997, when he asked if he would be considered a class enemy.

Mr Wu said the same assurance had also come from other top Peking officials in the Ministries of Communications and Foreign Economic Relations and Trade.

The five-member team, which included the managing director of New World Developments, Mr Cheng Yu-tung; Hopewell's deputy managing director, Mr Eddie Ho; a company director, Mr Henry Lee; and its legal adviser, Mr Charles Lee.

In addition to the major discussion with Mr Zhao, the group also met a state councillor, Mr Gu Mu; and the director of the State Council's Overseas Chinese Affairs Office, Mr Liao Chengzhi, during their 11-day visit.

Based on information he has gathered from Peking, Mr Wu said he was confident about Hong Kong's future.

"I was told by Mr Liao not to worry and to do more business (in Hong Kong)," he said.

He said it was encouraging to see that positive results were emerging from China's agrarian policy which, he understood, was going to be extended to the cities and the industrial sector.

This policy, he said, had far-reaching consequences, one of which was a higher average income for China's one billion people.

He noted that the new Chinese Constitution enabled people in China, individually or collectively, to set up business -- although on a limited scale.

All these, he added, pointed to better economic development in China, on which Hong Kong's future hinged.

"Hopefully they will realize the role Hong Kong can play in this economic development and they will keep our status quo," he said.

WEN WEI PO CRITICIZES ARTICLE IN CHINA'S SPRING

HK200703 Hong Kong WEN WEI PO in Chinese 17 Dec 82 p 2

["Special Commentary" by Yuan Ping [5913 5689]: "Commenting on CHINA'S SPRING"]

[Text] Wang Pingzhang, a student studying abroad, has published a letter in an overseas journal, called CHINA'S SPRING, expressing the wish "to work for the development of a democratic movement in China." The letter he released to compatriots at home and abroad may be said to be a statement of the editorial policy of this journal and its ideals. However, after reading it, we not only detest its hypocrisy but we also lament its stupidity. We would in particular like to make a brief comment on the letter to compatriots at home and abroad.

First, let us take a look at its main theme: "We are no longer willing here to look through the distressful modern history of China, filled with national disgraces, national calamities and treasonable treaties. We must open a glorious new chapter of history for the Chinese nation. What we are more concerned about is the actual condition of the Chinese people."

This is a strange piece of logic. As a student studying abroad who professed his love for the motherland and the people, he is nevertheless unwilling to look through modern history which is filled with the humiliating history of national disgraces, national calamities and treasonable treaties, ignores "we must open a glorious chapter of history for the Chinese nation" and talks glibly about "actual conditions." Is this the proper attitude to take in studying and observing the process of Chinese history and fairly appraising the present political reality in China? If he is not able to study and observe the past, present and future of China based on the law of historical development, he will certainly be blinded by prejudices and will certainly fail to see the difficult steps taken by China under the heavy burden of feudal history. If he has any instinct, he will open his eyes to the difficulty of opening a glorious new chapter of history for the Chinese nation and realize that this result has been obtained through the bloodshed and sacrifice of countless noble-minded people who advanced wave upon wave. More than 30 years have elapsed since the birth of New China. Externally, she has already won a place among the powerful nations of the world and no one will again dare to bully her. Internally, she has abolished the exploiting system and helped the broad masses of workers and peasants to rise from the lowest rung to become their own masters, and they no longer have to spend their days as homeless refugees or suffer from hunger and cold. Although there was a difficult interim period caused by mistakes in policy, the atmosphere of revival, the improvement in the economic life of 800 million peasants and the vigorous scene that has appeared since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee cannot be written off. Let us also take a look at democratic progress. Is it possible that the efforts made in recent years to set up the legal system, the measures formulated and promulgated by the new constitution and the enlightened open-door policy, have nothing to do with democracy? If we were still in the days of closing the door to external intercourse, studying abroad in Europe and America would be out of the question.

Today, large numbers of students have been sent or have gone abroad at their own expense to study in Europe and America. Take the case of Wang Bingzhang for example, can we say that this is not a gift of democratic measure? We must know that we are now trying to realize the call for democracy and science made by the "May Fourth" Movement. Studying abroad in Europe and America means not only to benefit from the scientific and technical expertise but to also to draw on the useful ingredients of Western democracy to complement socialist democracy. The setting up of special economic zones in Fujian and Guangdong is no doubt of economic significance, but is it not also of democratic and scientific significance?

If CHINA'S SPRING wants to study and observe as well as show concern for the actual condition of the country and the people, it should proceed from the development of the new situation. What CHINA'S SPRING has maintained is instead a fixed concept. For example, because of the errors in line and mistakes in policy of the CPC, it had become tangled up and prejudiced and categorically asserted that there will be no permanent public order, no political stability and no bright future for China. Looking at everything in China with the attitude of gloating over its misfortunes will inevitably make one a color-blind "observer." Therefore, in the letter to compatriots at home and abroad, the editorial department of CHINA'S SPRING has likewise used such slanderous and unrealistic cliches as "the feudal dictatorship of a highly centralized power" and "uninterrupted political campaigns that devastate the country and the people...economically, the use of blind command as well as illusionary and unrealistic blueprints that run counter to objective laws" to pass judgment on present Chinese politics. At the same time, it still labeled the political situation of the 12th party congress as "the new higher level is still busy with power struggle, and the so-called consolidation of party organizations that will soon begin for a period of 3 years is in fact a purge..." Does this really conform with existing reality in China? In the consolidation of party organizations, the people rectified will be those who violated the law and discipline, those who got their start as smashers and grabbers in the Cultural Revolution, those who brought calamity to the country and the people and those harmful elements who wormed their way into the party with the help of the Lin Biao-Jiang Qing cliques. Is it possible that this kind of consolidation of party organizations is not in keeping with the wishes and demands of the people? What has CHINA'S SPRING so impatiently made such irresponsible remarks as to call it a "purge?" What is the attitude of Wang Bingzhang and his ilk, who call themselves patriotic "fighters for democracy," toward the crimes of the "gang of four" and the sabotage of their remnant elements? We have the right to suspect Wang Bingzhang's political background and his false use of the words "democracy" and "freedom" to carry out sinister tricks.

What merits attention is that the style of the so-called democratic movement of CHINA'S SPRING is not open and aboveboard. It requires the youth of the mainland to respond and engage in underground activities and "pay attention to conserving their mainstay forces and wait for a favorable opportunity." How similar is this call to the anti-communist call of the Taiwan KMT to set up a network of secret agents and spies in the mainland and to stage a "counterattack on the mainland" when the time is ripe! We warn Wang Bingzhang and his ilk that their disguise will not fool anybody. The Chinese people want stability and unity to build the four modernizations. They will stop up all sources of disturbance in order to make the country prosperous and strong and bring peace and happiness to the people. They will absolutely not allow conspirators to engage in subversion and trouble making.

CHINA'S SPRING has been acclaimed a "pioneer of the democratic movement" by the Taiwan KMT and as a "gladiator" by the anticommunist national salvation general association. When the scandal of Wang Bingzhang and the Taiwan girl, his secretary Ning Chin-chin was released, the WORLD JOURNAL of New York published on 29 November an exclusive under the headline "Youth on Both Shores Share Same Desire, a Marriage Against Communism." This has reminded us by negative example that Wang Bingzhang and his ilk are not engaged in any "movement" and knowledgeable people will not be taken in by them.

Our motherland has been through a century of misery, the Chinese people have suffered untold humiliations and oppressions and our compatriots have been discriminated against abroad because of the weakness of the KMT. All this has gone forever. Most of the Chinese students studying abroad are deeply conscious of the righteousness of their cause and understand that the state is not sending them abroad to study, not for the sake of enjoying themselves in an exotic foreign atmosphere but for the sake of studying to build up China. As long as they look back on the lot of their country in the last 100 years, they will be awe-striken by the dignity and importance of their own responsibility and will consciously make a success of their studies and return to serve their country. Although a few of those who are weak-willed and confused will be incited by people to seek "political asylum," there is also nothing extraordinary about this. Gold must be shifted from sand and refined before it can be used. Now is the time to test who are the people who genuinely love the motherland and are willing to dedicate themselves to the great cause of developing the nation. Those who seek "political asylum" must first give a thought to what asylum means. Take Hu Na for example. When has she been persecuted or wronged? Precisely because the state respects her ability, she has been repeatedly sent abroad. She has, however, failed to live up the heavy responsibility entrusted in her by the people. The people are indeed sorry for her. However, the Chinese Government has not stopped sending people abroad for studies and visits because of this. On the contrary, it will send even more students abroad to study next year and will use facts to prove that the Chinese leaders and leading level are not nervous but will proceed from the major program of working for the interests of the country. As a matter of fact, many students who went abroad to study from Taiwan have been detained overseas over the years. What is so surprising about this? Only the conduct of such people as Wang Bingzhang and his ilk, who have failed to live up to the expectations of the nation and the people who nurtured and educated him and shirked their rightful responsibility, can be called despicable. However, CHINA'S SPRING has nevertheless said such things as students who went abroad to study on public funds "upon their return to the country will take up important positions and even shoulder certain leading posts" and called on them to propagate the concept of democracy and rule by law, and "under possible condition to institute local democratic reform so as to benefit the nation and the people." However, Wang Bingzhang has instead stayed abroad separated by vast oceans and placed himself outside working for reform. Is not this kind of contradictory statement and action an exposure of his impure motives?

In short, the argument of the letter to compatriots at home and abroad of CHINA'S SPRING is untenable. It has used sophistry to cover up certain ulterior intentions. It is an attempt to negate the situation favorable to the country and the people that has appeared today and to stir up rebellion. We believe that people with intuition, perception and an understanding of the true situation will never be taken in.

PRC BUILDS FIRST OFFSHORE OIL 'JACK-UP RIG'

HK200705 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 20 Dec 82 Business News p 1

[By Julie Auyeung]

[Text] With the launching of China's premier jack-up rig at Canton's Huangpu shipyard, the technology employed in rig building leaves the door open for future joint ventures among leaders in the industry of oil exploration and production.

The Bethlehem-designed jack-up rig, the first built by Huangpu shipyard, marks another milestone in China's offshore engineering work because it was built to the world's standard.

The second task, to build a production platform, will soon lead the shipyard to a more advanced level in the field of oil production.

Agreement has been reached with the French UIE earlier this month and work will begin once approval is given by the Chinese and French Governments, the yard manager, Mr Luo Weicai, told Business News.

Discussions on further projects are also being conducted with several U.S. companies such as Baker Marine, Brown Group, and Ingalls.

Despite the present rig surplus hovering over the world's markets, Chinese shipyards are still spearheading rig building to meet huge domestic demand.

"We are optimistic about the future demand of drilling rigs and even in these times of economic recession we still need to build more. The Chinese shipyards have tremendous potential in rig building but they still need improvements in technology and management," Mr Luo said.

At the ribbon cutting and launching ceremony of Wah-Hai I, attended by more than 5,000 people, the chairman of Wah-Chang International Group, Mr R. H. Ho, said that such a venture with China was an ambitious one.

The initial phase of the project from keel-laying to launching took only 14 months.

The Singapore-based Wah-Chang contracted the China state shipbuilding corp to build the rig last year and construction began in February.

According to Mr Luo, much of the equipment and material used for Wah-Hai I was important [as published] and the construction met the requirements of the American Bureau of Shipping (ABS).

The JU200 MC self-elevating drilling rig is composed of a submerged mat, platform main body, cylindrical jacking column and drilling and exploration equipment.

Operating depth is 60.9 metres and maximum drilling depth is 6,700 metres. Wah-Hai I is suitable for use in offshore drilling and exploration.

For high-standard rolling, all the welders involved in the building of the rig have undergone special training, taken a welding test supervised by ABS surveyors, and obtained ABS welding certificates.

Management and operation of Wah-Hai I after delivery early next year will be done by Asia-Pacific Drilling Co which is a joint venture between Wah-Chang and Reading and Bates, the world's fifth largest drilling contractor.

Present at the ceremony were the governor of Guangdong Province, Mr Liu Tianfu; a director of the State Economic Commission (Machinery Section), Mr Fan Muhan; the deputy governor of Guangdong Province and chairman of the provincial energy committee, Mr Li Jianan; the deputy mayor of the city of Canton, Mr Tang Guoling; and the vice-president of China Offshore Platform Engineering Corp, Mr Hu Kexin.

PROVINCIAL ORGANIZATION OFFICIALS IN BEIJING

HK180229 Hong Kong WEN WEI PO in Chinese 18 Dec 82 p 1

[Dispatch from Beijing: "Officials of Provincial Organization Departments Go To Report in Beijing; Reform of Administrative Structure in Provinces, Municipalities and Autonomous Regions To Unfold Next Year"]

[Text] Following the initial completion of structural readjustment and establishment streamlining in the State Council, preparations are now actively underway for readjustment work in all provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions and at all local levels, and this work will unfold in the first half of next year. In order to proceed with the work in accordance with the steps and aims stipulated by the central authorities, Beijing has summoned delegates from provincial, municipal and autonomous regional personnel and organization departments to the capital to deliver reports and hold consultations, to make sure they are able to implement the central instructions on personnel arrangements, which include investigating and screening "five category" cadres who cannot hold leading posts.

According to our information: the central authorities have demanded that the administrative structure be streamlined and administrative efficiency improved in carrying out structural readjustment in the provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions and in the prefectures and counties. Middle-aged and young cadres with ability and political integrity should be promoted to leading posts. Proper arrangements must be made for the living conditions and political treatment of retiring old cadres. At the same time, the central authorities have called on the cadres to play a leading role in the readjustment work and make proposals and recommendations regarding successors. At present the provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions are drawing up readjustment plans. Many organs will be abolished or amalgamated. For instance, the provincial and municipal publishing bureaus will be implemented into the cultural bureaus, so as to avoid duplication of organs with division of powers, which would adversely affect work efficiency.

PRC RAISES WAGES FOR MIDDLE-AGED INTELLECTUALS

HK171324 Hong Kong HSIN WAN PAO in Chinese 17 Dec 82 p 4

[Unattributed report: "Middle-aged Intellectuals To Get 2-Grade Wage Rise"]

[Text] Beijing, 17 Dec -- It is reported that the Chinese authorities have started to raise wages of most personnel in scientific research departments and state organs. On this occasion, many people can enjoy wage rises because their scope is relatively wide; everybody will be very happy.

Beneficiaries of the current wage rise are mainly middle-aged intellectuals in the above-mentioned departments whose wages have been on the low side for a long time. Most of the intellectuals who started work before the Cultural Revolution will be promoted by two wages grades and enjoy a wage increase of 16 to 20 yuan.

Administrative cadres, professional technicians and workers in these departments will also enjoy a wage rise of one or two grades. But people at and above administrative grade 10 and those with monthly wage of 220 yuan and above will not be given a wage rise this time.

Middle-aged intellectuals who will receive wage rises generally express satisfaction and understanding of the government. Though this wage rise has not yet changed the situation in which the wages of middle-aged intellectuals are on the low side, it still provides timely help for them and their livelihood will thus be more or less improved. They feel that the state has increased its expenditure by a big margin by implementing this wage increase. This also reflects the improvement of China's financial condition in recent years.

HONG KONG NONGOVERNMENTAL COALITION URGED

HK200147 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 20 Dec 82 pp 1, 20

[By Sa Ni Harte]

[Excerpts] The people of Hong Kong were yesterday urged to create a non-government coalition to speak up for the colony's future.

A former director of home affairs, Mr John Walden, said the people "must intervene now, and they must intervene strongly."

He said negotiations on Hong Kong's future had already begun and the public did not know who represented them in the talks, adding that the quickest way of getting a credible opinion was to do it through an unofficial coalition.

Mr Walden told a forum organised by meeting point -- a campaigning group which will be formed officially on January 9 -- that it was important that "the Hong Kong community should clearly understand the limitations of the Hong Kong establishment in safeguarding the interests of the Hong Kong community when under pressure."

He said the main interest of China and Britain in the talks on Hong Kong was their future relations with each other.

"In the current negotiations on Hong Kong's future the main pressure will be from China to achieve an outcome that is suitable to China. The British Government will wish to be seen to be honouring its moral responsibility to the people of Hong Kong, but will also not wish to jeopardise its good relations with China," he said.

Mr Walden questioned whether the governor, Sir Edward Youde, without active support from Hong Kong, could see that the colony's preferences were respected.

He feared that the only concessions to Hong Kong's wish to keep its present distinctive lifestyle might be "meaningless, generalised assurances of the kind that we have been hearing so often recently.

"Hong Kong people will have to make up their own minds how successful Sir Edward Youde is likely to be without the weight of organised Hong Kong opinion behind him," he said.

Mr Walden pointed out that most of the recent exhortations not to worry about the lease issue came from people who had British passports or who for other reasons, like wealth or foreign relatives, could leave the colony if the future looked ominous.

He said that senior civil servants had already secured their own future by having an "escape clause," giving them the right to British residence, inserted in the Nationality Act.

"Whether many other Hong Kong stayers are as conscious of what is at stake as the senior members of the Hong Kong civil service, and whether they can appreciate the need to take concerted action... I cannot say."

Mr Walden said the nearest parallel occurred in 1967 when the excesses of the "Great Proletarian Cultural Revolution" overflowed into Hong Kong and the Hong Kong community was scared stiff that British sovereignty would come to an end by means of internal insurrection.

At that time, he said, the Hong Kong Government badly needed the mandate of the Hong Kong community in order to take tough measures against "the troublemakers."

With a little government orchestration, over 500 public bodies submitted a petition to the government asking it to uphold law and order and deal firmly with the "trouble-makers," he said.

"It was the first time in Hong Kong history that the Hong Kong public had ever come out openly to uphold the status quo."

Calling for a concerted effort to press Hong Kong's views, Mr Walden said: "If enough people are prepared to act in this way it is just possible that some kind of coalition of responsible unofficial organisations might emerge, capable of assembling and conveying the views of a very large number of Hong Kong people to the Hong Kong, British and Chinese Governments."

Unlike in 1967, such a movement should be independent of the government, he said.

When asked how Hong Kong should prepare for its future, Mr Walden said he would like to avoid this problem for the time being because it was a complicated one and needed more time.

But he said the problem with Hong Kong's basic system was that "you have a 19th century government trying to govern 20th century people."

Official statements on the 1967 question had discouraged discussion, he said, saying "the outcome of the negotiation would be acceptable to the people of Hong Kong."

But there had been no attempt at all to find out the opinions of Hong Kong people about their future before the negotiations with the Peking Government began," he said.

He noted that the British prime minister, Mrs Margaret Thatcher, had said "firmly and in public that Britain has a moral responsibility for the people of Hong Kong."

But the British Nationality Act 1981 -- a measure apparently designed to ensure that most Hong Kong people could never hope to go to Britain -- suggested limits to this "moral responsibility."

Mr Walden said it seemed clear to him that "no prudent Hong Kong stayer should accept the official assurances so far given by the Chinese, British and Hong Kong Governments as a satisfactory basis on which to permit government officials to negotiate arrangements on his behalf."

He said that this view appeared to be shared by the former governor, Lord MacLehose.

While he was governor of Hong Kong, Lord MacLehose "complied with the official line," Mr Walden said.

But since his retirement he had twice urged Hong Kong people to make their views known.

Mr Walden warned Hong Kong people against relying on official channels. "They must realise that such channels are rarely effective when what the government wants is different from what the general public wants.

"And in this case the very last thing the Hong Kong Government will want is a strong local lobby demanding to have its views taken into account in the current negotiations, or worse, insisting that it should be consulted before the arrangements agreed with the Chinese Government are formally ratified," he said.

He also saw no hope of unofficial members of the executive and legislative councils taking a vigorous stand.

"They often do oppose the government in public, and even more vociferously in private," he said.

"But it has been shown time and time again that they see their role as basically supportive rather than adversarial."

PORTUGUESE ADVERTISEMENT ON MACAO INVESTMENT

HK150329 [Editorial Report] A full-page advertisement by the newly formed Portugese Investments Association in Macao appears in Hong Kong's Chinese-language newspapers on 10 December 1982. These include the WEN HUI PAO, the HSIN WAN PAO, MING PAO and the KUNG SHANG JIH PAO. The advertisement carries a message (in Portuguese) from the Portuguese president, a message (in English) from the Portuguese premier, and a message (in Portuguese) from the Portuguese deputy premier in charge of financial affairs. An introductory article on the establishment of the Lisbon-backed investment association defines the association's aim as providing investors with access to Portugal and other EEC countries. Also carried are guidelines to would-be investors in Hong Kong and Macao who desire to obtain residence and eventual citizenship in Portugal. It says: "Under the new Regulation No 233 enacted in Portugal, a person who invests in a project recognized by Portugal and Macao may apply for permanent residence in Portugal. A residence permit is equivalent to the green card issued by the United States, and the holder may travel to Portugal anytime without applying for a visa."

The guidelines go on to say: "It will take 6 years to acquire citizenship and be issued a passport from the time a residence permit is obtained."

However, it is pointed out that new rules recently enacted permit an investor who chooses to stay in Macao to qualify for the same treatment as if he were in Lisbon.

As for investors from Hong Kong, the guidelines say: "Since the Macao authorities impose no entry and exit controls on Hong Kong residents, an investor from Hong Kong who invests in a project recognized by Macao and the Portuguese authorities will be entitled to the above-mentioned rights."

At no point in the advertisement are investment amount requirements stated.

XINHUA REVIEWS WORLD SITUATION IN 1982

OW230742 Beijing XINHUA in English 0708 GMT 23 Dec 82

["Year-ender: 1982 Witnesses Greater World Turmoil -- by Mei Zhenmin" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, December 23 (XINHUA) -- The intertwinement of the present economic crisis in the West with the intensified rivalry between the two superpowers has greatly sharpened the inherent contradictions of the contemporary world. The year 1982 witnesses greater turmoil in the world.

Subtitle: U.S.-Soviet Rivalry for Military Superiority

Beginning this year, the Reagan administration has put into operation its 1,600-billion-dollar program for comprehensive arms expansion. The program was worked out by the Reagan administration last year in a bid to regain U.S. military superiority over the Soviet Union it had lost during the 1970s. During 1982, the United States has speeded up the production of medium-range missiles for deployment in Western Europe and organised the rapid deployment forces to cope with any possible Soviet challenges in the Middle East, the Gulf and the Indian Ocean region. It also has decided to establish for use in the event of a nuclear war a communication and liaison system and proposed a basing plan for deployment of 100 MX missiles. The 1,600-billion-dollar program for arms expansion would undoubtedly be a shot in the arm to the U.S. economy now still in recession. However, the huge military expenditure running into astronomical figures would add increased burden to the deficit-ridden U.S. finance. Hence the Reagan administration had to make a cut in its defense budget. This can not but be a restraining factor to the U.S. drive for arms expansion.

The Soviet Union showed no signs of retreat on the new round of arms race. Soviet leaders time and again have expressed their resolve not to be "left behind" in the race of arms and military technology. The Soviet Union has spared no efforts in arms expansion. Its expenditure for developing weapons has long exceeded that of the United States. It has now deployed a large number of improved fourth-generation intercontinental missiles, with the trial-production of the fifth-generation missiles under way. Its conventional forces of the army, navy and air force have been receiving a general equipment renewal. It has also decided to cancel a large number of civil construction projects to pave the way for arms expansion on a larger scale so that it can maintain and strengthen its favorable position in the arms race. But the Soviet Union, too, is tormented by its great economic difficulties. The rate of its economic growth has reached a record post-war low. Its military build-up and external expansion have become such a drain on the economy that the choice between gun and butter is becoming more critical. This is also a restraining force to Soviet arms expansion.

Both the United States and the Soviet Union are having economic difficulties. On the whole, however, the former is stronger than the latter in economic power. By exploiting its economic superiority, the United States has been compelling the Soviet Union to step up competition in arms race with it. On the other hand, it has been trying to prevent its allies from selling sophisticated technology or providing loans on favorable terms to the Soviet Union. This has further sharpened gun or butter contradiction in the Soviet Union. On its part, the Soviet Union is trying hard to woo Western European countries and other allies of the United States by taking advantage of its rich energy resources and raw materials.

On the one hand, it wants to make use of the economic strength of these countries to improve its own. On the other hand, it attempts to undermine the alliance between the United States and its allies by driving a wedge between them. All this has complicated the U.S.-Soviet rivalry for world hegemony.

Subtitle: Deepening Contradictions of United States and Soviet Union With Their Respective Allies

The serious economic recession that is sweeping over the whole Western world has caused government shifts in 14 Western European countries. Even in West Germany and Japan, known for their better economic situation, it has triggered political turbulence. In West Germany, the ruling Social Democratic Party stepped down after being in power for 13 years. Former Japanese Prime Minsiter Zenko Suzuki, who had pledged to "rebuild finance," had to resign because of a fianancial deficit.

The general recession has also deepened contradictions between the United States and its Western European allies. Before acute quarrels on such issues as interest rates and steel could subside on the two sides of the Atlantic, a new "war" on agricultrual products has begun. The conflict between the United States and Western Europe on the question of supplying natural gas pipeline equipment to the Soviet Union goes beyond economic interests. In fact, it reflected their divergence of policies towards the Soviet Union. Although tension over this specific question has been eased recently as a result of compromise between the United States and its European allies, the two sides may come to a new conflict at any time as long as the general recession continutes, and there is no guarantee that this conflict will not extend to the political sphere. In fact, the current economic crisis only serves as a catalyst to the intensification of contradictions between the Untied States and Western Europe. In early post-war years, the war-wrecked Western Europe had no way out but to rely on the United States for both economic aid and military protection. But at present, the aggregate gross national product of the 10 European Economic Community member countries has surpassed that of the United States and Western Europe has ranked first in world trade. This change in economic strength has ended an era in which the United States gave orders while Western Europe took orders. But the Ronald Reagan administration still wants to dominate Western Europe. This is resented by the Western Europeans. But on the other hand, the United States and Western Europe, having formed close economic ties and confronted by a Soviet military threat, are bound by their common interests. Therefore, both sides are eager to reconcile their differences despite conflict of interests.

The Soviet Union and the Comecon (Council for Mutual Economic Assistance) countries are also affected by the recession sweeping the Western world. Growth rates of their troubled economies have continued to decline, and their exports encountered greater difficulties. Some of these countries are even unable to repay their foreign debts. The poor economic performance has given rise to the differences between the Soviet Union and its allies over the exchange rates between their currencies and the prices of their commodities. As a result, centrifugal tendency is growing in those allies. The greatest headache for the Soviet Union is Poland. The political disturbances, economic woes and the people's sentiments there have seriously crippled the activities of the Comecon and the Warsaw Treaty Organization. Both the short-term and long-term programs formulated by the Comecon cannot go ahead in the manner contemplated by the Soviet Union.

kelying on its military power and making the best use of its energy and raw material supply to its allies, Moscow is trying hard to maintain its lordship. But it is not so easy now to subject them to the Soviet "model" as more and more of these allies are exploring ways for development suitable to their own conditions.

Subtitle: Closer Third World Unity Against Hegemonism

The intensifying scramble for strategic points is an important part of the superpowers' contention for hegemony and a major source of turbulance, or even wars, in many Third World regions. While none of the old problems thus arisen, such as Kampuchea and Afghanistan, have been resolved in the past year, new evidence has been added by the war in Lebanon.

The shifting of the economic crisis by industrial countries onto the Third World countries has deepened the contraditions among the latter and aggravated their difficulties. The sharpening of the problems left over by old-line colonialism and by history among the Third World countries has also aggravated the turbulence in these regions. Moreover, the fact that the superpowers have tried to meddle in and make use of these contraditions has further complicated the situation. The Malvinas (Falkland) war this year provided an outstanding example.

But all this also serve to awaken an increasing number of developing countries to the need of alliance and of their becoming strong. This has brought about a growing tendency of drawing away from the Soviet Union and from the United States by those which used to be close to either of them.

Regional cooperative organizations among the Third World countries have expanded their internal trade, jointly set up many plants, firms and financial businesses, and adopted measures to cope with the economic crisis being shifted onto them. Excluding the United States, the Latin American economic system adopted a "strategy of Latin America on economy, security and independence," and emphasis has been put on independent development and closer regional cooperation to deal with the threat of external aggression. While effectively carrying out economic cooperation, the six member countries of the Gulf Cooperation Council have taken measures to strengthen defense cooperation. The five ASEAN nations not only have strengthened their economic cooperation but also coordinated their diplomatic actions to resist Soviet-Vietnamese aggression and expansion in the region. Thanks to the prolonged joint struggle of the developing countries, the U.N. Conference on the Law of the Sea this year adopted the "Sea Law Convention" which, for the first time, includes demands of the Third World countries.

Looking into the year ahead, prospects for a steady upturn of the West's economy are dim. Politically, no substantial changes will emerge in the two superpowers' strategy of world domination despite their exchange of "detente" signals following the change in Soviet leadership. The tendency of the Third World countries to be their own masters and to become strong through alliance, and the centrifugal tendency among the superpowers' allies will continue to grow. What's more, the "two-poles" structure, advocated by the superpowers for world hegemony, is under pounding, their ability to control the world situation is being weakened and their strategic plan constantly disrupted. This tendency is conducive to preventing war and maintaining world peace.

OPEC TO MAINTAIN OIL PRICE, INCREASE PRODUCTION

OW220335 Beijing XINHUA in English 1622 GMT 21 Dec 82

[Text] Vienna, December 20 (XINHUA) -- OPEC oil ministers have decided to maintain the benchmark price of 34 U.S. dollars per barrel of oil and to increase daily total oil production. The decision, made at the two-day 66th OPEC (Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries) ministerial meeting which closed here today, specificied OPEC members will produce 18.5 million barrels of oil daily, for an increase of 1 million barrels.

The meeting was held in view of an oil glut on the international market and rifts cropping up within the organization as some of the 13 member nations including Nigeria, Iran, Libya and Iraq, have failed to observe their production quotas and the benchmark price.

It was decided at an earlier OPEC meeting in Vienna last March that to maintain the price of 34 U.S. dollars, the OPEC nations' total daily production was to be cut from 20 million barrels to 17.5 million barrels.

In an opening speech at the just-concluded session, President of the meeting and Nigeria's Oil Minister H.E. Yahaya Dikko called for heightened unity and rational distribution of production quotas among members "in order to enable each member nation to sell its agreed export quota and to observe their production quotas on a voluntary basis." He pointed out that wrangles within OPEC over the distribution of quotas and over the policy of a unified price would have negative effects on the world oil market.

Though the oil ministers arrived at a unanimous desision on OPEC's oil production level after heated debate, the distribution of production quotas among member nations remains to be resolved at the next meeting.

RENMIN RIBAO VIEWS MX MISSILE DEPLOYMENT

HK231107 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 23 Dec 82 p 7

[Article by Zhang De Zhen [1728 1795 4176]: "The MX Missile Dense Pack Deployment Program Has Been Shelved"]

[Text] After 1 month of fierce debate and several twists and turns, a compromise scheme finally has been reached on U.S. President Reagan's plan on the "dense pack" deployment of 100 MX missiles. On 17 December the Senate approved by a majority the allocation of $1 billion for production of the first 5 MX missiles but, at the same time, stipulated that these funds cannot be used until Congress approves how these missiles are to be deployed. Moreover, Congress also demands that the government put forward a new plan for MX missile deployment before next March for Congress to take a final vote on this plan. Before this the House of Representatives overwhelmingly defeated the government's application for fund allocations for production of the first batch of MX missiles. The Senate decision has rescued the MX missile production plan but the scheme for "dense pack" deployment of the missiles has, in fact, been shelved.

This debate on MX missiles is indeed not a new one, for the deployment of this kind of missile long has been a topic of much dispute and contention. An MX missile is a kind of huge mobile intercontinental guided ballistic missile with 10 warheads. Its range and power are larger than those of the existing "Minuteman" and "Hercules" missiles in the United States. It was developed in the mid-1970's to counter the powerful Soviet SS-18 and SS-19 intercontinental missiles. Despite the tremendous efforts that American governments have made in developing this missile, they all have failed to formulate an ideal plan for its deployment. During the Carter administration a so-called "multi-emplacement deployment scheme" was approved in June 1979. According to this scheme 200 MX missiles are to be deployed in the Western states of Utah and Nevada among 4,600 emplacements. These missiles are to be shuttled constantly to baffle the enemy and avoid being destroyed. This deployment will enable the United States to preserve its second-strike nuclear force. However, before there was enough time to carry it out, this scheme was vetoed by President Reagan when he first came to office. Ever since President Reagan came to office he has regarded MX missile development as a major strategic measure to turn around the disequilibrium in military strength between the United States and the Soviet Union and to show the United States' determination to maintain a "nuclear balance." Also he has used it as an important counter for the United States in the haggling over disarmament talks. Therefore, he first hurriedly put forward a temporary plan to deploy 100 MX missiles in the existing reinforced launching silos of "Minuteman" and "Hercules" missiles. Then, after 1 year of careful consideration and discussion, he formally suggested the current "dense pack" deployment program. The aim of this program is to deploy 100 MX missiles in a narrow area of 52 square kilometers in Wyoming in reinforced launching silos, and to use the radiation and shock waves caused by explosions of the first attacking nuclear warheads to make the Soviet missiles that follow the first one "destroy one another" -- or to divert these missiles from their orbits and thus preserve the remaining 70 percent of the MX missiles as the "second-strike" retaliation force.

However, this program encountered the opposition of many people as soon as it was put forward. Even three out of five members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff oppose it. Some defense experts have pointed out that, technically, this "dense pack" deployment program is not perfectly safe. If the Soviet Union should adopt corresponding policies to counter the United States' deployment -- such as development of some kind of timing device to make the attacking warheads explode simultaneously or of a missile that could land softly and explode underground -- the result would be the destruction of the MX missiles instead of the "mutual self-destruction" of the Soviet missiles.

A WASHINGTON POST article expressed the opinion that the key to whether or not the MX missile is effective lies in the way the Russians deal with the matter instead of how the Americans view the matter. In short, because "dense pack" deployment technically is very complex and cannot be tested in practice at present, people universally believe it more prudent to seek a sound program rather than undergo the risk of this program. It is precisely because of this that the Senate decided to approve the production of MX missiles and to link production with a deployment method whereby MX missile production can go ahead only when the President and Congress agree on the method of deployment.

However, this was not the whole reason for the problem. Reagan's "dense pack" deployment plan of course was not ideal. Production of the first 5 MX missiles would require an appropriation of 1 billion at most. This was only a small sum compared with the total 1983 military appropriation of $231.6 billion. Yet this sum of only $1 billion touched the U.S. Government and public to the quick and caused a mighty uproar. The reason was that it involved military expenditures, which are a very sensitive problem in the United States at present. After becoming President, Reagan suggested a huge arms expansion plan involving the expenditure of $1.6 trillion in 5 years. Military spending has increased by more than 7 percent in 1982 and will increase by more than 10 percent in 1983. At present, however, the U.S. economy is undergoing the most serious crisis since the war, is confronted with the highest unemployment rate in 40 years, the highest rate of enterprise bankruptcy in 50 years and the largest budget deficit in history. To implement armament expansion, Reagan refused to reduce the defense budget but instead, greatly cut back social welfare expenses. This inevitably aroused public discontent.

In the mid-term elections last month many voters sharply criticized some Reagan policies. A recent public opinion poll shows that the number of people supporting increased military spending has dropped drastically and that the number of people suggesting a reduced defense budget obviously has increased. Many people disagreed with President Reagan's estimate of U.S. and Soviet military strength in his recent speech. They held that Reagan's statement that the Soviet Union had established "decisive superiority" over the United States in almost all aspects of military strength was "exaggerated" and that he said this to meet certain "propaganda" needs. This change in mood of the American public -- particularly the upsurge of the anti-nuclear movement in recent years -- inevitably will affect political life in the United States. According to an AP analysis, the congressmen who supported a nuclear-weapons freeze and suggested a reduction of military spending were an important force in forming an alliance in the House of Representatives to veto the production of MX missiles.

Of course, generally speaking, the U.S. Government and public largely favor strengthening U.S. defense. However, many people also worry about the excessive increase and misuse of military expenditures.

It easily can be seen that as a result of increasing economic difficulties there will be a growing demand to reduce military spending. In these circumstances it is not strange that the Reagan Government's "dense pack" MX missile deployment program will become the target of public criticism.

U.S. CALLS FOR SOVIET PULLOUT FROM AFGHANISTAN

OW231142 Beijing XINHUA in English 1116 GMT 23 Dec 82

[Text] Washington, December 22 (XINHUA) -- The U.S. Government today again called for the total withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan on the occasion of the third anniversary of the Soviet invasion of that country.

State Department Under Secretary of State Lawrence Eagleburger said here today that "it is absolutely essential that the Soviet aggression in Afghanistan be checked."

At a news briefing Eagleburger said that the Soviet action "is an example of Soviet willingness to use its growing military might beyond its borders" and it threatens the interests of the Islamic world and the subcontinent, and the interests of the U.S. and the West in general "in an area of great strategic importance to us." "Soviet success" in such an area "would be a real blow strategically to us," he emphasized.

"Since the leadership change in Moscow there has been a great deal of press speculation and comment on the possibility of Soviet flexibility toward a negotiated solution in Afghanistan. Thus far we have had no meaningful indications of Soviet intentions," he said. The Soviet troops in Afghanistan have increased by 20,000 this year to 105,000 and there are another 30,000 troops stationed just north of the Afghan border in the Soviet Union.

He reiterated the U.S. position for a total withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan "in the context of a negotiated settlement", which provides for the self-determination of the Afghan people, the independence and non-alignment of Afghanistan and the return of the refugees with safety and honor.

MORE ON BEIJING MEETING ON USSR ANNIVERSARY

OW221620 Beijing in Russian to the USSR 1800 GMT 21 Dec 82

[Text] The Chinese People's Association for Friendship With Foreign Countries and the China-USSR Friendship Association held a cocktail party at the Beijing International Club on the evening of 21 December to mark the 60th anniversary of the founding of the Soviet Union.

Wang Bingnan, president of the Chinese People's Association for Friendship With Foreign Countries; Xie Bangding, vice president of the Chinese People's Association for Friendship With Foreign Countries and head of the China-USSR Friendship Association; Qian Qichen, PRC vice minister of foreign affairs; Wei Yuming, PRC vice minister of foreign economic relations and trade; Chen Zineen, adviser to the PRC minister of culture and other officials were present at the cocktail party.

Soviet Ambassador to China Shcherbakov and his wife and workers of the Soviet Embassy in China were invited to the cocktail party.

Wang Bingnan, president of the Chinese People's Association for Friendship With Foreign Countries, was first to propose a toast at the cocktail party. He said: 30 December 1982 is the 60th anniversary since the founding of the Soviet Union, established by Lenin, the great teacher of revolution of the world's proletariat. On behalf of the Chinese people, the Chinese People's Association for Friendship With Foreign Countries and the China-USSR Friendship Association, I ask Ambassador Shcherbanov, his wife and our Soviet friends to pass on cordial festive congratulations to the great Soviet people. Wang Bingnan noted that traditional revolutionary friendship exists between the Chinese and Soviet peoples. We, the Chinese people, highly value friendship with the Soviet people. The Chinese People's Association for Friendship With Foreign Countries and the China-USSR Friendship Association will as before be zealously working for the development of friendship with the Soviet people.

We sincerely hope that, thanks to the joint efforts of the Chinese and Soviet people, traditional friendship between them will steadily strengthen and develop.

In his speech at the cocktail party Soviet Ambassador Shcherbakov thanked Wang Bingnan for his congratulations. A Chinese color feature film "The Little Tea House" was shown at the cocktail party.

KCNA CITED ON 415TH ARMISTICE COMMISSION MEETING

OW221910 Beijing XINHUA in English 1657 GMT 22 Dec 82

[Text] Pyongyang, December 22 (XINHUA) -- The 415th meeting of the Military Armistice Commission was held at Panmunjom yesterday as proposed by the Korea-China side, reported the KOREAN CENTRAL NEWS AGENCY.

Speaking at the meeting, Major General Han Chu-kyong, senior member of the Korea-China side, strongly protested against violations of the armistice agreement by the South Korean-U.S. side.

General Han said that this year has seen frequent intrusions by spy planes of the South Korea-U.S. side into the northern part of Korea. Its military provocations have also been stepped up along the demarcation line.

Such actions, he said, amount to more than 23,300 cases. Meanwhile, the United States has transported large numbers of weapons to South Korea besides carrying out joint military exercises with South Korean troops.

He said that because of war preparations on the part of the South Korea-U.S. side, the situation in the Korean Peninsula has been further intensified.

In order to relax the tension in Korea and get rid of the danger of war, Han demanded that all U.S. military forces and facilities be removed from South Korea and the United States stop interference of all kinds in the internal affairs of Korea.

XINHUA REVIEWS CHANGES IN KAMPUCHEA IN 1982

OW231140 Beijing XINHUA in English 1106 GMT 23 Dec 82

["Year-ender: Encouraging Achievements of Democratic Kampuchea" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, December 23 (XINHUA) -- A heartening change took place in Kampuchea in the year 1982: Its three resistance forces fighting against Vietnamese invasion buried their old disputes and formed a tripartite coalition government on July 9. This change marked a new stage in the war of resistance against Vietnamese invasion and for national salvation. Under the banner of the coalition government, the Kampuchean people of all walks of life have scored encouraging achievements in the political, military and diplomatic fields in a comparatively short period of time in their united struggle against the Vietnamese invaders. Shortly after the coalition government came into being, Samdech Norodom Sihanouk, president of Democratic Kampuchea, inspected the base areas of the three resistance forces and visited his fellow countrymen whom he had not seen since the Vietnamese occupation of Phnom Penh in January 1979. His inspection tours inspired the will and confidence of the resistance forces in carrying the protracted struggle to final victory. The formation of the coalition government has also attracted an increasing number of patriots to join in the resistance. They include many youths stranded in the refugee camps in the Kampuchean-Thai border areas and inhabitants in the enemy-occupied regions. Group after group of soldiers and even senior officers of the Heng Samrin army have defected to the resistance forces.

In the recent rainy season during which the coalition government was opportunately formed, the national army and guerrillas of Democratic Kampuchea launched fierce attacks on the Vietnamese troops in the western, northern and central regions, killing many enemy soldiers and destroying enemy communications. According to a war communique issued by the general headquarters of the Democratic Kampuchean national army and guerrillas on the rainy season operations, 13,000 enemy troops were killed, several hundred Vietnamese strongholds destroyed and about one hundred villages liberated.

The formation of the coalition government has also won the support and sympathy of the majority of peace and justice loving countries and people in the world. President Norodom Sihanouk, Vice President Khieu Samphan and Prime Minister Son Sann have visited many countries in Asia, Africa and Europe, thus promoting a better understanding of the Kampuchean issue on the part of these countries. Many countries have changed their stand and begun to support Democratic Kampuchea. Some of them have promised or are giving political and material support to the coalition government.

At the 37th session of the United Nations General Assembly this year, 90 countries voted for retaining the seat of Democratic Kampuchea in the world organization, thus defeating Vietnam's scheme to unseat Democratic Kampuchea there. After that, the U.N. General Assembly adopted a resolution demanding the withdrawal of Vietnamese troops from Kampuchea by an over-whelming majority of 105 votes in favor and 23 against. All this shows that a just cause enjoys abundant support while an unjust one finds little support and that the situation in Kampuchea is not "irreversible." The Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea has since its formation grown stronger in the struggle to resist Vietnamese aggression. Although Vietnam may play new tricks in the future, the Kampuchean people under the leadership of the coalition government will surely win fresh victories if they strengthen their unity and persist in struggle.

ZHAO ZIYANG STATE VISIT TO EGYPT CONTINUES

Trade Agreement Extended

NC212037 Cairo MENA in Arabic 1640 GMT 21 Dec 82

[Excerpt] Cairo, 21 Dec (MENA) -- President Husni Mubarak and PRC State Council Premier Premier Zhao Ziyang agreed during their meeting today to extend until December 1983 the trade and payment agreement that was signed by the two countries in 1976 and expires at the end of this month. This was stated by Minister of Economy and Foreign Trade Dr Mustafa as-Sa'id following the news conference held by President Mubarak and Zhao Ziyang.

Mutual Cooperation Discussed

NC221632 Cairo MENA in Arabic 1515 GMT 22 Dec 82

[Text] Cairo, 22 Dec (MENA) -- A meeting was held on the ministerial level today in Al-Qubbah Palace between the Egyptian and PRC sides during which both sides reviewed issues of common concern in light of the talks held in the past 2 days between President Husni Mubarak and PRC State Council Premier Zhao Ziyang. Attending the meeting on the Egyptian side were Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister Kamal Hasan 'Ali and Deputy Prime Minister and Defense Minister Field Marshal Muhammad 'Abd al-Halim Abu Ghazalah; and on the PRC side Minister of Foreign Affairs Wu Xueqian, and a number of the PRC delegation of the State Council accompanying the premier.

MENA has learned that the meeting dealt with the Palestinian question -- which the PRC supports -- as well as the Palestinian people's legitimate rights and Israel's withdrawal from all the Arab territory occupied in 1967 [words indistinct] and from all Lebanese territory and the establishment of Lebanon's total sovereignty throughout its territory. During the meeting both sides stressed the need for giving momentum to the peace efforts to achieve a (?just) and comprehensive peace in the area -- a peace that will give the Palestinian people their right to determine their future, including the right to establish their own (?state).

During the meeting both sides discussed the situation in Southeast Asia and various African issues, particularly the situation in South Africa, the African struggle against racism and the Namibian people's right to independence. In addition they discussed Third World issues in which Egypt and the PRC are interested. They discussed bilateral relations in detail, economic cooperation, the PRC's participation in a number of Egyptian development projects, use of the PRC loan to Egypt and cooperation in the field of armaments.

PRC To Supply Fighter Planes

NC221642 Paris AFP in English 1540 GMT 22 Dec 82

[Excerpt] Cairo, Dec 22 (AFP) -- Military and economic cooperation between China and Egypt were discussed during the third day of Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang's official visit here.

China has agreed to supply Egypt with 60 to 80 F-7 fighter planes, built on a Soviet MIG-21 design, which are to be assembled in Egypt, Egyptian Defence Minister Lt-Gen. 'Abd al-Halim Abu Ghazalah announced. About 30 of these aircraft are being used by the Egyptian army, and some were on show for the first time during last month's air force manoeuvres.

Egypt, keen to diversify its sources of military equipment, has been assembling military arcraft -- Alphajets, Mirage and Gazelle helicopters -- in association with France and the United States since the beginning of the year. Egypt also has a program with Britain to assemble or construct land-based heavy armaments.

Zhao Attends PRC Reception

NC221936 Cairo Domestic Service in Arabic 1830 GMT 22 Dec 82

[Text] The PRC Embassy in Cairo this evening held a reception for Zhao Ziyang, the premier of the Council of State, who is currently visiting Egypt. The reception, which was held at the embassy building in Az-Zamalik, was attended by members of the Chinese community in Egypt.

The Chinese State Council premier earlier visited the Pyramids area. He was accompanied by Dr Mustafa Kamal Hilmi, deputy prime minister for services and minister of state for education and scientific research, and Dr 'Abd al-Hamid Hasan, the governor of Al-Jizah. Senior antiquities inspectors in the area explained the history of the Pyramids and the ancient Egyptian civilization, the [words indistinct] where Dr 'Abd al-Hamid Hasan presented him with the town key.

Zhao Ziyang also visited the Sphinx where he expressed his admiration and appreciation for the ancient Egyptians' art.

Zhao Tours Historic Sites

OW222056 Beijing XINHUA in English 2039 GMT 22 Dec 82

[Text] Cairo, December 22 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang today paid high tribute to the diligence and wisdom of the Egyptian people when he visited the Citadel of "Saladin", the Egyptian Musuem and the Great Pyramids at Giza today.

Accompanied by the Egyptian Deputy Premier and Minister of Education Mutafa Kamal Hilmi, Premier Zhao drove from the Al-Qubbah Palace to the Citadel of "Saladin". This morning he went round the citadel and entered into the Muhammad 'Ali Mosque. The citadel is a medieval stronghold built in 1183 A.D. atop the Mokattam hill-range. It commands a strategic view of the entire capital. Together with the Muhammad 'Ali Mosque, raised by its namesake more than six centuries later within the same compound, the citadel dominates the Cairo skyline. The premier went up to the citadel's wall and enjoyed a panoramic view of the beautiful city of Cairo.

Then, Premier Zhao went to the famous Egyptian Museum which had been visited by the late Chinese Premier Zhou Enlai during his Africa tour 1963-1964. The Egyptian Museum is one of antiquities built in 1881 and houses about 300,000 relics from 3,000-year-old Egyptian civilization, including treasures from Tutankhamen's tomb. The exquisite exhibits in the museum galleries include mummies, the ancient Egyptian hieroglyphic and stone and wooden carving. The Chinese premier showed great interest in the exhibits which are of great historical and artistic value. At the end of his visit, the Chinese premier wrote in the visitor's book: "The industrious Egyptian people who created a glorious ancient civilization as a tremendous contribution to the world civilization are certainly able today to build a more beautiful future to promote human progress." He exchanged gifts with a leading member of the museum staff.

In the afternoon, Premier Zhao visited the Great Pyramids at Giza, some 15 kilometers southwest of Cairo. Pyramid as a style of tomb was adopted by the sovereigns of the old and middle kingdoms in Egypt. It has become a symbol of the ancient Egyptian civilization. The Chinese premier and his entourage went round to have a good look at the pyramid of Khufu (one of the pharaohs of the fourth dynasty), the largest and oldest of the three Great Pyramids erected on a rocky plateau of the desert some 4,500 years ago. He also went behind the pyramid to see the "sun boat" unearthed in 1954.

At the end of the visit, 'Abd al-Hamid Hasan, governor of the Giza Governorate, presented a key of Giza city, a symbol of honorable citizenship, to the Chinese premier in token of the hospitality of the people of the Giza Governorate. Premier Zhao later drove to the Sphinx some 300 yards away from the pyramids. He had a photo taken together with the accompanying Egyptian officials in front of the Sphinx. Gu Mu, state councillor, Wu Xueqian, foreign minister, and other members of the Chinese party were also in the premier's company during the tour.

Egyptian Papers on Visit

OW221916 Beijing XINHUA in English 1625 GMT 22 Dec 82

[Text] Cairo, December 22 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang's current visit to Egypt "is an event of paramount importance in the history of relationship between Egypt and China since its development at the time of the late Premier Zhou Enlai," the Egyptian paper AL-AHRAM says editorially today.

The paper underlines China's present policy of openness to the outside world to keep pace with its scientific, cultural and political progress. It adds: China invariably endeavors to consolidate its relations with the Third World countries and assert its right to liberation, progress and the investment of its potentials and resources in the service of its people and to raise their standards so that this world may be able to have the necessary balance between the two superpowers." "In this process," it goes on, "China does not count itself among the big powers: nor does it wish to share in those power's strife. With aid and cooperation it therefore approaches Third World countries as a friend on an equal footing, who shares the world's belief in the necessity of struggle against hegemony of the superpowers."

AL-AKHBAR refers in an editorial today to China's suffering from superpower hegemony and foreign interference. It points out that the Middle East is being polarized with outside forces instigating the countries against each other in wars and conflicts from which the only beneficiary is the hegemonic power. It says: "China feels special sympathy for the wronged Arab and Palestinians as well as for the African states which face similar conditions."

The editorial points out: "The current meetings between President Mubarak and the Chinese leader will have big repercussions not only for Egypt but also for the developing African countries and the whole Third World."

AL-GOMMOURIA said in an article yesterday that "with a population that constitutes almost one quarter of the world's total population, China has never sought to exercise hegemony over other countries: nor has it depended on anyone for its development. Instead, it has concentrated on developing its resources to meet the needs of its immense population."

XINHUA REVIEWS TURBULENCE IN MIDDLE EAST

OW222020 Beijing XINHUA in English 1841 GMT 22 Dec 82

["Year-ender: Another Year of Turbulence in Middle East -- by XINHUA Correspondent Zhong Dong" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, December 22 (XINHUA) -- The coming year is expected to be another one of unrest for the Middle East, as the war-scarred 1982 witnessed the beginning of a new stage in the Arab-Israeli conflict.

As the immediate result of the Israeli invasion of Lebanon in June, the headquarters and armed forces of the Palestinian Liberation Organization (PLO) were forced to evacuate from Beirut.

However, the just cause of Palestine liberation has remained. Far from being written off, it has won even greater sympathy and support in the world. Israel, on the other hand, has come under heavier fire for its unbridled aggressiveness and expansionism, and landed itself in unprecedented political isolation.

Worldwide, the urgency and importance of solving the Palestine issue have been better understood.

In the context of the new development, the Arab people have become better aware of the fact that the United States is not to be trusted and the Soviet Union is unreliable, and that only by relying upon their own solidarity and strength can they succeed in bringing about a just and reasonable solution to the Middle East problem. As a case in point, the Fes Arab summit of early September formulated for the first time a common Arab strategy, which provides a solid groundwork for a comprehensive and just solution to the Middle East problem. The PLO, headed by Yasir 'Arafat, has stressed the need of devotion to political struggle for the present, making it clear that it will recognize Israel if Israel recognizes the rights of the Palestinian people to return home, enjoy self-determination and establish a Palestine state.

The United States proposed a new solution to the Middle East issue on the eve of the Fes Arab summit, in an effort to ease its relations with the Arab countries, consolidate its favorable position obtained from the Lebanon crisis and push ahead with the peace process of Camp David.

The Soviet Union also advanced a six-point program, reaffirming the desirability of an international meeting on the Middle East issue.

The Reagan proposal is of interest to the Arab countries as the United States is the only country that has any binding power on Israel. During its recent visit to the United States, the seven-member committee of the Arab League indicated its willingness to bridge the gap between the U.S. program and the Arab program and continue the Arab dialogue with the United States so that peace talks on a just basis can be held.

Yet there still are many obstacles to a political settlement. The major one comes from U.S.-backed Israel, which has been using various pretexts to keep its troops in Lebanon in an attempt to consolidate its occupation.

Rejecting both the Arab program and the Reagan proposal, Israel has also declared that it will never pull its troops out of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, nor will it allow the emergence of a Palestine state.

The United States, in its intensified contention with the Soviet Union for spheres of influence, has been resorting to the double tactic of strengthening its military presence in the Middle East and promoting peace talks. Regarding Israel as its "reliable strategic ally" in the Middle East, it has backed Israel's invasion of Lebanon to strike at the Palestinian and Arab forces. Although it might, out of its own strategic interests, exert some pressure on Israel on the issue of troops withdrawal, it has never given up its policy of support and partiality for Israel. Hence, its efforts towards peace talks are so geared as to channel them into the U.S. orbit, rather than to solve the Palestinian issue genuinely. Unless its interests are seriously endangered by the present state of affairs, the United States will make no big change in its Middle East policy.

The Soviet reputation in the Middle East has steeped because of its inertia in face of Israel's invasion of Lebanon. But the deepening contradictions between the Arab world on the one hand and the United States and Israel on the other, the persistent unrest in the Gulf region, the differences and conflicts between Arab countries are all grists for exploitation for the Soviet Union.

It certainly will not stand by with folded arms and watch the United States expanding its influence in the Middle East. A new round of Soviet-U.S. rivalry is inevitable.

As for the Arab nations, it will take some time for them to achieve effective unity. While it is true that the Arab peoples are closing their ranks, the Camp David accords, the Iran-Iraq war and other contradictions are still standing in the way of Arab solidarity, which is so pivotal to curbing Israeli aggression and forcing the United States to further alter its policy, and achieving progress in the peace talks.

Taken all together, the road to peace in the Middle East remains to be long and tortuous.

KHOMEYNI MESSAGE TO IRAN CALLED 'TURNING POINT'

OW180341 Beijing XINHUA in English 0104 GMT 18 Dec 82

[Text] Tehran, December 17 (XINHUA) -- Iran's Majlis (parliament) Speaker Rafsanjani said today that Imam Khomeyni's latest message to the nation, if carried out to the letter, will signify a turning point from the turmoil in the country since the Islamic revolution four years ago.

In a speech at the campus of Tehran University as the regular Friday prayers sermon, Rafsanjani said in the Iranian revolution to get rid of the Pahlavi regime and the influence of the United States, people have also done "some harshness."

"Time has come to give people confidence and assurances" that they can live in this country comfortably "without the fear of being bothered if they did not commit any violations," Rafsanjani added.

Imam Khomeyni's message, issued Wednesday night, dealt mainly with the serious violation of the people's elementary civil rights in this country.

Rafsanjani said, "If people are not confident that they would have tranquility, that their telephone would not be bugged, their homes would not be raided for no reason, their children would not be thrown out of school for no reason, that a worker would not be dismissed from a factory for no reason...it would be like inviting a group of guests, cooking the best meal for them but adding some broken glass in it."

He also said the massive turn-out in the experts assembly election last Friday demonstrated the popularity and consolidation of the Islamic regime.

INTERNATIONAL INVESTORS' CONFERENCE ENDS IN MALI

OW172022 Beijing XINHUA in English 1906 GMT 17 Dec 82

[Text] Bamako, December 16 (XINHUA) -- Twenty-seven delegations attending the international investors' conference ended here today agreed to contribute to the country's 1981-85 five year plan which gives investment-priority to 79 projects.

Wang Pinqing, head of the Chinese economic delegation, declared at the session today that China will help Mali in eight projects of industry, agriculture, foreign trade, public health and newscast.

The conference opened on December 13 was aimed at rehabilitating and developing Mali's economy.

Malian President Moussa Traore presided over the opening ceremony of the conference when he urged the international community to provide aid for the development of Mali's economy.

SALVADORAN GUERRILLAS' ARMED STRUGGLE VIEWED

OW230830 Beijing XINHUA in English 0804 GMT 23 Dec 82

["Roundup: Salvadoran Guerrillas Persist in Armed Struggle -- by Chen Jinjun" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, December 22 (XINHUA) -- Salvadoran guerrillas are continuing their armed struggle despite repeated mopping-up operations against them by government troops since the March elections.

According to reports from San Salvador, the guerrilla Radio Venceremos (we shall overcome) said Sunday that the guerrillas had killed and wounded over 1,100 government troops in the 70 days since they started their October offensive called "National Military Campaign for the Heroes and Martyrs of 1979-80." During the period, they also captured 278 government soldiers and large quantities of arms and ammunition.

After fierce fightings with government troops, the guerrillas have established a 1,300-square-kilometer "arc of liberty" in the northeastern part of the country.

The government has been trying hard to stamp out guerrilla activites. Backed by artillery and air cover, some 2,000 government troops started a new anti-guerrilla drive last week on the northeast slopes of Guazapa Volcano, some 20 miles north of San Salvador. The volcano has long been a guerrilla stronghold, from which they have mounted frequent attacks on surrounding towns. Like the operations in the past, the latest government drive yielded little results.

On December 18, the guerrillas raided two army posts in the province of San Vicente, 65 kilometers east of the capital. They took control of a six-kilometer-long section of the Pan-American Highway for three hours and killed one government soldier and wounded several others in the fighting.

In addition, guerrilla ambushes against government patrols, raids on government troop strongholds and their activities to disrupt power supplies were frequently reported in the past few months.

All this has given the lie to government claims that the guerrillas were nothing but a spent force. Observers generally believe that the 25,000-strong Salvadoran army can by no means wipe out the guerrillas, now estimated at more than 5,000.

Meanwhile, the guerrillas have continued to push ahead their political struggle. When U.S. President Ronald Reagan flew to Central America early this month, Salvadoran guerrillas again urged the government to begin direct talks to seek an immediate cease-fire.

"Until we start dialogue, we are going to continue this war," said guerrilla commander Jorge Melendes over Radio Venceremos early this month.

This is the second peace initiative from the guerrillas in two months. On October 26, the Salvadoran Democratic Revolutionary Front (FDR) and the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front (FMLN), two of the guerrillas' political organizations, called in a detailed proposal, for direct dialogues between FDR and FMLN on one side and the government, the Constituent Assembly and the military on the other to "find ways that would establish peace and social justice in El Salvador and contribute to detente in the region."

But Roberto D'Abuisson, president of the Constituent Assembly and a known rightist, flatly rejected the proposal. In his response on October 29, President Alvaro Magana ruled out negotiations as long as the guerrillas carry arms.

The guerrillas' offer was also turned down by Defense Minister Jose Guillermo Garcia, but his view may not be shared by the ranks and lower officers, many of whom have become tired of the war. On November 7, a group of middle-ranking army officers reportedly broke with the armed forces high command and the rightists and called for face-to-face talks with the guerrillas.

The Christian Democratic Party, which holds 24 of the 60 seats in the Constituent Assembly, backs the efforts for negotiations with the guerrillas. The church and the Salvadoran Human Rights Committee are also supporters for talks.

But the United States, a long-time and strong supporter of the Salvadoran Government, is stubbornly opposed to peace talks.

During his visit to Central America, U.S. President Ronald Reagan stated he would ask Congress to continue military aid to El Salvador for its campaign against guerrillas. Washington is now training Salvadoran soldiers and providing that country with fighters, bombers, helicopters and other weapons.

Since the civil war started in the country in 1979, about 38,000 people have reportedly been killed, most of them being victims of rightist death squads.

Last May, the rightist-dominated assembly curtailed the land redistribution program and in October, eight opposition leaders and union officials were kidnapped by the security and put into jail.

Despite these facts, Reagan still declared that El Salvador is making "great progress against great odds" in promoting reforms and curbing human rights abuses.

However, some U.S. newspapers doubted that U.S. military support to El Salvador can clamp down on the uprising there, because the root cause of the turbulence is poverty, social inequality and suppression.

NIE RONGZHEN DISCUSSES ROLE OF INTELLECTUALS

HK210837 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 19 Dec 82 pp 1, 3

[Article by Nie Rongzhen [5119 2837 5271], with HONGQI editor's note: "Strive To Create a New Situation in China's Science and Technology Work" -- reprinted from HONGQI No 24]

[Text] HONGQI editor's note: On 25 November, Comrade Nie Rongzhen gave an interview to Comrade Xiong Fu, chief editor of this journal. He made an important statement on the issue of striving to create a new situation in our country's science and technology work. In his talk, Comrade Nie Rongzhen mentioned the major experiences that he gained during the period when he was in charge of science and technology work, particularly stressing the party's historical experience on the intellectual problem and the problems we should pay attention to at present in implementing our intellectual policies. He points out that we should teach our broad ranks of cadres and masses to understand the position and role of the intellectuals in socialist modernization, develop a new custom of the whole society respecting knowledge, science and intellectuals and strive to form a friendly alliance of workers, peasants and intellectuals. His talk is of great significance in helping all our party members to heighten their awareness and unify their understanding on the problem related to the conscientious implementation of the party's policy on science and technology work and on intellectuals. Here are his remarks. [End of editor's note]

Ever since the 12th party congress, the initiative of our country's scientists and broad ranks of cadres on the scientific and technical front has been very high. They all hope that our country's science and technology work develops quickly. I can understand this mood. It has been a long time since I left my post of responsibility for science and technology work, but I am still concerned with and will support this work with all my strength. People are all very anxious and so am I.

In my opinion, the present situation is characterized by the fact that in order to fulfill the plan for the development of the coming 20 years, people throughout the country wish the science and technology work to develop more quickly. Recently, in one of his talks, Comrade Deng Xiaoping put forward the problem of organizing science and technology ranks to tackle major technical problems hurdles, regarding it as a matter of first priority in carrying out the 20 year development plan. It is very clear that developing the four modernizations, making our economy prosper, building up the two civilizations and achieving the magnificent goal of quadrupling all depends on progress in developing science and technology. At present, the key to our modernization lies in satisfactorily developing our science and technology work and giving full play to the role of intellectuals in this field.

Take agriculture for example. We are faced with quite a large number of agricultural scientific and technical problems. How can we modernize the whole country, if we cannot solve the problems related to agriculture? The modernization of agriculture can never be divorced from science and technology. The first character of the "eight-character constitution" for agriculture is soil. Soil constitutes the foundation of agricultural production. China is so vast that the soil in its territory differs widely in its composition, physical, chemical and ecological nature and fertility. In order to develop diversified undertakings that are suited to the local conditions, we must do a large amount of work of investigate the soil conditions in a widespread manner. It will take an even longer period of time to improve our soil. In this respect, we need the joint efforts of the specialists of various fields. In the past, excessive lumbering, the creation of "Dazhai land" and the practice of reclaiming land from lake areas gave rise to serious soil erosion and undermined the ecological equilibrium of nature. We should put to an end forever to these foolish practices that go against the objective law. The second feature is water. The establishment of irrigation systems needs the joint efforts of the specialists in water conservation, geology and other fields. In this respect, there is also the problem of taking the local conditions into account. In the north where there is little rainfall, we should not blindly develop irrigated land. Excessive use of underground water in the suburban areas will bring about serious results and may even cause the land to subside. There are also the problems related to pesticide and fertilizers. Some kinds of pesticide seriously pollute the environment and are no longer used abroad, but we continue to use them. We should pay greater attention to using biological methods to overcome pests. The excessive use of fertilizer may destroy the organic composition of the soil. All these problems cannot be solved without science and technology and must be solved through the research of our specialists. The third feature is seeds. Having fine species of seeds is an important means of increasing agricultural production. The popularization of the hybrid rice of high-land type and the No 1 Lu strain of cotton alone has already created more than 1 billion yuan of wealth. There are also the problems related to thick planting and deep plowing. The American Han Ding opposes deep plowing. These problems also should be solved by specialists through research. In short, the solution to all of these problems lies with science and technology or with the efforts of specialists in soil science, water conservation, botany, genetics, entomology and other fields. Now our party's policies are right and since the establishment of the agricultural production responsibility system, the peasants' initiative has been greatly heightened and agriculture has developed relatively quickly. However, there is a limit to giving play to the initiative of the peasants and a state of "saturation" will be reached some day.

However, the potential for increasing production that science and technology can bring to agriculture is infinite. Our peasants understand this idea and have already tasted the benefits of scientific farming, so they are eager to use science. Now agricultural technicians have already become "gods of wealth" in our rural areas. Our peasants are vying with one another in seeking the advice of these technicians. This is a very heartening phenomenon. This is also true for our industry that also has to rely on the strength of science and technology. For example, cadres in such medium-sized cities as Xiangfan, Changzhou, and Siping understood this idea earlier. As a result, the industrial development in these cities has been quicker and some of the products there has already surpassed Shanghai in their quality. We must realize this trend of development and welcome the arrival of a scientific and technical upsurge in our country.

Now the problem for which the broad ranks of cadres on the scientific and technical front show the greatest concern is now we are to create a new situation in our science and technology work. Let me mention a personal experience. In 1956, I began to replace Comrade Chen Yi as the responsible person for science and technology work. When I was in charge of this work, Premier Zhou and Comrade Chen Yi were leading the formulation of the 12-year national development plan of science and technology. Generally speaking, at that time, the number of our technical and scientific workers was small, their level was low and their working and research conditions were poor. However, because the party Central Committee paid great attention to this work and many major issues were directly handled by Chairman Mao and Premier Zhou, we made great progress in a very short period of time. In 1964, we succeeded in exploding an atomic bomb and 2 years and 8 months later, we again succeeded in exploding an H-bomb. Many new industrial departments have been developed to fill the gaps of our country's scientific and technical field.

I think that in order to do our science and technology work well, we should do the following:

1. We should be self-reliant. Chairman Mao said that our country is first of all poor and second of all unmarked, but that the largest number of the best pictures could be drawn on a piece of blank paper. We are not afraid of having nothing on the paper. Since there is nothing on the paper, we can draw pictures as we please. In order to satisfactorily build up our country and draw the best and most beautiful pictures, we cannot rely on anybody else. We must rely on ourselves, on our workers, peasants and intellectuals. Our principle of self-reliance can be said to be the consequence of outward force. Khrushchev one-sidedly broke all the agreements and withdrew all his experts without leaving anything, even the blueprints, for us. Since he would not give these things to us, we had to rely on ourselves. This resulted in our success in making the atom bomb and H-bomb and the development of all sectors. It was a very fortunate that we were forced to rely on ourselves. When we succeeded in exploding our first atomic bomb, Chairman Mao humorously said that we had to grant Khrushchev a great medal weighing 1 ton as a token of our "gratitude." Of course, our self-reliance by no means signifies a closed-door policy. We should conscientiously introduce new technology and equipment and purchase patents from abroad. We should learn and take over all those that are useful to us and make them serve our modernizations. We must understand, however, that we cannot buy modernization from abroad with money. The new technology and equipment we have bought should be assimilated through study and then be transformed and developed in the light of the actual conditions in our country. On the problem of introducing things from abroad, we must always be sober minded. We wish to introduce advanced technology and equipment from some capitalist countries but these countries have publicly declared that they will only sell the second most advanced things and will not sell the most advanced ones. Some people find that it is too slow to develop by ourselves. I say that it is slow in some respects, but it is more reliable. Moreover, to take a long-term view, it is much quicker than the speed we can achieve if we completely rely on imports. Did we not quickly take the fortification of the sofisticated technology of the atom and H-bombs by relying on our own strength under very difficult conditions in the past? Now that we have such favorable conditions, it is out of the question that we can succeed by relying on ourselves. That is why I always advocate self-reliance, consider things from the viewpoint of basing things on development of our national industry, and scientific and technical undertakings and stress raising the scientific and cultural level of the whole nation. In the final analysis, we have to rely on our own strength. Therefore, self-reliance is our starting point. At the same time, we should pay attention to introducing advanced technology from abroad. We have done this work for decades and have already laid a certain foundation. I agree with Comrade Zhao Ziyang's view on technical transformation and on science and technology work serving economic construction expressed in his report to the recent NPC session. In my opinion, by relying on technical transformation, conservation of energy and the research into, exploitation and development of new technology, we will be able to increase production and promote the development of science. It will not do, if we import everything from abroad, rely on imports for everything or worship and have blind faith in things foreign.

2. We should formulate appropriate plans for the development of our science and technology. Having formulated a plan, we have a destination for our march and a goal to achieve through our striving. In 1956, we concentrated a few hundred scientists and technical workers to spend nearly 10 months in drawing up a 12-year science and technology development plan. Thus we clarified the key projects and persisted in developing scientific research first. This plan took into account the requirement for scientific and technical development of all sectors as well as stressing the 57 key projects. Later, because Khrushchev tore up the agreements, we shifted to stressing, regarding as key projects and organizing all the trades and professions to tackle jet propulsion technology, atomic technology and electronics. Our practice has proved that this kind of science and technology plan that gives priority to scientific research and combines key projects with common projects can play a satisfactory role in organizing and promoting the development of our country's science and technology.

3. We should organize our ranks well. After we have formulated a plan, we should organize our scientific and technical personnel to realize this plan. At that time, the numbers of our scientific and technical personnel were small, their foundations were weak, their tasks were heavy and the difficulties facing them were very great. For example, we did not know much about jet propulsion technology and atomic energy and we could only buy some materials from abroad to read. However, we could only get a rough idea from these materials because the detailed technical materials were confidential and could not be bought anywhere. What were we to do? According to the unified national plan, we organized five contingents, namely, the research institutions, the higher education institutions, the industrial departments, the national defense science committee and the local scientific research force, and assigned to these contingents clearly defined tasks according to their strong points. Since we had a unified plan, no one could carry out his work at his will without taking into account of the work of other people and all people closely coordinated and cooperated by means of division of labor and jointly tackle the major technical problem hurdles. This was a nationwide cooperation and coordination of all the activities of the nation like pieces in a chess game. At that time, all the units were willing to accept whatever tasks were assigned and felt glory in doing them because these tasks were assigned and felt glory in doing them because these tasks were what all our party members, all our army and the people throughout our country wished and trusted them to fulfill. After these five contingents were mobilized, people supported one another. If only the fraternal units have the need, the coordinating units will give all-out support and facilitate things, either in technical knowhow or in material supplies. There were no malpractices of shifting responsibility or mutual blockade, therefore the work efficiency was very high.

At that time, our ranks of scientific and technical personnel were small and were to be expanded through continuously recruiting new workers. We paid great attention to the problem of distributing jobs to college graduates and returned students from abroad. If any of them was not assigned a job related to what he had studied, was not assigned a job related to what he had studied, was not properly assigned or had nothing to do through being assigned a job, we had the power to make adjustments and assign him to a new job. As we were in charge of the tackling of the major problem hurdles, we knew what kind of people were needed by which department and how to assign jobs properly. This was done in the manner of a commander in chief directing a battle. He had to know the kind of troops that were needed on which front and how many troops were needed. Having taken the personnel power in our hands, we combined the management of the tasks with that of personnel. As a result, we enabled these young intellectuals to utilize their strong points and get appropriate jobs, thus, they vigorously struggled in the van under the guidance and command of old specialists and played a material role in tackling the major technical problems hurdles. Now they have already become the backbone force on various fronts.

4. We should strengthen the centralized unified leadership. Modern science and technology differs widely from that in the 18th and 19th centuries. At that time, scientific research was often the result of the independent efforts of individuals and an individual was able to achieve many inventions and discoveries in his life. Things are vastly different now. True, some research of basic theory and technology, such as research in certain mathematical theories, can be done by adopting old methods, but the research of major basic theories and the research and manufacture of major projects and equipment must be done by means of modern experimentation. Therefore, an individual, unit or even a whole trade or local area does not have sufficient resources to carry this out and we have to concentrate the strength of the whole nation in doing it. In manufacturing guided missiles, atom bombs, airplanes, warships and computers, we needed many new-type materials and sophisticated apparatuses and precision instruments. At that time, these things were not available either at home or abroad. We organized our own force to produce them by division of labor and cooperation and fixed a deadline for the fulfillment of the tasks. At that time, we needed more than 13,000 kinds of new materials and none of these materials had ever been produced at home. Because of the centralized and unified leadership and the vigorous coordination and cooperation, however, we succeeded in testing all these materials in a short time which all satisfied the prescribed state quality standards. To satisfy the need of the development of science and technology work, we organized the force of the whole nation to test produce the "nine major equipments" for making the special types of materials that were of particularly great thickness, thinness, breadth and legnth. It was a pity that the "Great Cultural Revolution" put an end to all these efforts; otherwise, the technical level of our country's industry would have reached a higher plane. This was an obvious example of science and technology promoting industrial development. If we had not concentrated our science and technical force and did not have the centralized command of our scientific and technical personnel, we would not have fulfilled such magnificent tasks even if we had wished to. These centralized efforts resulted in successes in making products of highly sophisticated technology, the corresponding development of many new industrial sectors and the corresponding establishment of many new branches of learning. People call this period the "golden age" of our country's scientific and technical work. This tells us a truth that in doing all our work we have to proceed from the needs of the state and that this is the starting point for us in considering and handling problems. As long as the state has the need, we should take up the management. We should not be apprehensive of managing too many things. We should manage the personnel, finance and materials because the state needs us to take them up in our management. It is also because of the state's needs that we demand centralized and unified planning, the mobilization of the five contingents and their coordination in solving the contradictions that have emerged. Thus we will be able to bring about the greatest return for our limited resources of labor, materials and funds and avoid the dispersion of the work force and duplication of scientific research projects.

At that time, we called this method of tackling major technical problems hurdles under centralized and unified leadership "developing branches of learning through the processes of fulfilling tasks." This is a good method of developing science and technology. Of course, this is not the only method. Modern science and technology is very complicated, so we should adopt many ways of developing it and should not seek a "uniform" method. We must not discriminate against the research of basic science. Basic science and applied science supplement one another. We should be more far-sighted and should not look down upon basic scientific research because it does not bring along any tangible economic results in a short time. Basic scientific research is the foundation of applied scientific research. Therefore, it is impossible to carry out applied scientific research without a certain amount of basic scientific research. Our principle must be "strengthening applied scientific research while paying attention to basic scientific research" as was pointed out in Comrade Hu Yaobang's report to the 12th party congress. Premier Zhou expounded on this problem in the past and recently so has Comrade Zhao Ziyang, time and again.

The 12th party congress has already formulated a magnificent plan for socialist modernization and the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC will soon examine, discuss and approve the Sixth 5-Year Plan. The prospects of socialism are as beautiful as a silk embroidery. Now the problem is the earnest implementation of the policies related to our intellectuals. Recently, Comrade Deng Xiaoping said that in order to actually achieve the 20-year development plan, in order to complete the construction of a large number of major key projects and in order to tackle major scientific and technical problems hurdles, "the first thing we should do is soundly solve the problem related to the management and employment of our scientific and technical labor force." He said that "in order to break the boundaries of departments and localities, and rationally employ this force, we must unify its management. This will be impossible, if we do not have a strong authoritative organ." I fully agree with this opinion. Now, we have a scientific and technical labor force of more than 5.7 million people. This is not a small technical force. We have some fundamental scientific research equipment and a larger amount of funds. These conditions are much more favorable than those when I was in charge of this work. Now, we are speeding up the development of integrated circuits, especially the development of highly condensed ones with extremely great speed and also the new generation of computers. This is of tremendous significance in promoting the development of science and technology. As long as we overcome decentralism and departmental selfishness and strengthen our centralized and unified leadership, as long as we put an end to the malpractices of shifting responsibility to one another and of mutual blockade, but on the contrary, exercise unified planning, coordinate all the activities of the nation like pieces in a chess game, carry out a rational division of labor, support one another and carry out nationwide cooperation and as long as we give full play to the superiority of the socialist system, we will be able to create a new situation in our country's science and technology work and bring along a new "golden age" in this work.

The key to the four modernizations is the modernization of science and technology. In order to achieve the modernization of science and technology, we should rely on the intellectuals who master modern science and technology. Without intellectuals it will be impossible to achieve either the four modernizations or the magnificent goal of quadrupling. This idea has recently been repeatedly propagated in our press. However, some people are still not convinced, and think that the party has gone too far in implementing its policies related to the intellectuals. This is a very erroneous viewpoint and is very harmful to the socialist cause. We must teach these people to correct their views and to treat this problem with a strategical view. The prejudice of looking down upon knowledge and science and discriminating against intellectuals was originally the reflection of ignorance and backwardness. As a legacy of the old society, it has been of long standing in our society. This prejudice also has its influence in our party. Aggravated by the influence of the "leftist" ideology, various kinds of prejudice of looking down on and discriminating against intellectuals have emerged in the minds of some of our cadres. This also has a very long history. During the period of the Red Army, the medical and telecommunications personnel came from KMT troops. This work could only be done by employing these people because the worker and peasant cadres were not capable of doing it. With the education of the party, these people quickly became our technical cadres and some of them became ministers of our government after the founding of the PRC. They have played a very satisfactory role in our revolution and construction. At that time, they were paid salaries of money, while our commanders in chief and political commissars received their payments in kind instead of money. They led a better life than us. However, some people did not think this was right and complained. During the war of resistance against Japan, we had our base areas, field armies and border area governments and needed to set up hospitals and industrial enterprises and arsenals to make and repair weapons. Moreover, we had to carry out radio telecommunications and establish newspaper offices and broadcast stations. Thus we needed a larger number of intellectuals to join the revolutionary ranks. However, there were obstacles and the intellectuals suffered discrimination. Therefore, in 1939, the party Central Committee issued the "Resolution on Recruiting a Large Number of Intellectuals." Since then, a large number of intellectuals came to the liberated areas.

This problem was not solved after the liberation of the whole country and there have always been conflicts on it. In 1956, the party Central Committee held a national meeting on problems related to the intellectuals, in which Premier Zhou gave the "Report on the Problems Related to Intellectuals." He pointed out that at that time, the main tendency in our party on the problems related to the intellectuals was factionalism, an underestimate of the tremendous progress in politics and in their work of our intellectual circles, an underestimate of the intellectuals' important role in our socialist cause and an ignorance of the fact that the intellectuals were a part of the working class. He emphatically expounded on the position and role of the intellectuals in our socialist construction. He said: In the final analysis, the reason why we should build up a socialist economy is to satisfy, to the greatest possible extent, the constantly increasing material and cultural demands of the whole society. In order to achieve this aim, we must continuously develop a social productive force and raise labor productivity and must constantly increase and improve socialist production on the basis of a highly-developed technology. Therefore, during the period of socialism, we have a demand even more urgent than in any other period for fully raising our technology of production and for fully developing science and utilizing our knowledge of science. Therefore, apart from the necessity of relying on the conscientious labor of the working class and the broad ranks of peasants, it is necessary for us to rely on the conscientious labor of the intellectuals. In other words, we must rely on the close cooperation of manual and mental labor and the fraternal alliance of workers, peasants and intellectuals, thus the problem was initially solved. However, a reverse tendency emerged in 1957 and 1958.

At the national scientific planning conference and the national conference on theatrical creation held in Guangzhou in 1962, many scientists, writers and artists again aired their views on intellectual policies. Consequently, discussions on an intellectual issue were added to the agenda of the Guangzhou conference. Premier Zhou personally attended the conference. Premier Zhou, Comrade Chen Yi and I, as well as Comrade Guo Moruo, discussed this issue on several occasions. We held that intellectuals are not an independent class. They can serve the bourgeoisie and they can also serve the proletariat. We have engaged in socialism for many years and most of the intellectuals have been trained by us since the founding of the PRC. How can we say that they are bourgeois intellectuals? We proposed to "remove the label from the intellectuals and provide them with a halo" by removing the label of bourgeois intellectuals and proclaiming them intellectuals of the working people. Premier Zhou, Comrade Chen Yi and I spoke at the meetings. Premier Zhou delivered the first speech. He expressed his heartfelt pleasure at the growth and development of the ranks of our intellectuals. The generation of old intellectuals had succeeded in training a generation of new intellectuals, both of them forming socialist intellectual circles. They had made tremendous progress after 12 years of transformation and trials. Like the workers and peasants, most intellectuals love the motherland. The premier said, we were greatly moved by your great love for the motherland. This was the pride in our intellectuals!

Before his return to Beijing, Premier Zhou asked Comrade Chen Yi to deliver a speech announcing the removal of the label of bourgeois intellectuals. Comrade Chen Yi first transmitted to the scientists, writers and artists attending the conference Premier Zhou's words that they were the intellectuals of the people, revolutionary intellectuals, and mental laborers who served the proletariat and should be freed of the label of bourgeois intellectuals. "The workers, peasants and intellectuals are the three component parts of the Chinese working people." He emphatically said: "We should no longer put the label of bourgeois intellectuals on all intellectuals after 12 years of transformation and trials." Comrade Chen Yi made it fairly clear by saying, "They are still uncomplaining, are still willing to follow us and still do not lose confidence in the Communist Party after 12 years of transformation and trials. We can at least see a persons' heart. If the Communist Party still fails to test or distinguish a person in 8, 10 or 12 years, the Communist Party does not have foresight!" "Did Marx, Engels, Lenin or Chairman Mao ever say that the Communist Party does not respect knowledge and science? No one has ever made such a remark. Ignorance is a great enemy. Imperialism is an enemy, feudalism is an enemy and ignorance -- with hundreds of millions of people having no knowledge and no scientific knowledge -- is also a great enemy."

After being "freed from the label and provided with a halo," the broad section of our intellectuals felt warm to the bottom of their hearts. Pleased and active, they were quick in attaining many achievements in scientific research. This is the fundamental reason for the emergence of the "golden age" in our scientific and technological work.

If we look through history, we can see that we did the work of "removing the label from the intellectuals and providing them with a halo" as far back as in 1962 during the Guangzhou conference. The conclusion affirming that the intellectuals are socialist laborers and a part of the working class was reached at that time. However, the emergence of the "Cultural Revolution" overthrew all this. Under the sabotage of Lin Biao and the "gang of four," intellectuals were again labeled as "bourgeoisie," "reactionary authorities" and "the stinking ninth category." They were severely hit and humiliated and were unable to stand up. It was necessary for the leading comrades of the party at various levels to actively create good working conditions for the scientific and technical personnel and take good care of them politically and in their livelihood. During the difficult period, in an effort to care for the scientists, I called in the aid of the navy for some fish, in the aid of the Beijing and Guangzhou Military Regions and the Xinjiang Military District for some meat and in the aid of some other localities for some soybeans and edible oil. In the first place, their labor was a very arduous one, and they shouldered a very important task of tackling key problems. The party should take good care of them. However, right and wrong were confounded during the "Cultural Revolution." All this was regarded as the "revisionist line" and was criticized until it was "discredited." They criticized what they called "scientific and technical fish" and "scientific and technical meat." The "leftist" errors developed to a very high degree. This not only subjected the intellectuals to great humiliation but also China's scientific and technological undertakings and even the entire social undertaking to great damage. In the late 1950's, we marched toward the modernization of science and other new branches of learning, with such modernizations as transistors, calculators and lasers. At that time, some Western countries had also just started at the beginning. Twenty years later, the gap between foreign countries and us is greater. This is a fact known to all. Therefore, judging by the history of our party, it has never been able to dispense with intellectuals, either in its revolutionary or construction cause. Whenever we pay attention to intellectuals and adopt a correct policy toward them our cause makes progress and develops. On the other hand, whenever we discriminate against intellectuals and adopt an erroneous policy toward them our cause suffers a setback. This is particularly true in the period of socialist construction.

Since the smashing of the "gang of four," particularly since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the party has, in the course of setting things to rights, reexamined and established the party's policy toward the intellectuals, reaffirming that, by and large, the intellectuals constitute a component part of China's working class. Comrade Deng Xiaoping has delivered many speeches on this issue. Consequently, the intellectuals throughout the country are pleased and have peace of mind for being able to stand up. They have made great contributions by actively working on various fronts. The party has now made clear its policy toward the intellectuals and has issued repeated injunctions on its implementation. The "Revised Draft Constitution of the PRC" submitted to the current NPC for consideration has also made clear in its preamble that in building socialism it is imperative to rely on the workers, peasants and intellectuals. That is to say, the workers, peasants and intellectuals are the three main social forces in our country and form the principal part of our people. It is necessary to tell the broad section of our cadres and masses to fully understand the position and role of the intellectuals in our socialist modernization.

These are some people who say that "our evaluation of intellectuals is exaggerated" and that intellectuals are "cocky once again." These words are groundless. At present, our implementation of the policies related to the intellectuals has just begun and the resistance we are encountering both within and outside our party is not small and can be regarded as being quite stubborn. I had a talk with a GUANGMING RIBAO reporter in August of this year. Most people approved of this talk when it was published in the newspaper. There were also people who opposed this talk, criticizing the comrades in the GUANGMING RIBAO office for speaking on a bourgeois stand. I have indeed offended some people on this issue. However, what is to be done? We must continue to fight for the interests of the party and state, for the four modernizations and for the overall implementation of our intellectual policies.

On the question of implementing the policy toward the intellectuals, it is still necessary for our press and press institutions to make a loud appeal to the public. It is no good to talk about it in general terms; it is necessary to make a public criticism. It is also no good to make a mild criticism; it is necessary to make a sharp criticism. Sometimes it is even necessary to conduct some struggles. Neither Marx nor Engels said that all intellectuals are reactionary. They always made a concrete analysis of intellectuals and gave different evaluations to different intellectuals. Both Marx and Engels fully affirmed and highly evaluated the contributions to human progress made by such great scientists as Newton, Galilei and Darwin. Engels also specifically said that even under the capitalist system, it is also possible to turn out from among the university students "a kind of proletariat who engages in mental labor" and who fights shoulder to shoulder with the fraternal workers engaging in manual labor. For this reason, it is necessary for us to conduct ideological education through various means to enable the broad section of cadres and masses to understand the idea that in developing modernization, making our economy prosper, carrying out the construction of the two civilizations and achieving the goal of quadrupling by the end of this century, we cannot dispense with scientific and technical progress and we cannot dispense with intellectuals.

At present, we have to pay particular attention to giving play to the role of middle-aged intellectuals. The middle-aged intellectuals ranging from 40 to 50 years old are a generation of new intellectuals who grew up under the direct cultivation of the party. They are a generation serving as a link between the past and future, carrying forward the revolutionary cause and forging ahead into the future. They love the motherland, socialism and the party and they never change their original intention, even under adverse circumstances. Having laid a relatively solid foundation in professional knowledge, they have made great contributions in the field of science and technology to the cause of China's modernization program. These middle-aged intellectuals are the backbone on all the fronts. The heavy task of developing modern science and technology, building both material and spiritual civilization and raising the scientific and cultural level of the whole nation rests on their shoulders. This is a glorious mission entrusted to them by history. They have a heavy work load and have made great contributions. However, their salaries are low and they have a lot of difficulties in their livelihood. The party's policy toward the intellectuals has not been completely implemented among them. In many departments and localities, they have not received their due respect and good care. The problems related to their working and living conditions have not been solved in a satisfactory manner. This merits the attention of our leading comrades at various levels, particularly the leading comrades in factories and institutions. The academic ranks and titles of intellectuals should be solved in a satisfactory manner. However, there is also the problem of pay and conditions that should be gradually solved by adopting various specific measures. In short, improving the working and living conditions of middle-aged intellectuals has become a very urgent issue. Marx said long ago that mental labor is a complicated one that should receive relatively better remunerations. We should considerably increase their salaries. We should practically solve this problem by overcoming the egalitarian mentality in our ranks. It is necessary to free the intellectuals of their trouble at home so that they can wholeheartedly engage in the four modernizations.

The advanced deeds of Comrades Jiang Zhuying and Luo Jianfu publicized in succession recently by GUANGMING RIBAO and GONGREN RIBAO are very touching. The communist spirit of these two Communist Party members is worth our learning. They had bright prospects in the first place because they had high consciousness and made great contributions to the state. Comrade Wang Daheng, director of the Changcun optical machinery research institute where Comrade Jiang Zhuying worked before his death, is a noted Chinese opticist. He had made a great contribution to the optical cause of our country. Comrade Jiang Zhuying was precisely a student of his pride, to whom he was going to hand over the future task. It was a pity, however, that Comrade Jiang Zhuying died while he was "tackling key problems." This constituted a loss for the state. Such intellectuals as Jiang Zhuying and Luo Jianfu are excellent representatives of the contemporary Chinese intellectuals and are a valuable treasure of the party and state. We all deeply regretted their unfortunate early deaths. What is more important, however, is that the leading party and government cadres at various levels should take good care of and show great concern for thousands upon thousands of living Jiang Zhuyings and Luo Jianfus. We should draw lessons from the early death of these middle-aged intellectuals. Have the leading comrades of our party and government organizations at various levels failed to do what they ought to have done and take better care of them? It should be noted that, as far as our country is concerned, our scientific and technological personnel are not many but are few. Those scientists and technical experts who love the motherland, work diligently and conscientiously and have real ability and training are our national treasure. Naturally, the intellectuals also have their shortcomings and not all intellectuals are competent persons. I hope all intellectuals will study hard, strive to make progress, overcome their shortcomings, raise their professional standards and strive to become both red and expert and make more contributions to the motherland.

On the question of intellectuals, the "gang of four" went to extremes in their contempt for and discrimination against intellectuals. It is absolutely necessary for us to eliminate the series of "leftist" things of the "gang of four" and establish throughout our society a new morality and general mood of respecting knowledge, science and intellectuals. We should have full confidence in and take loving care of the intellectuals and give full play to their wisdom and talents. Thus they will be able to make efforts to realize their lofty ambitions. Moreover, we should strive to establish a relationship of having confidence in one another, respecting, supporting and learning from one another and of unity and friendship between workers, peasants and intellectuals in order to actually realize Premier Zhou's last wish of forming a friendly alliance of workers, peasants and intellectuals. This should be made an important part of building socialist spiritual civilization. This is where the fundamental interests of the people and the prospects of our country lie and this is also where the key to creating a new situation in socialist modernization lies.

ESSENTIAL POINTS OF 1983 ECONOMIC PLAN

HK221426 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 20 Dec 82 pp 2, 4

["Essential Points" of the PRC 1983 plan for national economic and social development, approved on 10 December 1982 at the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC]

[Text] In accordance with the guidelines of the 12th CPC National Congress, the demands of the Sixth 5-Year Plan and the economic situation at present, the State Council has formulated the 1983 plan for national economic and social development.

I. Estimation on the Implementation of the 1982 Plan

In May 1982, the 1982 plan for national economic and social development was examined and approved by the Fifth NPC Standing Committee at its 23d session. With the common efforts of the people of all nationalities throughout the country, it is estimated that the 1982 plan will be fulfilled or overfulfilled. Agriculture and light industry have continuously developed. Heavy industry has begun to grow again. Financial revenue and expenditure remains basically balanced. There are relatively amply supplies of commodities in the market and prices are basically stable. The overall economic situation is quite good.

1. Agriculture: Despite relatively serious natural disasters which occurred in some localities this year, relatively good harvests have been reaped. It is estimated that total grain output will reach over 335 million tons, an increase of 10 million tons over last year. This will be the highest record in history, exceeding the output in 1979 when big bumper harvests were reaped. It is estimated that on the basis of big increases for 2 years running, the total output of cotton will reach 3.3 million tons, an increase of 332,000 tons over last year. The estimated total output of oil will reach 11 million tons, an increase of 800,000 tons over last year. The output of sugar crops, mulberry silk, tea, pork, beef and mutton will also be more than last year. Rural diversified economy and commune members' sideline production have also developed considerably. The estimated total agricultural output is 5 percent over last year.

2. Industry: On the basis of increases by a big margin for 3 years running, light industrial production continues to increase this year. The output of some durable consumers goods continues to rise by a big margin. The estimated output of bicycles is 32 percent more than last year; sewing machines 19.5 percent; and washing machines over 100 percent. It is estimated that sugar, beer, synthetic detergents and plastic products will also increase by a relatively big margin. Under controlled production, as planned, the output of synthetic fibers and fabrics, salt, ceramics for daily use and radios will be less than last year. The estimated total output value of light industry is 5.1 percent over last year.

After readjustment carried out in the past 2 years, heavy industry again grows rapidly. The estimated output of coal is 650 million tons, an increase of 28 million tons, or 4.6 percent. Over last year, the estimated output of oil is 101.7 million tons, basically maintaining last year's level. The estimated amount of electricity generated is 325 billion kWh, an increase of 15.7 billion kWh, or 5.1 percent, over last year. It is estimated that the output of steel products, timber, cement, glass, acides, alkaline, chemical fertilizers, plastics, walking tractors, generators, automobiles, locomotives, trucks, ships and medical equipment will also be more than last year. The estimated total output value of heavy industry is 9 percent over last year.

The estimated total industrial output value, including that of light industry and heavy industry, is about 7 percent over last year.

The quality of most products remains stable or has improved, and consumption in production has dropped. According to statistics of 75 quality indexes made by 12 industrial and communications departments from January to September, as compared with those of the same period last year, 25 of them improved, 32 remained at the same level and 18 dropped. Of the 105 consumption indexes, 46 fell lower than the same period last year, 27 remained the same and 32 increased.

Communications, transportation, post and telecommunications departments will overfulfill their plans and have basically ensured the transportation of important goods and passengers.

3. State revenue and expenditure: State revenue is estimated to be 110.7 billion yuan by the end of this year, 1.7 billion yuan more than last year. State expenditure will reach 113.7 billion yuan, 2.2 billion yuan more than last year, showing a deficit of 3 billion yuan.

4. Investment in capital construction: Investment in capital construction throughout the country is expected to reach 52.5 billion yuan, 8.2 billion yuan more than last year. Of this amount, investment from the state budget is estimated to be 19.6 billion yuan, 1.6 billion yuan more than last year. Investment with the funds of localities, departments and enterprises is estimated to be 17.8 billion yuan, 3.7 billion yuan more than last year. The pace of construction of key projects has been quickened and investment returns of some projects improved. Investment for replacement and technical transformation projects throughout the country will reach 26.5 billion yuan, 4 billion yuan more than last year. The total investment for fixed assets, including investment in capital construction and replacement and technical transformation projects, will reach 79 billion yuan.

5. Market supplies: The total retail sales volume of social commodites is expected to reach 256 billion yuan, 21 billion yuan, or 8.9 percent, more than last year. At present, market supplies of agricultural and sideline products are relatively abundant and supplies of consumer goods for daily use have also greatly improved. The favorable situation of market supplies is unprecedented for the past 20 years or more. Retail sale prices throughout the country have, on the whole, remained at the same level as at the end of last year but are slightly higher than last year's average. There are no big changes in official market prices. Prices in rural markets rose slightly.

6. Foreign trade: Total volume of import and export is expected to reach 59.8 billion yuan, 92.6 percent of the planned figure and 0.6 percent less than last year. The export quota is expected to be fulfilled and show a 0.5 percent increase over last year. Owing to changes in the import product mix and price drops in the international market, the import than is estimated to be fulfilled by 85.7 percent and will be 1.9 percent less than last year.

7. Science, education, culture and health works: Plans for scientific research and for developing new products have been fulfilled well, with more scientific and technological research results and better application of them than before. Multiple scientific and technological advisory activities to serve production and construction continue to develop. The successful launching of a carrier rocket by submarines marked new progress in science and technology.

Universities and colleges reported a total enrollment of 314,000, which is 35,000 more than last year. Enrollment in vocational and agricultural middle schools is expected to reach 490,000, which is 220,000 more than last year. The number of hospital beds is expected to be 43,000 more than last year. Medical and health work conditions have improved somewhat. Cultural undertakings such as films, television, radio broadcasting, news, publications and so on, continue to develop. New achievements have been scored in physical culture. Women volleyball players and gymnasts have again won glory for the motherland in world competitions.

8. People's income in cities and rural areas continues to rise somewhat. The total value of agricultural and sideline produce sold to state-run commerce and industrial enterprises by the peasants is estimated to be 10 billion yuan more than last year. The total payroll of workers and staff will reach 88 billion yuan, 6 billion yuan more than last year. The bank savings of rural and urban residents at the end of October were 11.7 billion yuan more than at the beginning of this year, with the total being 64.1 billion yuan.

It can be seen from the above-mentioned situation in fulfilling the state plan that as a result of further implementing the policy of readjustment, restructuring, reorganization and upgrading, more positive results have been obtained. However, in the course of the development of the national economy, irrational line-ups of enterprises and malpractice and weak points in management and operation have been more and more distinctly exposed. New problems have emerged in production, construction and circulation and they need urgent solutions. At present, problems that emerged in the economic field which are worthy of attention are mainly as follows:

First, investment in fixed assets has increased too quickly. The total amount of investment in capital construction this year is projected to be 38 billion yuan in the course of fulfilling the plan. It is estimated that the adjusted plan will be exceeded by 8 billion yuan. This is largely because investment with self-raised funds has exceeded 6 billion yuan and investment with various kinds of loans has exceeded 1.9 billion yuan. At present, it has been decided that a portion of the funds will be concentrated on key projects for developing energy sources and communications. If investment in other fields, investment with self-raised funds in particular, is not reduced, the scale of capital construction will then be further expanded, a shortage of "three kinds of materials" will become more serious and the situation of ordinary projects squeezing out key projects and projects not formerly planned squeezing out planned projects will become even worse. If this does happen, the battle line of capital construction will again be overextended and achievements made in readjusting capital construction with great efforts in the past few years will be nullified.

Investment for replacement and technical transformation projects has exceeded the plan by 1.5 billion yuan. However, much of this investment has not actually been used for replacing equipment and technical transformation projects but for extending projects or building new projects, many of which are unnecessary and redundant.

Second, some products of light and textile industries are stockpiled. This shows that the production of some consumer goods does not meet the actual needs of society and is not in keeping with changes in the inhabitants' consumption. It shows that circulation channels are too narrow and that links in circulation are too numerous. It also shows that the prices of some consumer goods are irrational. If these problems are not properly solved, the products will find no good sales, the development of agricultural and light industrial production will be hampered and financial revenue will also be greatly affected.

Third, economic results are still very poor in production, construction or circulation. It is estimated, for example, that the profit and tax rates of funds of industrial enterprises owned by all the people will drop from last year's 25.1 percent to 24.1 percent. The rate of acceptance and utilization of fixed assets will drop from last year's 86.7 percent to 80 percent. The utilization rate of circulation funds by commercial enterprises will rise from last year's 47.3 percent to 48.8 percent. Owing to poor economic results, although production has increased, financial revenue has not increased synchronously. If income from treasury bonds are not counted, this year's financial revenue will only even that of last year. It will be impossible to effect a fundamental turn for the better in the financial and economic situation if we do not obtain concrete results in properly managing and using investment for fixed assets, reorganizing in an overall manner and further readjusting enterprises, enhancing technical progress in enterprises with great efforts and further restructuring the economic system so that economic results will increase markedly.

What is mentioned above shows that much arduous and meticulous work is still needed before we can ensure steady progress of the national economy and strive for effecting a fundamental turn for the better in our country's financial and economic situation.

II. The Tasks and Major Indices for the 1983 Plan

The main task for the national economy and social development in 1983 is to unswervingly carry on the implementation of the principle of readjustment, restructuring, reorganization and upgrading, virtually place improving economic results above all and further consolidate and develop achievements of a stable economy so that all economic and social undertakings will progress continously and steadily. Specific tasks and major indices are as follows:

1. Ensure a steady increase in grain production while boosting a diversified economy and bringing about an all-round development of agriculture, forestry, animal husbandry, sideline occupations and fishery.

The total agricultural output value in 1983 is planned to rise 4 percent over the estimated figure of 1982. Grain output will be 342.5 million tons, 7.5 million tons more than the expected 1982 output, and cotton 3.37 million tons, an increase of 70,000 tons over this year's estimated figure. Cotton cropping area will be reduced in 1983, but efforts will be made to raise the per unit area yield. The acreage sown to rapeseed and tobacco will be under control. Tobacco output is planned to be 1.2 million tons, 735,000 tons less than the estimated figure of 1982, but the quality of cured tobacco must be improved. A new development will also be made for other industrial crops and the undertakings of forestry, animal husbandry, sideline production and fishery.

To attain the above, it is imperative to continue implementing various rural economic policies formulated by the CPC Central Committee, consolidate and perfect all forms of the responbility system in agricultural production and further enhance peasants' enthusiasm for action. The area sown to grain throughout the country must be kept to 1.7 billion mu. Based on the actual situation, provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions may make proper adjustments among themselves. It is necessary to increase the supply of the means of agricultural production (including medium-sized and small farm tools). The newly increased output of chemical fertilizer and diesel fuel must be used first in developing commodity grain bases. Efforts must be exerted to increase labor accumulation, to intensify capital construction on farms and to improve agricultural production conditions. It is necessary to energetically popularize practical agro-science and technology and advanced experiences for increasing production so as to raise labor productivity in agriculture. In order to protect and cultivate forest resources, the destructive felling of trees must be resolutely stopped.

2. Further readjust the product mix and strive for the improvement of economic results and a sustained, steady increase in industrial production.

By taking into consideration the energy supply and markets of consumer goods, the 1983 total industrial output value is planned to grow by 4 percent over the estimated figure of 1982, and a 5 percent increase is the goal in implementing the plan. The output of yarn will be 3.32 million tons, 0.3 percent more than 1982's expected output; sugar, 3.7 million tons, an increase of 8.2 percent; and there are to be fairly big increases in the output of bicycles, wristwatches, washing machines, cameras and other durable consumer goods. Coal output will be 670 million tons, up 3.1 percent compared with this year's estimated output, of which the coal output for unified distribution will account for 346-362 million tons, an increase of 1.7-2.8 percent. The output of crude oil will be 100 million tons, maintaining the same production level in each of the past 2 years. Electricity output will be 338 billion kWh, a 4 percent increase. Because of an energy shortage, steel output is targeted at 35.5 million tons, 1 million tons less than this year's expected figure. The output of chemical fertilizer will be 12.55 million tons, roughly the estimated figure for 1982. Cement output will be 92 million tons, up 2.2 percent; and timber output, 50.85 million cubic meters, an increase of 1.7 percent.

In light industry, arrangements must be appropriately made for production of various products according to market demand and different situations. While guaranteeing quality and varieties, great efforts must be made to increase production of hot items, such as salable and famous brand consumer durables, children's goods and daily necessities. Stability must be maintained in the production of the goods for which supply and demand can be coordinated, such as textile fabrics and ordinary daily industrial goods. Production of inorganic materials such as polyester fabrics and salt, must be controlled by plans before a good marketing situation is in sight.

In heavy industry, production must be carried out in a planned way according to the requirements of economic construction and the possible supply of energy and raw materials. In 1983, coal will still be in great demand. In order to meet the requirements of "guaranteeing 4 percent but strive for 5 percent" growth in industrial production, it is imperative that coal output be increased as much as possible, in particular the coal which is distributed according to unified plan. The metallurgical enterprises must make further efforts in energy conservation, readjust the percentage between iron and steel, raise the rate of utilization of products and increase the gypes of steel. Machine-building plants must vigorously promote quality checks in an all-round way, increase new products and eliminate old ones. Production of motorcars, diesel engines, tractors and other oil-consuming machines should be strictly controlled according to plans and quantity of oil supply. Main efforts should be made in upgrading old products. The national defense military industry must give priority to research in new arms and enhance the level of technologies.

In transportation, the 1983 volume of cargo carried via railways is set at 1.12-1.14 billion tons, 20-40 million tons more than the estimated figure of 1982. Coal transport must be solved as a key problem. The volume of coal moved from Shanxi Province is required to increase by 7 million tons over this year's expected figure. The volume of coal moved from Shanhaiguan will increase by 3-4 million tons. The coal supplied to east China will increase by 4-6 million tons. In order to ease the strain on railways, short-distance transportation should be handled through waterways and highways as much as possible. Great efforts must be made to improve the organizational work and management of harbors in loading and unloading and to make full use of the capacity of Bei Cang Harbor and small- and medium-sized harbors so as to ensure transport of imported cargoes. Efforts must be also made to develop posts and telecommunications and civil aviation.

3. Strive to increase revenues and reduce expenditures, and continue to maintain the balance between state revenue and expenditure and between credit receipts and payments.

The state budget for 1983 sets total revenue at 123.2 billion yuan, an increase of 12.5 billion yuan over 1982, of which funds raised for the building of the energy industry and transport account for 6 billion yuan. Total expenditure is set at 126.2 billion yuan, an increase of 12.5 billion yuan. Total expenditures on capital construction will increase by 6.5 billion yuan. The proportions going to education, science, culture and public health will increase by 1.4 billion yuan. Expenditures on new product experiments will rise by 900 million yuan, administrative expenses by 500 million yuan. Reserve funds for central and local authorities will amount to 2 billion yuan. On balance, the deficit will come to 3 billion yuan.

In order to maintain a basic balance between state revenues and expenditures, it is necessary to earnestly implement all the measures stated in the Sixth 5-Year Plan for increasing revenues and reducing expenditures and concentrating funds so as to ensure a steady increase of revenue. Great possibilities for increasing revenue and cutting expenditure remain to be tapped. Especially, if many large-scale enterprises improve their management, increase production and practice economy, they will be able to provide more profits and taxes to the state. While striving for increasing revenues and reducing expenditures, it is necessary to cut down all administrative expenses.

In order to maintain a basic balance between credit receipts and payments, it is necessary to further promote the deposit business in enterprises, institutions, organizations and bodies and develop bank savings among urban and rural people so as to broaden sources of bank credit funds. Strict control must be placed on all kinds of loans, in particular loans for investment of fixed assests. It is necessary to control the total amounts of loans and credit lines. All loan funds must be strictly used in a planned way.

4. Exercise strict control over the volume of total investment in fixed assets, accelerate construction of key energy and transport projects and selectively promote technical transformation of existing enterprises.

The 1983 total investment in fixed assets is set at 74.7 billion yuan, 4.3 billion yuan less than the estimated figure in 1982. Of this, investment in capital construction will amount to 50.7 billion yuan, a decrease of 1.8 billion yuan, and funds for financing equipment replacement and technical transformation of existing enterprises will come to 24 billion yuan, a decrease of 2.5 billion yuan.

Of the total investment in capital construction, investment with funds from the state budget will amount to 26.1 billion yuan, 6.5 billion yuan more than the estimated amount for this year (mainly used for key projects); and investment with self-raised funds will amount to 10.75 billion yuan, a decrease of 7.05 billion yuan. According to this arrangement, there will be a fairly big increase in investment in construction of key products and a fairly big decrease in investment with self-raised funds. This is an important decision of the state. It is imperative to reiterate the State Council's decision that strict control must be exercised over the scale of capital construction. All construction projects must be carried out strictly according to procedures for capital construction. We must seriously check the construction projects. Projects that should continue and that meet the requirements of the fixed scale of construction, fixed total investment, fixed time for completion, fixed turnover of investment and fixed conditions for external cooperation must be given priority so that they can be completed and put into operation as soon as possible. Projects that, after completion, may have difficulties in fuel, power, raw and semi-finished materials or transportation must be resolutely stopped or suspended. We must carefully examine large- and medium-sized projects that have recently been started. If preconstruction preparatory work for these projects has not been properly done or if they do not meet the "five fixed" requirements, they cannot be included in the state plan. When conditions for them are ripe, they will then be examined and approved before they can be included in the state plan. Self-raised funds for investment in capital construction must all be deposited into the construction bank, which will appropriate them for use according to plans approved by the state. In order to ensure an increase in the turnover of investment, some strict measures for examination, verification and supervision will be adopted in 1983 and a strict responsibility system will be established. We must resolutely stop enlarging the scale of construction, increasing the number of projects or increasing the cost of construction.

Of funds for replacing equipment and technical transformation 2.3 billion yuan will be financed by the central authorities, 7.4 billion yuan will be granted by the bank as loans (including 2.8 billion yuan that will be loaned again after receiving payment for loans) and 14.3 billion yuan will come from depreciation funds for enterprises and self-raised funds. Funds for replacing equipment and technical transformation will be used mainly to save consumption of energy resources and raw materials, reduce costs, restructure the product mix, upgrade the product property and quality, raise the multipurpose utilization rate of resources and improve the environment so as to achieve real technical updating.

In order to ensure the construction of key projects, while concentrating funds we must also appropriately concentrate the distribution of some goods and materials. First, quotas for handing over to the state must be fulfilled as planned without keeping anything behind. Second, goods and materials of unified distribution in excess of production targets must be handed over to the state for unified distribution. Third, economic measures are to be taken in order to obtain more coal, cement and so on from various localities. Fourth, stocked and stockpiled goods and materials must be further utilized and regulation work must be done properly. Appropriate concentration of some goods and materials are conducive not only to ensuring the construction of key projects but also to controlling construction with self-raised funds and various loans.

5. Further organize well the circulation of commodities and strive to expand foreign trade.

It is planned that the purchasing power of social commodities will be 276 billion yuan in 1983, an increase of 20 billion yuan, or 7.8 percent, as compared with that in 1982. The municipalities and towns will increase their purchasing power of social commodities by 6.8 billion yuan, while the rural areas will increase theirs by 13.2 billion yuan. The commercial departments should strengthen market forecasting and try their best to make a success of commodity supply. First, purchasing and marketing of grains should be vigorously managed well. In addition, it is necessary to strengthen the purchasing of agricultural products, sideline products, native products and special local products and do a good job of circulating the industrial products in the rural areas. It is necessary to improve the flow of commodities between the urban and rural areas, reduce the unnecessary links, accelerate the circulation of commodities, increase the amount of commodities sold and promote the development of agricultural and industrial production.

It is planned that the total volume of export and import trade will be 68.4 billion yuan, an increase of 14.5 percent as compared with the estimate for 1982. Of the total amount, exports account for 32.8 billion yuan, an increase of 4.8 percent; imports account for 35.7 billion yuan, an increase of 25.3 percent. It is necessary to strive to increase exports, in particular the export of mechanical and electrical products. As for the products that consume a large quantity of energy, it is necessary to limit the export of them. It is necessary to appropriately improve the structure of goods and materials imported in accordance with the needs of the development of production and construction in China. It is necessary to continue to actively and effectively utilize foreign capital and to introduce in a planned manner the advanced technologies that we need, in particular those that can be applied to technical transformation.

6. Strengthen scientific and technological research and the popularization and application of the scientific and technological results.

In 1983, it is necessary to organize and carry out in a planned manner the tasks of "tackling the key scientific and technological problems" and popularizing science and technology as provided in the Sixth 5-Year Plan. It is necessary to organize China's scientific and technological force, formulate long-term scientific and technological plans and "tackle the major issues." It is necessary to have different professions take part in making technical transformation plans, to help the enterprises solve the current production problems such as technical transformation and experiments in applying new technologies and crafts and in making new products. It is necessary to carry out scientific research, technical and economic expositions and scientific and technological consultations for the important construction projects that are themselves the preparations for long-term development. It is necessary to rectify the scientific research institutions, study and reform the system of management in the field of science and technology and the rules and regulations which hinder technological advance.

The institutes of higher education must further readjust the structure of the subjects and the professional subjects and strive to improve the quality and quantity of teaching. It is planned that 341,000 students will be admitted to the regular institutions of higher education, an increase of 27,000 students as compared with the estimate for 1982. It is also necessary to readjust the professional subjects of the secondary vocational schools. It is planned that 434,000 students will be admitted, an increase of 18,000 students as compared with the estimate for 1982. It is necessary to vigorously develop all forms of education for adults, including television, correspondence and evening universities. In addition, it is necessary to seriously do a good job in the training of the cadres.

7. On the basis of production development, continue to improve the material and cultural lives of the urban and rural people.

It is necessary to resolutely and vigorously control the growth of population, in particular the growth of the rural population. It is estimated in 1982 that the rate of natural growth of the population is 13.5 per thousand. It is necessary to strive to keep the rate below 14 per thousand. It is necessary to further grasp well birth control and to mobilize forces to carry out propaganda, education and ideological and political work. In addition, the necessary measures should be adopted to increase the percentage of one-child couples, to strictly control the number of couples having two children and to firmly put an end to having more than two children. It is necessary to add to the number of scientific research personnel and medical personnel in birth control at various levels and to strengthen the technical guidance for birth control. In addition, it is necessary to perfect and strengthen the organs and personnel of birth control work at various levels.

It is necessary to conscientously make a success of primary and secondary education. It is necessary to actively develop preschool education and to strengthen primary education. In particular, it is necessary to adopt effective measures to strive to increase the school attendance rate, especially the number of children attending school regularly, in the vast countryside, frontier areas and regions inhabited by minority nationalities. It is necessary to suit measures to local conditions in developing secondary education and to further carry out the structural reforms in secondary education. In 1983, it is necessary to continue to change part of the regular senior secondary schools to vocational (agricultural) secondary schools and vocational schools and to provide vocational (agricultural) classes in the senior secondary schools. All professions should actively create conditions and establish vocational schools. In addition, it is necessary to adopt many forms in organizing the peasants and workers to learn culture, politics and science. In this way, the levels of cultural and scientific knowledge can be promoted.

Continue to arrange employment for the urban and rural labor forces. It is planned that in 1983 arrangements will be made for 5.5 million people, of which 2.8 million people will be employed in the units owned by the whole people and 2.3 million people in the units owned by the collectives. The labor services will make arrangements for 100,000 people, while 300,000 people will become self-employed laborers.

Further increase the income of the urban and rural people. It is planned that there will be an increase of 3 billion yuan in the total amount of wages of the workers in the units owned by the whole people in 1983 as compared with the estimate for 1982. That means the total amount of the workers' wages will reach 74 billion yuan. As for the incomes of the peasants, there will be constant increases on the basis of increases in agricultural production and decreases in production costs.

Continue to improve the living conditions of the urban workers and vigorously organize the production and supply of building materials in the rural areas. Protect the environment and reduce pollution. Strengthen labor protection and make a success of safe production.

Launch patriotic health movements among the masses in a penetrating manner and vigorously lower the incidence of various diseases. It is planned that in 1983 the number of hospital beds will increase by 50,000. It is necessary to improve the quality and quantity of medical service and the attitude in serving people. Actively develop sports activities in the urban and rural areas and strive to upgrade the technical standards of sports and physical exercise.

Further develop cultural undertakings such as literature, art, radio and television broadcasts and press and publishing. It is necessary to make literary and artistic creation flourish and to upgrade the ideological levels and artistic quality of the works. Strive to rectify all the publications and to improve the quality of editorial work and the quality and quantity of books and publications.

III. Strive to Increase Economic Results, Fulfill and Overfulfill the 1983 Plan

In order to ensure that the 1983 plan for social development and development of the national economy is fulfilled or overfulfilled, the key is to resolutely shift all economic work to the track of increasing economic results. We must adopt practical and effective measures to strive to bring about notable increases in economic results in the spheres of production, construction and circulation. The quality and quantity of all products and projects should reach a level that is higher than that reached in this year. It is demanded that the quantity of energy consumed be reduced by 2.5 percent and the consumption of the raw and processed materials be decreased by 1 to 2 percent. Productivity of labor in the state industrial enterprises should be increased by 2 percent or more. Thus, in 1983 the following aspects in economic work should be emphatically grasped well:

First, continue to rectify and readjust the existing enterprises.

To rectify the existing enterprises and give full play to their immense potentials is the most realistic measure for increasing economic results. According to the planned steps, in 1983 it is necessary to rectify more than 1,000 large and medium-sized backbone enterprises. The key to rectification lies in the allocation of the leading ranks. In addition, it is necessary to establish and perfect a powerful production command system and a strict responsibility system. The principal economic and technical indices and the integrated economic results in the rectified enterprises should be higher than the level achieved before rectification, and the profits achieved and handed over to the state should be greater than the rate of increase in the value of production.

In addition to rectifying the enterprise, it is necessary to practice a division of labor according to products. Before the end of 1984, the respective departments should jointly formulate plans of development for various professions with the localities and propose plans for organization of the enterprises. As for the enterprises that have a high rate of consumption, whose products have low quality and quantity and that suffer losses for a long time and the enterprises that produce more products than demanded and are overstocking products, in 1983 some must be closed down, some must stop production or change their products. It is necessary to notably lower the rate of consumption of energy and raw and processed materials. Otherwise, it is impossible to increase the economic results of the entire industrial production. It is necessary to grasp well several major industries that have had certain work foundations, such as the petrochemical industry and the tobacco industry. It is necessary to launch pilot projects in reorganization and combination throughout the country.

Second, further pursue and perfect the economic responsibility system.

It is necessary to constantly summarize experience, to further perfect all forms of the production responsibility system practiced in the rural areas and to create forms of the responsibility system that suit the characteristics of industry, commerce and the building industry. In this way, enthusiasm in various fields can be better aroused, latent potentialities tapped and economic results increased.

In practicing the economic responsibility system in the industrial and commercial enterprises, it is necessary to realize in an overall way the economic responsibility that the enterprises have toward the state and the workers toward the enterprises. The state should ensure that the enterprises and workers enjoy the proper legal rights, meaning that the economic responsibility system should take responsibility as its core, that power and profits are determined by responsibility, that responsibility, power and profits are united, that the all-round accomplishment of state plans is put in the first place, and that production is developed and management improved in strict accordance with state plans and the needs of society. In addition, it prevents the adoption of ways to blindly pursue profits and damage the interest of the state and society. In practicing the economic responsibility system, it is necessary to make a success of the pilot projects and, on the basis of summarizing experience, carry out the system from the key points to the whole area in a planned, step-by-step manner.

Third, vigorously bring about technical progress in the enterprises.

In order to bring about modernization, revitalize the economy and implement the quadrupling of the gross annual value of industrial and agricultural production, it is certainly necessary to rely on progress in science and technology. It is necessary to clarify this guiding ideology and to adopt effective measures to realize it. Otherwise, it is impossible to fully tap the immense latent potentialities of the enterprises and to notably increase the economic results.

To make a success of the plans of technical transformation in the existing enterprises is a pressing task. At present, in technical transformation, since we lack guidance in overall planning, the proper social and economic results are not achieved. Thus, it is necessary to actively organize the forces of the planning departments, economic management departments, the scientific research institutions concerned and the institutes of higher education, to grasp and formulate practical and realistic plans for technical transformation, to propose the technological policy that suits the actual situation of our country and the new technologies that must be adopted and the ways and steps to practice the new technologies. It is first of all necessary to study and formulate the technical transformation plans for the country, the departments and the professions, and then to formulate technical transformation plans for the key cities and key enterprises. The plan should embody technological progress and good economic results. Emphasis should be placed on lowering consumption and upgrading the quality, quantity and properties of the products. Do not blindly pursue automation.

Fourth, actively improve planned management.

Improving and strengthening planned management and striving to improve the scientific character of our planning in accordance with the principle of the leading role of the planned economy and the supplementary role of market regulation constitute a strong guarantee for the proportionate and harmonious development of the national economy and social undertakings and the improvement of socio-economic results. It is necessary to improve the planning system, to integrate long- and medium-term planning with the short-term one and to combine the economic, scientific and technological development with the social development. In order to reflect the socio-economic development, the state planning commission has initially put forth a set of targets for economic results, including the calculation of targets for all socio-economic results and the assessment of economic results for the various material production departments and grassroots enterprises. On this basis, the various localities and departments will formulate plans, implement them in 1983 and gradually improve them in the course of implementation.

In order to improve socio-economic results, it is necessary, in making arrangements for the plan, to adhere to the idea of taking the whole country into account and to correctly handle the relationship between the parts and the whole. It is necessary to give consideration to the interests of localities and departments as far as possible. However, when there is a contradiction between the partial and overall interests, the partial interests must be subordinated to the overall interests. We should resolutely refuse to do a thing that is favorable from the partial point of view but unfavorable from the overall point of view.

While paying close attention to the various tasks enumerated above, it is also necessary to conscientiously do a good job in building socialist spiritual civilization. In both town and country, we should further extensively and penetratingly launch the activities of "five stresses and four beauties." Vigorously conduct education in communist ideology, belief and morality, in the idea of being masters of the state, in revolutionary discipline and in the idea of subordinating personal interests to the interests of the state and subordinating the immediate interests to the long-term ones. It will be possible in this way to contantly improve people's attitude toward labor, work and service, to develop a new type of socialist relations of unity and mutual help between the workers, peasants and intellectuals and between cadres and masses, to improve the general mood of society and to enhance the tremendous enthusiasm of the broad masses for building socialism. Thus, it will certainly be possible to successfully fulfill the various tasks set forth in the plan for 1983.

HUANG HUOQING'S PROCURATORATE REPORT AT NPC

HK211141 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 17 Dec 82 pp 1, 3

["Report by Huang Huoqing, chief procurator of the Supreme People's Procuratorate, on the work of the Supreme People's Procuratorate, delivered on 6 December 1982 at the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC"]

[Text] Fellow deputies:

I completely agree with "The Report on the Draft of the Revised Constitution of the PRC" delivered by Comrade Peng Zhen, vice chairman of the Committee for the Revision of the Constitution, and "The Report on the Sixth 5-Year Plan" delivered by Premier Zhao Ziyang.

Now, I would like to give a brief report on the work of the procurators' offices since the Fourth Session of the Fifth NPC to the current congress session for deliberation and approval.

The tasks vested by state laws in the procurators' offices are, through exercising procuratorial authority, to repress all counterrevolutionary activities, crack down on counterrevolutionary elements and other criminal offenders, safeguard the system of the people's democratic dictatorship, maintain social order, protect the rights and interests of the state and the people and defend the smooth development of socialist modernization. Since the Fourth Session of the Fifth NPC, procurators' offices at all levels have carried out strenuous and arduous struggle in order to consolidate and develop the political situation of stability and unity and to defend and promote socialist modernization with the focus on economic construction by actively conducting all kinds of procuratorial work that is centered on cracking down on serious criminal activities in the economic field and on consolidating public order in both urban and rural areas.

At present, serious criminal activities in the economic field constitute an important manifestation of class struggle under the new historial conditions that our state is practicing the policy of opening up to the outside world and enlivening the domestic economy.

These criminal activities also reflect the fact that hostile forces at home and abroad are trying to undermine and corrupt us. These serious criminal activities have led to and brought about the effects of corrupting our cadre ranks, damaging the bodies of our party, government and army and the reputation of the state, poisoning people's thinking, contaminating the general mood of society, sabotaging economic construction, disturbing social stability and interfering with the correct implementation of the policy of opening up to the outside world and enlivening the domestic economy. Whether we can carry out the struggle of cracking down on these criminal activities on a long-term basis has a great bearing on the success and failure of our country's socialist modernization and the destiny of our party and state. Since the central authorities decided to start the struggle of cracking down on serious criminal activities in the economic field early this year, especially since the CPC Central Committee and the State Council issued the "Decision on Cracking Down on Serious Economic Criminal Activities" and the NPC Standing Committee issued the "Decision on Severely Punishing Criminals Who Have Seriously Sabotaged the Economy," we have organized the vast number of cadres and police to seriously study, effectively enhance realization and rapidly go into action in this struggle. Over the past year, procurators' offices at all levels have taken the struggle of cracking down on serious economic criminal activities as an important task. They have concentrated their strength, intensified leadership, resolutely implemented the principle of inflicting severe punishments on criminals as soon as possible according to law, cooperated with the other departments concerned in dealing with major and important cases and arrested and prosecuted a number of criminals who seriously sabotaged the economy through smuggling and selling smuggled goods, practicing speculation and swindling, indulging in graft and bribery, and embezzling state and collective properties. According to statistics, in the period from January to September of this year, cases dealt with by procurators' offices throughout the country involving serious economic crimes amounted to 32,605, of which, 2,512 cases were major ones that involved money amounting to over 10,000 yuan. A total of 12,698 people involved in these cases have been arrested. At the same time, procurators' offices have instituted public prosecutions on 24,636 cases. By looking at the cases that have been exposed and dealt with, we found that criminal activities in the economic field were relatively rampant. If we fail to deal resolute blows on them in time, our country's socialist modernization will suffer even more serious losses and damage.

In this struggle, procurators' offices at all levels have cooperated with the other departments concerned in broadly publicizing the "Decision on Severely Punishing Criminals Who Have Seriously Sabotaged the Economy," calling on the people who have committed lawbreaking activities to surrender themselves to the judicial departments, confess their crimes and take the road of appealing for lenient treatment by confessing their crimes. This has achieved good results. According to rough estimates, throughout the country there have been 44,874 people who surrendered themselves to the judicial departments and confessed their crimes. Of them, 6,959 people surrendered themselves to procurators' offices. This shows that policies and laws have displayed their power under which a large number of people who have violated law were won over and redeemed and a small number of serious criminal offenders were thus isolated and attacked.

In cracking down on serious economic crimes, we must follow the party's policies and act in accordance with the state laws. The function of procurators' offices in this struggle is to deal with those cases in which criminal laws have been violated and where responsibility for crimes needs to be apportioned. In those general cases in which party and administrative discipline, but not criminal laws, were violated, they should be dealt with by the party's discipline inspection departments and other government departments. Therefore, in dealing with cases, procurators' offices have to strictly distinguish the characters of these cases -- do they or do they not involve criminality.

They have to base their judgment on facts and take laws as yardsticks so as to accurately determine the characters of the cases on the basis of conclusive evidence and irrefutable facts. At the same time, the procurators' offices have also cooperated with other departments in strengthening investigation and worked out timely solutions to some problems concerning policies. In general, the struggle in the previous period was carried out steadily and surely and the quality of case-handling was also fairly good. We have not only cracked down on serious economic criminal activities, but have also promoted the smooth implementation of the policy of opening up to the outside world and enlivening the domestic economy. However, there also exist some problems in the course of implementing policies and laws. For example, the "decision" issued by the NPC Standing Committee stipulated that people who surrendered themselves to the judicial departments before 1 May 1982 should all be dealt with in accordance with the relevant laws before the "decision" was put into effect. But in a period of time, some localities understood this stipulation in a one-sided way and failed to prosecute some serious cases that should be prosecuted. It seemed that so long as a criminal offender has taken the initiative in confessing his crimes, he would always be free from any punishment. As a result, cases exempted from punishment accounted for too large a percentage for a time. After discovering this problem, we issued a timely directive to procuratorates at all levels to correct this deviation.

Through the joint efforts of the pople of all nationalities throughout the country, this struggle has achieved initial results, criminal activities in the economic field have been checked somewhat. The vast number of cadres and masses have received actual education in the field of resisting corruption. But some localities and some cadres at present still fail to realize the great significance of this struggle. Thus they fail to grasp this work closely. Coupled with some unhealthy tendencies, some obstructions have thus been formed in the struggle, resulting in slowing down the handling of some major and important cases. Some serious economic criminals have not been given timely punishments. In some localities, criminal offenders are still swollen with arrogance; all kinds of economic criminal cases are still emerging. With the deepening of the struggle, economic criminals will assume more crafty and covert maneuvers to continue their activities. Some of them will even create disturbances or do violence to seek retaliation. What is more worthy of notice is that a number of remnant elements of the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary cliques are still stirring up trouble and looking for opportunity to destroy our socialist economy. Therefore, we must strengthen our leadership, seriously sum up experiences, pay attention to investigation, keep a close watch on economic criminals' movements, continuously solve new problems in our work, and promote the efficiency and quality in dealing with cases, especially major and important cases. We must further solve problems concerning the understanding of this struggle and profoundly realize the protracted and arduous nature of this struggle, overcome the mood of relaxing our effort and fearing difficulties, prevent interference from both rightism and "leftism," and unswervingly carry out this struggle through to the end.

Since the Fourth Session of the Fifth NPC, procurators' offices at all levels, while making efforts to crack down on serious economic crimes, have also actively cooperated with public security departments and courts in continuing to concolidate social order and cracking down on counterrevolutionaries and other criminal offenders. Under the correct leadership of party committees at all levels and through the joint efforts of the judicial organs and the people of all nationalities throughout the country, social order has shown a distinct improvement. In the first 9 months of this year, incidence of criminal cases of all kinds decreased by 15.7 percent against that in the same period of last year. Public order and traffic order in many cities, towns and areas along railway lines have markedly improved.

The arrogance of criminal offenders has been thwarted. More and more criminals have surrendered themselves to the judicial departments and confessed their crimes. The masses feel safer now. More and more people dare to struggle against criminals. All this has further consolidated and developed the political situation of stability and unity.

In the course of consolidation of social order, procurators' offices at all levels actively pursue the measure of "comprehensive rectification," and continue to implement the principle of inflicting severe punishments on criminals as soon as possible according to law with the stress on inflicting blows on a number of active murderers, robbers, rapists, arsonists, and other criminals who seriously endanger society. According to statistics in the first 9 months this year, procuratorates throughout the country have approved the arrest of 180,086 criminals involved in all sorts of criminal cases, have decided to prosecute 184,441 criminals (including the cases transferred from last year), and have supported public prosecution in courts against 117,635 cases. All this has forcefully exposed and dealt blows to all sorts of criminal activities.

Of all the sorts of criminal cases at present, those committed by youths still account for a large percentage -- nearly 50 percent. Therefore, in consolidating social order, we must continue to implement the policy of education, reform and redemption toward juvenile delinquents. Except for a small number of serious criminals, we should mainly resort to education and reform by mobilizing social strength. In the course of dealing with these cases, we should actively help relevant units, schools and families to enthusiastically, patiently and meticulously educate, reform and help them to correct their mistakes and turn over a new leaf.

Among criminals who have been sentenced to reform through labor or delinquents who have received reeducation through labor, some had committed crimes again. This has become a prominent problem at present that endangers social order. In consolidating social order, procuratorates at all levels have upheld the principle of combining punishment with education and reform. On the one hand, they have inflicted severe punishments on a number of typical criminals who have repeatedly committed crimes and refused to reform. In the first 9 months of this year, they have dealt with a total of 8,449 cases of repeated crimes. On the other hand, in accordance with the spirit of the forum on improving reform work held by the central leadership, they have cooperated with public security departments and effected civilized management of prisons, lockups, reform-through-labor farms and places for reeducating delinquents through labor. Measures have been taken to improve the quality of reforming criminals. At the same time, procurators' offices at all levels have strengthened the examination of the situations in reforming the part of criminals who were sentenced to be supervised, probation, serving sentences outside prisons and who have been let out on parole. They have also inspected the education for the people who were exempt from being prosecuted and have helped them further realize and correct their mistakes and be good law-abiding citizens.

In consolidating social order, many grassroots procuratorates have also helped public security and other judicial departments strengthen grassroots organizations and grassroots work and supported the vast number of cadres and masses in their struggle against crime. At the same time, they have widely publicized the legal system and helped the masses establish public security pledges and village regulations so that the masses and cadres can more consciously abide by state laws and social morality. In the process of handling cases, procurators' offices at all levels have also given timely suggestions to those organs and units where cases had occurred to stop up loopholes in their management and to take steps for perfecting their systems and strengthening administration. This has played a definite role in preventing crime.

At present, though social order has distinctly improved, factors causing instability still exist in many cities. Many new problems have also emrged in rural public order. By looking at the criminal cases that occurred recently, we find that juvenile delinquency accounts for a fairly large percentage; the problem of people who have completed their terms of imprisonment or reeducation through labor and escaped convicts recommitting crimes has become very prominent; the number of criminal cases that were derived from contradictions within the people that were not properly handled has also increased. Therefore, the consolidation of public order is still a protracted and arduous task. We must unswervingly and persistently devote our efforts to this task and carry out the principle of "comprehensive rectification." Procurators' offices at all levels must, under the unified leadership of party committees, closely associate themselves with public security departments and courts, give full play to their role as dictatorship organs and continue to implement the principle of punishing the bad elements who seriously endanger society in a severe and rapid way according to law. At the same time, they must cooperate with all parties concerned in mobilizing the vast number of cadres and masses as well as the strength of the whole society to make joint efforts to maintain social order and to minimize the incidence of criminal cases so as to strive for a fundamental turn for the better in social order within 5 years.

Strengthening the building of the procurator ranks is an organizational guarantee for doing procuratoral work well and accomplishing all tasks. Since the Fourth Session of the Fifth NPC, procurators' offices at all levels have continued the work of consolidating and training the procurator ranks. In general, the ranks are quite good. They can seriously implement the party's principles and policies and the state laws, work selflessly for the public interest, study conscientiously and have perfectly fulfilled all tasks handed down to them by the party and the state. However, in accordance with the requirements of the situation and tasks, the political and professional quality of this contingent still needs to be further improved. This requires us to better consolidate and train our procuratorial personnel so as to meet the requirements for procuratorial work in the new period.

In consolidating the ranks, we have first paid attention to rectifying the ideology, work style and organization of leading bodies at all levels and have overcome weakness and laxness in these leading bodies. We have initially cleared away those people who rose to leading posts by following in Lin Biao and Jiang Qing in rebellion, who had serious sectarian ideas, who participated in beating, smashing and looting, who were opposed to the party central leadership's line since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee and who committed crimes or violated discipline in economic and other fields. We have cultivated and promoted a number of outstanding young and middle-aged cadres who have both capability and political integrity to leading posts so as to strengthen leading bodies at all levels. We have seriously dealt with a small number of cadres who violated law and discipline so as to further purify our ranks. At the same time, procurators' offices at all levels have taken the initiative in adopting measures for training cadres by groups and in turns in accordance with local conditions. Through consolidation and training, cadres have enhanced their ideological consciousness, policy understanding and professional levels. In particular, in the struggle of cracking down on serious economic crimes, the vast numbers of cadres and policemen have experienced tempering and testing and have greatly improved their ability to resist erosion by capitalist ideology. A large number of advanced figures have taken a firm stand and impartially enforced the law. Some comrades have even dedicated their lives and died in their posts defending the people's interests.

In the first half of this year, the Supreme Procuratorate began to reform its structure and reorganize its leading body. Some overlapping organs were merged and its establishment was streamlined.

The structural reform at the province, autonomous region and municipality levels will be carried out this winter or next spring. Through this reform, procurators' offices will better improve their style of work, overcome bureaucratism, improve work efficiency and raise procuratorial work to a new level. Henceforth, we will, in accordance with the demands set forth in the national judicial work conference, continue to do a good job in consolidating and training our procurator ranks, strengthen the building of socialist spiritual civilization and strive to build a procurator contingent that is revolutionalized, rejuvenated, intellectualized and specialized and that has lofty ideals, moral integrity, cultural knowledge and a sense of discipline.

Fellow deputies, the 12th CPC National Congress, which successfully concluded not long ago, has laid down a grand program of creating a new situation in all fields of socialist construction. The new constitution adopted by the current congress session indicates that the development of socialist democracy and the building of the legal system in our country have entered a new stage. Our nation will usher in a new prosperous period. In facing the new situation and new tasks, procurators' offices at all levels need to go into action vigorously, resolutely implement the spirit of the 12th CPC National Congress, earnestly study and implement the new constitution, more consciously and definitely shift the stress of procuratorial work to the defense and promotion of socialist modernization centered on economic construction and strive to create a new situation in people's procuratorial work. It is necessary to bring the role of procurators' offices into full play so as to develop socialist democracy, strengthen the socialist legal system and consolidate the people's democratic dictatorship. It is necessary to correctly assess and handle class struggle at the present stage, more effectively use laws as weapons to deal resolute blows against serious criminal activities in the economic, political and cultural fields that are endangering our socialist cause, guarantee the building of socialist spiritual and material civilization and make contributions to the creation of a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization.

CPPCC RESOLUTION ON IMPLEMENTING CONSTITUTION

OW201313 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1541 GMT 11 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, 11 Dec (XINHUA) -- Unite and Struggle for the Implementation of the New Constitution and the Fulfillment of the Sixth 5-Year Plan in an All-Round Way -- Political Resolution of the Fifth Session of the Fifth National Committee of the CPPCC (adopted at the Fifth Session of the Fifth National Committee of the CPPCC on 11 December 1982).

The Fifth Session of the Fifth National Committee of the CPPCC is being held at a time shortly after the conclusion of the 12th CPC National Congress, when the people of all nationalities in our country are working hard to create a new situation in building socialist modernization with full confidence. The current session has adopted a new constitution for the CPPCC, heard a report by Liu Lantao, vice chairman of the committee for revising the CPPCC constitution, on the draft of the revised constitution and heard and examined a report by Hu Ziang, vice chairman of the CPPCC National Committee, on the work of the Standing Committee of the CPPCC National Committee. The members of the CPPCC National Committee attended the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC as observers, discussed the draft of the revised constitution of the PRC, heard and discussed a report by Peng Zhen, vice chairman of the Committee for the Revision of the Constitution, on the draft of the revised constitution on behalf of the committee, heard and discussed Premier Zhao Ziyang's report on the Sixth 5-Year Plan and heard and discussed other reports and draft laws.

The participants of the Fifth Session of the Fifth National Committee of the CPPCC unanimously and enthusiastically support the Constitution of the PRC adopted at the NPC, the report on the Sixth 5-Year Plan, the constitution for the CPPCC and other reports, and pledge to firmly implement them.

The participants of the Fifth Session of the Fifth National Committee of the CPPCC are convinced that the new constitution is a scientific summing-up of the positive and negative experiences since the founding of the People's Republic, fully reflects the line, principles and policies formulated since the convocation of the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, serves the maximum interests of the Chinese people, and is a cardinal law for running the country and ensuring stability in the new period. The constitution is in conformity with China's situation and has Chinese characteristics. It will have a very important bearing on building a high degree of socialist democracy and the socialist legal system. It provides a reliable guarantee for the implementation of the grand program set by the 12th CPC National Congress. The earnest implementation of the new constitution will further enhance political stability and unity in the country, and forcefully promote the progress of socialist modernization. It is the sacred duty of people of all nationalities to protect the dignity of the constitution and ensure its implementation.

The participants of the CPPCC session are convinced that the constitution is the basic norm of conduct for all activities of the CPPCC. CPPCC organizations at all levels, all parties and mass organizations should conscientiously organize their members to study, publicize and implement the new constitution, while studying the documents of the 12th CPC National Congress. The members of the CPPCC National Committee should consider studying and publicizing the new constitution as the first major task after the conclusion of the current CPPCC session.

All CPPCC members should set an example in abiding by the new constitution. The CPPCC should exercise its function of democratic supervision, wage a resolute struggle against violation or sabotage of the new constitution and make due contributions to its enforcement.

The participants of the current CPPCC session have unanimously endorsed Premier Zhao Ziyang's report on the Sixth 5-Year Plan.

The participants are glad to note that, thanks to the united struggle waged by the people of all nationalities under the leadership of the CPC and the people's government, the national economy has embarked on a sound path of steady development, the readjustment of the national economy has entered a new phase and the economic situation has improved continuously over the last 2 years. The financial situation is improving continually and the people are happy to note the changes. The participants of the current CPPCC session are convinced that the Sixth 5-Year Plan is a positive plan for healthy development of the national economy amid the work of readjustment. The solid implementation of the plan will establish a good foundation for the realization of the strategic goal of quadrupling the gross annual value of industrial and agricultural production by the end of this century.

We have ample conditions in our favor to fulfill the targets and task set by the Sixth 5 -Year Plan. However, we must also realize that there are many difficulties and obstacles ahead. To achieve this arduous task, it is necessary to carry forward the revolutionary tradition of building the country through hard work, thrift and diligence, fill ourselves with enthusiasm, work harder than ever before, strictly practice economy and combat waste. Only by doing so, will it be possible for us to score victories.

The participants at the session believe that in developing socialist modernization, one cannot deviate from educational development and scientific and technological progress. Just like workers and peasants, intellectuals are reliable forces in developing the cause of socialist construction. We must firmly create conditions, whip up the enthusiasm of the intellectuals and bring into full play their role in promoting the modernization program. This is an important task of our times. The CPPCC must constantly concern itself over and understand intellectuals, particularly the situation and problems among middle-aged intellectuals; and exert strenuous efforts to help various localities further implement the policy on intellectuals. The members of the CPPCC organizations at all levels, various parties and groups should actively respond to the call issued by Premier Zhao Ziyang at the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC, conscientiously learn from the revolutionary spirit displayed by Jiang Zhuying and Luo Jianfu in dedicating themselves to the lofty idea of building the socialist motherland and learn from their superior qualities in giving top priority to the interests of the state and wholeheartedly offering all their strength to developing China's socialist construction.

It was emphatically pointed out at the session that CPPCC organizations at all levels must pay full attention to the development of socialist spiritual civilization, and do a good job in carrying out propaganda and education work in this regard. In their work and actions, members who have participated in the CPPCC, including parties, groups and individuals, must earnestly fulfill the requirements, and implement the provisions, of the constitution and the CPPCC constitution on developing socialist spiritual civilization, and strive to bring about a fundamental improvement in the financial and economic situation of the state and of the social values and party style, and to ensure the healthy development of China's socialist modernization program.

At the opening of the current session, Chairman Deng Xiaoping pointed out: In developing the socialist modernization program of the great motherland, our patriotic united front has a bright future and brilliant prospects. He called on us to work together to create a new situation in the socialist modernization of the country, in the patriotic united front and in the work of the CPPCC.

The participants at the session hold: Responding to Chairman Deng's call, it is essential to conscienciously implement the principles of "long-term coexistence and mutual supervision" between the CPC and the democratic parties and nonparty people, "treating each other with all sincerity and sharing weal and woe," and consolidate and expand the patriotic united front. In doing the work of the CPPCC, it is necessary to bring into full play the initiative, enthusiasm and creativity of members in all fields. Efforts must be made to create conditions and adopt various forms to further carry out activities for political consultation and democratic supervision, in an effort to bring into better play the important role of the CPPCC in building a socialist material and spiritual civilization.

The CPPCC organizations at all levels should also canvass views from all quarters, open broad avenues for able people to use their talents, bring into full play the special skills and knowledge of their members and personnel in all fields, organize them to investigate and study special topics, offer suggestions and criticisms on major issues concerning socialist construction and the people's livelihood, help the CPC and the people's government to improve their work and efficiency and, together with them, do a good job of running the state.

The First Session of the Sixth National CPPCC Committee is to be held next year. After the Fifth Session of the Fifth National CPPCC Committee, the Standing Committee should concentrate on preparing for the convocation of the First Session of the Sixth National CPPCC Committee, systematically summarize the work of the Fifth National CPPCC Committee, add to its achievements, and overcome its shortcomings in order to create favorable conditions for the new National CPPCC Committee in carrying out its work even better. We believe that as long as we unite as one, pool our wisdom and efforts, firmly implement the new CPPCC constitution, and inherit and carry forward in our work the fine traditions fostered by Chairman Mao Zedong and Chairman Zhou Enlai, a new situation, full of vigor for the CPPCC, will definitely emerge before our eyes.

RENMIN RIBAO COMMENTATOR DISCUSSES FUNDING

[Commentator's article: "A Major Measure for Reinvigorating the Economy"]

[Text] In order to promote our economic development, it is necessary to solve the problem of raising funds for construction. At present we must adopt necessary measures to concentrate scattered and idle funds and use them to meet urgent national needs, especially the needs in speeding up the construction of key projects in the energy and transportation fields.

At present there exists a very noticeable phenomenon: On the one hand, there has been a shortage of funds for key projects which are urgently needed by the state; on the other hand, funds at the disposal of enterprises and funds outside the state budgets have grown greatly and account for almost one-half of the state's budget revenue. Therefore, it is not only necessary but also possible to adopt proper measures for concentrating funds. The central authorities have now laid down the decision on concentrating necessary funds for guaranteeing the construction of key energy and transportation projects. This is an important measure and the decision is completely correct.

In order to smoothly concentrate funds, we should correctly realize that partial interests should be subordinated to overall interests. First of all, economic personnel, especially those in leading posts, are required to enhance their consciousness and be firmly implanted with the idea of coordinating all national activities like moves on a chessboard. Comrade Chen Yun said: "Our comrades who are engaged in financial and economic work are apt to get bogged down in a partial viewpoint and to be infected with selfish departmentalism and they thus neglect some matters of greater importance." He also reminded us: "It is necessary to view one's own work in the light of the whole nation. If we discover that our own practice is not concordant with the work of the whole nation, we should immediately and consciously correct it." Over the past 2 years, the state has initially reformed the economic management and enterprise management institutions and has placed more power and more mobile financial resources at the disposal of localities, departments and enterprises. This is absolutely necessary. Henceforth, localities, departments and enterprises should, within the scope of unified policies and plans laid down by the state, continue to exercise their legitimate decisionmaking power to gain greater reasonable benefits on the basis of tapping their potential and improving their economic results so as to make greater contributions to the state. But we can never exclusively pay attention to partial interests without regard to overall interests. Still less should we practice fraud to take state revenue. Now the central authorities have decided to collect funds for key energy and transportation projects from all state-run enterprises, institutions, government organs and orgnaizations, the army and local governments. This constitutes a political problem as well as an economic problem.

This is because the state's purpose in raising funds is to lay a solid foundation for economic prosperity and the realization of quadrupling output value. This is a glorious task which is related to the overall situation. The whole nation from top to bottom should take into account this overall situation and actively make due contributions to it.

Of course, when we are trying to overcome undue decentralization in the use of funds and appropriately concentrate a section of funds, we should also take into consideration the needs of localities and enterprises and give full play to their initiative. A certain amount of mobile financial resources should be at their disposal so as to expedite matters that are more suitable to be run by localities and enterprises. In particular, funds for technical transformation of existing enterprises should be guaranteed. This work involves hundreds of thousands of units and should be handled strictly according to the relevant policies and regulations laid down by the state. In short, in dealing with the financial problem of raising funds, we should strive to effect both reasonable concentration and appropriate distribution and succeed in both guaranteeing the construction of key projects urgently needed by the state and mobilizing the initiative of all quarters concerned.

BO YIBO ADDRESSES NATIONAL HEALTH CONFERENCE

OW220231 Beijing XINHUA in English 1546 GMT 21 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 21 (XINHUA) -- State Councillor Bo Yibo today endorsed the decision of a six-day national women's and children's health conference to focus their efforts on integration of maternity and child care with family planning.

He was addressing to some 100 participants attending the meeting which opened December 17. He asked them to work to limit China's population to 1.2 billion by the year 2000.

The meeting decided to emphasize work in the nation's rural area, where 80 percent of China's 1,008 billion people live. The work will improve delivery skills, prevention and treatment of women's and children's diseases and family planning.

He reviewed achievements in the field in the last three decades. Infant mortality, he said, dropped from pre-1949 levels of 200 per thousand to 13 per thousand in urban areas and 24 per thousand in rural areas. Deaths of women in child birth also fell.

China has 55,400 medical workers for maternity and child care, 159 maternity and child care institutions and 24 children's hospitals with 5,000 beds. General hospitals provide another 20,000 children's beds. Another 2.630 maternity and child care centers also exist. These figures, Bo Yibo said, are 30 times those of the 1949 founding of the People's Republic.

Bo Yibo called on governments at all levels to slate maternity, child care and family planning work on their agenda.

SHANDONG'S BAI RUBING ATTENDS CONGRESS SESSION

SK220350 Jinan Shandong Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 21 Dec 82

[Excerpts] The fifth session of the fifth provincial people's congress opened on the morning of 21 December at the Jinan (Bayi) auditorium. At 0830 Zhao Lin, executive member of the congress and chairman of the provincial people's congress standing committee, declared the session open.

Su Yiran, governor of the province, delivered a report on government work. His report is divided into five parts. In the first part, Comrade Su Yiran elucidated, with vivid facts and specific figures, the achievements scored by our province over the past year in the fields of agriculture, industry, capital construction, finance and trade, culture and education as well as urban people's material and spiritual livelihood. In the second part, he set forth the 1983 provincial plan on economic and social development and the eight tasks for fulfilling this plan. In the third part, he stressed the necessity of strengthening the building of socialist spiritual civilization and enhancing the whole people's awareness of communism. In the fourth part, he urged efforts to carry out organizational reforms to raise the government's work efficiency. In the fifth part, he called for conscientiously studying, propagating and implementing the new constitution to intensify the building of democracy and the legal system.

The province's 1983 draft plan on economic and social development drawn up by the provincial people's government has been submitted to the fifth session of the fifth provincial people's congress for examination and approval. Meanwhile, a written explanation on this plan has been made. The credentials committee of the fifth provincial people's congress made a written examination report on the behavior of deputies and the qualifications for people's deputies in the by-election. Of the existing 1,455 deputies of the fifth provincial people's congress, 1,251 attended the 21 December session.

Also attending the 21 December session were Bai Rubing, Gao Qiyun, Li Zichao, Wu Kaizhang, Gao Keting, Zhao Feng, Xu Jianchun, Chen Lei, Zhang Zhusheng, Yang Jieren, Zhu Benzheng, Zhang Fugui, Zeng Chengkui, Zhou Zhijun, Wang Jiechen, Wang Baomin and Liu Gan, executive members of the congress. Attending the session as observers were members participating in the fifth session of the fourth provincial CPPCC committee and responsible persons of various departments directly under the provincial people's government.

Beginning from the afternoon of 21 December, deputies to the fifth session of the fifth provincial people's congress and members participating in the fifth session of the fourth provincial CPPCC committee discussed in groups the government work report made by Governor Su Yiran.

BRIEFS

SHANDONG GRAIN OUTPUT -- A prefecture which received 3.5 billion jin of reverse-sale grain from the state from 1959 to 1978, Dezhou Prefecture, Shandong Province, has marketed 350 million jin of grain to the state this year. At the same time, the prefecture produced a total of 4.4 million dan of cotton, an increase of 1 million dan over 1981. Despite the reduction of 500,000 mu of grain-growing fields, total grain yield has reached 3.9 billion jin, an increase of 400 million jin over 1981 and up 30 percent over 1978. By 12 December, the prefecture stored up 352 million jin of grain. [Jinan Shandong Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 14 Dec 82 SK]

LIU JIE ATTENDS HENAN PEOPLE'S CONGRESS MEETING

HK220154 Zhengzhou Henan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 21 Dec 82

[Summary] The 19th meeting of the 5th Henan Provincial People's Congress Standing Committee was convened in Zhengzhou on 21 December. Vice Chairman Yu Yichuan presided at the meeting. Chairman Liu Jie conveyed the spirit of the NPC session. Also present were Vice Chairmen Liu Mingbang, Shao Wenjie, Chen Bingzhi, Wang Peiyu, Hao Fuhong, Fan Lian and Ma Ruihua.

HUNAN'S MAO ZHIYONG ON IMPROVED AGRICULTURE

HK220257 Changsha Hunan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2310 GMT 21 Dec 82

[Summary] According to HUNAN RIBAO, provincial CPC committee First Secretary Mao Zhiyong said at a provincial rural work conference on 19 December: "The province must seriously analyze the excellent situation of bumper harvest this year and its causes, boost confidence and continue to forge ahead through mass summation, exchanges and mobilization, and strive for still greater development next year."

Hunan reaped a record harvest this year. Total grain output was 46.5 billion jin, 3.1 billion jin more than last year. All 16 prefectures and major municipalities increased production, as did 87 of the 101 counties and minor municipalities. Increases ranging from 100 to 200 billion jin were recorded in Xiangtan, Ningxiang, Yueyang Municipality, Changsha Municipality, Liuyang, Xiangxiang, Changde, Taoyuan and Liling Counties. Total agricultural output value rose by 6 percent over last year. This was achieved despite serious natural disasters such as floods and autumn cold waves.

Summing up the reasons for the province's success, Mao Zhiyong said: "1) The universal popularization of the all-round contract responsibility system has mobilized the peasants' production enthusiasm to a tremendous extent. This is the main factor. 2) The province has implemented relatively well the principle of actively promoting diversification without slackening grain production in the slightest, and initially changed Hunan's single-produce economy that prevailed for many years. 3) The province has practiced scientific cultivation, especially in the selection of fine seed and scientific use of fertilizer. 4) Due to the practice of the all-round contract responsibility system, the work style of the rural cadres at all levels has shown very great improvement. Cadre-masses relations have become closer, and the masses enjoy ease of mind." Mao Zhiyong called on the comrades throughout the province to emphasize these successful experiences next year.

CHEN PIXIAN BRIEFED ON BEIJING PUBLIC ORDER

OW180145 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1657 GMT 15 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, 15 Dec (XINHUA) -- Chen Pixian, member of the CPC Central Committee Secretariat, visited the Dongcheng District Party Committee in Beijing Municipality this morning, where he was briefed on public order in the district.

After hearing the briefing, Chen Pixian pointed out: It is necessary to bring about a fundamental change for the better in the standards of social conduct in the next 5 years and to conscientiously implement the party's principle of "tackling problems in a comprehensive way" in public order.

Dongcheng is a district of Beijing Municipality where a better job has been done in "tackling problems in a comprehensive way" in public order. After attentively listening to the briefing, Comrade Chen Pixian expressed satisfaction with the achievements made by the district in this regard. He said: When a good job is done in keeping public order in the capital, it will produce a tremendous influence on all other parts of the country. The capital should be the first to take effective measures and gain useful experiences in this regard. How should we do this work this winter and the coming spring? How should we do it next year and in the next 5 years? Beijing should map out a plan for it.

During the briefing, Chen Pixian, together with others present at the briefing, analyzed the special features of public order in the capital and expressed his expectations and made suggestions on how to "tackle problems in a comprehensive way" in public order. He said: The district party committee has briefed us on public order today. This shows that the party committee has paid close attention to public order, which is the most important prerequisite for doing a good job in "tackling problems in a comprehensive way" in public order. He called on public security personnel to strengthen the building of their ranks. It is necessary to make efforts and to spend some money to raise public security personnel's cultural and technical level. The municipality and its districts should consider the establishment of special schools for judicial procuratorial and public security cadres to study. He emphatically pointed out: It is very important to do a good job in setting up public security committees and mediation committees at the basic level. This is a good way to follow the mass line, and it is a fine tradition of our party. Successfully doing this work will lay a reliable foundation for public order.

Hearing the briefing along with Comrade Chen Pixian were First Secretary Duan Junyi of the Beijing Municipal CPC Committee, Vice Minister of Public Security Lin Yun and other comrades.

NEI MONGGOL: ZHOU HUI ON RESPONSIBILITY SYSTEMS

SK211248 Hohhot Nei Monggol Regional Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 20 Dec 82

[Text] Comrade Zhou Hui, first secretary of the autonomous regional party committee, recently wrote an article for RENMIN RIBAO on further implementing and improving the system of large scale assignment of responsibilities and other production responsibility systems. He stressed that the current most important work in rural and pastoral areas is to continue implementing and improving, in line with specific local conditions, the system of large scale assignment of responsibilities and other responsibility systems of paying remuneration on the basis of output according to contracts.

Comrade Zhou Hui's article states: Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, rural and pastoral areas in the region have implemented, step by step, the double-contract system and other responsibility systems of paying remuneration on the basis of output according to contracts, particularly the system of large-scale assignment of responsibilities. This has been warmly supported by peasants and herdsmen of various nationalities.

Practices have more and more clearly indicated that the double-contract system, especially the system of large-scale assignment of responsibilities, is indeed a great creation for peasants and herdsmen of various nationalities in their practice of production. It not only has played a key role in opening up a new situation in agriculture and animal husbandry, but also has played or is playing a tremendous promotive role in first invigorating the economy as a whole and then promoting the restructuring. In the course of implementing the system of large-scale assignment of responsibilities and other responsibility systems of paying remuneration on the basis of output according to contracts, however, we have encountered rather great interference, which has mainly come from a small number of responsible cadres. Most of these responsible cadres could not keep abreast of the situation because of leftist influences and a lack of study and contract with the actual situation. But there were, indeed, a very few who had a vested interest in the leftist stuff. The debate on this issue, we should say, has not been totally completed.

The article points out: Following the progress of the work to bring order out of chaos and the tests by practices, we have virtually made a breakthrough in the double-contract system, especially the system of large-scale assignment of responsibilities, which is being implemented and improved. Responsibility systems for vegetable-growing production teams on outskirts of cities are being adjusted and those for forestry production are just at the beginning. Although we have responsibility systems for animal husbandry, a considerable number of them are the continuation of the methods adopted prior to the Cultural Revolution. The herdsmen are not satisfied with them. Responsibility systems for many commune- and brigade-run enterprises are yet to be established, summarized and improved.

Contract systems will ultimately be applied to the exploitation and utilization of large areas of waste beaches, mountains, sands and water surface by scattered manpower, funds and technical forces. Most of the responsibility systems for agricultural production have been implemented gradually after 1980 and many of them have been implemented halfway. In addition, the implementation of the system of large-scale assignment of responsibilities and other responsibility systems is a new thing and the leftist influences are deep-rooted. There are still not many places where responsibility systems are truly perfect. Therefore, concerning the system of large-scale assignment of responsibilities and other responsibility systems, we should not only note the trend that they are being implemented, perfected and consolidated, but also note the arduous and protracted efforts we should exert to continuously implement, perfect and consolidate them in the future. The idea that the responsibility systems have been very perfect and the feeling of satisfaction with the achievements of the systems which leads to a refusal to improve the systems is divorced from reality and is harmful.

The article continues: The major question on current responsiblity systems is whether or not we should regard the double-contract system, particularly the system of large-scale assignment of responsibilities, as a revolution, and continue to improve and carry it out.

1. Are the system of large-scale assignment of responsibilities and other responsibility systems a revolution in the realm of agricultural economy? Practices have vividly shown us that the double-contract system, particularly the system of large-scale assignment of responsibilities, is so far the most effective measure to fully arouse the production enthusiasm of the peasants and herdsmen of various nationalities in the rural and pastoral areas of Nei Monggol. People say that the system of large-scale assignment of responsibilities has not only freed the people's minds, given peasants a free hand and made the land and natural resources more exploitable, but has also educated the masses of cadres. Like a key, it has opened the door to broad prospects for Nei Monggol's agriculture and animal husbandry.

In the meantime, after summing up the positive and negative experiences of the 10 years, particularly the experiences of the past few years, we have adhered to the public ownership of the land and the principle of proper retention for the collective and have organized production mainly with individual households as a unit under the guidance of the state plan in our efforts to develop agriculture, forestry, animal husbandry, sideline production and fishery in the vast rural and pastoral areas. This is, generally speaking, in conformity with the current development of productive forces in rural and pastoral areas and conducive to production.

With regard to the procurement and allotment of farm and sideline produce, we should, of course, educate cadres and commune members to adhere to the principle of simultaneously taking into account the interests of the state, the collective and the individuals. The links in circulation, which have a bearing on the peasants' interests, and superstructure should be in accord with the principle. These are profound changes brought about by the system of large-scale assignment of responsibilities in the realm of agricultural economy.

2. Has the function of the system of large-scale assignment of responsibilities and other responsibility systems reached the limit? The article says: Our answer is: There is still great room to develop the might of the systems. Even the few more experienced production teams in Nei Monggol have implemented the system of large-scale assignment of responsibilities for no more than 3 or 5 years. Most of the teams have implemented the system for only 1 or 2 years. The function of the system, instead of reaching the limit, has just begun to develop. Its potential and superiority are far from being fully displayed. Peasants and herdsmen have put it well: The good play is yet to come.

3. Will the current system of large-scale assignment of responsibilities once again be turned into a system of centralized management? This is the question the peasants and herdsmen are most concerned about. The article points out: Following the development of productive forces, the system of large-scale assignment of responsibilities and other responsibility systems will also develop accordingly and various forms of integration, particularly that of the trades which serve production and that of the links in circulation, will increase day after day. However, we should be sure that such development should never be a road going back and such integration should never be brought back to the old track of the three-level system of ownership of the means of production in the people's commune, with ownership by the production team as the basic form. In line with the actual situation of the region, the focus of our work concerning the various responsibility systems, including the system of large-scale assignment of responsibilities, for the present and the next few years is to implement and improve. After they are implemented and approved, they should remain unchanged for a long time. We should regard the long-term stability of the responsibility systems as a basic policy for agriculture and animal husbandry and adhere to it for a long time.

Comrade Zhou Hui's article concludes: We should thoroughly sum up the experiences and lessons of our party in giving guidance to agricultural and animal husbandry production over the past two decades and particularly since the party's third plenary session in the course of our study of the documents of the 12th CPC Congress and the relevant basic theory of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought, further eliminate the leftist influences, seek truth from facts, emancipate our minds, enhance our awareness in implementing the line adopted since the party's third plenary session and continue to implement and improve the system of large-scale assignment of responsibilities and other responsibility systems of paying remuneration on the basis of output according to contracts. As long as we do so, we will be able to further develop the already-created new situation in agriculture and animal husbandry.

TIANJIN'S CHEN WEIDA ATTENDS RURAL WORK MEETING

SK201310 Tianjin City Service in Mandarin 0030 GMT 20 Dec 82

[Text] After a 17-day session, the rural work meeting sponsored by the municipal CPC committee concluded on 19 December. The meeting relayed the guidelines of the central authorities' conferences on rural work and summed up the experience gained by the municipality in developing agriculture in the period since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. Results were gained in upgrading the understanding of enacting responsibility systems by signing contracts with households according to their grain output and in the definitive orientation of enabling agriculture to serve urban areas while developing export and of enabling both urban and rural areas to uphold cooperation and to become wealthy through labor. The meeting urged cadres at all levels to earnestly study Marxism, Leninism and Mao Zedong Thought, to do a good job in various work by raising the spirit of reform and to build rural areas across the municipality step-by-step into new socialist villages with highly-developed material and spiritual civilizations.

The rural work meeting sponsored by the municipal CPC committee opened on 3 December. Chen Weida, first secretary of the municipal CPC committee, delivered the concluding report at the meeting. Zhang Zaiwang, permanent secretary of the municipal CPC committee, made a guiding report on studying the 12th CPC congress documents. Li Ruihuan, secretary of the municipal CPC committee and acting mayor of the municipality, made a report on the orientation of developing the suburban economy. Wu Zhen, deputy secretary of the municipal CPC committee, made a report on rural work. Chen Bing, deputy secretary of the municipal CPC committee, made a report on rural ideological and political work. Bai Hua, deputy mayor of the municipality, made a report on family planning work. Liu Jinfeng, deputy mayor of the municipality, also made a report on relaying the spirit of the national conference on rural work.

At the meeting, 42 units introduced their experiences gained in rural work. Units including the municipal supply and marketing cooperative and the municipal foreign trade bureau made speeches. Participants earnestly studied the 12th CPC Congress documents and the central authorities' guidelines and, bearing in mind the actual situation, summed up experiences gained in enacting responsibility systems by signing contracts with households according to their grain output, in developing a diversified economy, in developing major households that actively sign a contract for enacting responsibility systems and households that sign a contract for specialized production and in enforcing joint ventures, resulting in upgrading their understanding, further emancipating their minds in full confidence of further creating a new situation in agriculture.

The meeting noted: The situation prevailing in rural areas across the municipality is that these areas politically prosper and economically flourish more every day. In spite of consecutive natural disasters since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the municipality has still scored marked development in agricultural production. The municipality is expected to score a total agricultural output value this year of 2 billion yuan, a 43.7 percent increase over the 1978 figure. The municipality scores an 11 percent increase each year in this regard. Its total grain output has reached 2.46 billion jin, an 11.8 percent increase over 1978. Its total cotton output has reached 9.3 million jin, more than twice the 1978 figure. Its total oil-bearing seed output has reached 84 million jin, a 3.2-fold increase over the 1978 figure. Its total vegetable volume in markets has reached 1.55 billion jin, a 16.5 percent increase over 1981. The municipality has achieved relatively rapid development in a diversified economy. Following the development of production, peasants throughout the municipality have steadily increased their incomes and obviously improved their livelihood.

In making arrangements for the rural work in the municipality, the meeting pointed out: Our fighting target is, on the premise of steadily upgrading economic results, to quadruple total agricultural output value by the end of this century and to strive to go beyond that target. According to this target, [words indistinct] it is necessary to vigorously map out long-term and all-round plans. The meeting held that the major task for current rural work should still focus on further improving production responsibility systems. In the current period, the responsibility systems of signing contracts with households according to their grain output have been proven as one of the effective measures to give full scope in rural areas to the superiority of our country's socialist economic system and these responsibility systems have been widely welcomed by a vast number of people. They totally consist of the three key factors of socialist public ownership, the principle of to each according to their work and distribution without exploitation. These responsibility systems are a form of management with socialist character and are creative achievements scored by Chinese people.

The meeting urged units that have not established a production responsibility system to enact these systems as soon as possible. Units suited to responsibility systems of signing a contract with the authorities according to their grain output should begin to do so and units not suited to these responsibility systems should establish or improve the system of personal responsibility for each section of a production line. Units that have signed a contract in line with their grain output in the responsibility system enactment should sum up their experiences gained in the enactment so as to further improve these systems. A good job should be done in dealing with the relationship between contracting for production responsibility system enactment with households in the entire area and with a specific household. Efforts should be made to sign as many contracts as possible with households in the entire area and with specific households so long as their condition permits. It is also necessary to integrate the contracting operation among households in the entire area with the operation among specific households. Attention should be paid to establishing or improving contract systems and to dealing well with the relationship amon the state, collectives and individuals and the relationship between distribution and collective accumulations. It is necessary to retain public funds according to policy and need.

The meeting noted: Because of the characteristic dependence of big cities on their suburban counties, the municipality should define its agricultural orientation toward serving urban areas and industries. This means that municipal agriculture should be developed in line with the city's needs and that efforts should be made to provide as many farm and sideline products as possible for saturating the needs of urban industries and urban people's livelihood. Meanwhile, the development of agriculture will contribute to peasants becoming wealthy as soon as possible.

The meeting urged localities across the municipality to vigorously develop the production of non-staple foodstuffs in the current period. In addition to continuously doing a good job in vegetable production, such as increasing the variety of vegetables and upgrading vegetable quality to fully supply markets, suburban areas should focus on the major production of milk, eggs and fresh water fish. In developing agricultural production, it is necessary to resolutely uphold the principle of vigorously developing a diversified economy while steadily grasping grain production. Efforts should be made to increase the per-unit yield so as to increase the total output. Areas not suitable for grain production should vigorously develop cotton and other cash crops.

The meeting noted: At present, we should transform the current agricultural production engaged in by individual households for their own purposes into one for commercial purposes. Efforts should be made to do a good job in commercial service before or after production seasons so as to accelerate the development of the rural economy into a cooperative one with the combination of production, supply and sales, as well as of agriculture, industry and commerce.

This is a trend that imposes important tasks on us. It is necessary to improve the system of supply and marketing cooperatives, restore cooperative commerce and enhance the organizational function of the mass line, the managerial function of democracy and the flexibility of business transactions so as to enable supply and marketing cooperatives to be major channels of commodity circulation in rural areas. In the premise of assuring the fulfillment of the state assignment, it is necessary to properly relax the purchase and sale restriction policies on farm and sideline products and industrial products. After the fulfillment of unified procurement plans and the state assignment, rural people may retain their surplus products for sale in urban markets. State commercial firms may also go deep into rural areas to sell their commodities. It is necessary to adopt a correct attitude toward peasants' problems of having to transport good long distances to sell them in order to further enliven the commodity circulation between urban and rural areas.

The meeting held that developing rural socialist undertakings and strengthening the build-up of spiritual civilization are very important. It is necessary to establish serve-the-peasant scientific and technological centers and educational networks so as to teach peasants new farming science and technology and to conduct education reform step-by-step. Efforts should be made to continue to do a good job in family planning in rural areas. In conducting ideological and political work in rural areas, from now on, we should conduct education centered on party members and cadres, and education on the party's current policies and on the explanation of peasants' interests and work experiences.

The meeting emphatically noted: Under the great change in the rural economy, leading personnel at all levels should catch up with developments, make a firm determination for reform and vigorously grasp production. They should boldly create new things, be good at studying new knowledge and continuously arm themselves with science and technology to further develop the new situation that has been created in agriculture. Agriculture is closely related to the urban people's livelihood. Various industries, trades and departments concerned should further foster the thinking of serving peasants and agricultural development and actively do a good job in supporting agriculture.

The meeting was convinced that only by emancipating minds and going deep into practice will the party's cadres at all levels be able to further create a new situation in municipal agriculture and to achieve an all-round upgrading of agricultural economy.

BRIEFS

TIANJIN PLANNED PARENTHOOD -- Tianjin Municipality has scored gratifying achievements in planned parenthood since the third plenary session. By the end of September, the one-child rate had increased to 86.1 percent from 50 percent in 1978. The rate of planned parenthood had increased from 69 percent to 87.9 percent. The rate of multiple births had dropped from 23.7 percent in 1978 to 5 percent. By the end of the third quarter, 86.9 percent of the 378,900 women of childbearing age who already have a child had received the "one-child certificates." GANSU'S FENG JIXIN STRESSES PLANNED PARENTHOOD

HK220222 Lanzhou Gansu Provincial Service in Mandarin 1125 GMT 21 Dec 82

[Summary] The Gansu Provincial CPC Committee and government held a broadcast mobilization rally on 21 December to launch the province's planned parenthood propaganda month. Provincial CPC committee First Secretary Feng Jixin made an important speech. He said: "If our province can meet the demand of the 12th party congress, quadruple total industrial and agricultural output value by the end of the century to reach 41.6 billion yuan, and control the population below 22.2 million, on average each person can have 1,874 yuan and the people's living standards will reach a comfortably well-off level. If the population exceeds 22.2 million, to reach such a living standard can only be empty talk. To keep the province's population below 22.2 million by the end of the century, we must keep the total population growth figure below 2.63 million in the next 18 years; the average annual increase can only be 146,000. The annual birth figure cannot exceed 246,000. The average annual natural population increase must be kept below 8 per 1,000.

"To achieve this aim we must, from now on, universally advocate that each couple have only one child, strictly control the birth of a second child and resolutely stop the birth of a third. This is the decisive measure our country must adopt in its particular historical conditions. There can be no wavering on this point."

Comrade Feng Jixin stressed: "The focus of this planned parenthood propaganda month will be on the rural areas. In recent years, the natural population growth rate in many prefectures and counties has risen considerably from its previous decline. Dingxi Prefecture has to consume grain resold by the state every year, but the number of babies born there is growing every year. Over half the babies born in the prefecture's seven counties are born outside the planned parenthood plans. How can we tolerate such a situation? The Dingxi Prefectural CPC Committee and commissioner's office must take practical measures to rapidly correct this situation and control the momentum of unplanned births."

Feng Jixin called on party and government at all levels to strengthen leadership and the departments concerned to work closely together in launching planned parenthood propaganda with great fanfare.

GANSU'S FENG JIXIN SPEAKS ON RURAL WORK

HK200357 Lanzhou Gansu Provincial Service in Mandarin 1125 GMT 19 Dec 82

[Excerpts] A Gansu Provincial CPC Committee Standing Committee enlarged meeting which concluded on 19 December decided that the central guiding ideology for rural work in the province should be to continue to implement the 12th party congress spirit, further emancipate the mind and broaden the vision, relax the policies, enliven the economy, develop the new situation which has already been created in rural work, and lead the peasants to get rich as quickly as possible. This meeting began on 10 December. The meeting studied the spirit of relevant central conferences, held warm discussions centering on the question of how to develop the new situation already created in rural work,exchanged experiences, enhanced understanding and strengthened confidence.

The meeting held: The rural situation in Gansu has become better and better in recent years, and a new situation has already been created. It can be said that the road is now open and the masses are forging ahead. The year 1983 is the first year after the 12th party congress proposed creating a new situation in all fields of modernization; it is also the first year after the institution of the new constitution and the first year of striving for long tranquillity in the land. In the new year all fronts, areas, departments and cadres must work in concert, brace their spirit, promote investigation and study, tackle the main contradictions, and bring about new progress, a new atmosphere and new success in all work, especially in agriculture.

In order to further develop the new situation already created in rural work in the province and fulfill the province's targets of endeavor in agricultural development, the meeting pointed out that it is necessary to grasp as strategic key points the building of the Hexi commodity grain base and the building of the central arid part of the province represented by Dingxi. Carrying out successful construction of these two areas will have a very important effect on consolidating and developing the excellent political and economic situation in the province. The Central Committee and State Council are very concerned for construction in these two areas. We must therefore work hard in all respects, combine formulating plans with carrying out current work, and take new and thoroughly sound steps. Practical measures must also be adopted in other parts of the province, which must make their proper contributions to achieving the province's targets of endeavor in agriculture.

Provincial CPC committee First Secretary Feng Jixin said in an important speech at the close of the meeting: In continuing to emancipate the mind, we must at present continue to clear away the influence of leftist ideology, break through the bindings of the small producer mentality, and change the ways of thinking and work in acting according to old conventions, experiences and habits. Comrade Feng Jixin said: We must break through ideological obstacles in four aspects:

1. We must break through the pattern of the commune in being large in size and collective in nature, strengthen the contract responsibility systems and the development of all forms of cooperative economy, and embark on a socialist agricultural development path suited to China's special features.

2. We must break through the erroneous ideological convention that to allow some people to get rich before others is bound to lead to polarization. We must boldly support and encourage the peasants to get rich through their own labor.

3. We must break through the traditional concept of self-sufficient and semi-self-sufficient natural economy, and steadily develop in the direction of specialization and socialization.

4. We must break through the small peasant economy viewpoint that the peasants can only grow crops, and encourage and guide the surplus manpower shifted from agriculture to follow the path of all-round development of agriculture, forestry, animal husbandry, sideline occupations and fisheries and comprehensive operation of agriculture, industry, commerce, field cultivation, stockbreeding, and the processing trades.

Comrade Feng Jixin said: These four points are the main problems hampering the emancipation of our minds. In connection with reality, the party committees at all levels must recall the work of the previous stage and see whether out our minds are being continually emancipated or have become stagnant. We must seriously solve the problems that hamper the further emancipation of our minds by means of study and discussion. Only thus can our thinking catch up with the situation, can we maintain the initiative in work and reduce tendencies to act blindly.

Comrade Feng Jixin said: We should consider relaxing the rural policies in the following respects:

1. Under the premise of helping to protect and develop the vegetation, we should allow the communes and brigades to assign to the peasants in a unified way barren mountains, slopes, hills, gullies, and waters for their long-term use for planting trees and grass and promoting diversification. The peasants should be allowed as individuals or combinations of households to raise capital for agricultural capital construction and small hydroelectric stations. They should be allowed to open up all kinds of (?factories), and to engage in processing of agricultural and sideline products, and in other government approved industrial and sideline production, such as mining.

2. Peasants should be allowed as individuals or as combinations of households to take up contract responsibility for all kinds of undertakings in agriculture, forestry, animal husbandry, sideline occupations, fisheries and industry, and also in farm machinery and tools, mechanized plowing, plant protection, animal disease prevention, scientific research, repair work and so on.

3. Peasants should be allowed as individuals or as combinations of households to cooperatively manage commerce, catering trades, and tourism.

4. Apart from grain, cotton and oil, which are under state monopoly for purchase, and pigs, eggs, skins, wool, and cattle and sheep, for which procurement quotas are assigned, all agricultural and sideline products can be marketed. Products under state monopoly purchase or for which procurement quotas are set can also be marketed, with the household as the unit, after the quotas are fulfilled.

5. Peasants should be allowed as individuals or as combinations of households to undertake long and short-distance transport of agricultural and sideline products, except grain.

6. Peasants should be allowed as individuals or as combinations of households to purchase farm machines and tools, tractors and motor vehicles. It is also necessary to avoid blind development in this respect, which would cause waste or result in losses.

7. Work exchange between peasant households should be allowed. People who have lost labor ability or who lack sufficient labor ability should be allowed to hire laborers to do chores for them, in order to maintain the necessities of life. People undertaking all types of cooperative economy or joint-household businesses should be allowed to hire helpers, specialists and technicians.

8. Individual industry and commerce operators and able people engaged in pioneering cultivation and animal husbandry should be allowed to hire helpers and train apprentices. They can refer to the relevant State Council regulations. Individual or joint stock enterprises that have hired more helpers than permitted by the State Council regulations should, under the premise of taking rational care of the interests of shareholders, guide them into various forms of cooperative economy. Those with contract responsibilities for collective enterprises that have hired relatively large numbers of helpers should be guided into instituting contract responsibility systems for managers.

9. Variations in size of shareholding should be permitted among shareholders of a joint enterprise. In addition, investment in either capital or labor should be permitted. The dividend ration should not be too great.

10. People with good education and technical specialities should be permitted as individuals or combines to open medical centers, schools, nurseries, cinemas, theaters, bookshops and other cultural undertakings.

Comrade Feng Jixin said: When implementing the above-mentioned policies on a trial basis, we must pay attention to strengthening leadership and management, and conduct education for the peasants in loving the state, socialism and the party and in simultaneously caring for the interests of the state, the collective and the individual. We must deal according to law with illegal behavior that violates state policies and decrees. We must strictly distinguish between the peasants' proper industrial and commercial activities and illegal behavior. We should protect all those who conform to the 10 measures mentioned above.

Speaking on the reform of the rural economic system, Comrade Feng Jixin said: If we fail to reverse the situation of reform of the superstructure lagging behind changes in the economic base, the enthusiasm of the peasants which has already surged up may be damaged afresh, and the rural economy which has been enlivened may be dampened again. We must have a sufficient understanding of the importance of this issue, which is related to the success or failure of all our undertakings.

Comrade Feng Jixin said: We must reform the commerce system and enliven the circulation channels. The way to do this is, in organizing to set up state-owned commercial companies separated from the administration and the enterprises, organize commodity circulation according to economic zones, reduce the number of layers and cardinal points in the wholesale trade, establish state-owned and state-operated, state-owned and collective-operated, or contract-operated systems according to the scale and characteristics of the retail enterprises, and gradually establish an opened-up circulation system with state-owned commerce as the dominant factor, coexistence of many different types of management system and circulation channels, and reduced cardinal links in circulations.

Comrade Feng Jixin said: We must speed up the reform of the supply and marketing cooperative system. The key points in this reform are, first to restore its nature of cooperative commerce, and strengthen its mass nature in organization, democratic nature in management, and flexible nature in operation. The county supply and marketing cooperatives should be changed into joint cooperatives of the grassroots cooperatives and turned into an economic entity. The economic functions of the grassroots supply and marketing cooperatives after their reform should be to launch various forms of joint agricultural-industrial-commercial operations in production, processing and sales, jointly operate with the communes, brigades and peasants production bases, processing enterprises and various service undertakings, and develop toward cooperative economy with joint agricultural-industrial-commercial operations.

Comrade Feng Jixin said: We must vigorously develop collective and individual economy in the urban and rural areas. Apart from large and medium shops, catering and service establishments in the towns which are invested in and operated by the state, and those in the rural areas which are operated by the supply and marketing cooperatives, we must give free rein to developing collective and individual economy. In particular, the small traders and peddlers and individual service establishments in the rural areas should be afforded the necessary support. Commune and brigade enterprises must continue to develop after consolidation. The minroity-nationality areas should develop collective and individual economy by following the principle of stressing small industry, collective ownership, hand-operated or semi-mechanized operation, use of local resources, and minority nationality staff and workers.

The enthusiasm of the peasants to learn cultural knowlege and learn and apply science is very high. An unprecedented situation has arisen in this respect. Our task is to meet the needs of the thousands of households in learning cultural knowledge and studying and applying science and provide appropriate assistance, so that scientific research and popularization and the spread of cultural knowledge will unfold on a still more extensive scale. This was stated by Comrade Feng Jixin at the conference. He said: Developing agricultural production depends on the progress of science and technology. We must get a good grasp of education in the rural areas. We must concentrate on four tasks in this respect next year:

1. Adopt various forms to popularize the results of effective scientific and technical research. We must actively organize the masses to run science themselves, promote technical contract systems, set up science and technology households, demonstration households, technical services companies, technical associations, and joint combines for engaging in production, science and technology, and so on.

2. Launch research in applied science and encourage the agricultural scientific research units and technical personnel to spontaneously serve agriculture and the peasants.

3. Actively work to reform the system of scientific research in the rural areas. We should gradually change the current systems of setting up agrotechnical popularization organs according to administrative units, and establish agricultural science and technology service centers according to economic zones.

4. Gradually reform the rural education structure and introduce universal primary education. School-age children aged from 7 to 13 in the rural areas must undergo primary education. By 1985, every country should have an agricultural or vocational secondary school. The curriculum from the primary fifth grade to secondary school must include basic agricultural knowledge or specialized lessons on agriculture, forestry, animal husbandry, sideline production and so on. Agricultural institutes of higher education must give priority to enrolling students from the rural areas. They must also train specialized talented people on the communes and brigades.

According to recent statistics from the provincial departments concerned, 99 percent of the province's production teams have now instituted the all-round contract system. In the Hedong Region, the figure is 99.5 percent. Progress in the Hexi Region has also been very fast, having reached 97 percent. At present, what new problems should be solved in respect of stabilizing and perfecting the system of contracted responsibilities with payment linked to output? Comrade Feng Jixin said in his speech at the conference: We must pay attention to five points:

1. We must correctly handle the relationship between unified and separate management. We must proceed from reality and practice unified or separate management as appropriate. We must avoid applying unified management to rescind the decision-making powers already given the peasants. Unified management must serve separate management, not vice versa.

2. At present we still mainly rely on the thousands of households to develop grain and diversification. We must further tap the potentials of the system of contracted responsibilities on the household basis. The superior features of this system are now continuing to develop and will spread to all areas and to all fields of agricultural production.

3. We must support the new combines, but we must conform to nature. We should adroitly guide action according to circumstances on the basis of the needs of production and the peasants' voluntariness, and gradually popularize these combines. At the same time, the new combines should center on the needs of developing commodity production, strengthen services before and after production, and practice specialized and socialized cooperation.

4. We must attach importance to supporting and developing all types of specialized households and households doing specialized jobs.

5. In the pastoral areas, apart from acting in accordance with the above four demands, in perfecting the responsibility systems we must work in light of the characteristics of animal husbandry, pay attention to grasping pasture construction, restructuring the herds, improving strains, and doing a good job in preventing and curing diseases, and properly solve all kinds of new problems that arise.

REAGAN CONCLUDES MIDEAST TALKS WITH KING HUSAYN

OW241904 Beijing XINHUA in English 1835 GMT 24 Dec 82

[Text] Washington, December 23 (XINHUA) -- There was no "dramatic breakthrough" or significant announcement made today as King Husayn concluded his week-long visit to this country.

The United States was hoping for Jordanian participation in the search for Middle East peace. There was no mention, however, of whether Jordan is prepared to join in this process through the inclusion of a Jordanian-Palestinian delegation in negotiations with Egypt, Israel and the United States, and whether both sides had agreed on measures necessary for the successful holding of such talks.

Jordan is the focus of U.S. diplomatic drive in the Middle East. The U.S. Government wants Husayn to play a key role in the Middle East peace initiative proposed by Reagan Sept. 1.

King Husayn has publicly supported Reagan's initiative, stating that Jordan recognized the right of Israel to exist and called on the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) to do the same.

Jordan is working together with the PLO and others to develop a formula whereby the Palestinians would participate with Jordan in broadened negotiations. Recently, Husayn and PLO Chairman Yasir 'Arafat had positive talks on the establishment of a "special relationship" between Jordan and a future Palestinian entity on the West Bank.

Reagan's initiative calls for an Israeli settlement freeze, Israeli withdrawal from the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip followed by Palestinian autonomy in association with Jordan.

During his visit, Husayn had sought U.S. assurances to press ahead with its initiative, and explained to Reagan the positions adopted by the Arab Fes summit. After his first meeting with the king Dec. 21, Reagan stressed "deep commitment" to his initiative and "the sense of urgency" with respect to the peace process.

Though voicing "optimism" about "direct negotiations" on the Palestinian problem, Reagan admitted at one point that "much work remains to be done and the road ahead is tough."

Observers here indicate that the main roadblocks standing in the way of implementing Reagan's plan are that the U.S. does not recognize the PLO which the Arab summit regarded as the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people and that Israel is still carrying on expansion and aggression.

REAGAN CALLS FOR USSR PULLOUT FROM AFGHANISTAN

OW270134 Beijing XINHUA in English 0102 GMT 27 Dec 82

[Text] Washington, December 26 (XINHUA) -- U.S. President Ronald Reagan today reiterated the U.S. position for a complete withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan.

In a statement issued on the occasion of the third anniversary of Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, Reagan said: "For the first time since the immediate aftermath of World War II the Soviets used a large-scale military force outside their borders and Eastern Europe to try to impose their will (on other countries)."

He said: "If this aggression should succeed it will have dangerous impact on the safety of free men everywhere."

However, he said, "three years after the invasion, the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan is not a success," because of "the spirit and will of the majority of the Afghan people", who continue to resist the Soviet invaders.

Reagan said the United States still adheres to the position of "a negotiated settlement for Afghanistan predicated on the complete withdrawal of Soviet troops."

SHULTZ'S SEVEN-NATION WEST EUROPEAN TOUR REVIEWED

OW251135 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1315 GMT 19 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, 19 Dec (XINHUA) -- Roundup: Shultz's West European Trip.

On 18 December U.S. Secretary of State Shultz concluded his 2-week trip tour of seven West European nations. After visiting West Germany and Belgium, he participated in the fall session of the NATO foreign ministers in Brussels and talks between the United States and the EC on farm products trade. Later, he visited the Netherlands, Italy, France, Spain and Britain. This was Shultz's first trip to the West European nations since he took office in July this year.

On the eve of his trip Schultz told a reporter that he only sought to make use of the opportunity of attending the NATO foreign ministers' conference to visit West European allies and that he had no important matter to deal with such as the signing of important agreements. However, the Western press was of the view that Shultz's trip was an important U.S. act aimed at coordinating with Western Europe its policy toward the Soviet Union and at further resolving U.S.-West European contradictions.

Everyone knows that in the past few years the United States has often disagreed with Western Europe. There have been contradictions between the United States and Western Europe. Occasionally these contradictions have been quite sharp. In its policy toward the Soviet Union, the United States, proceeding from its global strategy of vying with the Soviet Union for hegemony, has firmly advocated taking a tough stand toward the Soviet Union, whereas many West European nations hope to maintain the current "detente" status and continue to maintain or even strengthen economic and trade relations with the Soviet Union. The frenzied bickering between the United States and Western Europe not long ago on the trading of Soviet natural gas and West European pipeline equipment reflects the discord between the two sides on their policy toward the Soviet Union. It was at that time that the Soviet leadership changed. All this made the United States feel even more urgently the need to coordinate with the West European nations in its policy toward the Soviet Union.

During his trip Shultz adopted a more flexible attitude. On the one hand, he stressed the common interests of both sides in dealing with the Soviet Union and repeatedly emphasized that the Western nations "must maintain their military strength," while on the other hand he showed understanding of the stand of the West European nations and advocated adopting a "realistic attitude" toward the Soviet Union. His activities attained certain results. The differences between the two sides on their policy toward the Soviet Union were narrowed somewhat as a result of mutual concessions made by the United States and Western Europe. The final communique issued by the NATO foreign ministers' conference stressed that the attitude toward the Soviet Union should be "firm, realistic and constructive."

As for the issue of developing economic and trade relations with the Soviet Union and other East European nations, on the one hand it stressed the need to continue to develop such relations while, on the other hand, it emphatically pointed out that this kind of relations "must be compatible with the extensive security of the NATO allies" so as to "avoid helping the Soviet Union enhance its military strength."

During his visit to Europe, Shultz also made some progress in strengthening NATO's defense and unity. After NATO decided in 1979 to begin deploying new medium-range guided missiles in Western Europe at the end of 1983, various West European nations suffered a recession and encountered financial difficulties. The pacifist movement had been on the rise in various countries, and the plan had not been carried out smoothly. However, at the NATO foreign ministers conference, only new NATO member Spain abstained. The other 15 nations unanimously reaffirmed their determination to implement the plan. Even the Dutch government, which had not decided whether or not guided missiles should be deployed on its territory, also said that it would prepare for the deployment of the guided missiles. All this is of great significance in strengthening the U.S. position in the U.S.-Soviet talks in Geneva on limiting medium-range nuclear weapons and in sharpening Western Europe's defenses.

The talks between Shultz and the EC leaders on the U.S.-European agricultural products trade dispute failed to yield some essential results. However, the two sides realized that a trade war between the United States and Western Europe would benefit only the Soviet Union. Therefore, they agreed to "cooperate with each other instead of fighting each other." Shultz believed that the talks had "paved the way for solving problems." Both sides agreed to continue their negotiations in January next year.

As Shultz completed his tour of Western Europe, REUTERS on 18 December carried a commentary, saying: "Shultz has scored some achievements in easing the contradictions between the United States and its allies," but he still faces a long and endless journey in smoothing out the differences that have flared up between the United States and Western Europe due to various reasons.

XINHUA ANALYZES U.S. DIPLOMACY IN 1982

OW261130 Beijing XINHUA in English 1109 GMT 26 Dec 82

["A Look at U.S. Diplomacy in 1982" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Washington, December 26 (XINHUA correspondent Peng Di) -- For many countries, 1982 is a year of frustration and disquiet with their economies plagued by a recession which engulfs Europe and America with repercussions felt all over the world.

To the United States, the passing year is not propitious. The current economic crisis, beginning in August last year and the eighth since the end of the Second World War, has up to date shown no signs of picking up, with the number of jobless hitting a post-war high.

Things did not look up in the U.S. relations with other countries. The United States and the Soviet Union are now still locked in an all-round confrontation. Though both sides from time to time voiced appeals for relaxation and put forth disarmament proposals, they are in reality going all out to do each other down.

U.S. relations with its West European allies and Japan have also become more strained than ever, contradictions turned very sharp at times. The almost concurrent recessions have exacerbated all the long-standing conflicts of economic interests between the United States and Europe and Japan. Hard times have refueled their frictions.

The passing year saw little improvement in the U.S. relations with Third World countries as well.

Take the Middle East as an example. The United States supported and acquiesced in Israel's attempt to wipe out PLO militarily and crush it politically. It even egged Israel on to continue and enlarge its occupation of vast tracts of Arab land, to the bitterness of many Arab nations and peoples. In other places, the United States also tried to impose its own will on others.

Quite a few of Washington's closest friends are fanatic and aggressive regimes such as those in Israel and South Africa and reactionary governments notorious throughout the world. Such abnormality obviously does no good to the United States and the world as a whole.

As 1982 is drawing to a close and the new year is about to begin, many countries are re-adjusting their domestic and foreign policies according to the changing international situation. The United States seems no exception. In the Middle East, for example, it is backing down from a full support of Israel's antagonism against the Arab countries and seeking a way of conciliation. In its relations with China, instead of submitting totally to pressure from the ultra-rightists who have tried hard to undermine Sino-U.S. relations, Washington signed a joint communique as a guide to future actions. It has also made efforts to mend fences to prevent relations with its West European allies from further deteriorating.

Nevertheless, inside and outside the U.S. administration there are all sorts of power blocs, lobby groups and think-tanks. Some suggest that since the Reagan administration was known for its "conservative" character when it came to power two years ago, it should follow a set of "conservative" policies to rule the country, otherwise it would be seen as a "betrayal" of its own nature. They regard as heretical the countries different from the United States in political beliefs and social systems and the nationalism of the Palestinian people as well, and want to do everything possible to have them eliminated. They have no regard even to the sacred independence and sovereignty of other countries. If these policies were put into practice, then it can be predicted that 1983 would be another year of failure for the United States. Fortunately, they are not favored by those Americans who understand the times and take an overall view of the situation, nor are the ideas shared by all those who hold the country's political, financial and military power today. This may well be a ray of hope for the United States in the coming year.

XINHUA EXAMINES U.S. ECONOMIC RECESSION

OW250856 Beijing XHINUA in English 0701 GMT 25 Dec 82

["Roundup: Most Serious Postwar Recession in U.S. -- by XINHUA Correspondent Yu Enguang" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Washington, December 25 (XINHUA) -- The United States has passed the year of 1982 in an economic recession with no signs of recovery in sight.

The current recession, the eighth and most serious since World War II, has entered its 17th month. The main official indices released recently depict the harsh reality today and the gloomy prospects for 1983.

Industrial production in the U.S. continued to decline in November and the production index has decreased by 11.9 percent from the peak before the recession which began in August 1981.

It is estimated that the real U.S. gross national product in 1982 may drop by 1.7 percent, the biggest postwar decline.

In November, operation capacity was only 67.8 percent, the lowest ever recorded. The auto and steel industries operated at 50 and 40 percent of capacity respectively.

By mid-November, the number of bankruptcies exceeded 22,000, a record high since the great depression of the 1930's.

Unemployment rate has grown from 7 percent to 10.8 percent in the past 17 months. At present there are 12 million unemployed and 6.5 million semi-employed.

Trade deficits for the first 10 months of this year totalled 35 billion dollars and that for the year 1982 may surpass 42 billion dollars, close to the record 1978 figure of 42.3 billion.

The federal budget deficit in fiscal 1982, which ended on September 30 reached a record 110.7 billion dollars. In fiscal 1983 it may be as high as 180 to 200 billion dollars.

The current recession sweeping the United States is far more serious than what the U.S. administration and economists have predicted. Ronald Reagan's efforts to revive the U.S. economy by reducing taxes to stimulate investment and consumption on the one hand and cutting government spending and tightening monetary supply to control inflation on the other have proved fruitless.

The failure of Reagan's economic recovery program is determined by the present economic situation in the United States and in the Western world as a whole.

The economic recession in the United States is first of all characterized by the grave stagnation of production complicated with inflation. Ever since the mid-70's, the U.S. economy has been struggling amidst "stagflation" -- the result of practising Keynesianism by the U.S. administrations for more than 40 years. The previous administrations' attempt to revive the U.S. economy either by stimulating production or by controlling inflation all ended in failure. Ronald Reagan wanted to cure the two maladies simultaneously. However, his tight-money measures, which forced down inflation for the time being, have brought about high interest rates. Persistent high interest rates have not only offset the benefits received by corporations and individuals from tax cuts but have also dealt heavy blows at the interest-sensitive auto and construction industries, thereby accelerating the emergence of the current economic recession.

Huge federal deficits have also brought about grave consequences. During the 20 years from 1961 to 1981, the United States' financial accounts were all in the red except for 1969 which saw a small surplus. Although President Reagan has repeatedly pledged to eliminate this monster obstructing the advance of the U.S. economy and proclaimed that a balanced federal budget would be realized in 1984, the figures in red continued to increase as tax cuts were larger than the cutbacks in expenditure in the past two years. This has caused an acute scramble between the government and private enterprises for funds and credits in the monetary markets, adding another factor to the continuous rise of interest rates.

The decline in both labor productivity and fixed capital investment rate has weakened the U.S. competitive capability. As compared with the 3.2 percent annual growth rate in the 1950's and 1960's labor productivity increased by only 2 percent in the late 1970's and early 1980's, the lowest among the major capitalist countries. The annual growth rate of the U.S. businesses' fixed capital investment fell sharply in the 1970's as compared with the 1960's. At present, national fixed capital investment only accounts for 10.2 percent of the gross national product, also the lowest among the major capitalist countries. These chronic economic illnesses are far too much for the Reagan administration to cope with.

The world economic situation and the Western economic recession have aggravated the degenerating U.S. economy. In the past, Western countries were not hit by economic recession or gained recovery at the same time, thereby enabling each country to avoid the serious impact of others. Since the 1970's however, the simultaneity of recession in the Western countries has become more obvious, making them hold back one another. Most outstanding in the current recession is the resort to protectionist policies by the United States, Western Europe and Japan to safeguard their own interests, thus intensifying to white heat the trade war for world markets. Meanwhile, the developing countries, suffering from the shifting of the economic crisis on to them by the West, are over burdened with debts and have to reduce their imports. This undoubtedly adds more obstacles to a recovery of the U.S. economy.

Forecasts of the economy are being made by the U.S. administration and the economists, but no one can provide convincing evidence to show when the economy will begin to recover. On the contrary, an almost unanimous view is that 1983 will be another year of uncertainty and difficulties for the U.S. economy.

U.S. SPECIALISTS APPOINTED MINISTRY'S ADVISERS

OW250834 Beijing XINHUA in English 0727 GMT 25 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 25 (XINHUA) -- American specialists Erwin Engst and Joan Hinton have been appointed advisors to the Chinese Ministry of Machine-Building Industry and deputy directors of the research institute of stockraising and chicken farming machinery under the Chinese Academy of Agricultural Mechanization.

Minister Zhou Jiannan delivered the letters of appointment to them yesterday afternoon.

The American specialists were appointed in October 1979 advisors to the Ministry of Agricultural Machinery, which was incorporated into the Ministry of Machine-Building Industry in May this year.

Erwin Engst majored in agricultural sciences at Cornell University, New York. In 1946, he decided to come to Yanan, the then heartland of the Chinese revolution and began his career as a dairy cattle farmer on the Guanghua farm.

Joan Hinton, a nuclear physicist by training, left the United States in 1948 and arrived also in northern Shaanxi Province after many setbacks. They were married in a cave in Yanan in April 1949. They have since then devoted themselves to the great cause of the Chinese people and their contributions were highly appreciated by Chinese people.

LIAO CHENGZHI FETES CHINESE-AMERICAN PROFESSOR

OW251517 Beijing in Mandarin to Taiwan 1500 GMT 23 Dec 82

[Text] Liao Chengzhi, vice chairman of the NPC Standing Committee and honorary chairman of the Overseas Chinese History Society, recently met with and feted Professor (Wang Mingzhi), a noted Chinese-American scholar, director of the University of California's department for the studies of minority nationalities and director of the Association for Promotion of Chinese-Americans' Interests.

Liao Chengzhi inquired of Professor (Wang Mingzhi) about his life and work in the United States and asked the latter to relay his regards to his friends in the United States.

Professor (Wang Mingzhi) said: I have visited Guangdong's Taishan, Xinhui and Kaiping from which many overseas Chinese came. I have seen tremendous changes and quick construction taking place there. There is a plentiful supply of commodities on the market, and the people live and work in peace and contentment. The current situation is quite different from what I saw in 1976 when I visited these places the last time.

Professor (Wang Mingzhi) also said: Whether Sino-U.S. relations are good or bad has a tremendous bearing on the Chinese-Americans and Chinese nationals living in the United States. I am willing to work for promoting friendly relations between China and the United States.

ANDROPOV, KARMAL DISCUSS AFGHANISTAN

OW240740 Beijing XINHUA in English 1701 GMT 24 Dec 82

[Text] Moscow, December 23 (XINHUA) -- Soviet leader Yuriy Andropov discussed the Afghanistan question with chief of the Kabul regime Babrak Karmal here today, according to a TASS report.

The two sides evaded the fact that the Soviet Union is stationing large numbers of troops in Afghanistan and the patriots in that country are persisting in their resistance. Instead, they stressed that the main obstacle to peace in Afghanistan was "the continued armed intervention in its internal affairs from the outside implemented by U.S. imperialism and its accomplices."

They also ignored the repeated demand of the United Nations that the Soviet Union withdraw its troops from that country, but insisted on the so-called political settlement of the Afghanistan question put forward by the Kabul regime.

SOVIETS SAID TO DROP CHEMICALS IN AFGHANISTAN

HK260833 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 26 Dec 82 p 6

["International Jottings" by Wen Zheng [2429 2398]: "Chemical Bombs and PRAVDA"]

[Text] PRAVDA published an article on 16 December reiterating yet again that more than 100,000 Soviet troops are occupying Afghanistan in order to enable "the Afghan people to build their life according to their wishes" and to "extend a helping hand" to the country. PRAVDA went as far as to hang a garland of "helping hand" around the neck of the Soviet authorities and to tag others with the label "harming people."

It is a pity that according to information from Afghanistan in recent days, Soviet military helicopters dropped chemical bombs in the (Bakta) and (Shana) areas, killing by poison 84 Afghan civilians. The poison gas produced by these bombs has lingered in the area many days without dissipating.

The chemical bombs dropped by the Soviet forces happen to append a footnote to the PRAVDA article: "Helpers" mean killers.

Anyone who describes the slaughter of peaceful inhabitants as "extending a helping hand" has either muddled logic or is in a state of delirium.

NAKASONE MESSAGE STRESSES BILATERAL TIES

OW250925 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1721 GMT 23 Dec 82

[Text] Tokyo, 23 Dec (XINHUA) -- The unshakable Japanese-Chinese relationship of trust must be further developed, says Japanese Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone in a new year greeting message in the 1 January issue of JAPAN AND CHINA, organ of the Japan-China Friendship Association, which is published every 10 days.

Prime Minister Nakasone says in the greeting message: "Following the normalization of diplomatic ties between Japan and China, bilateral relations have been developing solidly in the political, economic, cultural and other fields, and this development has become the pillar of extensive exchanges between the Japanese and Chinese people."

Nakasone praises the Japan-China Friendship Association for its positive contributions to the promotion of friendship and mutual understanding between the people of the two countries. He says: "Today, when the relations of the two countries are entering s new decade, the mission on our shoulders is heavier than ever before. This mission is: Japan and China must continue to reaffirm their unshakable relations of trust on the foundation built during the last decade. Needless to say, this mission cannot be accomplished without the unremitting efforts and renewed enthusiasm of the people."

Greeting messages from Tokuma Ustunomiya and Toshio Kurihara, president and director-general respectively of the Japan-China Friendship Association, are also published in the current issue of JAPAN AND CHINA. In their messages, they recall the development of the Japanese-Chinese friendship movement and call on members of the association to achieve still greater successes in promoting Japanese-Chinese friendship during the new year.

THIRD ANNIVERSARY OF AFGHAN INVASION NOTED

RENMIN RIBAO 27 Dec Editorial

HK270738 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 27 Dec 82 p 1

[Editorial: "The Afghan People Will Certainly Triumph"]

[Text] Three years have passed since the Soviet armed invasion of Afghanistan.

In these past 3 years, the heroic Afghan people have held aloft the banner of national independence and waged tough and outstanding opposition to the aggressive war in the whole country, from Kabul to the villages and mountains. Defying brute force and heedless of sacrifices, the Afghan people have bravely and stubbornly resisted the aggressors armed with modern weapons, and won tremendous victories. Hard facts have proven that the Afghan people with a glorious tradition of struggle against aggression are unconquerable. Their monolithic determination to safeguard national independence is unshakable, whereas the aggressors find their every move frustrated and bogged down in the mire.

The Soviet aggression against Afghanistan is a major step in the Soviet global strategy for world domination. Three years ago, Moscow believed that with a "limited" force and its sophisticated weapons plus the Karmal regime it had propped up, it could subjugate the small mountain state of Afghanistan in a few months and turn it into a springboard for its southward drive. However, the aggressor has overestimated its own power and underestimated the capability of resistance of a weak and small nation. For the past 3 years, the flames of the Afghan people's struggle against aggression has been raging ever more fiercely and the aggressor troops have suffered serious setbacks. It is reported that the Afghan resistance forces now control vast areas and have established local governments in some places, while the 100,000-strong aggressor troops control only some cities, military bases and major communication points and are subject to constant guerrilla attacks. According to reports, the aggressors have already suffered more than 10,000 casualties in Afghanistan. The heroic resistance of the Afghan people is forcing the Soviet Union to take step by step the same disastrous road taken by the United States on the battlefields of Vietnam. Soviet figures have recently had to admit that there can be no good outcome of the continuing Afghan crisis.

The fundamental reason for the constant success of the Afghan resistance forces is that they are waging a just war against invasion by an alien nation and for the defense of national independence. Although they began with backward weapons, thanks to their high morals, lofty fighting spirit and persistence in guerrilla war they have gained the positive support of the masses and have thus been able to go on fighting and continually scored encouraging victories. In the course of severe trials and tests over these 3 years, the Afghan resistance forces have been developed and enhanced in leadership, arms and organization. This testifies to the following irrefutable truth: Superpowers are nothing to fear. A powerful modern army may eliminate a smaller modern regular army, but it will never be able to wipe out a popular and patriotic armed force of popular resistance. So long as a people that is the victim of aggression unites as one and resolutely fights back at the aggressors, it will certainly be able to defeat an enemy that dares to invade and win great victory.

The Afghan people's struggle against aggression is an integral part of the struggle of the world's peace-loving people to safeguard world peace against hegemonism. Hence, the extensive sympathy and support they have from the people the world over. In the past years, the international community has strongly condemned the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

The UN General Assembly and other international organizations have time and again adopted resolutions calling for the unconditional and complete withdrawal of the Soviet troops from Afghanistan. Heedless of the solemn demands of international public opinion, the Soviet Union has stubbornly and persistently clung to its policy of aggression and expansion. However, the invasion of Afghanistan has isolated the Soviet Union to an unprecedented extent on the international scene, intensified its domestic difficulties, and also checked the momentum of its rivalry with the United States for hegemony in other parts of the world. In order to extricate itself from the predicament, the Soviet Union, while intensifying its "search and destroy" operations against the Afghan guerrillas, has made gestures about its readiness for a "political solution" to the Afghan issue. But the essence of the Soviet "political solution" is to acquire international recognition of, and thereby to legalize, the fait accompli of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. PRAVDA recently published an article on the Afghan issue, which stuck to the hackneyed tune of guaranteeing an end to external interference before withdrawing the troops. This actually means regarding as the condition for withdrawal the cessation of the Afghan people's struggle against aggression and the support of the peoples of various countries for this just struggle. This is putting the cart before the horse; it is an out-and-out fraud. A "political solution" to the Afghan issue is possible only if the resolutions adopted at all UN General Assembly sessions, the Islamic summit conferences and the nonaligned foreign ministers conferences are strictly implemented, all foreign troops are withdrawn immediately and unconditionally from Afghanistan, the Afghan people are allowed to exercise their right to self-determination without external interference, the status of independence and nonalignment is restored to Afghanistan and the Afghan refugees are allowed to return to their homeland safely and with dignity. This is the only correct way to resolve the Afghanistan issue. To engage in empty talk about a "political solution" without withdrawing the troops can only show that the Soviet Union is not in the slightest degree sincere about solving the Afghan problem.

The struggle around the Afghanistan issue is one of great significance that has a bearing on the strategic situation of the world. Compromises with and concessions to the aggressor with regard to the Afghanistan issue or tolerance of the Soviet schemes to occupy Afghanistan by force will only swell the arrogance of the hegemonists and aggravate the threats to the peace and security of the whole world. Therefore, all peace-loving and justice-upholding countries and people of the world must increase their support for the just struggle of the Afghan people against hegemonism, continue and increase the pressure on the aggressor, and provide moral and material assistance to the Afghan people in their struggle against aggression so as to bring about an equitable and rational solution to the Afghanistan issue conforming with the interests of the Afghan people.

Afghanistan is a neighbor of China. By invading Afghanistan and massing its troops along the Afghan-Chinese border, the Soviet Union is also posing a grave threat to China's security. The Chinese people have always firmly supported the Afghan people in their just struggle and resolutely demanded the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of all the Soviet troops from Afghanistan so that the Afghan people may resolve their own problems free of external interference. Today, as we recall the developments and changes in Afghanistan over the past 3 years, we believe all the more strongly that the Afghan people are bound to win still greater victories in future struggle!

[Article by Shi Jingfan [2457 7234 5302]: "The Afghan Situation in the 3 Years Since the Soviet Invasion"]

[Text] The 27 December marks the third anniversary of the Soviet armed invasion of Afghanistan.

Three years ago today, the Soviet Union brazenly poured troops into that country in an attempt to occupy the whole country at one swoop. In the course of 3 years of repeated trials of strength on the battlefield between the Afghan people and the Soviet aggressor army, far from succeeding in its conspiracy of aggression, the Soviet Union has actually become more and more bogged in the mire. Today Afghanistan has become a heavy burden for Soviet hegemonism.

The number of Soviet troops sent into Afghanistan has grown in the past 3 years from 80,000 to over 100,000. Although the Soviet Union has used all types of modern arms on the battlefield, even employing poison gas to slaughter the Afghan people, today the Soviet Army can only control a number of main towns, military bases and main lines of communication in the country. Broad regions, especially the mountain areas, are still held by the patriotic Afghan armed forces. This year the Soviet forces have launched seven fierce assaults on the guerillas' strategic position, the Panjsher Valley, in a vain attempt to destroy the guerrilla bases there and eliminate the threat to the main road between the Soviet Union and Kabul. However, the guerillas either smashed the enemy attacks or took the initiative in attacking the enemy after taking evasive action. The Panjsher Valley remains in guerrilla hands.

Apart from directly dispatching its aggressor army to Afghanistan, the Soviet Union has also sought to use Afghans to kill Afghans. However, the Karmal puppet regime lacks sufficient troop resources, their morale is low, and more and more soldiers have deserted, fled, or gone over to the side of the guerrillas. At one time the 90,000-strong-puppet army was reduced to 30,000 or 40,000. In the past 3 years the Soviets have suffered several tens of thousands of casualties of officers and men (including a number of generals); 160 aircraft have been shot down by the guerrillas, and 2,500 vehicles and tanks have been destroyed. The expenses of the aggressor army run to $6 million a day, and the past 3 years have cost more than $1 billion.

During these 3 years, far from being overwhelmed by the seemingly all-powerful Soviet aggressor army, the Afghan resistance forces have struck at the enemy with mobile and flexible guerrilla tactics, which have badly battered the Soviet aggressor army. The situation in the Afghan people's struggle of resistance to Soviet aggression is getting better and better. They have now built secure bases and expanded their areas of control. Guerrillas are active in all but 5 or 6 of the more than 20 provinces. Areas of guerrilla activity or areas under guerrilla control account for 90 percent of the total area of the country. They have also established local governments in the liberated areas.

This year the guerrillas have stepped up their activities in Kabul, Herat, Qandahar, Ghazni and Jallalabad provinces and have launched continual attacks on the enemy there. They have ambushed highways, frequently cut the enemy's communications lines and killed many of the enemy. The anti-Soviet Afghan resistance forces have now grown from 30 or 30 to more than 70, and some of them have started to fight in coordination. In May this year, seven Afghan freedom-fighter organizations formed an Islamic league of Afghan freedom-fighter organizations; they have also made efforts to consolidate and expand the joint resistance forces, thus constantly intensifying the Afghan battle against Soviet invasion and occupation. By now the number of Afghan guerrillas has grown to nearly 100,000; these fighters who persistently wage guerrilla war are high in morale and fighting spirit. They have gained the active support of the masses and also the sympathy, aid and support of the world's peoples.

Although they are still facing many difficulties, the facts of the past 3 years have shown that the flames of the heroic and unbowed Afghan people's struggle to preserve national independence and win their own decisionmaking powers cannot possibly be extinguished by the aggressors.

PRC Groups Support Resistance

OW251558 Beijing XINHUA in English 1524 GMT 25 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 25 (XINHUA) -- Chinese organisations today resolutely demanded an unconditional Soviet withdrawal from Afghanistan.

A leader of the Chinese People's Association for Friendship With Foreign Countries and [the] vice president of the Islamic Association of China made this demand today in their separate speeches on the eve of the 3rd anniversary of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

The leader of the Chinese People's Association for Friendship With Foreign Countries said that the Soviet occupation has violated both international law and the U.N. Charter, wantonly trampled on Afghanistan's independence and self-determination, produced a large number of Afghan refugees and seriously threatened world peace and stability.

The Soviet policy-makers thought they could easily subdue the little neighbor and make it a bridgehead for its expansion to South Asia and the Persian Gulf, but their calculation has turned out entirely worng, the leader said. The Afghan people, he said, have since put up staunch resistance, and the Soviet troops now find [it] unsafe even in their headquarters in the tightly quided Afghan capital of Kabul.

The Chinese people have all along sympathized with and given firm support to the Afghan people in their just struggle, the leader said.

China resolutely demanded that the Soviet Union implement relevant U.N. resolutions, unconditionally withdraw all its troops from Afghanistan and stop its invasion of and intervention in that country so as to restore Afghanistan's independence, self-determination and non-alignment and let Afghan refugees return home safely and begin anew a peaceful life in their homeland, the leader said.

Afghanistan's cause will surely win support the world over, the leader said, quoting a Chinese proverb: "A just cause enjoys abundant support while an unjust cause finds little support."

Hadji Ilyas Shen Xiaxi, vice-president of the Islamic Association of China, extended in a speech on the same day an all-out support of all the Chinese Islamics to the Afghan Islamics in their struggle against the Soviet occupation troops.

The leaders of both associations said that they believed the Afghan people will certainly drive out the Soviet aggressors out of their sacred land and win independence, freedom and final victory.

SOVIET-KARMAL TROOP CASUALTIES REPORTED

OW252000 Beijing XINHUA in English 1939 GMT 25 Dec 82

[Text] Islamabad, December 25 (XINHUA) -- The Afghan resistance forces have inflicted more casualties and material losses on the Soviet-Karmal troops in their intensified attacks in various provinces since winter set in.

In Kabul Province, the freedom fighters assaulted a military post in Mohman Dara County on November 25, killing 14 Karmal troops and capturing two others. Two Soviet jeeps were destroyed and four Soviet officers on board killed in an ambush in Kabul City the following day.

On December 6 in Aybak Province, the guerrillas ambushed a military convoy consisting of large numbers of tanks and armored vehicles. 50 Soviet-Karmal soldiers were killed and six tanks destroyed by mortar, rocket and gun fire. A helicopter gunship was shot down as the enemy conducted bombing in revenge.

In Qandahar Province, the Afghan freedom fighters killed 14 Soviet-Karmal troops and captured 12 others, including a major, in an operation in the first week of December. On December 7, they attacked a convoy near Shoor Andam area of the province, destroying one tank and two jeeps.

In a six-hour operation earlier on November 25, the guerrillas attacked a Soviet force on Qandahar-Herat highway. As a result, 25 Soviet troops were killed and five tanks and two armored personnel carriers destroyed.

In mid-November in the northern part of Afghanistan, the guerrillas cut off a 250-kilometer double pipeline which provides petrol and diesel oil for the largest Soviet Army center of Qalagai, north of the Hindu Kush Mountain, landing the occupational troops in an oil crunch. Earlier on November 2, the freedom fighters destroyed the northern part of the 2.6-kilometer tunnel on the Salang highway linking the Soviet Union with Kabul. They killed 700 Soviet troops and blocked the traffic of military supplies to the Soviet troops in Afghanistan.

XINHUA INTERVIEWS AFGHAN REBEL LEADER

OW240810 Beijing XINHUA in English 0738 GMT 24 Dec 82

["Afghan Resistance Forces Persist in Struggle -- by Correspondents Ma Guang and Zhang Zhinian" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Islamabad, December 24 (XINHUA) -- "The mujahidin (freedom fighters) can drive their carts in and out of Kabul while Soviet advisers have to travel in armored vehicles or under the escort of tanks. This is the true situation in Afghanistan."

This was stated by Burhanuddin Rabbani, a member of the Supreme Council of the Islamic Unity of Afghanistan Mujahidin. Rabbani, a noted professor, used to teach Islamic philosophy in the University of Kabul.

In an exclusive interview in the Pakistani border town of Peshawar, Professor Rabbani briefed us about the developments in Afghanistan since Soviet troops invaded the country three years ago.

"What happened in the past three years prove that the Russians have miscalculated. They have failed to attain their strategic target in their invasion," he said. When the Soviet Union launched its massive and surprise invasion of Afghanistan at the end of 1979, not a few people had doubts whether the Afghan people, poor and weak, could withstand the Soviet aggression.

In the past three years the number of Soviet troops in Afghanistan has increased from 85,000 to more than 100,000, but they can only control a number of major cities, military bases and important communication lines. "Three years of practice in war have deepened our understanding and strengthened our confidence," Rabbani said.

"In the three years of fighting," he went on, "the mujahidin have grown stronger instead of being weakened."

He recalled that in the early days of resistance, the mujahidin sometimes concentrated thousands of poorly-armed guerrillas to encircle and attack Soviet military bases. While they demonstrated an admirable undaunted spirit, they suffered heavy casualties. Now they have learned the tactics of guerrilla warfare and are better equipped, thanks to the weapons seized from the enemy. They destroy enemy military installations, ambush Soviet convoys and raid isolated enemy strongholds, inflicting heavy casualties on the enemy.

Rabbani cited the Panjsher Valley battle as an example. Since last May the Soviet occupation authorities had mobilized tens of thousands of troops supported by large numbers of aircraft and tanks to seek and destroy some 3,000 guerrillas in the valley, which is about 80 kilometers northeast of Kabul. With mines, ambushes and other flexible tactics, the guerrillas succeeded in resisting the intruders. In August, freedom fighters attacked the Kabul Airport, destroying a dozen of airplanes and an oil depot.

About the different factions of the resistance forces, he said that they are getting united in the struggle. "This is a progress for us," he noted. In March this year, three groups of resistance forces formed the Islamic Unity of Afghanistan Mujahidin. In May seven other groups got united in an organization bearing the same name, which included Rabbani's Jamiat-i Islami Afghanistan (Afghan Islamic Society). On the battlefield, the guerrillas of different tribes often cooperate with one another, the successful Panjsher Valley resistance operation was a case in point.

Rabbani said, "We are facing a common enemy. We have common interests. The founding of a national leading organization is instrumental to defeating the Soviet invaders. We will make every effort to promote the unity of various resistance forces."

About the predicament of the Soviet occupation authorities, he said, "the Soviet Union is fighting a war that it can never win."

After suffering repeated setbacks the Soviet troops have changed their tactics. They have ceased to mount all-out offensives. Instead they now concentrate their strength in operations in strategic places where the guerrillas are active. In these operations, Soviet aircraft destroy villages and render many people destitute, forcing them to flee their country and become refugees. But they have failed to wipe out the freedom fighters and, still less, make the Afghan people submit.

Rabbani said that the recent U.N. resolution adopted with an overwhelming majority and calling for the withdrawal of foreign troops from Afghanistan shows how isolated the Soviet Union is politically in the world.

After summing up the general situation in Afghanistan, the professor said firmly, "Afghanistan has a tradition of resisting foreign aggression. The Afghans are able to fight on even in very difficult conditions."

PAKISTANI PRESS SCORES SOVIET OCCUPATION OF DRA

OW271319 Beijing XINHUA in English 1148 GMT 27 Dec 82

[Text] Islamabad, December 27 (XINHUA) -- Pakistani newspapers today denounced the Soviet atrocities committed in Afghanistan and demanded Soviet troop withdrawal on the occasion of the third anniversary of the Soviet invasion of that country.

The PAKISTAN TIMES said in an editorial that during the three years of Soviet sanguinary occupation of Afghanistan, numerous villages were destroyed, tens of thousands of Afghans killed and millions made homeless.

The editorial condemned the Soviet Union for using all weaponry, including cluster bombs, 30-round grenade launchers and the most lethal gunships, against the Afghan civilians. There is also evidence of chemical weapons being used.

The editorial said, "In spite of all this savagery, the Karmal regime does not control areas 12 miles away from Kabul and the freedom fighters have kept the countryside in a state of revolt against history's most blatant military adventure."

It urged the international community to take effective measures to force Moscow to terminate its aggression against that country.

The MUSLIM pointed out in an editorial that "Moscow's image in the international community has greatly tarnished while the Russians have had to pay for their misdventure in terms of losses incurred in manpower and material." It demanded Soviet pullout from that country.

A signed article in the MUSLIM today pointed out, "The Soviet military machine is bogged down in a struggle against the Mujahidin in which it has succeeded neither in breaking the back of the resistance nor in the political consolidation of the country." The Soviet Union, it said, has been caught in a dilemma, "the longer they stay, the more they alienate the people."

WEST EUROPE COUNTRIES REJECT USSR MISSILE PLAN

'Unacceptable' to UK

OW240408 Beijing XINHUA in English 2047 GMT 23 Dec 82

[Text] London, December 23 (XINHUA) -- British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher reiterated today that the Soviet proposals on the reduction of medium-range nuclear missiles in Europe were "unacceptable". She told Parliament that the only viable option was to get rid of all medium-range nuclear weapons in Europe on both sides. The Soviet Union offered to cut back on its medium-range missiles targeted on Western Europe on condition that the NATO alliance scrapped its planned deployment of 572 cruise and Pershing II missiles in Europe. Mrs Thatcher declared: "The policy of the government is the zero option." The danger of a nuclear war in Europe would not be reduced by Moscow's proposals, she added.

Foreign Secretary Francis Pym said in the House of Commons yesterday that the stationing of cruise missiles in Britain could be reviewed if the superpowers, the Soviet Union and the United States, agreed on arms control. But he indicated that Moscow's request to include British nuclear weapons in the negotiations was an attempt to divert attention from the real power imbalance at the heart of the problem. Britain's strategic missiles could not be included in the arms negotiations at Geneva between the Soviet Union and the United States, he said.

Italy Scores Proposal

OW241112 Beijing XINHUA in English 0751 GMT 24 Dec 82

[Text] Rome, December 23 (XINHUA) -- Italy said today Soviet leader Yuriy Andropov's latest proposal on reducing intermediate-range missiles had no "substantial difference" from the Russian position in the past. A Foreign Ministry statement said Andropov's proposal offered "no more than the withdrawal of some of the Soviet mobile SS-20 missiles behind the Urals in exchange for the dropping of the entire NATO plan of deploying Pershing 2 and cruise missiles." This did not conform to the goal of achieving a parity in nuclear missiles between East and West, the statement noted. Andropov's proposal had some "potential factors" in speeding up the nuclear talks in Geneva but Moscow's expressed willingness to reduce its strategic weapons launchers was but a reaffirmation of its consistent position in the past, the statement said.

More Nations Decry Plan

OW240404 Beijing XINHUA in English 1654 GMT 23 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 23 (XINHUA) -- West Germany, Belgium, the Netherlands and Denmark expressed skepticism at the Soviet offer of cutting its medium-range nuclear missiles in Europe.

A West German Government spokesman said Tuesday that Soviet leader Yuriy V. Andropov's offer to reduce the number of missiles to the level held by France and Britain sounded "good" but would not achieve parity. A Belgiun Foreign Ministry spokesman said yesterday Andropov's offer was aimed at "cheating the public opinion in the West." He views the zero option proposal as the best way to ensure security in Europe. Zero option calls for the Soviet Union to dismantle all SS-20 intermediate-range missiles in Europe in exchange for an agreement by NATO not to deploy new Pershing-2 and cruise missiles there next year.

Dutch Defense Minister Jacob de Ruiter said the same day there are many "negative factors" in the Soviet proposal and that "we cannot see it as a great breakthrough." Danish Foreign Minister Uffe Ellemann-Jensen said the offer is only a "very small step" in the correct direction and is still not strongly convincing, for it ensures Soviet superiority in medium-range missiles.

He said: "We, as always, are willing to develop bilateral relations with China on the basis of mutual benefit and taking all interests into consideration."

ZHAO LEAVES EGYPT; FLIES TO ALGERIA, MOROCCO

Tours More Historic Sites

OW240301 Beijing XINHUA in English 0217 GMT 24 Dec 82

[Text] Cairo, December 23 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang today toured the ancient city of Luxor and the Aswan High Dam in the company of Egyptian Deputy Premier and Minister of Education and Scientific Research Mustafa Kamal Hilmi.

When he arrived at Luxor, about 700 kilometers south of Cairo, he was greeted at the airport by 'Abd al-Haim as-Saidi, governor of the Luxor Governorate.

Zhao Ziyang and his party then crossed the Nile and drove to the "Valley of Kings" where the Temple of Eldear Elbahrabs Hatshpesot, built on the slope of a barren limestone hill about four thousand years ago, overlooks the vast sugarcane estates in the oasis along the west bank of the Nile River.

Luxor is now a major Egyptian tourist resort. It was part of the capital of the ancient kingdoms where 64 tombs of pharaohs have been unearthed so far. Among them is Totankhamen's tomb which was discovered in 1922.

The Chinese premier then drove to the tomb where some 4,500 antiquities were found. He visited the burial chamber where the reproduced mummy of the pharaoh is displayed, and examined with interest the wall pictures and hieroglyphics depicting the pharoah's mythical life.

After seeing the tomb of Ramses the Third, Premier Zhao returned to the east bank of the Nile to visit the site of the Karnak Temple built about four thousand years ago. When the Chinese guests came out of the temple, young Egyptian girls performed a dance popular during the ancient pharaohs' time. The Chinese premier was also presented with a piece of granite plate on which ancient Egyptian hieroglyphics are engraved.

The Chinese premier arrived at Aswan city at noon, where he was cheered by young students lining the road and holding a streamer inscribed with the words: "Long live the People's Republic of China!"

The late Chinese Premier Zhou Enlai visited the Aswan High Dam nineteen years ago when construction had just begun. When Premier Zhao arrived there he was warmly welcomed by Ahmad Matien, governor of Aswan Governorate.

In the afternoon, the Chinese premier drove to the Aswan High Dam which is 3,600 meters long, 980 meters wide and 111 meters high, and was completed in ten years time, from 1960 to 1970. The seventh biggest dam in the world, it has a huge reservoir covering an area of about 5,000 square kilometers. The hydroelectric power station consisting 13 groups of electric generators provides both electricity and water to upper Egypt.

Accompanied by Fu'ad 'Abd al-Azziz, chairman of the High Dam Authority, the Chinese guests visited the hydroelectrical station. Premier Zhao closely inspected a chart and a model of the station and visited the machine room where he was greeted by the workers. At the end of the visit, the Chinese premier signed on the visitors' book.

Premier Zhao Ziyang flew back to Cairo the same day.

Speaks to MENA on Egypt Ties

OW232158 Beijing XINHUA in English 2051 GMT 23 Dec 82

[Text] Cairo, December 23 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang said today that China will attach great importance to its economic cooperation with Egypt and other Third World countries.

In an interview granted to Middle East News Agency reporters aboard the plane on his way back from Aswan to Cairo, the Chinese premier said that as developing countries, both China and Egypt are faced with the task of national construction. They both have strong points and good qualities and therefore should learn from each other to make up their own deficiencies and help supply each other's needs.

The two countries can seek ways of economic cooperation on the basis of equality, mutual benefit and common development, the Chinese premier said, adding that there are broad prospects for China's economic cooperation with Egypt and other Third World countries.

Zhao Ziyang said that the Chinese and Egyptian Governments share identical or similar views on many major issues, and owing to differences of experience and different angles from which they view things. It is only natural that they do not hold completely identical views on certain issues, but this will not in the least affect the development of relations between the two countries, he said.

China and Egypt have far more identical views than differences, and I can say our differences are insignificant, the premier stressed.

He expressed thanks for the warm welcome and cordial hospitality accorded him by the Egyptian Government and people, and said he was convinced that under the leadership of President Husni Mubarak and the Egyptian Government, the Egyptian people will achieve greater successes and their country will become more prosperous and powerful.

Premier Zhao will end his four-day visit to Egypt today and fly to Algeria tomorrow.

Leaves Egypt

OW241558 Beijing XINHUA in English 1500 GMT 24 Dec 82

[Text] Cairo, December 24 (XINHUA) -- Premier Zhao Ziyang of the State Council of the People's Republic of China and his entourage successfully concluded his four-day official friendship visit to the Arab Republic of Egypt and left Cairo by special plane for Algeria this morning to continue his Africa tour.

Premier Zhao and the other Chinese guests including State Councillor Gu Mu and Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian were given a warm send-off by Egyptian President Husni Mubarak and other high ranking officials.

During his stay in Egypt, Premier Zhao held talks with President Mubarak on international problems, the Middle East issue in particular, and bilateral relations. The talks, held in a warm and cordial atmosphere, were described by the two sides as "very successful and constructive" as their views were identical on many issues.

Premier Zhao and his entourage also took time out to visit historical sites including Great Pyramids, the Citadel of "Saladin" and the Egyptian Museum. They made a special trip to the historical city of Luxor and to Aswan in upper Egypt. They admired Egypt's ancient civilization and wished the industrious Egyptian people a bright future.

Cairo newspapers gave top prominence to the visit. They described the visit as an "event of paramount importance" in deepening China's "friendship and cooperation" with other Third World countries and in enhancing "traditional bonds" between Egypt and China in particular. They expected further cooperation between the two countries in many fields.

Premier Zhao Ziyang, accompanied by President Husni Mubarak, drove from the Al-Qubbah Palace to the airport this morning, along a route bedecked with national flags of China and Egypt.

A grand send-off ceremony was held at the airport. The premier and the president reviewed the guard of honor. President Mubarak embraced and shook hands warmly with Premier Zhao to wish him a good journey.

Among the well-wishers at the airport were Prime Minister Ahmad Fu'ad Muhyi ad-Din, Speaker of of the People's Assembly Sufi Abu Talib and Speaker of the Shura Council Sobhi 'Abd al-Hakim. Also present at the airport were Deputy Premiers Kamal Hasan 'Ali, Abd al-Halim Abu Ghazalah and Mustafa Kamal Hilmi. Representatives of Chinese nationals here were on hand.

On hand were also Chinese Ambassador to Egypt Ding Guoyu and Egyptian Ambassador to China 'Umar al-'Aziz Sharaf.

Arrives in Algiers

[Text] Algiers, December 24 (XINHUA) -- Zhao Zivang, premier of the State Council of the People's Republic of China, arrived here from Cairo today for a three-day official and friendship visit to Algeria at the invitation of the Algerian Government. He was accompanied by State Councillor Gu Mu, Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian and others.

Premier Zhao's special plane landed at the Houari Boumediene International Airport at local time 12:30. Stepping down the gangway, he shook hands and exchanged greetings with Algerian President Chadli Bendjedid. Accompanied by President Bendjedid, Premier Zhao inspected the guard of honor.

In a statement at the Algiers airport, Premier Zhao said that "a profound friendship has been established between China and Algeria in the protracted struggle against imperialism and colonialism. China has always attached great importance to promoting friendly relations and cooperation with Algeria." "I am very pleased to visit beautiful Algeria at the invitation of the Algerian Government and to have an opportunity to meet with Algerian leaders and learn from the Algerian people," he said. "I hope this visit will help enhance our mutual understanding and friendship, and strengthen the unity and cooperation between our two countries," he said.

After a brief rest at the airport, Premier Zhao, accompanied by President Bendjedid, drove to the official residence of "Dar El Mithak" where President Bendjedid will have a working lunch with Premier Zhao together.

Lunches With President

The 92-meter-high tower built last July, is supported by three giant cement palm leaves, symbolic of the revitalization of the Algerian nation, its people's glorious struggle and the victory of the Algerian revolution.

Visits Automobile Complex

OW252130 Beijing XINHUA in English 2116 GMT 25 Dec

[Text] Algiers, December 25 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang visited Rouiba Automobile Complex this afternoon.

Accompanied by Saleh Goudjil, minister of transport and fisheries, the Chinese premier drove from the state guest house to Rouiba, some 30 kilometers east of the capital. Upon his arrival at the entrance of the complex where the national flags of Algeria and China were flying, he was warmly welcomed by Kasdi Merban, Algerian minister of heavy industry, and representatives of the complex. Gu Mu, state councillor, and some other members of Premier Zhao's party also visited the complex.

Premier Zhao's visit to the complex was reminiscent of the warm welcome the auto workers accorded to the late Chinese Premier Zhou Enlai 19 years ago. Entering the complex, the Chinese guests were given an introduction about the complex by its general director.

As one of the biggest factories built after Algeria's independence in 1962, the complex occupies an area of 200,000 square meters, has more than 9,000 staff and workers and consists of four workshops with two production lines assembling 100 buses and 7,000 vehicles annually. The complex, which was originally a small auto factory assembling vehicles with imported spare parts and equipment, has started using spare parts of its own making.

The Chinese guests toured various workshops of the complex including forge, mechanical processing and assembling. In each workshop he was greeted by the workshop head who briefed him about the major work of his workshop.

Premier Zhao watched, with interest, the Algerian workers operating machines and praised their skills. In the assembling workshop, Premier Zhao attentively examined the two production lines, one for assembling vehicles and the other for buses. Coming out of the assembling workshop, the Chinese guests were shown many newly-assembled vehicles and buses lining up in the big compound of the complex.

At the end of the visit, the Chinese premier shook hands with leading personnel of the complex who bade farewell to the Chinese guests.

Confers With President

OW251706 Beijing XINHUA in English 1647 GMT 25 Dec 82

[Text] Algiers, December 25 (XINHUA) -- Both China and Algeria agreed that cooperation between the two countries has been very fruitful and they wished that such cooperation will develop in the spirit of South-South cooperation.

This was demonstrated in today's talks held here between the visiting Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang and Algerian President Chadli Bendjedid.

During the talks, the two sides reviewed the long-standing friendship between the people of China and Algeria and the new development of relations between the two countries after the Cancun conference at which the two leaders met for the first time, and particularly after President Chadli's China visit last April.

In a sincere and friendly atmosphere, the two leaders told each other the successes and experiences in their economic construction and their countries' policies and measures for promoting economic development.

Premier Zhao spoke on the great significance of the Twelfth National Congress of the Communist Party of China and the fifth session of the Fifth National People's Congress. He noted that China will adopt a flexible economic policy on socialist principles. He also outlined China's economic strategies to the year 2000.

Premier Zhao dwelt on China's principles in economic and technological cooperation with Third World countries: equality and mutual benefit, stress on practical results, diversity in form and achievement of common progress.

In return, President Chadli Bendjedid briefed the Chinese guests of the Fourth Congress of the Algerian Party of the National Liberation Front. He said his country will lay stress on agriculture in its economic development program in order to tap the peasants' initiative and to right the present situation of lopsided dependence on oil revenue. Algerian economy will mainly depend on agriculture, thus enabling the agricultural population to live better and free the country from debts, he said.

Chadli Bendjedid also elaborated his viewpoints and Algeria's stand on major current international issues, the Middle East question and problems in Africa in particular.

It is learned that leaders of the two countries will continue talks tomorrow. The two countries' foreign ministers and other government officials will hold talks on bilateral relations this afternoon.

Present at today's talks were Chinese State Councillor Gu Mu, Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian, Algerian Minister of Foreign Affairs Ahmed Taleb Ibrahimi, Minister of Planning and Territorial Management Abdelhamid Brahimi, and Minister of Transport and Fisheries Saleh Goudjil.

[Text] Algiers, December 25 (XINHUA) -- Algerian President Chadli Benjedid gave a grand reception in honor of Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang at the People's Palace here this evening.

All members of Premier Zhao's entourage were present at the reception.

Among those present on the occasion were also Rabah Bitat, president of the Algerian National People's Assembly: Mohamed Ben Ahmed Abdelghani, prime minister; Ahmed Taleb Ibrahimi, minister of foreign affairs; M'hamed Hadj Yala, minister of the interior; Boualem Baki, minister of justice; Saleh Goudjil, minister of transport and fisheries; members of the Political Bureau of the Party of the National Liberation Front; and foreign diplomatic envoys to Algeria.

The People's Palace, decorated with multicolored wall pictures, was illuminated splendidly. The reception was permeated with a joyful and warm atmosphere proceeded amid the strings of Algerian music. Hosts and guests had friendly and cordial chats.

Tours Oil Refinery

OW261700 Beijing XINHUA in English 1638 GMT 26 Dec 82

[Text] Algiers, December 26 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang today visited the Algiers Oil Refinery and praised the good management of the plant.

He said that he felt encouraged that Third World countries were not only in possession of rich natural resources but were also able to turn out products of high quality through advanced industries. "I am especially glad to see that this plant is entirely run by the Algerians and to meet your young technicians," he said.

The Chinese premier made the tour in the company of Algerian Minister of Energy and Petrochemical Industry Belkacem Nabi.

After the general manager gave a short description of the plant, Premier Zhao said: "After more than 30 years of socialist construction, we have come to realize that the management of an enterprise should not be taken care of by the government alone. While public ownership and planned economy should be maintained, attention should also be paid to firing the enthusiasm of the workers and arousing the interest of the enterprise in improving the management on its own."

The Chinese premier and his entourage then went around the refinery to see its equipment and installations. He had a chat with a 29-year-old engineer in the central control room.

The plant is the first modern refinery in Algeria. Commissioned in 1964, it turns out gasoline, diesel, kerosene and a number of other products which totaled 2.1 million tons last year. All the 548 employees of the refinery are Algerians who average 35 years of age.

Gu Mu, Wu Xueqian See Village

OW262002 Beijing XINHUA in English 1947 GMT 26 Dec 82

[Text] Algiers, December 26 (XINHUA) -- Chinese State Councillor Gu Mu and Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian visited the "Staoueli socialist village" in a suburb of the capital this afternoon.

Accompanied by senior officials of the Algiers Province and the president of the Staoueli People's Assembly, the Chinese guests toured some facilities and a market of the village and saw diagrams and pictures about its development.

Gu Mu, Wu Xueqian and other members of Premier Zhao Ziyang's party were warmly welcomed by the villagers. At villager Rebban Slami's home, the Chinese guests were well received and offered milk and dates.

Construction of Algeria's socialist new villages began in 1971 and was financed entirely by the state, the villages are complete with schools, clinics, shops, cultural centers, mosques and other facilities, residents there have comparatively spacious flats. These villages provide new houses for the farmers to form new residential areas in order to attract them to stay on their farmland instead of flooding into cities. At present, 132 villages of this kind have been completed and another 224 are under construction all over the country.

Zhao, President Talk Again

OW270358 Beijing XINHUA in English 0318 GMT 27 Dec 82

[Text] Algiers, December 26 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang expounded here today the three principles of China's foreign policy, namely, opposition to hegemonism and defense of world peace; strengthening of solidarity and cooperation with other Third World countries; and development of relations with various countries, including the United States and the Soviet Union, on the basis of the five principles of peaceful coexistence.

He made the remarks during the second round of talks with Algerian President Chadli Bendjedid on international issues and foreign policies of their countries.

Present at the talks were State Councillor Gu Mu and Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian on the Chinese side, and Adviser to the President Al-Akhdar al-Ibrahimi and Foreign Minister Ahmed Taleb Ibrahimi on the Algerian side.

It was reported that the two rounds of talks showed that both sides share identical or similar views on a series of international problems.

On the Middle East problem, Premier Zhao reaffirmed the consistent Chinese position that the Palestinian problem is the core of the Middle East issue and that the latter cannot be solved unless Israel withdraws from the Arab territories it has occupied since the 1967 war and the Palestinian people recover their national rights, including the right to return to their homeland and to establish a Palestinian state. The Palestine Liberation Organization, he stressed, is the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people and is entitled to participating in the resolution of the Middle East problem. A resolution of the problem mainly depends on the unity of the Arab countries, he added.

Premier Zhao said China appreciates and supports the resolutions adopted at the Fez conference, and is pleased that the Arab states have made a common proposition at the conference and spoke with one voice.

He also expressed the hope for an end to the Iran-Iraq war as soon as possible.

President Bendjedid expressed his sympathy with and support for the struggle of the Palestinian people who, he said, should have their own country. The Middle East question cannot be settled without a solution of the Palestinian issue, he said.

The president said Algeria supports the proposals on the settlement of the Middle East question put forward at the Arab Fez summit.

On African problems, Premier Zhao said China supports the Namibian people in their struggle for national independence, and supports the South West Africa People's Organization. China opposes the South African authorities' racist policy, condemns their refusal, under the aegis of the United States, to implement U.N. Resolution 435 on Namibia, he said.

He declared that China supports mandatory sanctions against South Africa, and China will never have direct or indirect contacts with South Africa.

President Bendjedid also expressed support for the Namibian people's struggle for national independence and denounced the racist policy of South Africa.

Premier Zhao spoke of China's position on the Afghan and Kampuchean problems.

President Chadli expressed concern for the Iran-Iraq war and the Afghan and Kampuchean problems. The positions of Algeria and China on many international problems are basically identical, he said. Algeria opposes armed occupation of a sovereign state by any other, he said.

President Bendjedid hoped that both Algeria and China would work for North-South dialogue, and make contributions to world peace.

Yesterday afternoon, Chinese Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian and his Algerian counterpart Ahmed Taleb Ibrahimi held talks on bilateral relations, economic and technical cooperation between the two countries in particular.

It was learned that both sides acquainted each other with their own experience in economic construction and seriously studied means and ways for further strengthening cooperation in medium-and small-size industrial projects, agriculture, water conservancy and transportation between the two nations.

Meets PLO's 'Arafat

OW270340 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0219 GMT 27 Dec 82

[Text] Algiers, 26 Dec (XINHUA) -- Premier Zhao Ziyang, who is currently on a visit to Algeria, met here this evening with 'Arafat, chairman of the Executive Committee of the Palestine Liberation Organization [PLO].

'Arafat arrived here this afternoon on a special trip from Tunis.

When 'Arafat arrived at the distinguished guest house where Zhao Ziyang is staying, they warmly embraced each other, feeling very happy to be able to meet again here to renew their militant friendship. They held talks in a very cordial and warm atmosphere.

'Arafat briefed Zhao Ziyang on the current situation of the Palestinian struggle and expressed thanks for China's full support of Palestine in all fields. He said: The Palestinian people have the determination and confidence to keep struggling for a long time.

Zhao Ziyang spoke highly of the heroic spirit and indomitable will demonstrated by the Palestinian soldiers and civilians not long ago in Beirut where they persisted in struggling under extremely difficult conditions and despite a very great disparity in strength. He held that although militarily Palestine at present has suffered a temporary setback, politically it has won wide sympathy and support from the international community -- while Israeli aggression and atrocities are being condemned strongly by people the world over.

Premier Zhao Ziyang expressed his deep belief that final victory belongs to the Palestinian people. He said: As the Chinese saying goes, the road is tortuous, the future is bright. We are full of confidence that Palestine will win final victory.

Zhao Ziyang reaffirmed that China, as always, will support the Palestinian people's struggle and holds that Palestine's national rights must be restored including the right to self-determination and establishment of their own state. He stressed that the PLO is the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people and should participate in settling the Middle East problem. He said that the Palestine issue is the core of the Middle East problem which cannot be solved without the restoration of Palestine's national rights.

Zhao Ziyang said in conclusion: China always will be a reliable friend of the Palestinian people. We will support consistently and firmly the cause of Palestine no matter what situation may arise in its struggle.

[Tayib 'Abd ar-Rahim] Mahmud, director of the PLO office in Beijing, was present at the meeting.

Present on the Chinese side were Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian and Vice Foreign Minister Wen Yezhan.

23 REPORTED KILLED IN GUANGDONG PLANE ACCIDENT

OW251850 Beijing XINHUA in English 1835 GMT 25 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 25 (XINHUA) -- Twenty-three of the 69 passengers and crew members on board a CAAC plane were killed in a fire accident yesterday shortly before it landed at Guangzhou's Baiyun Airport, XINHUA learned from the Civil Aviation Administration of China today.

A CAAC official said that the dead were identified as Neil David Konheim of the Panda Travel Service of the United States, Chen Li-fang, general manager of the China Cultural Promotion Company of Canada, and 13 Chinese citizens. The other eight bodies are still being identified by legal medical experts and technicians.

Besides, 20 passengers and crew members were injured, including a Japanese, a Mexican, and two Hong Kong comptriots. Most of them were slightly injured and are being treated in Guangzhou hospitals.

The CAAC has informed the family of Mr. Konheim of the misfortune via the U.S. Bmbassy in Beijing. The CAAC has also notified families of the killed Hong Kong compatriots and Chinese citizens.

Today, CAAC Deputy Director Yan Zhixiang and leaders of the Guangdong Provincial People's Government visited the injured in the hospitals.

The CAAC plane reached the Baiyun Airport at 17:10 yesterday. The captain cut off the circuit immediately after learning that smoke was emitting from the rear cabin, and brought the plane down at 17:21.

According to an on-the-spot survey and initial investigation, the engines and fuel tank are in good condition, and so are the luggage and goods in the cargo bay. The plane was carried away from the runway at 23:45 yesterday and normal flights resumed at the Baiyun Airport before dawn.

A work group headed by Yan Zhixiang is investigating into the cause of the fire and handling its aftermath.

The passengers who escaped the fire included a five-year-old child.

FURTHER COVERAGE OF 11TH CYL NATIONAL CONGRESS

New Constitution

OW241208 Beijing XINHUA in English 1125 GMT 24 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 24 (XINHUA) -- The Eleventh National Congress of the Communist Youth League approved the work report of the league's 10th Central Committee and adopted a new league constitution at its second plenary meeting here this afternoon.

The congress' decision approves the work report as a factual presentation of the Youth League's work since 1978. The new tasks, the decision says, conform to the reality of youth work in China today.

It says that the congress calls on league members and cadres and the young people of all nationalities in China to rally closely around the party Central Committee, hold high the banner of communism and contribute to the prosperity and unification of the country.

The new Youth League constitution has a general program and eight chapters with 33 articles. It emphasizes the relations between the league and the Communist Party and reaffirms that the league is the assistant and reserve force of the party.

The constitution sets as the fundamental task of the league to cultivate a communist spirit in the young people so that they become worthy successors. The new constitution sets strict requirements for league members who must study diligently, work hard and be the first to bear hardship and the last to enjoy comfort.

Opinions on the draft of the revised constitution were solicited from Youth League organizations at various levels for more than half a year before the congress opened on December 20.

Fang Weizhong, vice-minister in charge of the State Planning Commission, gave a report to the young delegates on the new structure of China's economic construction at today's plenary meeting.

Since the opening of the congress, more than 2,000 delegates and nonvoting delegates discussed the work report and the draft constitution and made suggestions for improvement. They also shared their experience in group discussions.

The congress' presidium held a meeting this morning to listen to the explanations on revision of the work report and the draft constitution and made suggestions for improvement. They also shared their experience in group discussions.

The congress' presidium held a meeting this morning to listen to the explanations on revision of the work report and the constitution. It submitted the documents to the congress for approval.

Fang Weizhong Address

OW241856 Beijing XINHUA in English 1510 GMT 24 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December (XINHUA) -- Fang Weizhong, vice-minister in charge of the State Planning Commission, today explained China's economic plan to delegates to the 11th National Congress of the Chinese Communist Youth League at its plenary meeting.

The first ten years, he said, would be devoted to laying a good foundation and the second decade is one of a new rise in the economy. This was based on China's actual conditions.

The Communist Party has summed up the experience in socialist construction since 1949 and had made a major shift in its overview of the nation's economy. Explaining the nation's new ways of socialist modernization, the vice-minister listed the following aspects: raising economic benefit in working for long-term, stable growth; increasing production by shifting from expanding capital construction to improving technology; combining growth of the national economy with social growth; encouraging various forms of economic organization and management under the prerequisite of the decisive role of the state economy; and continuing the policy of opening to the rest of the world, based primarily on self-reliance.

Fang Weizhong called on the young people of China to work hard for this 20-year goal. "We are one billion people with 2 billion hands. We have the socialist system and a strong leadership by the Communist Party. We have rich natural resources, a wide home market and a rather satisfactory international environment," he said.

Young people should be vigorous and creative, as should all the people. However, he pointed out, revolutionary spirit had to be combined with a scientific attitude and work done in a down-to-earth way. Rashness should be avoided. Subjectivism and department from reality were among the major reasons for the twists and turns in China's socialist construction. Seeking truth from facts was an important principle for success. He encouraged the young people to put their shoulder to the wheel.

Qian Qichen Report

OW251756 Beijing XINHUA in English 1501 GMT 25 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 25 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Vice Minister of Foreign Affairs Qian Qichen today gave a report on the international situation and China's foreign policy at the Youth League congress.

The international situation, the vice-minister said, is still turbulent and tense. But the capacity of the two superpowers to control the course of world affairs is declining.

Amid general stagnation in the world economy over the past three years, he said, China's economy has embarked on a road of healthy development after readjustment. Life in the cities and rural areas across the country is steadily improving. Newspapers abroad say that China's economy is rising while the world economy is in a depression.

Qian emphasized that China adheres to a foreign policy of opposing hegemonism, safeguarding world peace and strengthening unity and cooperation with the Third World countries. China will never waver in the struggle against hegemonism, believing this to be the most important way to maintain world peace, he added.

The vice-minister supported the Youth League's plan for education in patriotism and internationalism among the young people. The youth of China should strengthen their friendly relations with young people in all other countries and unite with them to maintain world peace, oppose hegemonism and work for the bright future of humanity, he added.

Yu Qiuli Speech

OW251804 Beijing XINHUA in English 1540 GMT 25 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 25 (XINHUA) -- Young people are builders of China's socialism and also guardians of its security, Yu Qiuli, deputy secretary general of the Communist Party Central Committee's military commission, said here this afternoon.

Addressing the Communist Youth League congress at the Great Hall of the People, he called on Chinese youth to carry forward the spirit of patriotism and revolutionary heroism.

Also a member of the party Central Committee Political Bureau and director of the General Political Department of the People's Liberation Army, Yu Qiuli said: "We will need a peaceful world environment for a long time in order to build up our country. But only when we are fully prepared against the aggressive war can we help maintain peace."

National defence should be strengthened on the basis of vigorous economic development and the Chinese Army should increase its self-defence ability under conditions of a modern war.

China as a socialist country would never seek hegemony nor an inch of foreign land. China's strategic policy, he said, was one of active defence.

The army's building had entered one of the best periods since the founding of New China, he said. The People's Liberation Army had developed into one with various services and arms, it had strategic weapons for self-defence and had raised its military and political levels.

Modernization of the army, he said, required people with political consciousness, military knowledge, a good education and command of modern weapons and fighting tactics, first-rate modern weapons and equipment, and a scientific military system and structure based on good use of men and arms.

In the past two years, he said, the army had made "remarkable progress" in training people with both military knowledge and competence and work skills they could use after demobilization.

"We do not support the theory that weapons alone decide the outcome of war," he said, "but we also see the importance of up-to-date weaponry. China will mainly rely on its own efforts to develop advanced military technology and import some foreign technology if conditions permit."

He stressed the importance of unity between army and people, militia work, and the theory of people's war. The people were always the main strength in war, he said. As a vast country with a large population and a fine tradition against aggression, he said, China would undertake a people's war if faced [with] aggression, a people's war under modern conditions.

Yu Qiuli encouraged the younger generation to know the country's history better, to understand the hardships of building the country and work hard to make the country strong and prosperous.

ZHANG AIPING STRESSES PLA'S MODERNIZATION

OW251431 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0730 GMT 24 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, 24 Dec (XINHUA) -- While inspecting a certain unit under the Beijing PLA Unit's command, Defense Minister Zhang Aiping called on officers and men, scientists and producers in the armed forces to diligently study science and general knowledge in order to help accelerate the PLA's modernization and bring about a new situation in the development of the armed forces.

Zhang Aiping inspected the unit from 14 to 17 December. Braving bitter cold, he watched a military exercise performed by the unit, visited the artillery shooting range, training grounds, repair center and warehouses, inspected the weaponry of a mechanized infantry detachment and a special force detachment, and attentively listened to the opinions of the cadres and fighters about the improvement of their weapons. He took a ride on an armored transport vehicle to understand its functions. He also called a meeting to learn how the cadres and fighters have been studying science and other professional and technical knowledge.

During a meeting attended by cadres, Zhang Aiping spoke highly of the profound spiritual change among the armed forces since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee and of their accomplishments in military training and administration of weaponry. He pointed out: The modernization of our armed forces must be a Chinese-style modernization, and this calls for a study of our armed forces' tactical tradition and strategic thinking and our country's terrain and economy.

Zhang Aiping added: Modern weaponry is essential for building a modern armed forces. He urged the broad masses of commanders, fighters, defense researchers and producers to diligently study science and general knowledge, speed up national defense research and development, master the operation of advanced weaponry and make active contributions to the modernization of the armed forces.

BOOK ON MAO ZEDONG'S RURAL SURVEYS PUBLISHED

OW251250 Beijing XINHUA in English 1233 GMT 25 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 25 (XINHUA) -- "Mao Zedong's Writings on Rural Surveys," a book recording the author's theory and practice on the subject during 1926 and 1941, will begin to be issued in major cities across the country tomorrow.

Based on "Rural Surveys" edited by Mao Zedong and put out in 1941 in Yan'an, the present book is edited by the party Literature Research Center and published by the People's Publishing House. It includes 17 articles, some of which are essays and speeches on surveys and the rest are findings reports and land programs. Five articles have been added in the new edition, two of which are published for the first time: "A Survey of Xunwu" and "Circular of the General Political Department on Census and Land Condition Investigation."

The publication is intended to encourage people to acquire a better understanding of China's national conditions and explore a Chinese way of socialist construction.

The opening article is "Oppose Book Worship" in which Mao Zedong advanced his famous saying "No investigation, no right to speak." He wrote it in May 1930 with a view to overcoming dogmatist thinking then prevalent in the Red Army.

Published for the first time is the "Circular of the General Political Department on Census and Land Condition Investigation." He wrote it in January 1934 in the name of director of the General Political Department of the Central Revolutionary Military Commission. Apart from restating the importance of making investigation, he went a step further by declaring that "no correct investigation, no right to speak either."

"Prefaces and postscript to 'Rural Surveys'" includes the preface he wrote in 1937 and another in 1941 and the postscript of the same year. The last two pieces are contained in Volume three of the "Selected Works of Mao Zedong."

"On Rural Surveys" was a speech he made at Yan'an in September 1941 to members of an investigation group on women's livelihood. Among the keys to successful investigations, he stressed the need to apply the viewpoint of unity of opposites and class struggle.

"Examples of Chinese Tenant Peasants' Livelihood" was written in 1926 on the basis of discussions with tenant peasants in Xiangtan, Hunan.

The book also includes surveys he madein Xunwu County, Jiangxi Province (May 1930), Xingguo County, Jiangxi Province (October 1930), and Changgand and Caixi townships, Jiangxi, in November 1933. The largest he ever conducted, the first investigation yielded a report running to more than 80,000 Chinese characters, which is made public for the first time. The report was a detailed description of the rise and fall of commerce and handicraft industry in Xunwu County, various means of exploitation in the countryside and peasants' agrarian struggles.

The Xingguo survey gave a statistical idea of land relationship in old China. The investigations he did in Changgang and Caixi were meant to encourage leading organizatiosn to get familiar with actual conditions at lower levels.

JOINT CIRCULAR ISSUED ON HELPING POOR PEASANTS

OW231339 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1305 GMT 18 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, 18 Dec (XINHUA) -- The State Economic Commission, the Ministry of Civil Affairs, the Ministry of Finance, the Agricultural Bank of China, the Ministry of Commerce, the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade, the Ministry of Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Fishery, the Ministry of Education and the state administration of supplies recently issued a joint circular that stresses the necessity of earnestly helping poor peasant households.

The circular says: Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, thanks to the implementation of rural economic policies and the various forms of the agricultural production responsibility system, agricultural production has been vigorously promoted in an all-round way, the peasants' livelihood has markedly improved and some peasants have become well-off. However, some peasants still experience difficulties in production and livelihood because they are short of labor, funds and production skills. To get these poor households out of poverty and enable them to get rich through hard work, the various localities have, in recent years, encouraged some peasants to get rich first while extensively carrying out the work of helping the poor. Under the leadership of the party committees and governments at all levels, civil affairs, finance, agriculture, commerce, education, public health and other departments concerned have helped poor peasant households develop production in a planned way. According to incomplete statistics from 24 provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions, of the 2.73 million households that have been helped, some 1.02 million have ended their long standing poverty. This has helped safeguard social stability, develop rural economy and speed up the building of material and spiritual civilization. However, some localities have not paid enough attention to the work of helping the poor, hence the very uneven manner in which the work is carried out. Some places have not even started.

The circular stresses: It is the obligation of our cadres at all levels and government departments to be concerned about the masses' well-being and to help the poor who are in difficulties. It is imperative to regard helping the poor as important work, to strengthen leadership, and to systematically organize manpower and material and financial resources to actively help the poor families develop production and solve problems in their daily lives so that they can completely shake off poverty. To help the poor families out of poverty, it is necessary to adopt multifarious measures by taking into consideration the actual condition of the localities, strengthening ideological education so that the poor families may develop the will to shake off poverty and make progress, and discarding the idea of depending entirely on outside relief. It is necessary to start with developing production, try out best to help the poor families improve cultivation of the land for which they contract and their and their private plots, and enable them to engage successfully in diversified economy, seek new financial resources to increase income and shake off poverty. To help the poor, we should mainly count on assistance from the communes and brigades. State aid is secondary. The work should be carried out in groups and by stages as deemed suitable for local conditions in order to achieve marked results soon.

The circular urges the departments concerned to coordinate their efforts, regard helping the poor as their duty, share their work, perform their responsibilities and ensure further success in the work of helping the poor.

SECURITY MINISTRY ON 'CHERISHING PEOPLE' MONTH

OW230519 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1234 GMT 17 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, 17 Dec (XINHUA) -- The Ministry of Public Security recently issued a "Notice on Launching Cherishing the People Month Activities During the 1983 New Year and Spring Festival Period." The notice points out: The Cherishing the People Month activities are part of a fine tradition of the public security organs, a system that has been proven in many years to be effective in enhancing ideological consciousness and improving work style, and an important part of the public security departments' efforts to build a civilization with socialist spirit. Leading organs and cadres at all levels must exercise concrete leadership over such activities and take the lead in participating in these activities in order to ensure they are successfully carried out.

The notice says: The Cherishing the People Month activities must be carried out under the guidance of the 12th CPC Congress. In accordance with the requirements on building a contingent of political and legal workers -- requirements set by the 1982 national conference on political and legal affairs -- these activities must be regarded as an education to be conducted among the broad masses of public security personnel to enhance their sense of responsibility, ethics and discipline while performing their duty. Special attention must be given to examining and enhancing public security personnel's concept of the masses and the law. Through launching the Cherishing the People Month activities, the sense of discipline and work style of public security personnel must be improved, their ties with the masses must be closer, their moral concept must be heightened, and the public security organs' fine traditions must be further fostered so that the building of a socialist spiritual civilization will be deepened among public security personnel and various public security projects can be carried out even more successfully.

The notice urges all localities to organize public security personnel to continue to study the documents of the 12th party Congress and the relevant documents of the central authorities, review "The Eight Main Rules of Discipline and Ten Points for Attention for Public Security Personnel," and examine how they have performed their duty according to law, followed the regulations on discipline and cherished the interests of the people.

The notice says: The masses' opinions must be solicited through various means. It is particularly necessary to visit and humbly listen to the criticism of those units and people who have strong opinions on certain issues and with whom the public security departments have maintained close working relations. To resolve the problems regarding police-people relations and the public security personnel's discipline and work style -- problems that have been exposed in the course of examination -- public security personnel must work out corrective measures, do something visible to and palpable by the masses, and routinely perform their duties in a civilized and polite manner.

The notice urges all grassroot units to conscientiously report their work to the masses. It says: Municipal and town police precincts may send questionnaires or letters to the urban residents or set up mailboxes to solicite the masses' opinions. This system must be institutionalized and upheld. Those collectives and individuals that have been acclaimed for their fine thinking and conduct, for having performed their duties in an outstanding manner, for examplarily obeying law and discipline and for maintaining good relations with the masses must be commended in various ways.

NATIONAL POPULATION CENSUS WORK CONFERENCE ENDS

OW211447 Beijing XINHUA in English 1117 GMT 21 Dec 82

[Text] Hangzhou, December 21 (XINHUA) -- A national population census working conference that closed here yesterday said that census data gathered during the early stage enumeration period was very accurate.

The work in the later stages was quite demanding, including data coding, entries, calculations, tabulations, printing and analyses, the conference noted. For example, 40 billion codes must be entered in computers. This work alone will take 4,000 data entry personnel working round the clock one year and a half to finish.

In three months, 120,000 people completed the coding in the main. Data entry has begun. By the end of November, sampling data entries had been completed ahead of schedule in 11 places: Beijing, Shanghai, Jiangsu, Heilongjiang, Liaoning, Guizhou, Shaanxi, Sichuan, Yunnan, Guangxi and Xinjiang. All census data will be completed by the end of 1984.

The conference, called by the State Council Population Census Leading Group, was attended by 120 census officials from across the country.

WAN LI ADDRESSES FAMILY PLANNING MEETING

OW261247 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1224 GMT 22 Dec 82

[Excerpts] Beijing, 22 Dec (XINHUA) -- A mobilization meeting was held at the Great Hall of the People this afternoon to launch the family planning publicity month in the capital. The mobilization meeting was jointly sponsored by the State Family Planning Commission, the General Political Department of the Chinese PLA and the Beijing Municipal People's Government.

Entrusted by the CPC Central Committee and the State Council, Hao Jianxiu, alternate member of the CPC Central Committee Secretariat, addressed the meeting (the text of her address to be released separately).

In his speech at the meeting, Wan Li, vice premier of the State Council, pointed out: The population problem has become important in our country. It is therefore very necessary to carry out activities of the family planning publicity month.

Wan Li said: Regarding men as superior to women is the vestige of a feudal idea that has existed for thousands of years, and it is a major ideological obstacle to the development of family planning work at present. It is necessary to do away with the idea of regarding men as superior to women and to raise women's social status as an important content of the publicity month. Vigorous efforts should also be made to disseminate the scientific knowledge of family planning.

Wan Li stressed: It is necessary to effectively strengthen leadership over family planning work. Communist Party members, CYL members and PLA commanders and fighters should take the lead in practicing family planning and doing away with feudal ideas and superstitions.

Qian Xinzhong, chairman of the State Family Planning Commission and adviser to the Ministry of Public Health, chaired and addressed today's meeting. Other speakers at the meeting were Zhu Yunqian, deputy director of the General Political Department; Duan Junyi, first secretary of the Beijing Municipal Party Committee; and Ren Shusheng, secretary of the party branch of the Shuguang brigade under the Sijiqing commune, Haidian District, Beijing Municipality.

More than 8,000 persons attended the meeting, including responsible persons of the CPC Central Committee Propaganda Department, the Ministry of Public Health, the Ministry of Culture, the Ministry of Education, the Ministry of Radio and Television, the State Economic Commission, the Ministry of Commerce, the Ministry of Civil Affairs, the Ministry of Railways, the Ministry of Space Industry, the Ministry of Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Fishery, the All-China Federation of Trade Unions, the CYL Central Committee, the All-China Women's Federation, the PLA General Political Department, the General Logistics Department, the air force, the navy and the Beijing PLA units as well as responsible persons of various districts, counties and bureaus in Beijing Municipality, basic-level cadres and family planning workers.

ANNUAL OIL, NATURAL GAS PRODUCTION QUOTAS MET

OW240922 Beijing XINHUA in English 0805 GMT 24 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 24 (XINHUA) -- As of today China completed the 1982 plan of producing more than 100 million tons of crude oil, seven days ahead of time, said Chen Zhongyong, spokesman for the Chinese Ministry of Petroleum Industry.

"This is the fifth consecutive year that China's annual oil output has topped 100 million tons," Chen Zhongyong stressed.

He said that by December 16, China had produced 10.5 billion cubic meters of natural gas, meeting the annual quota 15 days ahead of schedule. To date, he added, the figure is 10.8 billion cubic meters.

According to the spokesman, oil and natural gas fields contributing to the fulfillment of the production plan for this year include Daqing, Huabei, Shengli, Liaohe, Jilin and Sichuan in addition to a number of shale oil refineries.

Since the beginning of this year, Chen Zhongyong said, continued readjustment of the oil industry has resulted in better management and economic performance. Among the 18 major oil fields, 12 continue to give high and stable yields.

Various oil fields have taken measures to save oil and gas consumption in production processes, Chen Zhongyong added. It is expected that China's oil industry will recover and save about 500 million cubic meters of natural gas and 150,000 megawatt hours of electricity and recover more than 100,000 tons of light oil and gas propane in the whole year.

2D NUCLEAR POWERPLANT SLATED FOR GUANGDONG

OW230818 Beijing XINHUA in English 0800 GMT 23 Dec 82

[Text] Guangzhou, December 23 (XINHUA) -- With the approval of the State Council, China's second nuclear power station is to be built in Guangdong Province, according to provincial authorities.

The new nuclear power station will have a designed generating capacity of 1.8 million kilowatts. It will be equipped with two 900,000-kilowatt pressurized water reactor units, the authorities said.

Construction of the new station is part of China's efforts to open up new sources of energy and it expected to help gain experience for developing China's nuclear power industry.

Feasibility studies for the project were begun almost two years ago and a preliminary site has been located at the Daya Bay on Dapeng Peninsula in the southern part of Guangdong Province.

China's first nuclear power station is to be built in the East China Province of Zhejiang.

STATE PURCHASES UP; RETAIL SALES INCREASE

OW231200 Beijing XINHUA in English 1141 GMT 23 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 23 (XINHUA) -- The state purchases of farms and sideline produce have increased sharply and retail sales have continued to rise during the first 11 months of this year.

The State Statistical Bureau said the total volume of purchase of farm and sideline produce by state-owned commercial businesses was 73.64 billion (73,640 million) yuan from January through November, 11.5 percent more than last year's same period.

Grain purchase by the state from peasants during the April-November period came to 53,935,000 tons, 8.62 million tons more than the same period of last year.

The purchase of edible vegetable oil was the best ever, amounting to 2,35,000 tons, an increase of 275,000 tons from the April-November period of last year.

The purchase of cotton, which started in September, amounted to 2,494,300 tons, 327,250 tons more than the September-November period of last year.

The amount of tobacco purchased from July through November came to 1,574,950 tons, topping the planned 1.1 million tons by 43.2 percent or increasing 463,400 tons above the same period of last year.

Increases were also registered in the purchases of pigs, eggs, ramie, bamboo, sheep wool, sheepskins and tea. Only the purchase of jute and ambary hemp, raw lacquer and cowhides showed decreases in varying degrees, the bureau said.

Industrial purchases by the state were also good, amounting to 158.76 billion (158,760 million) yuan in the first 11 months of this year, registering a 5 percent increase. Products that showed 24 to 47 percent increases in sales included pesticide equipment, television sets, sewing machines, bicycles, wrist watches and sweat shirts and pants.

Chemical fertilizers, sugar, cotton cloth, matches, detergents and five other products showed increases ranging between 10 to 20 percent. The purchases of blend cotton fabrics, chemical fabrics and semi-conductor radios were down 4 percent, 20.2 percent and 57.8 percent respectively, the bureau said.

Retail sales continued to increase at a fast rate, with total volume amounting to 221.28 billion (221,280 million) yuan, an increase of 8.7 percent above the January-November period last year.

The fastest growth was registered in the sales of the means of production for agriculture. The total volume of such goods sold in the first 11 months were 36.15 billion (36,150 million) yuan, growing 12.2 percent from the same period of last year, faster than the growth rate of retail sales of consumer goods, which was 8 percent.

Of this, the sales volume of chemical fertilizers was 65.08 million tons, 17.3 percent up from the same period of last year; chemical pesticides amounted to 1,574,000 tons, up 5.2 percent; pesticide equipment, 9,929,000 pieces, up 49.4 percent; and walking tractors, 225,000 units, up 44.3 percent.

Grain sales amounted to 67.98 million tons, 6.3 million tons more than the first 11 months of last year; edible vegetable oil, 1,975,000 tons, 405,000 tons more; the increases of the sales of pork, eggs, aquatic products, sugar and spirits and wines ranged 3 to 18 percent.

The sales of some winter wear rose sharply while those of cotton cloth, chemical fabrics, woolen piecegoods, silks and satin, sweat shirts and pants and rubber shoes declined 2 to 16 percent in the first 11 months.

The increases in the sales of durable consumer goods still held the lead. Among them, the sales of sewing machines was up 24.2 percent, compared wtih the first 11 months of 1981, wrist watches, up 32.6 percent, bicycles up 38.2 percent and television sets, up 11.9 percent.

The industrial sales in rural markets improved to a certain extent, the bureau said. The sales volume of industrial goods in the rural market by the supply and marketing cooperatives amounted to 89.75 billion (89,750 million) yuan in the first 11 months, up 5.1 percent from the same period of last year.

Among them, the sales of bicycles amounted to 7,062,000, up 57.5 percent; sewing machines, 4,473,000, up 39.4 percent; and polyester-cotton blends 610 million meters, up 18.5 percent. But some small commodities still fell short of demand.

FANG YI ADDRESSES MEETING ON NEW MATERIALS

OW261826 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 0400 GMT 24 Dec 82

[Text] In his speech at a recent national conference on the scientific and technological work of developing new materials, Fang Yi, state councillor and chairman of the State Scientific and Technological Commission, said: Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, our country has made major achievements in developing new materials. At the same time, a new situation has also been brought about in popularizing and using new materials.

Fang Yi said: According to statistics compiled by the Ministries of Metallurgical Industry, Petroleum Industry, Chemical Industry, Building Materials Industry [as heard], Light Industry, Textile Industry, Education and the Chinese Academy of Sciences, nearly 10,000 achievements have been made in developing new materials over the past 20-odd years. The annual output value of such new materials now reaches 4 billion yuan.

In his speech, Fang Yi stressed: Leaders at all levels should further implement the party's policy toward intellectuals, add to such achievements, summarize experiences and bring about a new situation in developing new materials.

He said: In approving 38 key projects for tackling difficult scientific and technological problems, the State Council has given priority to developing new materials. The objective of quadrupling the gross annual value of industrial and agricultural production while undertaking the four modernizations has set arduous tasks for the science of materials. Material scientists can bring their talents into full play in their vast field.

The recent national conference on the scientific and technological work of developing new materials was jointly sponsored by the State Scientific and Technological Commission, the Commission of Science and Technology for National Defense and the State Economic Commission. It was the first of its kind in the past 20 odd years.

LIU LANTAO, YANG JINGREN ATTEND ECONOMIC MEETINGS

OW240624 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1545 GMT 23 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, 23 Dec (XINHUA) -- The second plenary meeting of the Third Central Committee of the China Democratic National Construction Association and the second meeting of the Fourth Executive Committee of the All-China Federation of Industry and Commerce ended today.

The meetings opened in Beijing on 17 December. During the meetings, Liu Lantao, vice chairman of the CPPCC National Committee, and Yang Jingren, director of the United Front Work Department of the CPC Central Committee, held talks with those present.

Liu Lantao said: The meetings have put forward the slogan "Firmly and unwaveringly follow the party and work for the four modernizations with all our heart and all our might." It is a good slogan. In the past few years, the two organizations have done much work in economic consultations and services. He urged the comrades to continue to give play to the specialities of the two organizations and have the courage to resist the practice of acting against economic laws and ignoring economic results.

Yang Jingren said: In creating a new situation in socialist modernization, a great deal can be accomplished by united front work. We see the trend in the consultative and service work of the two organizations and are enlightened and inspired. Many comrade among the members of the two organizations have great economic talents. This is a valuable asset. He hoped that the comrades will strive for new achievements in the new year.

Hu Juewen, chairman of the China Democratic National Construction Association, and Hu Ziang, chairman of the All-China Federation of Industry and Commerce, attended the closing ceremony.

PRC TO CONCENTRATE ON LSI RESEARCH, PRODUCTION

OW240400 Beijing XINHUA in English 1641 GMT 23 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 23 (XINHUA) -- Production and technology of large-scale integrated circuits will be the focus of the electronic industry's efforts in the next few years, Zhao Dongwan, vice-minister of the State Scientific and Technological Commission, said today.

He was addressing the opening ceremony of the five-day third national planning meeting on development of large-scale integrated circuits. The gathering, attended by Fang Yi, state councillor and minister of the commission, will review research and production of the circuits, and outline future goals.

Zhao Dongwan said technology imports will supplement national efforts to construct a full-scale circuit manufacturing system, which will include basic materials, special equipment, product development, marketing and services.

The vice-minister said units with an extant infrastructure for research and production of large-scale integrated circuits would be supported, including two silicon industrial bases to be built, one in Shanghai-Jiangsu-Zhejiang, and one in Beijing-Tianjin-Shenyang.

He said the two bases will be developed first through establishment by local research institutes, universities and factories of centers and research-production complexes. After a period they will be merged to promote efficiency in accordance with the overall reformation of the economic system.

Zhao Dongwan said a number of technicians have been trained in the field with the result that more than 40 kinds of large-scale circuits have been produced already. The nation is self-sufficient in most of the necessary basic materials while basic theory and technology has made great strides. Some of the technology includes lithography without development, chemical mechanical polishing and computer-aided design. The main task now is to transform these research achievements into production forces.

Vice-Minister Zhao said the needs of the domestic market demand universal and special-purpose integrated circuits for light industry, meters and instruments, machine building, telecommunications, medical treatment and electric appliances.

DENG YINGCHAO, OTHERS ATTEND ART TROUPE BIRTHDAY

OW231025 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1653 GMT 23 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, 23 Dec (XINHUA) -- The Dongfang Song and Dance Ensemble, famous at home and abroad, today observed its 20th birthday. Five hundred people from various circles, who care about this "flower" in the field of art, came to offer their congratulations.

The hall in the Beijing hotel was filled with a joyous atmosphere. "Comrade Deng Yingchao has arrived:" The performers, young and old, gathered around to shake hands and take pictures of her. Leader of the ensemble Wang Kun voiced the feeling of everyone present: "It is an inspiration to us that you have come." Deng Yingchao smiled: "It is I who am often inspired by you." She added that it is necessary to train many young people to make more contributions to the country.

At the moment, people remembered the late Premier Zhou. Twenty years ago, at his proposal, the Dongfang Song and Dance Ensemble was established for the purpose of carrying forward the tradition of Chinese national and folk songs and dances and disseminating the art of various Asian, African and Latin American countries. He called the youthful art group "a flower of Eastern song and dance" and urged every member to maintain its glorious tradition.

Relating the ensemble's experience over the past 20 years, Wang Kun said: We have depicted life through the form of Chinese national and folk songs and dances to give the masses enjoyment in beauty and help people understand China's long history and rich culture. We have also visited more than 30 countries and enhanced friendship with the Asian, African and Latin American people.

Wan Li, Zhou Yang and Zhu Muzhi spoke at the meeting, urging all the comrades of the Dongfang Song and Dance Ensemble to carry forward the patriotic and internationalist spirit and achieve new successes in building socialist spiritual civilization and strengthening international cultural exchanges.

Also present at the meeting were Wang Zhen, Ulanhu, Liao Chengzhi, Deng Liqun, Chou Yang, He Jingzhi, Zhou Weizhi, Lu Zhixian, Zhao Qiyang, Wang Bingnan and Han Nianlong.

JIANGSU MEETING ON MAINTAINING PUBLIC ORDER

OW211135 Nanjing XINHUA RIBAO in Chinese 3 Dec 82 p 1

[Excerpts] The Jiangsu Provincial CPC Committee held a meeting on political and judicial work from 23 November to 2 December.

Liu Lin, second secretary of the provincial CPC committee, attended the meeting and delivered a speech. He emphatically pointed out that the problem of maintaining public order should be tackled comprehensively. He said: The way to get at the root of the problem is to strengthen ideological, political and organizational work.

It is necessary to do this order to tackle this problem in a comprehensive way and step by step in the various industrial and mining enterprises, government organs, schools, stores, neighborhood committees and production teams. In his speech, he also explicitly pointed out the requirements for striking at the criminal activities in the economic sphere, strengthening the legal system, doing public security work this winter and next spring, training more competent people to do political and judicial work, and strengthening the party's leadership over political and judicial work.

Hong Peilin, standing committee member of the provincial CPC committee, delivered a report at the meeting. The comrades who attended the meeting studied the documents of the party's 12th national congress and the national conference on political and judicial work and conscientiously discussed the abovementioned report.

Those attending the meeting held: Since the provincial meeting on political and judicial work in May 1981, the political and judicial organs throughout the province, under the leadership of the provincial CPC committee and the party committees at various levels, have severely and promptly punished according to law those criminal offenders who have seriously undermined the social order. They have severely punished a number of criminals who seriously undermined our economy, and made significant progress in tackling the problem of comprehensively maintaining public order. The cadres and the masses have greatly strengthened their concept of the socialist legal system, and public security work in the province has been greatly improved. However, class struggle still exists to a certain extent, and many unstable factors still prevail in society. Serious crimes are still being reported in the economic sphere. The number of criminal cases fluctuates. Special agents, spies and counterrevolutionaries have continuously emerged in the country. There are still many general public security problems. Therefore, maintaining public order and striking at criminal activities remains a pressing, protracted and arduous task.

Those attending the meeting held: To vigorously strengthen public security work remains the focus of our political and judicial work for this winter and next spring. It is essential to carry out the following tasks:

1. Severely punish, according to law, all antisocialist hostile elements and all types of serious criminal offenders.

2. Further strengthen public security measures, resolutely strike at those who organize gambling and professional gamblers, and combat the gambling trend.

3. Strengthen the basic-level organs and carry out well the work at the grassroot level.

4. Step up efforts to keep watch on criminals and help them to reform.

5. Vigorously strengthen the struggle to curb incidents that undermine public security.

6. Help lawyers do a better job and strengthen notarization work.

The meeting called on all political and judicial organs to train more competent people, and insure that they have younger, more revolutionary and educated and professionally more competent cadres. Efforts must be made to educate public security cadres and policemen on the communist view on their vocational responsibilities and on ethics and discipline. Public security cadres and policemen must play an exemplary role in serving the people, encouraging healthy trends, combating evil practices, enforcing the law and handling cases in a civilized manner.

At the same time, they must also make fresh contributions to safeguarding and promoting socialist modernization with economic construction as the core.

SHANGHAI CIRCULAR URGES STUDYING CPC DOCUMENTS

OW211031 Shanghai City Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 13 Dec 82

[Text] The Shanghai Municipal CPC Committee on 10 December issued a circular calling for further studying the documents of the 12th party congress in a comprehensive way and extending the first round of study of the documents to early February 1983.

The circular called for closely integrating the study of the 12th party congress documents with that of the constitution adopted at the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC, Comrade Peng Zhen's report on the draft revised constitution, and Comrade Zhao Ziyang's report on the Sixth 5-Year Plan. It also called for organizing cadres and the masses to conduct an extensive and intensive study of the constitution and particularly for educating and supervising the broad masses of party members to take the lead in observing the constitution.

The circular pointed out: While conducting a comprehensive study of the 12th party congress documents, it is necessary to organize all party members in the municipality to conduct a conscientious study of the constitution and for leading cadres to take the lead in doing a good job in the study.

The circular also pointed out: To conduct a thoroughgoing study of the documents, it is necessary to have a profound understanding of the guidelines of the documents and to conscientiously integrate ideology with practice so as to solve the various ideological problems. Leading bodies of the party organizations at all levels should examine their understanding of the line, principles and policies formulated by the central authorities by reviewing the overall process of bringing order out of chaos since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. They should try to find out in what fields they have carried out the line, principles and policies well, in what fields they still lag behind, and what the reasons are for their lagging behind. They should earnestly summarize their experiences and lessons, make efforts ideologically to align themselves with the guidelines of the 12th party congress, and politically act in unison with the party Central Committee.

In conclusion, the circular called for strengthening leadership over the study, doing a good job in publicity work among the masses, and conducting a conscientious examination of the work done.

SHANGHAI PLA UNITS SUPPORT NEW CONSTITUTION

OW221335 Shanghai JIEFANG RIBAO in Chinese 15 Dec 82 p 1

[Text] The broad masses of cadres and fighters of the PLA land, navy and air force units stationed in Shanghai warmly support the birth of the new constitution and state that they will strive to act as models of studying and observing the new constitution.

During the past few days, the PLA units stationed in Shanghai, one unit after another, held meetings to conscientiously study the new constitution. The broad masses of commanders and fighters said with delight that the new constitution is a constitution for running the country well as it embodies and complies with the people's will and conforms to the national conditions. As the people's own army, we will strictly abide by and safeguard the new constitution and resolutely fulfill the mission assigned to the People's Army as stipulated in the constitution.

In the course of studying the new constitution, Zhang Chen, political commissar of the Shanghai garrison command, said that there is double significance to the study of the new constitution by the PLA units. As common citizens of the PRC, we must consciously abide by the new constitution, and therefore we must not only know the law but also understand the law. As a major part of the state apparatus, the PLA units assume the important responsibility of safeguarding the new constitution; and therefore we should not only know but also understand the law. He called on every cadre and fighter of the units under the garrison command to make efforts to study the new constitution, publicize the new constitution and abide by it. Deputy Commander Yao Xiaocheng talked of his understanding of the need to strengthen the concept of legal system by introducing his own experiences in this regard. He said that in the course of studying the new constitution, it is necessary to earnestly integrate ideology with reality, summarize experiences and lessons, and thoroughly do away with the influence of the "leftist" thinking so as to make the legal system concept take root in our own minds.

All PLA Navy units stationed in Shanghai actively organize cadres and fighters to conscientiously study the new constitution and they talk freely about the great significance of the new constitution.

In the course of the study and discussion, all fighters and commanders expressed that the birth of the new constitution provides a fundamental guarantee of the fulfillment of our country's four modernizations. And we must strengthen our grasp of the legal system and act as models in observing the constitution.

The leading organ of the PLA Air Force units stationed in Shanghai issued a notice calling on all units to link the study of the new constitution with the special study the 12th national party congress documents. During the course of the study, all participants said that the new constitution is the fundamental law of the state and that they should resolutely support it and strictly abide by the constitution.

Cadres and students of the Second University of Surgeons and the Air Force Political School as well as the political cadres of armed police force in Shanghai currently receiving training all joined in the conscientious study of the new constitution in the past few days.

SHANGHAI CPPCC COMMITTEE MEETS 23 DEC

OW211229 Shanghai City Service in Mandarin 1130 GMT 20 Dec 82

[Text] The Fifth session of the Fifth Shanghai Municipal CPPCC Committee will be held on 23 December. This was the decision made at the 24th meeting of the standing committee of the municipal CPPCC committee this afternoon.

The coming session will hear and discuss the 1982 work report of the standing committee and approve various resolutions. During the session, the committee members will also attend the fifth session of the Seventh municipal people's congress as nonvoting members to hear various reports and join in group discussions.

The standing committee meeting discussed and approved the draft of the standing comittee's work report; the draft schedule and agenda for the fifth session of the fifth municipal CPPCC committee; and the draft namelist for the committee to examine motions and the committee to draft resolutions.

Zhao Xingzhi, vice chairman of the municipal CPPCC committee, attended and addressed the meeting. SHANGHAI PEOPLE'S CONGRESS DEPUTIES CUT TO 995

OW211227 Shanghai City Service in Mandarin 1130 GMT 20 Dec 82

[Text] The 24th meeting of the standing committee of the Shanghai Municipal People's Congress today enthusiastically discussed the draft regulations on the election of deputies to the 8th Shanghai Municipal People's Congress.

The standing committee members of the municipal people's congress attending today's meeting unanimously endorsed these regulations. They emphatically pointed out: In electing deputies to the municipal people's congress, it is necessary to give full scope to democracy and to respect the voters' democratic rights so that the elected deputies will really represent the will and interests of the people, keep close ties with the masses and reflect their demands and opinions. At the same time, deputies to the municipal people congress should do a good job in the socialist modernization of Shanghai in coordination with the standing committee of the municipal people's congress and the municipal people's government.

Su Buqing, standing committee member of the municipal people's congress, said: Deputies represent the people in administering municipal affairs. In electing deputies to the eighth municipal people's congress, it is necessary to elect key personnel who have forged close ties with the masses on various fronts, especially young and middle-aged intellectuals who have contributed to the four modernizations and who made achievements in education and scientific research.

In accordance with Article 9 of the electoral law for the NPC and the local people's congresses of the PRC and in consideration of the fact that the number of deputies to the Sixth NPC is to be reduced to 3,000 as compared with the 3,500 deputies to the Fifth NPC, the number of deputies to the Eighth Shanghai Municipal People's Congress will be cut down to 995 as compared with the 1,260 deputies to the seventh municipal people's congress.

The electoral regulations also include provisions on the apportioning of deputies to the eighth municipal people's congress, the nomination of candidates for deputies and their election.

ZHEJIANG CPC COMMITTEE STRESSES PUBLIC SECURITY

OW221105 Hangzhou ZHEJIANG RIBAO in Chinese 5 Dec 82 p 4

[Text] The Zhejiang Provincial CPC Committee recently approved a report submitted by its political and legal affairs committee on plans for public security work this winter and next spring.

The provincial party committee pointed out that intensifying public security in a down-to-earth manner is significant for consolidating and developing this year's accomplishments in improving public security in the urban areas, creating a turn for the better in public security and guaranteeing smooth progress of socialist modernization.

The provincial party committee also urged the party committees at all levels to intensify public security work this winter and next spring. It said: Leading cadres and public security personnel at all levels must take the lead in studying, propagating, implementing and defending the new constitution. They must publicize the relevant laws and regulations and solve practical issues while tackling serious economic crimes, unauthorized logging, superstitious practices, gambling, abduction of women and other public security issues in the urban and rural areas. Archcriminals caught committing serious crimes that jeopardize social order must be punished promptly according to law, and certain major typical cases of educational significance should be tried openly so that the masses can be educated and criminal activities curbed.

The provincial party committee also urged all areas and departments to earnestly implement "comprehensive control" measures, earnestly analyze the public security situation and eliminate factors of instability one by one in order to eliminate potential trouble. It said that education with emphasis on guarding against fires, theft, enemy agents and sabotage must be broadly carried out, that the masses must be mobilized to make efforts to improve public security, that education and assistance for juvenile lawbreakers must be stepped up, and that the role of the people's mediation organs must be perfected and brought into play so that civil disputes can be settled promptly and correctly, people's grievances can be promptly redressed, and many problems can be nipped in the bud.

The provincial party committee stressed that the party committees at all levels must effectively strengthen their leadership, mobilize and organize all forces, unify their thinking, and unite and work together to make this task more successful than ever before.

NEI MONGGOL: ZHOU HUI ATTENDS EMPLOYMENT MEETING

SK230445 Hohhot Nei Monggol Regional Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 22 Dec 82

[Text] Recently the Nei Monggol Regional CPC Committee held a work forum in Baotou on labor employment of five municipalities in the western part of the region. The forum noted: The fundamental way to solve the problems of urban labor employment is to develop the collective- and individual-owned economy.

Attending the forum were some responsible comrades of the Hohhot, Baotou, Wunhai, Jining and Linhe Municipal People's Government and labor departments. (Qian Zhenyong), deputy secretary of the regional CPC committee; Peng Mengyu, standing committee member and vice chairman of the regional people's government and (Zhou He), standing committee member and secretary of the Hohhot Municipal CPC Committee, presided over and attended the forum. During the forum, Zhou Hui, first secretary of the regional CPC committee, personally delivered an important speech on labor employment work.

The forum held: Since the third plenum, our region has made great achievements in labor employment work, which is very conducive to developing the economy, consolidating the political situation of stability and unity. However, owing to the influence of the leftist mistakes in the past few years, the collective-owned economy has developed slowly. Avenues of employment are limited, as a result of the fact that the urban labor employment work is in a passive position.

The forum pointed out: The fundamental way to solve problems of urban labor employment work is to develop the collective- and individual-owned economy, that not only is an important way to solve problems of employment but has significance in promoting economic prosperity in both rural and urban areas and in improving the living conditions of the people.

The forum pointed out: Urban labor service companies at all levels should widen their fields of vision to arrange jobs for youths awaiting work and continue expanding the fields of employment. The urban collective- and individual-owned economy, that is conducive to bringing about a prosperous economy, to improving the living conditions of the people to enlivening markets and to arranging jobs for youths awaiting work, should vigorously and enthusiastically be given aid to develop.

From now on, labor service departments at all levels should systematically conduct technical education among youths awaiting work and turn labor service companies into technical training and social service centers in order to train qualified technicians to develop key industrial production.

All localities should open up more avenues for industrial, agricultural and livestock production, which can bring material wealth to the society, while opening up avenues for employment. Especially suburban areas should closely support key households and specialized households to develop crop farming, fish and poultry farming and the processing industry and simultaneously attend to developing the urban service industry with a view to improving urban resident's difficulties in having clothes made, in buying vegetables, in having repairs done and in taking care of children. Efforts should be made to popularize housework step by step.

The forum stresses: Leaders of urban party and government organs at all levels should regard the labor employment work as a great event and place the work high on their agenda. Leaders should personally, generally, conscientiously and successfully attend to it.

TIANJIN'S CHEN WEIDA SPEAKS AT LABOR FORUM

SK210953 Tianjin City Service in Mandarin 2330 GMT 20 Dec 82

[Excerpts] The municipal CPC committee and the municipal people's government sponsored a forum on 20 December with the participation of representatives of advanced units and individuals emerging in obligatory labor for the construction of the project to divert the Luanhe River water to Tianjin.

In their speeches at the forum, participants unanimously expressed pledges to carry forward the communist spirit stemming in obligatory labor among various industries and trades as well as on various fronts and to yield positive results of the spirit so as to make new contributions to building socialist material and spiritual civilizations and to creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization.

Li Ruihuan, secretary of the municipal CPC committee and acting mayor of the municipality, presided over the forum. Attending the forum were leading comrades of the municipal CPC committee and the municipal people's government, including Chen Weida and Chen Bing, who also addressed the forum. Attending the forum were: Representatives from various communes and brigades of suburban counties; the fronts of industry and communications, finance and trade, culture and education and public health; official organs; and PLA units -- more than 120 persons in all.

In conclusion, Comrade Chen Weida delivered a speech in which he pointed out: By adopting obligatory labor, we have prefulfilled the plan for excavating open channels for the project to divert the Luanhe River water to Tianjin. At the same time, a large number of touching deeds have emerged in the operation. All of this has fully shown that our party deserves to be called a great party, that our people have proven themselves as great, that our troops are worthy of being sons and daughters of the people, and that our youths are full of promise. The communist spirit stemming in the building operation of the project enables us to further enhance our confidence in realizing the four modernizations. He urged the people across the municipality to learn from the spirit and to make still greater contributions to their own work.

Session Ends

SK220919 Tianjin City Service in Mandarin 2330 GMT 21 Dec 82

[Excerpts] After a 2-day meeting, the Fourth Session of the Sixth Tianjin Municipal CPPCC Committee ended on 21 December. The meeting heard and discussed a work report submitted by the standing committee, adopted a resolution on earnestly implementing the new constitution and on making concerted efforts to strive to fulfill the 1983 glorious tasks of Tianjin Municipality.

In discussion, the session unanimously supported the new constitution and the Sixth 5-Year Plan, the new CPPCC constitution and the political resolution of the national CPPCC committee, and the plans of the central authorities and the municipal CPC committee on holding the first session of the seventh municipal CPPCC committee next spring.

Zhang Zaiwang, permanent secretary of the municipal CPC committee, spoke at the opening ceremony. He first affirmed the important role played by the CPPCC committees in the socialist revolution and construction. He said: For over 30 years or so since the PRC's founding, we, the CPPCC committees, have gone forward hand-in-hand. As China's old saying goes, we have stood together through thick and thin. In the days to come, our objectives in the four modernizations will be all the more identical. Therefore, we should, all the more, help one another wholeheartedly, show utter devotion to one another and make concerted efforts to fulfill the great tasks.

The closing ceremony was chaired by Zhao Jinsheng, vice chairman of the municipal CPPCC committee. Attending the ceremony were Zhu Ziqiang, Yu Zhiyuan, Li Shusen, Lou Ningxian, Xing Yanzi, Zhou Ru, Han Zhen, Huang Yusheng, He Zongqian, Wu Tingqiu, Kang Tiejun, Jin Xianzhai, Chen Ruyu, Liao Canhui and Ha Litian, vice chairmen of the municipal CPPCC committee. LIAONING'S PROVINCIAL CPPCC SESSION OPENS 22 DEC

SK231110 Shenyang Liaoning Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 22 Dec

[Text] The Fifth Session of the Fourth Liaoning Provincial CPPCC Committee solemnly opened in Shenyang today. The main agenda of this session is to hear and discuss a report on the work of the standing committee, to relay the guidelines of the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC and the Fifth Session of the Fifth National CPCC Committee, to hear reports on the development of our province's economy and on the rural situation and policies. Zhang Zengde, deputy leader of the provincial delegation to the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC and secretary of the Liaoning Provincial CPC Committee, relayed the guidelines of the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC. Zhang Yan, vice chairman of the provincial CPPCC committee and director of the united front work department of the provincial CPC committee, relayed the guidelines of the Fifth Session of the Fifth National CPPCC Committee.

Liu Mingjiu, vice chairman of the provincial CPPCC committee delivered a work report. He said: Under the leadership of the provincial CPC committee, our province's united front work has become more lively. The work of the CPPCC committees has greatly developed. At present, the province as a whole has 68 CPPCC organizations with over 9,000 members. The CPPCC committees have played an increasingly important role in the country's political life and in the four modernizations. The competent departments of the provincial CPPCC committees and their subordinate organs and organizations have been established and improved step-by-step. They have been reinforced and strengthened continuously. Over the past few years, by holding all kinds of meetings and conducting investigations and research work, the CPPCC committees have held activities on political consultation and democratic supervision, have done much work and have scored great achievements.

He said: 1982 is about to end successfully. The recent Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC and the Fifth Session of the Fifth National CPPCC Committee were two very important meetings. Under the guidelines of the line of the 12th CPC Congress, we must earnestly study and implement the guidelines of these two sessions and make due efforts to create a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization, in the country's united front and in the work of the CPPCC committees.

QINGHAI PROVINCIAL PEOPLE'S CONGRESS SESSION OPENS

HK220143 Xining Qinghai Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 21 Dec 82

[Summary] The Fifth Session of the Fifth Qinghai Provincial People's Congress opened in Xining on 21 December. Comrade Zhaxi Wangxu presided at the opening ceremony. In the afternoon the session listened to the government work report delivered by Governor Zhang Guosheng.

"The first part of this report reviewed the province's economic and other achievements in 1982, pointing out: This has been a year of an all-round turn for the better in the province's national economy. Part two set out the economic construction tasks for 1983. The general task for the province next year is to continue to implement the principle of readjustment, restructuring, reorganization and upgrading and the 10-point guideline for national economic construction, and shift all economic work toward improving economic results. The province should concentrate on agriculture while actively developing diversification, vigorously develop local industry by tapping potentials and carrying out innovations and improvements, enliven the circulation channels, and maintain basic balance in finance and credits and basic price stability."

Governor Zhang Guosheng proposed: "The targets for endeavor next year are as follows: Total industrial and agricultural output value should reach 2.22 billion yuan, an increase of 5.2 percent over this year. On the basis of developing production, we should further improve the people's living standards and raise their material and cultural levels."

Part three of the report said: "The tasks facing us are extremely arduous. The most fundamental thing in accomplishing these tasks is to resolutely implement the 12th party congress spirit, and step up ideological and organizational building so as to ensure the smooth progress of economic construction. The province must grasp five tasks in 1983: 1) strengthen the building of spiritual civilization centered on a communist ideological education; 2) study, publicize and implement the new constitution and put socialist democracy and legal system on a sounder basis; 3) do well in reforming the administrative structure and improving work efficiency; 4) do a good job in nationality work and strengthen nationality unity; 5) strengthen confidence and go all-out.

INTELLIGENCE REPORT ON PRC BOMBINGS CITED

OW230357 Taipei CNA in English 0304 GMT 23 Dec 82

[Text] Taipei, Dec. 23 (CNA) -- Anti-communist movement and anti-Teng activities are continuing to rise in the Yunnan Province in mainland China, threatening the stability of local political power base in that southwestern province in Red China.

According to an intelligence report reaching here from behind the bamboo curtain, bombing sabotages occured in Yunnan Province one after another. On Oct. 17 this year, a grenade exploded in a military base where soldiers and officers were watching a movie, killing nine cadres and injuring six severely. Later soldier Chao Yung-kuen was arrested for exploding the grenade. Chao was also found to have distributed posters saying "soldiers, no future: communists, no hope."

On Oct. 1, when a meeting of Communist Party cadres was being held in the Mang City in Yunnan, the platform exploded suddenly and left over 10 cadres badly injured, among them five were killed later.

Another bombing sabotage was reported on Aug. 30 on a highway between Lanchang and Menlien, in which 25 military men were killed or injured by mines planted by anti-communist workers, the report says.

CHIANG CHING-KUO SPEAKS ON CONSTITUTION DAY

OW260822 Taipei Domestic Service in Mandarin 1200 GMT 25 Dec 82

[Text] Taipei -- President Chiang Ching-kuo said today that the Constitution of the ROC is our legally constituted authority. It is a just and honorable constitution. Advocating that the world is for all, this democratic Constitution represents the whole people and many parties. President Chiang said: The Constitution is the fundamentals of our country. We cannot and will not let anyone shake the basic guidelines of the Constitution of the ROC. We cannot and will not allow anyone to damage this great Constitution.

Addressing a commemorative meeting marking Constitution Day today, President Chiang Ching-kuo said: Some people think the Chinese Communists control a vast land. Actually, they don't. What the Chinese Communists control is nothing but outward appearance, but they can never enjoy the support of the people on the mainland. The Chinese Communists are only [word indistinct] but we are quite certain we can win.

President Chiang said: I was recently asked what the Chinese Communists had done over the past 32 years. President Chiang answered: The Chinese Communists have been digging their own graves for these 32 years and will bury themselves. We have the three principles of the people and the Constitution of the ROC, an incomparable force we feel most proud of.

President Chiang emphatically pointed out: There are two great tasks facing us now: One is to consolidate Taiwan, Penghu, Kinmen and Matsu, our bases of rejuvenation; the other is to recover the mainland and rescue our compatriots. If we have confidence and resolution, we can certainly fulfill these two tasks. President Chiang said: The Chinese nation has an indomitable character. The more difficult the situation we are in, the more united we will be. He pointed out: The democratic method is the orientation we have already set. However, the road is very long. Only by using our wisdom and by studying time and again can we reach our goal. Under the present circumstances, if we want democracy, we must oppose communism; if we want freedom, we must abide by law.

President Chiang said: We must carry out democracy and strive for democracy. This is our determination. I hope you will all be responsible and spare no efforts to do your work well. We must trust, understand and help each other, strengthen unity, work together harmoniously, stand on our own feet, make unremitting efforts to improve ourselves and not rely on anyone's help. We must have self-confidence, help each other like people in the same boat and constantly strive to become stronger so as to fulfill our tasks.

Premier Sun Yun-hsuan said today that a constitution is the fundamental law of state and that the Constitution of the Republic of China is not only the beacon which shows all the Chinese people's support for and confidence in the Republic of China but also the [words indistinct] of the history and the legally constituted authority of the ROC. Therefore, Premier Sun said, all Chinese people must observe, implement and safeguard the Constitution of the ROC.

Addressing the 1982 annual meeting and the 17th plenary session of the forum on constitutional government held by the national assemblymen today, Premier Sun said: The provisional clauses in the Constitution [words indistinct] by the National Assembly in the period of suppressing the communist rebellion have been instituted so as to authorize the government to deal with difficulties on an emergency basis and save the nation from subjugation and insure its survival during unusual times. The purpose is to safeguard our constitutional system. These clauses have the same effect as the Constitution and they may be called a portion of the Constitution. Therefore, we must safeguard, observe and implement them as well as the Constitution.

Premier Sun said: We must adhere to the stand that we hold no talks with the Chinese Communists, be vigilant at all times and eliminate compromising remarks and splittist ideology which oppose the Constitution and our state policy so as to keep our bases of rejuvenation secure and stable.

SOUTH AFRICA STEEL AGREEMENT -- Kaohsiung, 15 Dec (CNA) -- Chen Shu-hsun, vice chairman of China Steel Corp. [CSC], said Tuesday that CSC has signed a technical cooperation agreement with South Africa Steel and Iron Co. Under the agreement, Chen said, the two parties will exchange technicians and engineers. In addition, South Africa has agreed to stop selling the Republic of China steel products which CSC can supply beginning 1 January, 1983. The agreement was reached during last October's ROC-South Africa economic meeting held in South Africa, Chen said. [Text] [Taipei CNA in English 0255 GMT 15 Dec 82 OW]

BUMPER RICE HARVEST -- Taipei, 14 Dec (CNA) -- Another bumper crop for rice was registered this year with the unit area yield rising to a record high, the Taiwan Provincial Food Bureau reported. Huang Chin-feng, director of the bureau, said today yield of the rice crops in 1982 amounted to 2,406,000 metric tons, exceeding the target by over 300,000 metric tons. Huang said the rice planting acreage in the current year rose 6.62 percent to 657,844 hectares because farmers have discovered that growing rice is more profitable than planting other crops. Because of the declining rice consumption in Taiwan and the consecutive bumper crops, the storage of rice surplus has become a problem. According to official statistics, the annual rice consumption now stands at around 2 million metric tons. The cumulative surplus rice bought by the government has reached 1,300,000 metric tons, 1 million metric tons over the required stockpiling volume. The situation has forced the government to export the surplus rice at a loss. Recently, a plan was made to de-emphasize rice planting. [Text] [Taipei CNA in English 1006 GMT 14 Dec 82 OW]

PRC MOVES TO ATTRACT FOREIGN INVESTORS

HK230127 Hong Kong HONG KONG STANDARD in English 23 Dec 82

[Text] China is stepping up efforts to attract foreign investors with fresh offers of guarantees on capital returns, stable interest rates and profit margins.

Hong Kong Factory Owners Association President Huang Jian said he was told by high-ranking Chinese officials that the government return on capital investments within five years. [sentence as published]

On recovery of investment capital, profits from the investment will be divided between the investor and the Chinese Government or by investment companies of the region on a pro rata basis, he said.

Moreover, Guangdong Province investment officials have told Mr Huang that China was willing to provide up to 90 per cent of the capital required to build a factory in a joint-venture arrangement.

The interest rate on loans for investment will be fixed after negotiation. The investors profit will be earned in foreign exchange, not renminbi, he said.

This policy has been formulated to attract foreign manufacturers to invest in products of great demand within China, such as light textile products, clothes, canned food and packaging, he said.

Textile products may attract Hong Kong manufacturers, as they have the experience and expertise in this industry, he said. This policy applies all over China, Mr Huang said.

He said local manufacturers interested in such projects can contact investment companies in Beijing, Tianjin, Shanghai, and Guangdong.

At present, all Hong Kong investments in China are producing goods for consumption outside China, he added.

At present less than 10 percent of foreign investments in China are producing commodities such as escalators, soft drinks and television sets for domestic consumption.

Mr Huang said this policy is aimed at Hong Kong and Macao investors, but Western and Japanese investors are also welcome. He anticipated that local manufacturers will respond favourably to this policy. He pointed out that capital in investment in Hong Kong can usually be returned within three to five years, which is nearly the same as the new policy in China.

However, he said the profit margin for Hong Kong factory owners is just about three per cent for this year, far from the satisfactory level of 15 per cent.

Bank of China confirm whether it will extend loans to the local industrial sector next month, but the details need further discussion, he said. [sentence as published]

He asked Bank of China and its thirteen branches to offer an interest rate of one per cent below the prime rate. He called for all banks in Hong Kong to offer the same interest rate to Hong Kong manufacturers.

Moreover he hoped the banks can establish a stabilisation period to keep the interest rate to manufactures from fluctuation so as to help the recovery of the industrial sector.

He pointed out that the present land price, generally is around $141 per square foot is still high, and only about $60 to $70 manufacturers can afford so as to buy the land to establish factories.

He said at present about 500 factories have been closed, and about 10 of these employ more than 100 workers.

Of the 2.4 million working population in Hong Kong, about 100,000 are now unemployed, and about 200,000 semi-unemployed which means working for about 12 days a month, he added.

He predicts that the present recession will carry to 1983, and Hong Kong's industrial sector will need three to four years to recover, if they gain support from government and the banks.

PRC ECONOMY REPORTEDLY BETTER THAN EXPECTED IN '82

HK230438 Hong Kong TA KUNG PAO in Chinese 23 Dec 82 p 1

[Special dispatch from Beijing by Hou Tung-hai: "China's Economy Is Better Than Expected This Year; Total Industrial, Agricultural Output Value Rises by 7 Percent"]

[Text] Beijing, 22 Dec -- China's economic development is better than expected this year. According to the latest estimate, the gross output of industrial and agricultural production is expected to increase by about 7 percent over last year.

It has been learned from relevant quarters that according to the latest statistics, the development of China's national economy this year will be better than predicted in Premier Zhao's report on the Sixth 5-Year Plan. From January to November this year, the gross value of industrial production amounted to 505.2 billion yuan, fulfilling the annual plan by 94.8 percent, an increase of 7.7 percent over the same period last year. Of this, light industry increased by 6 percent and heavy industry by 9.5 percent. By the end of November, we had fulfilled, 1 month ahead of schedule, the annual plan for 57 major products, such as steel, cement, chemical fertilizer, hydropower, cotton cloth, cars, TV sets and sewing machines; the accumulated energy output amounted to 600 million tons of standard coal, fulfilling the annual plan by 95.2 percent, an increase of 5.1 percent over the same period last year. If, in December, we can preserve our November level of increase, the gross value of industrial production this year is expected to rise by about 7 percent over last year. From January to October, the labor productivity of the entire work force increased by 3.3 percent over the same period last year. The cost of comparable products dropped by 0.1 percent. We have reaped an overall bumper harvest in agricultural production this year. The output of grain, cotton, oil and tobacco will top the best level in history. The gross value of agricultural production is expected to increase by 7 percent over last year. Up to the end of November, the state purchase of farm produce also went well. The purchase amount of grain increased by 19 percent over the same period last year, that of cotton increased by 15 percent and that of edible oil increased by 14 percent. The output of cured tobacco, tea and aquatic products also increased by a considerable margin.

In the domestic market, there is an ample supply of commodities with brisk buying and selling. From January to November, the turnover of social commodities increased by 8.7 percent over the same period last year. Of this, the turnover of consumer goods increased by 8 percent and that of the means of agricultural production increased by 12.2 percent.

According to customs statistics, from January to November, China's total import and export volume amounted to U.S. $37.74 billion, a drop of 4.4 percent over the same period last year.

Of this, total export volume amounted to $20.09 billion, an increase of 2.9 percent; total import volume amounted to $17.65 billion, a drop of 11.6 percent. Exports are $2.44 billion greater than imports. It is estimated that there will still be a considerable favorable balance for the whole year.

By the end of November, the situation was also good in state revenue and expenditure, with revenue being 780 million yuan greater than expenditure. The amount of currency put into circulation is less than both the stipulated plan and the same period of last year. With the stability of prices, the prestige of renminbi has improved and savings deposits of residents have continued to rise. By the end of November, the savings deposits of urban and rural residents amounted to 65.42 billion yuan, an increase of nearly 13 billion yuan over the beginning of this year. We have registered the biggest increase in saving deposits this year.

HU YAOBANG URGES OLD CADRES TO CONTRIBUTE

HK230233 Hong Kong WEN WEI PO in Chinese 23 Dec 82 p 3

[Dispatch From Beijing: "Hu Yaobang Demands That Old Cadres Do More Investigation and Study, Offer Their Experience"]

[Text] A few months ago, the General Secretary of the CPC Central Committee Hu Yaobang inspected Liaoning, Sichuan, Shaanxi, Fujian and Anhui Provinces and, after listening to reports from leading cadres at various levels on the readjustment of organizational structure and on better troops and simpler administration, set several demands on old cadres. He held that it was unnecessary for many old cadres to worry that they would have nothing to do after they retired. In the work of reforming organizational structure, consolidating the party, rectifying party work style and readjusting the economy, they should conduct investigation and study, participate in planning, provide experiences and convince the masses. Hu Yaobang encouraged the cadres at various levels to be good at dividing up the work and doing organizational work and paying attention to work methods in order to help in making a good job of the above-mentioned work. The leading cadres at various levels "should reduce their commanding right and expand their right to speak." To this end, it is necessary to conduct investigation and study.

NEW POLICY TOWARD PRC IMMIGRANTS REACHED

HK230204 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 23 Dec 82 pp 1, 13

[By Donald Cheung]

[Text] A new policy to remove overstaying mainland visitors in Hong Kong will in practice mean a substantial drop in the legal immigrant flow from China.

Officials hope the new measure will mean that about half of the 145 people from China arriving legally in Hong Kong every day will have to return after their stay here.

The government announced yesterday that from today all visitors arriving here would be required to return home on or before the expiry date of their two-way permits.

This tough measure was approved by the Chinese authorities during a meeting in Guangzhou on Friday between top Hong Kong and Guangdong officials.

The arrangements, according to a government Secretariat spokesman, are designed to facilitate genuine visits to Hong Kong.

The spokesman said that the number of legal arrivals was expected to remain at its present level -- about 145 daily in recent months -- "for the time being."

But he added that the number of those who settled here was expected to be reduced substantially.

Official statistics show that in the first 11 months of this year, a total of 33,562 mainland Chinese came here for permanent settlement. They are known as one-way permit holders.

While they have accounted for nearly 70 per cent of the total number of legal arrivals this year, officials noted they had formed only about half of the total in recent months.

It was not known whether officials at the Guangzhou talks had discussed -- or come to any agreement -- on the percentage distribution of one-way and two-way permit holders.

But if the 50-50 ratio continues, it will mean that only about 75 legal immigrants a day will settle here permanently.

The government spokesman also said that steps would be taken to ensure that all such visitors did in fact leave Hong Kong at the end of their authorised visits.

They would be escorted to the border if necessary, he explained, refusing to give any further details.

"For obvious security reasons, operational details must remain confidential," he said.

The spokesman told the SCM POST that the new policy would not affect two-way permit holders already here, who would be allowed to stay for good. Although the newcomers can still apply for extensions of stay when their permits expire, the spokesman stressed categorically that such applications would be refused.

At present, all visitors from China are initially granted up to six months extension of stay in Hong Kong after their permits expire. Any further extension varies from case to case. Under the old policy, they were allowed to settle for good and attain "belonger" status after seven years. Hence they eventually came into the legal immigrant category.

Viewing the new measure as a major breakthrough in the control of legal immigration from China, officials however agreed that it was difficult to stop mainland visitors going underground when their permits expired.

"There is nothing to stop them from hiding, but we will do our best," one source said. The source pointed out that like illegal immigrants, they would not be able to live and work here without identity cards.

Officials were aware that some might marry local people during their stay here, in an attempt to strengthen their claims for legal immigration. But officials stressed that like other nationals, these visitors would still have to return to their home country before they could apply to join their spouses here. "They have to come and go as visitors," one explained.

Contacts with the Chinese authorities about visitors to Hong Kong had been taking place for some time.

These led to the visit to Guangzhou on Friday by a top-level delegation headed by the political adviser, Mr Robin McLaren.

SHENZHEN TO CONSTRUCT INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

HK230404 Hong Kong WEN WEI PO in Chinese 23 Dec 82 p 1

[Special dispatch: "Shenzhen Decides To Build an International Airport"]

[Text] Along with the development of construction undertakings in the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone and the increase of economic contacts with foreign countries, it is clearly very important to build an international airport in Shenzhen.

Recently, based on the needs of the situation of construction, the special zone decided to build an international airport in Shenzhen and set up an office in charge of preparation for building it. Following its establishment, the office immediately started work on selecting and prospecting a site for the airport. It also invited specialists concerned to carry out a series of feasibility studies as well as the work of attracting foreign investments.

According to reports, the most suitable site for the international airport is on one side of Houhaiwan Bay. This will be close to the Shekou industrial zone of the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone and the soon to be constructed Chiwan deepwater port. The Chiwan deepwater port and the Shekou industrial zone will be the logistics base for the development of the South Sea oil project, and the building of an international airport here will have plenty of scope. In response to the invitation of the office in charge of preparations for building the Shenzhen airport, specialists will gather in succession in the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone to carry out an on-the-spot investigation and study and work out a concrete plan.

According to reports, in order to speed up the building of the airport, the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone is prepared to accept investments from Hong Kong and Macao as well as overseas entrepreneurs. The office in charge of preparations for building the airport has explained to businessmen, who have made inquiries on the feasibility and the specific terms of making investments, that the building of the international airport, like other large-scale projects in the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone, welcomes investments by businessmen and specific terms can be discussed any time. Moreover, in conformity with the spirit of running the special zone on a trial basis, investments and enterprises set up in the special zone will receive rather favorable terms.

PRC GREETS USSR ON 60TH FOUNDING ANNIVERSARY

OW280308 Beijing XINHUA in English 0255 GMT 28 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 28 (XINHUA) -- The Standing Committee of the Chinese National People's Congress and the State Council of the People's Republic of China have sent a message of greetings to the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet and the Council of Ministers of the Soviet Union on the matter's 60th founding anniversary. The message reads:

On the occasion of the 60th anniversary of the founding of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, we extend on behalf of the Chinese people of all nationalities warm congratulations and good wishes to the great Soviet people of all nationalities. In order to promote the traditional friendship between the Chinese and Soviet peoples and in the interest of peace in Asia and the world, China sincerely hopes that the relations between the two countries would be normalized step by step and a good-neighborly relationship would be established. The two sides should jointly work for the realization of this goal through negotiations, concrete actions and removal of obstacles.

XINHUA on Formation of USSR

OW280948 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0805 GMT 28 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, 28 Dec (XINHUA) -- Reference Material: The 60th Anniversary of the Founding of the USSR

The socialist revolution succeeded in Russia in October 1917. After this the Soviet regime was established successively in the Ukraine, Belorussia and Southern Caucasus. In October 1922, after eliminating foreign armed interventionists from all territories of the Soviet state, socialist construction needs and national defense tasks dictated further strengthening of the union of all nationalities of the Soviet state. Under these circumstances the Russian Communist Party (Bolshevik) Central Committee's plenary session pointed out on 6 October 1922 that it was necessary to conclude among the four republics -- namely the RSFSR, Ukraine, Belorussia and Southern Caucasus -- "a treaty for uniting into a Union of Soviet Socialist Republics." The first All-Russian Congress of Soviets was held in Moscow on 30 December 1922, and a declaration on the formation of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics (abbreviated USSR) was adopted. Since then the number of union republics has grown. By 1940 there were 15 union republics, namely RSFSR, Ukraine, Belorussia, Azerbaijan, Armenia, Georgia, Uzbekistan, Turkmenistan, Tajikistan, Kazakhstan, Kirghizia, Lithuania, Moldavia, Latvia and Estonia.

PRC, USSR AGREE ON CROSS-BORDER TRADE

LD221404 Moscow TASS in English 1404 GMT 22 Dec 82

[Text] Vladivostok, December 22, TASS -- A new stage of talks on border trade between the Soviet Union and the People's Republic of China has come to an end.

During a working meeting held in Grodekovo village (in the south of the Soviet Far East) representatives of the foreign trade organizations of Heilongkiang Province (PRC) and the Dalintorg Foreign Trade Organisation of the USSR agreed upon a list of consumer goods for two-way trade and their prices.

The two sides agreed to hold at the beginning of next year a final meeting in the city of Harbin where the first contracts on border trade are expected to be signed.

PRC, DPRK SIGN GOODS EXCHANGE PROTOCOL

OW261108 Beijing XINHUA in English 1101 GMT 26 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 26 (XINHUA) -- A protocol on goods exchange in 1983 was signed here this morning between the Governments of the People's Republic of China and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea.

Chen Muhua, Chinese state councillor and minister of foreign economic relations and trade, and Choe Chong-ku, head of the Korean Government trade delegation and minister of foreign trade, signed the protocol on behalf of their respective governments.

Chen Jie, deputy to the Chinese minister of foreign economic relations and trade, and Chon Chong-yong, charge d'affaires ad interim of the D.P.R.K. Embassy in Beijing, attended the signing ceremony.

Wan Li Receives DPRK Group

OW261514 Beijing XINHUA in English 1501 GMT 26 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 26 (XINHUA) -- Wan Li, acting premier of the State Council, met with a Korean Government trade delegation led by Choe Chong-ku, minister of foreign trade, this afternoon.

Wan Li said the Chinese and Korean Governments have cooperated closely for a long time. The signing of the protocol on goods exchange for 1983 has further consolidated the spirit of friendship, mutual assistance, unity and cooperation between the two countries. "In opposing hegemonism and undertaking economic construction, our two countries are confronted with common tasks. We will make further efforts to support each other so as to strengthen cooperation and enhance the traditional friendship between our two peoples," he said.

Choe Chong-ku said the smooth development of trade relations is beneficial to friendship between the two peoples and the promotion of the socialist construction of the two countries. "We will exert every effort to develop the friendship between the peoples and the cooperation between the two countries," he said.

Also present were Chen Jie, deputy to the Chinese minister of foreign economic relations and trade, and Chon Chong-yong, charge d'affaires ad interim of the Korean Embassy in Beijing.

In the evening, Chon Chong-yong gave a banquet for the delegation. Chen Muhua, Chinese state councillor and minister of foreign economic relations and trade, was among the guests.

FOURTH ANNIVERSARY OF KAMPUCHEA OCCUPATION NOTED

Andropov, Le Duan Mum on 'Fact'

OW240316 Beijing XINHUA in English 0214 GMT 24 Dec 82

[Text] Moscow, December 23 (XINHUA) -- General Secretary of the Soviet Communist Party Yuriy Andropov met with General Secretary of the Vietnamese Communist Party Le Duan here today.

According to a TASS report, the two sides discussed the problem of turning Southeast Asia into a "zone of peace and stability", and also expressed the wish to continue to develop "the all-round Soviet-Vietnamese relations" in accordance with the Soviet-Vietnamese treaty.

It is noteworthy that the two leaders still did not touch on the grim fact that Vietnam is continuing its military occupation of Kampuchea and endangering the security of the neighbouring countries, which is the root cause of instability in this region.

Son Sann Interviewed

BK280920 Beijing in Cambodian to Kampuchea 1030 GMT 27 Dec 82

[Text] The anti-Vietnamese resistance movement in Kampuchea is now more united and stronger than ever before, Son Sann, prime minister of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea, stated in Paris on 24 December.

Speaking at a press conference, Son Sann said that the Vietnamese had predicted that our alliance could not last longer than 6 months, but it has been over 7 months and our alliance is doing well.

Answering questions concerning China's assistance, Son Sann said China will provide weapons to all Kampuchean resistance forces fighting the Vietnamese aggressors regardless of ideology or religion.

Khieu Samphan Interviewed

BK251300 Beijing in Cambodia to Kampuchea 1030 GMT 24 Dec 82

[Text] Khieu Samphan, vice president of Democratic Kampuchea, received a group of our station correspondents on 6 December at a place controlled by Democratic Kampuchea and answered questions from correspondents. Here are the questions:

First Question: Democratic Kampuchea's victory at the UN General Assembly is a very important victory. What is the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea [CGDK] doing to strengthen and develop this great victory?

Second Question: What effort is Democratic Kampuchea making to agitate people throughout Kampuchea to fight against the Vietnamese aggressors?

Third question: Does Vietnam have the good will to withdraw its troops? In what situation can Vietnam be forced to withdraw its troops?

In his answer Khieu Samphan said:

[Begin recording] Immediately after the CGDK was set up, this government had to wage a struggle at the United Nations. It achieved a great victory. The cause was that the three sides in the coalition government cooperated well. They consulted with one another on the principle of uniting to increase the forces against the Vietnamese aggressors on the basis of the Kuala Lumpur declaration.

This was the reason we could work successfully at the United Nations, satisfying the people and army, encouraging them and making them more enthusiastic in the struggle to win victory on the battlefield. This is what we mean by uniting to increase the forces against the Vietnamese aggressors.

We will make every effort to continue down this good cooperation road. We consult with one another on all matters. We go to major places together so that together we can help one another achieve greater success. We hold that in this way we will win more successes one after another to provide the people and army with greater encouragement and make them more enthusiastic in the struggle on the battlefield. When the struggle on the battlefield is more successful, the government's work will be more successful too. The two are interrelated and complementary and will remain so until Vietnam is forced to abide by the UN resolutions to withdraw all their troops from Kampuchea. This is the answer to the first question.

Now let me inform you about the general situation of the Kampuchean people's struggle. In general, as you know, for nearly 4 years the Vietnamese aggressors have been inextricably bogged down in their aggression against Kampuchea. We are now in the fifth dry season. And in this fifth dry season it is apparent that the Vietnemse aggressors are weaker than before, for even in December they still have not yet launched any major operations. In the previous years they began their activities by the end of the rainy season and the beginning of the dry season -- that is, around October. Now we are already in December and there still are no major activities. This shows that they are weaker than in the past dry season because they have been worn out gradually. In saying so, I do not mean that they no longer have any ability to mobilize their forces to attack us. I only want to point out that they are weaker. I know very well that they are preparing to attack us some time, some place. However, in this dry season, even if they do attack us they are aware that they cannot change the military situation in any way. Whatever activities they are engaged in are for international publicity, just to serve their diplomatic ploy of showing and fooling world opinion that they are still powerful, as part of their deceptive diplomatic maneuvers.

In the current situation in which they are badly bogged down militarily, their main objective is to focus on diplomacy. They spread all kinds of rumors, including rumors that they agree to hold negotiations to settle the Kampuchean question. However, from what we have learned on the battlefield, we can see no sign that they accept withdrawal from Kampuchea. They only make preparations to attack us. In conducting the misleading negotiations maneuver, they aim to do the following: first, to divert world attention from their troop buildup as part of their preparations to attack us. The Vietnamese are weak now. They do not have any large-scale plan in this dry season. This is to fool world public opinion. In spreading rumors about negotations, they also aim at fooling world opinion, diverting its attention from monitoring their preparations to attack us on the battlefield. Secondly, their offer to negotiate is a ploy to split the CGDK. Thirdly, it is to confuse world opinion and its view on the countries that always have supported the struggle of the Kampuchean people to weaken support for our struggle. Fourthly, their negotiation maneuvers are an attempt to dull the fighting spirit of the Kampuchean Army and people.

We are confident that peace- and justice-loving countries of the world are well aware of the Vietnamese aggressors' extremely scheming plot.

So long as they keep refusing to comply with UN resolutions to withdraw their aggressor troops from Kampuchea, the Hanoi authorities will only continue to put forward deceptive offers and proposals. We are confident that peace- and justice-loving countries of the world are well aware of this and further will unite in demanding that the Hanoi authorities implement UN resolutions by withdrawing their troops from Kampuchea. In so doing -- together with the struggle waged by our people and army on the battlefield -- the Vietnamese will continue to face growing difficulties until one day they are forced to abide by the UN resolutions and withdraw their troops from Kampuchea.

I would like to go back to the military situation. Let me stress that for nearly 4 years the Vietnamese have been experiencing mounting difficulties. They do try to extricate themselves from this predicament. But whatever they do they still are having difficulties. I said that they plan to attack us and they are making preparations for this purpose. However, we are not waiting for them to attack us. We take the initiative by continuing to launch attrition attacks against them while implementing guerrilla warfare. First, we attack and cut their main transportation lines to hamper their supplying of troops. Secondly, when they try to repair roads, we attack and wear out their forces. Thirdly, when possible we attack some of their positions to expand the zone under our control. We have proceeded consistently in this way, enabling us to have the upper hand over the enemy to an important extent. All of this is the military situation.

Another phenomenon in this same situation is that, faced with an acute troops shortage, the Vietnamese are going all out to conscript fighters. Unlike the previous years, the draft is now an emergency measure. They are causing unrest among the people because of the seriousness of their drafting efforts. For example. if they cannot lay their hands on the young, they put the parents in jail and subject them to torture. They have failed to meet their targets in conscripting soldiers, and the few who have been drafted have deserted. Their policy of imprisoning parents to force the young out of hiding has frightened people and caused many of them to flee to our Democratic Kampuchea zone.

Let me talk about the people's situation. It is natural that in such a war situation our people have to suffer greatly, as they are badly victimized. Nevertheless, such a situation has fanned the indignation of our people against the Vietnamese aggressors and caused them to close ranks further against the Vietnamese agressors. The situation of the war against the Vietnamese aggressors is different from the 1970-75 war. In the 1970-1975 period the people did not participate directly in the war. They only helped the army. But in the war against the Vietnamese aggressors, the Vietnamese have committed so many heinous crimes against the people and slaughtered many of them. For this reason the people have to fight them personally and close ranks with the army in the fight. This has increased the first-hand experience of the Kampuchean people, enabling them to understand the Vietnamese aggressors clearly and know who their enemy is. Their hatred for the Vietnamese aggressors has become a strong fighting force which is growing with each passing year.

As for the people in Phnom Penh, they can be classified into three categories: First, there are former government employees who have nothing to do with the regime of the Vietnamese aggressors. Morally and politically they oppose the Vietnamese. Although they are not directly involved in the struggle against the Vietnamese, they are opposed to the Vietnamese politically and morally.

The second category is those who are used forcibly by the Vietnamese to serve in the Vietnamese regime. In general they oppose the Vietnamese. The third category is the general public that oppose the Vietnamese, for they are victims of Vietnamese persecution and atrocities.

Therefore, the Vietnamese aggressors are in dire difficulties in both Kampuchea and Vietnam. However, no sign thus far has been seen to show that they wish to withdraw troops from Kampuchea. There is only the deceptive trick to weaken the anti-Vietnamese forces on the battlefield so that they can restore their military situation and perpetuate their occupation of Kampuchea. Year in and year out the UN General Assembly has adopted resolutions calling for the withdrawal of Vietnamese troops from Kampuchea. However, the Vietnamese authorities consistently have refused to abide by these. In this situation, to force the Vietnamese to comply with the UN resolutions, the Kampuchean people must continue the anti-Vietnamese struggle in the military field. The Kampuchean people do not want war and want only to live in peace, but since they are victims of aggression by Vietnamese who refuse to respect UN resolutions, they must carry on the struggle militarily, attacking and causing greater difficulties to them to force them to pull out of Kampuchea.

In this situation we must further strengthen and develop the forces of great national unity against the Vietnamese. We will not do anything which may weaken the anti-Vietnamese forces. We will do whatever is possible to increase the forces of great unity against the Vietnamese aggressors in the CGDK as well as throughout the Kampuchean nation. The Kampuchean people and nation as a whole will continue to wage the military struggle against the Vietnamese aggressors.

Secondly, to force the Vietnamese to withdraw, we need continued world support. All forces opposing the aggression and expansion of Vietnam and its Soviet boss benefit the struggle of the Kampuchean people on the battlefield. Such forces can only benefit the Kampuchean people fighting for national defense, thereby contributing to the forces protecting peace and stability in the region and the rest of the world.

In summary, the Democratic Kampuchean people and army fighting the Vietnamese on the battlefield and in the world should join hands in pressuring the Hanoi authorities to implement UN resolutions. Only this one day will force the Hanoi authorities to withdraw their troops from Kampuchea, check the aggressive and expansionist strategy of Vietnam and its Soviet boss in Southeast Asia, and thereby safeguard peace in the world.

In this connection I would like to stress that whatever is harmful to the forces of Democratic Kampuchea fighting the Vietnamese aggressors right on the battlefield cannot benefit the struggle against the aggressive and expansionist strategy of Vietnam and its Soviet boss nor the efforts to preserve peace and stability in Southeast Asia. For it is most evident that without the forces opposing them, the Vietnamese will never withdraw from Kampuchea. [end recording]

RENMIN RIBAO 'Salute'

[Text] Beijing, 25 Dec (XINHUA) -- RENMIN RIBAO today carries an editorial entitled "Salute to the Heroic Kampuchean People." Its full text reads as follows:

Four years ago today the Vietnamese authorities unleashed a large-scale war of aggression against Democratic Kampuchea.

They occupied large tracts of Kampuchean territory and installed a puppet regime in Phnom Penh in a wild attempt to reduce Kampuchea to a Vietnamese colony. Under very harsh conditions the patriotic Kampuchean armed forces and people rose to struggle for national salvation. Tempered by severe tests of fighting, they dealt heavy blows to the Vietnamese aggressors and brought about important changes in the Kampuchean situation, thus contributing tremendously to the maintenance of national independence in Kampuchea and peace and security in Southeast Asia. The Chinese people wish to express their lofty respect for the heroic Kampuchean people.

Replying on the military superiority and support of the soviet superpower, the Vietnamese authorities tried in vain to annex Kampuchea, rig up an Indochina federation and dominate Southeast Asia in order to satisfy their ambition for regional hegemony and serve Soviet hegemonism in its expansion to Southeast Asia. For several years the Vietnamese authorities time and again have dispatched more aggressor troops into Kampuchea and launched many mopping-up offensives against the patriotic Kampuchean armed forces and people with airplanes, tanks and other modern weapons -- even using a inhumane chemical toxin in a vain attempt to annihilate the patriotic Kampuchean armed forces and realize their criminal goal of occupying Kampuchea permanently.

However, the situation in Kampuchea has not developed as the aggressors have wished. The Kampuchean patriotic armed forces have carried out people's guerrilla warfare in the vast rural areas and jungles, striking at the enemy in a flexible manner and thus wiping out the enemy's effective forces and completely crushing the arrogant scheme of the power holders in Hanoi to win a speedy decisive victory. At present the more than 100,000 Vietnamese aggressor troops in Kampuchea can only defend scattered cities, towns, bastions and communications lines and increasingly have become passive and vulnerable to attack. The patriotic Kampuchean armed forces and people have grown in strength in their arduous struggle, expanded their areas of operation, set up a coalition government and created a new situation in which the various patriotic Kampuchea resistance forces fight in unity against the Vietnamese aggressor.

The situation in the Kampuchean battlefields has become increasingly favorable to the Kampuchean people and unfavorable to the Vietnamese aggressors.

The Kampuchean people's just struggle of resistance to Vietnamese aggression has enjoyed the sympathy and support of the countries of Southeast Asian nations and the peace-loving and justice-upholding countries and people in the world. The UN General Assembly -- by an overwhelming majority on four consecutive occasions -- adopted resolutions preserving Democratic Kampuchea's lawful seat in the United Nations and demanding the total withdrawal of Vietnamese troops from Kampuchea. But the Vietnamese authorities have persisted stubbornly in their war of aggression against Kampuchea. This has made Vietnam's economy continue to worsen and its political situation increasingly unstable. Furthermore, the Vietnamese authorities have met strong condemnation and opposition from the international community. They are finding themselves in a more difficult and isolated position.

The arduous 4-year struggle waged by the Kampuchean people against aggression has proved the truth that no matter how strong the aggressors are in these modern times, people who are subjected to aggression surely can overcome all kinds of difficulties to carry their anti-aggression struggle to final victory -- provided they rise in a resolute and protracted all-people's war for national salvation, strengthen the unity among all patriotic forces at home and win support from the international community.

Although the Kampuchean people have won great victories they still face an arduous job of struggle. Although the Hanoi authorities are deeply bogged down in a quagmire and beset by all sorts of difficulties, they have yet to renounce their ambition for regional hegemony. To get themselves out of this difficult position the Hanoi authorities are trying to initiate new military adventures during the present dry season. Meanwhile they are scheming to undermine the unity of the three Kampuchean patriotic forces so as to disintegrate the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea. They actively are plotting a regional dialogue among the so-called Indochinese countries and ASEAN countries in an attempt to trap other countries into recognizing the fait accompli of the Vietnamese occupation of Kampuchea and legalize the puppet regime in Phnom Penh.

They also spread the "threat from China" myth to sow discord between China and the ASEAN countries in an attempt to encourage the trend toward thinking about a compromise, thus finding an excuse for their refusal to withdraw troops from Kampuchea. The Kampuchean people certainly will heighten their vigilance and get fully prepared to continue fighting together so as to win greater victories in the fifth dry season, smash Vietnam's political scheme and further brighten the future of the national salvation struggle against Vietnamese aggression.

Settlement of the Kampuchea issue is the key to relaxation of tension in Southeast Asia and the checking of the hegemonists' expansion in this region. The only way to solve this question is to withdraw all foreign troops from Kampuchea in accordance with relevant UN resolutions, let the Kampuchean people solve their problems by themselves and restore the country's position of independence, neutrality and nonalignment. Only by firmly supporting the Kampuchean people's just struggle and continuing to exercise strong pressure on Vietnam in political, economic and diplomatic fields can the peace-loving and justice-upholding countries in the world force Vietnam to withdraw all its aggressor troops from Kampuchea as quickly as possible and create the condition for a rational settlement of the Kampuchea issue.

The Chinese people adhere firmly to their principled stand of opposing hegemonism and safeguarding world peace and firmly supporting the just struggle of the Kampuchean people against Vietnamese aggression. China's stand on the Kampuchea question is open and aboveboard. We are not seeking any selfish interests, but only upholding justice and fulfilling our commitments as friends of the Kampuchean people. We are willing to continue to make efforts, together with the ASEAN countries and all peace-loving countries in the world, for a just and reasonable solution of the Kampuchean question.

The development of the situation in Kampuchea during the past 4 years proves that the flames of the Kampuchean people's struggle for national salvation cannot be extinguished by anybody. The Kampuchean people under gone the most difficult stage and have taken the course of resisting Vietnamese aggressors with greater confidence and in a more organized manner. No matter how stubborn the Vietnamese authorities and their supporters are, and no matter how they struggle, the Kampuchean people will certainly win a final victory in their struggle against Vietnamese aggression.

XINHUA on Kampuchea Gains

OW242040 Beijing XINHUA in English 2007 GMT 24 Dec 82

[Text] Bangkok, December 24 (XINHUA correspondents Yang Mu and Yan Ming) -- The year 1982 has witnessed the resistance forces in Kampuchea beginning to push the battlefront into the interior parts of the country and gain a firm footing in Siemreap Province and along Highway No. 6.

This is an event of no small significance if one puts it against the background of the four-year-old fighting in Kampuchea.

Four years ago tomorrow, Hanoi sent troops into Kampuchea to subdue that country by military force. The Democratic Kampuchean National Army and people have since resisted the invaders using such tactics as guerrilla warfare.

In the past four years, the Vietnamese troops have fought mainly in the western Kampuchean provinces of Battambang, Pursat and Koh Kong in an attempt to eliminate resistance forces in and around Phnom Kravank and Phnom Megai. Naturally they took pains to guard Highways Nos. 5 and 6 that link the Kampuchean capital of Phnom Penh and the western battlefields. They even set up a frontline general command in the city of Siemreap on Highway No. 6 and put it under the direct control of the Vietnamese military headquarters in Saigon (Ho Chi Minh City) in South Vietnam.

However, several divisions of the Democratic Kampuchean National Army have been pressing hard on the Vietnamese along Highway No. 6 since the beginning of this year. They have forced [the] enemy to withdraw 15 kilometers from the highway in Siemreap Province, and eventually recovered Phnom Don Lanh and Phnom Ta Sos. Two or three years ago, the resistance forces could only attack the enemy flanks from the Kampuchean-Thai border. Now they are hemming in on the enemy's strategic positions in the interior parts of the country.

These strategic successes of the resistance forces may be attributed to the following factors:

-- Popular support. From 1975 to 1978, the people in the Vietnamese-occupied areas and areas of guerrilla war resented the erroneous policies followed by the then Democratic Kampuchean Government. For more than one year following the Vietnamese invasion, they still kept a wary eye on the Democratic Kampuchean Government. But a correction of policy errors by the Democratic Kampuchean Government and a comparison of experiences under different regimes made the people realize that the Democratic Kampuchea forces were the mainstay in the resistance struggle. The change of the people's attitude has led to an increasing political and logistic support to the National Army of Democratic Kampuchea.

-- Correct strategy. They have penetrated deep into the interior areas and enemy-occupied regions, opening up new battlefronts there. They carried out guerrilla warfare which has proved to be effective.

-- Establishment of base areas in interior regions. They have set up some small base areas and grassroots guerrilla teams in the interior regions.

Nevertheless, as the invading Vietnamese troops are still superior in strength, communications and economy, the course of war will be long and arduous. But no matter how long and arduous the war may be, one thing is certain -- the Kampucheans will win.

RENMIN RIBAO Reviews Conflict

HK250824 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 25 Dec 82 p 6

["Review" by RENMIN RIBAO correspondents Wang Rongjiu [3769 2837 0036] and Yang Qun [2799 5028]: "Success or Failure in History Depends on Reason"]

[Text] Bangkok, 23 Dec -- On 25 December 4 years ago, the Vietnamese authorities brazenly launched a barbaric war of aggression against Democratic Kampuchea. What have the Vietnamese aggressors accomplished after 4 years?

1. They have become ever more deeply bogged down. The blueprint drawn up by the Vietnamese authorities at the start consisted of swallowing up Kampuchea and then inserting into Phnom Penh their puppets brought from Hanoi, in order to compel the international community to acknowledge their aggression against Kampuchea as a fait accompli. However, the Vietnamese authorities forgot a truth: Although aggressors can succeed for a time by relying on their temporarily powerful military strength, they have no means of subduing people who refuse to be enslaved. The four "dry-season offensives" launched by the Vietnamese aggressor army have failed to wipe out Democratic Kampuchea's National Army and guerrillas and other anti-Vietnamese forces; in fact, the forces of resistance against the Vietnamese have grown ever stronger and this year a great alliance was achieved and the DK Coalition Government was established. Nearly 2 months have passed since the start of the current dry season, and on the northern battlefields the Vietnamese army that invaded Kampuchea is still clustered around the main strongholds and lines of communication. Although a number of Vietnamese troops frequently are transferred to the part of Kampuchea adjacent to Thailand's eastern border -- where they have stepped up their "dry-season offensive" preparations -- yet, as public opinion in Southeast Asia has pointed out, after 4 years of this trial of strength "it is impossible" for the Vietnamese to wipe out the Kampuchean anti-Vietnamese forces. Kampuchea has become a bone stuck in the throat of the Vietnamese authorities, which they can never swallow. This is the reality of Kampuchea after 4 years of Vietnamese aggression.

2. The war has made Vietnam ever poorer. By using all their armed might to engage in a war of aggression the Vietnamese authorities have landed Vietnam in an awful mess and even have brought it to the stage where "there is nothing in the pot." Due to fundamental changes that have taken place on the battlefields, where the situation is becoming more and more unfavorable for the aggressor, the scheme of the Vietnamese authorities to let the war feed on itself is going bankrupt. According to the Thai press, refugees who have fled to Southeast Asia all say that in Vietnam they had nothing to eat and that the country's economy is becoming more and more wretched. Young refugees say that Vietnam is press-ganging everywhere for its army; all young people between the ages of 18 and 26 have to serve in the armed forces and are forced to go and fight in Kampuchea. Instead of getting its breath back and taking a rest, a country that had been at war for several decades immediately dispatched 200,000 troops to invade a neighbor, with the result that no longer can it even sustain its own people. This is the reality of Vietnam after 4 years of aggression against Kampuchea.

3. Vietnam has become more and more isolated and unpopular on the international scene. The result of the UN General Assembly vote on DK's seat this year illustrated yet again with the utmost clarity Vietnam's isolation in the international community. No matter how Vietnam trumpets the puppet Phnom Penh regime as "legitimate," only one country -- apart from the Soviet Union and a few others -- has recognized the Heng Samrin regime in the past 4 years despite all Vietnam's rushing around and its cries and appeals.

The battlefields of Kampuchea today are a mire for the Vietnamese aggressor army. However, the patriotic armed forces of the DK Coalition Government are as fish in water there. This is a very great change from the situation 2 years ago. With the passage of time this change will become ever more extensive and profound.

Analyzing the Kampuchean situation, the press here has described it in the words of a folk saying: "Temporary strength or weakness depends on power, success or failure in history depends on reason." This is because it is an unjust war that Vietnam has launched. The Vietnamese aggressor army may struggle on in Kampuchea for another 4 years or even longer, but it is truly impossible to reverse the general trend -- that the Kampuchean people will win the final victory.

Commentary on 'Struggle'

OW261200 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 24 Dec 82

["International Current Events" program commentary: "The Situation of the Kampuchean People's Struggle Against Vietnamese Aggression and for National Salvation Is Getting Better and Better"]

[Text] As of 25 December this year, the war of aggression against Kampuchea launched by Vietnam has been going on for 4 whole years. In these 4 years, the Kampuchean people have grown stronger with the fighting. Especially this year, the Kampuchean people's struggle against Vietnamese aggression and for national salvation has developed further and rather significantly, and the achievements are encouraging.

This year, Kampuchea's patriotic anti-Vietnamese forces have taken an important step forward on the road to strengthening unity against the common enemy. In order to drive the Vietnamese aggressors out of Kampuchea, rebuild the broken country and save the nation, the three patriotic anti-Vietnamese Kampuchean forces, through joint efforts, signed in Kuala Lumpur on 22 June 1982 a declaration on the formation of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea [CGDK] and thus achieved unity. On 9 July, Samdech Sihanouk issued a proclamation from a site inside Kampuchea, proclaiming the formation of the CGDK with Samdech Sihanouk as president, Khieu Samphan as vice president in charge of foreign affairs, and Son Sann as prime minister.

The formation of the CGDK reflects the demands and desires of the Kampuchean people, more extensively unites the people of all classes and strata and gives a powerful impetus to the development of the struggle against Vietnamese aggression and for national salvation. It has won broader international support for the Kampuchean people's struggle.

The victories won since the founding of the CGDK fully demonstrate that a small and weak nation subjected to aggression and oppression will grow stronger through fighting and eventually defeat the seemingly powerful aggressor through a protracted struggle, provided it is united as one in the fight against the common enemy.

Since its formation, CGDK President Sihanouk, Vice President in Charge of Foreign Affairs Khieu Samphan and other leaders of the coalition government paid friendly visits to a number of Asian, African and European countries and achieved satisfactory results.

The Democratic Kampuchean delegation headed by President Sihanouk, with members including Vice President in Charge of Foreign Affairs Khieu Samphan and Prime Minister Son Sann later attended the current UN General Assembly session. President Sihanouk delivered a speech at the UN General Assembly, which was warmly received. With the efforts of the leaders of the Government of Democratic Kampuchea and the representatives of many other countries, once again the legitimate seat of Democratic Kampuchea at the United Nations was safeguarded.

By an overwhelming majority vote larger than last year's, a resolution on the Kampuchea question was adopted, calling for the complete withdrawal of Vietnamese troops from Kampuchea. This is one of the great diplomatic successes achieved by the CGDK this year. It is also a crushing diplomatic defeat for Vietnam.

Militarily, the Kampuchean people's struggle against Vietnamese aggression has also won inspiring victories repeatedly this year. During the dry season between October 1981 and April 1982, Vietnam committed all its forces already on the Kampuchean battlefields and brought in more than 10,000 additional men from home to mount repeated mopping-up operations on the western, eastern and central battlefields in Kampuchea; all these operations met with crushing defeats. In their fight against the mopping-up operations, the Democratic Kampuchean National Army and guerrilla units mounted guerrilla warfare mainly of squad and sub-squad strength, constantly wearing down and wiping out the enemy's effective strength, cutting its lines of communication and dealing blows at the Vietnamese troops. In the last dry season, the Democratic Kampuchea National Army and guerrilla units attacked, captured and destroyed 186 large and small Vietnamese strong-points, routed Vietnamese mobile units engaged in mopping-up operations on 164 occasions, mounted 40 surprise attacks on Vietnamese transport units, cut off and destroyed highways and railways at more than 500 points, cut many times the strategic Highways 4, 5 and 6 and the Phnom Penh-Battambang and Phnom Penh-Kompong Som, recovered all the townships and villages occupied by Vietnamese forces early in the dry season and liberated 17 more townships and 317 villages.

The Democratic Kampuchean National Army and guerrilla units not only defeated the enemy's dry season offensive but preserved and developed their own strength in the fighting. In contrast, the Vietnamese aggressors' morale is low, deserters and cases of open factional fights are on the rise, and logistic and supply services are faced with difficulties. According to incomplete statistics, during the last dry season 3,560 Vietnamese troops deserted, and 182 men were killed or wounded in open factional fights.

During the rainy season this year, the Democratic Kampuchean National Army and guerrilla units launched even more active guerrilla operations and dealt blows at the Vietnamese aggressor troops in all parts of the country. The rainy season war communique issued by the general command of the Democratic National Army and guerrilla units on 15 October pointed out: According to preliminary statistics, during the rainy season this year, under attack by the Democratic Kampuchean National Army and guerrilla units, 13,000 Vietnamese troops were killed or completely put out of action. The Democratic Kampuchean National Army and guerrilla units captured and destroyed more than 200 Vietnamese strong-points of platoon, company, battalion, regimental and divisional levels, recovered and liberated 9 townships and 122 villages, and cut off and destroyed highways and railways at more than 700 points.

The victories won by the Democratic Kampuchean National Army and guerrilla units by launching guerrilla warfare once again bears out Engels' thesis: So long as the people in the country rise up and fight back courageously, even a defeated army will soon shake off the enemy's pursuit and find a safe place. When the people in enemy-occupied areas rise against the enemy, even if they are able only to constantly cut the enemy's lines of communications, the invading enemy will get closer and closer to the point where it will find itself in a helpless position.

The practice of the Kampuchean people in their struggle against Vietnamese aggression over the past 4 years clearly shows that in a war of aggression and resistance to aggression, even though the aggressor has the most powerful armed forces and can possibly defeat, even wipe out, the small and weak regular army of the country being invaded, it is absolutely impossible for the aggressor to wipe out the small and weak armed guerrillas organized by the patriotic people of the invaded country.

In short, the victories won by the Kampuchean people this year fully demonstrate that the situation of the Kampuchean people's struggle is getting better and better, that the most difficult moment is behind them, and that they are now better organized and more confidently fighting against the Vietnamese aggressor troops. This proves the truth: The people's just war can be put out by no force. The Kampuchean people's struggle against Vietnamese aggression and for national salvation surely will win final victory. The Kampuchean people certainly will succeed in building an independent, peaceful, neutral and nonaligned Kampuchea.

Comment on People's Defense

BK270743 Beijing in Cambodian to Kampuchea 1030 GMT 24 Dec 82

[Commentary by station commentator (Ya Ming): "For the Defense of Independence and Peace"]

[Text] Four years ago on 25 December, with the backing of the Soviets, Vietnamese aggressors in their multitude shamelessly invaded this charming country of Kampuchea. At a time when the nation was in danger, the brave sons and daughters of Kampuchea rose up to fight against the enemy with a high patriotic spirit. For the past 4 years, they have resolutely and persistently fought against the enemy in pools of blood and have won praise from people the world over. Their struggle has not only safeguarded their country's independence and sovereignty but has also checked the expansion of hegemonism and contributed to the defense of peace and stability in Southeast Asia. This struggle has great significance.

The successful development of the Kampuchean people's struggle against Vietnamese aggression during the past 4 years first shows that there is nothing that can stop a people's war waged by an independent country against aggression. Four years ago, the Vietnamese authorities were arrogant in their aggression and even dreamed of making Kampuchea part of Vietnam in just 1 month. However, 4 years have passed and the Vietnamese aggressors have not achieved their goal. On the contrary, their situation in the military field has become unfavorable.

In the past 4 years, the Vietnamese aggressor troops have launched many attacks and operations -- particularly their dry-season offensives launched with increasing intensity -- but have met with even more serious defeats. Last dry season, the Kampuchean patriotic army and people won more important victories and further expanded the zone controlled by Democratic Kampuchea.

This July, the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea was established. This event brought the unity of Kampuchean patriotic forces fighting against the Vietnamese aggressors to a new stage. The Kampuchean people are fully confident that they will be strong enough to carry on their struggle in the future. On the international scene, fewer and fewer people still believe in the irreversibility of Kampuchea that Hanoi has proclaimed because it is evident that, but for the protection of the bayonets of the Vietnamese army, the throne of the Phnom Penh puppets set up by the Hanoi authorities would not last long.

The brave and courageous Kampuchean people, through their struggle, have shown the world that only resolute struggle against hegemonism's expansion will effectively safeguard peace. The Vietnamese aggressors rapidly pushed their troops to the Thai border. However, this is only the first step of their expansionism in Southeast Asia. The fact that Vietnam has incessantly shelled Thai territory testifies to this.

As for the Soviets, whose ambition is to rule the world, they have taken the opportunity to use military bases in Vietnam and Kampuchea as a springboard for their expansion to the south. The reason the USSR-SRV war of aggression has not spread over a wider area is because the Kampuchean patriotic army and people have dealt heavy blows to the Vietnamese aggressor army and bogged them down and upset USSR-SRV strategic preparations.

That is why people generally note that the Kampuchean people's struggle against the Vietnamese aggressors is connected with peace and danger in Southeast Asia. The evolution of the situation in Kampuchea further shows the world community that in order to safeguard world peace and international security, it is necessary and vital to resolutely defend national independence and each country's right to live.

At the UN General Assembly this year, resolutions were passed by an overwhelming majority for the fourth time demanding that Vietnam withdraw all its aggressor troops from Kampuchea. The Kampuchean people have brilliantly gone through 4 years of struggle against the Vietnamese aggressor army. The most difficult period has passed. Now, they are advancing on the path to victory. However, in this march forward there are still many difficulties and dangers. The struggle will be long because the Vietnamese authorities have not only stubbornly rejected the UN General Assembly's resolutions on withdrawing their troops, but also have intensified their war of aggression.

Let us take the current situation as an example. On the one hand, Vietnam is actively preparing for a new offensive; on the other, it has carried out all kinds of maneuvers in an attempt to weaken the solidarity among different Kampuchean patriotic forces and destroy the world community's support for the Kampuchean people. However, no matter what tricks past or present the Vietnamese authorities use, the course of history will not be changed. People are convinced that as long as the different Kampuchean patriotic forces increase their solidarity, strengthen their unity and persistently struggle against the Vietnamese aggressors with the support of people the world over, they will be able to liberate their country and nation from the claws of the Vietnamese aggressors.

After this struggle, an independent, peaceful, neutral and nonaligned Kampuchea will stand out in Southeast Asia.

Hoang Van Hoan Interviewed

HK270250 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 25 Dec 82 p 6

[Feature by reporters Wang Zhiguang [3769 1807 0342] and Tan Feng [6151 6912]: "Hoang Van Hoan Denounces Le Duan Clique's Crimes of Aggression Against Kampuchea, Appeals to Vietnamese People To Demand the Withdrawal of Troops and Rebuilding of Friendly Ties With Kampuchea"]

[Text] Comrade Hoang Van Hoan was interviewed by our reporters on the eve of the fourth anniversary of the Kampuchean people's resistance to the armed invasion launched by the Vietnamese authorities. Speaking with the force of justice in reply to questions, he exposed and denounced the crimes of the Le Duan clique in committing aggression against Kampuchea; and he appealed to the Vietnamese people and the Vietnamese soldiers sent to Kampuchea to intensify their struggle against the Le Duan clique, restore peace in Kampuchea and rebuild good-neighborly and friendly relations between Vietnam and Kampuchea.

Comrade Hoang Van Hoan first said that the war of aggression launched against Kampuchea by the Le Duan clique is "an unjust war, because Kampuchea is an independent and sovereign country and once fought side by side with the Vietnamese people against the common enemy. The Le Duan clique aims to bring Kampuchea into the 'Indochinese Federation,' which it completely controls and which it now calls a 'special alliance.'" Comrade Hoang Van Hoan angrily further charged: "Following the invasion and occupation of many important areas in Kampuchea, the Le Duan clique has sent many Vietnamese to settle on the east bank of the Mekong River, around Phnom Penh, the Tonle Sap Lake area, Battambang and other important regions to establish villages and hamlets (settlements) in combination with its military aggression and political control." He emphasized: "This is an extremely sinister conspiracy."

Talking about the changes in the Kampuchean situation over the past 4 years, Comrade Hoang Van Hoan said: "The Le Duan clique had long nurtured the desire to invade Kampuchea. Its strategic scheme was to assemble an overwhelmingly superior military force to fight quickly and get a quick decision, to wipe out the opposing armed forces and occupy all of Kampuchea. However, as a result of 4 years' trial of strength, the Le Duan clique has suffered heavy defeat."

The various Kampuchean resistance factions have crushed several Vietnamese dry-season offensives and are becoming stronger the more they fight. "The various Kampuchean resistance factions have now united and created the Democratic Kampuchean Coalition Government; they have gained the support of many justice-upholding countries in the world. The UN General Assembly has four times in succession passed resolutions demanding that the Le Duan clique withdraw its troops from Kampuchea. The Le Duan clique is bogged down in the battlefield of Kampuchea. If it persists in its stubborn ways, refuses to withdraw its troops, and also opens another dry-season offensive in an effort to extricate itself, it is bound to meet an even more bitter defeat."

Comrade Hoang Van Hoan angrily denounced the Le Duan clique's war of aggression in Kampuchea for causing serious consequences for the Vietnamese people. He said: "The Vietnamese people yearn to live in peace to rebuild their war-torn country after more than 30 years of fighting. However, the facts of the past 4 years have proved that the Le Duan clique's war of aggression against Kampuchea has not only brought tremendous calamity on the fraternal Kampuchean people, but has also caused the most serious consequences for the Vietnamese people. Several hundred thousand Vietnamese youths were thrown into this unjust war; and every day they are dying, being wounded, starving and cold and suffering bitter hardships. Huge sums in capital and millions of tons of food have been consumed in this war of aggression." He particularly emphasized: "Even more dangerous, the weapons, ammunition and other war-waging means used by the Le Duan clique in its aggression against Kampuchea rely on foreign supplies. As a result, Vietnam's domestic and foreign policies are subject to foreign domination. Thus, the Le Duan clique seeks to control Kampuchea, but in fact the result is that Vietnam becomes controlled by a foreign country."

Comrade Hoang Van Hoan clearly expressed his attitude on solving the Kampuchean problem. He said: "In the basic interests of the Vietnamese fatherland and the friendship between the Vietnamese and Kampuchean peoples, and for the sake of justice and right, I resolutely oppose the Le Duan clique's aggression in Kampuchea and demand that they immediately end this war, withdraw all Vietnamese troops to Vietnam immediately and leave the Kampuchean people to manage their own affairs."

Comrade Hoang Van Hoan also highly appreciated the spirit of struggle of the Kampuchean people in opposing aggression. He said: "The Vietnamese and Kampuchean peoples have traditions of deep friendship, and the current struggle being waged by the Kampuchean people is also contributing to the Vietnamese people's struggle to topple the dictatorial and corrupt rule of the Le Duan clique."

Comrade Hoang Van Hoan said in conclusion: "Taking this opportunity, I once again appeal to the Vietnamese people and the Vietnamese soldiers sent into Kampuchea to continue to intensify the struggle in all its forms to demand that the Le Duan clique withdraw its troops, end the war, restore peace and rebuild the good-neighborly and friendly relations between Vietnam and fraternal Kampuchea."

BK250927 Beijing in Cambodian to Kampuchea 1030 GMT 24 Dec 82

[Text] XINHUA correspondents reported from the Siem Reap-Highway No. 6 that the Vietnamese occupation troops stationed on Highway No. 6 in Kampuchea's Siem Reap Province recently have moved back 15 km north from this highway. As the Vietnamese troops withdrew, the Democratic Kampuchean National Army edged forward, thus moving the battlefront from the Kulen mountainous area to an area 10-to-15 km north of the highway. Highway No. 6 is a route vital for the Vietnamese occupation troops' transportation of military supplies from Phnom Penh to Kampuchea's western front. The stretch of this highway running from Kompong Thom Province to Sisophon, Battambang Province is even more vital. This 200-km long section of the highway is heavily guarded by 10,000 Vietnamese troops. The stretch that passes through Siem Reap Province is the most guarded.

According to correspondents on the forefront, the Vietnamese troops have prepared two defense lines north of Highway No. 6 in Siem Reap Province. The first line is 3-4 km from the highway and the second 25-30 km north of it. The recent pullback of Vietnamese troops from Highway No. 6 results from the Democratic Kampuchean Notional Army's frequent attacks on Vietnamese positions and vehicles moving along the road. Before 1980 Vietnamese vehicles were seen traveling freely on this highway. But from November 1980 to April 1981, when the Democratic Kampuchean National Army opened up two new fronts in the north and northeast of the country, transportation on Highway No. 6 was threatened. Since then the Vietnamese have had to rely partly on the Tonle Sap River and Tonle Sap Lake to transport troops and military supplies during high tide from August to November. Aside from this, transportation to the western part must rely on Highways No. 5 and 6.

Military observers held that the recent dwindling of the Vietnamese defense line on Highway No. 6 shows Vietnam's shortage of forces as well as its attempt to keep this lifeline under control so that it can wage a large-scale dry-season offensive along the Kampuchean-Thai border at an opportune time.

A source from the Kampuchean patriotic forces and people living along Highway No. 6 said that the Vietnamese troops are unable to control this road. On 28 September the National Army attacked a market in Sot Nikom District near Highway 6, causing great panic to the enemy. With the help of the local people, national army troops have gained free access to the highway at night. Many villages along this highway have been liberated. In early November almost 400 Vietnamese soldiers were sent to raid five villages north of this highway, but they were repulsed and defeated by the Democratic Kampuchean National Army and guerrillas. Although Highway No. 6 is still one of the Vietnamese troops' lifelines it is now seriously damaged.

DK Troops Attack SRV Units

[Text] Beijing, December 27 (XINHUA) -- The National Army and guerrillas of Democratic Kampuchea have launched frequent attacks on Vietnamese troops in western and south-western Kampuchea so as to frustrate the enemy mopping-up operations, according to Radio Democratic Kampuchea.

From December 15 to 20, the National Army and guerrillas launched nine attacks in the areas of Pailin to Highway No. 10, Samlot and Sisophon in Battambang Province. Forty-six Vietnamese were killed and 54 wounded.

On December 17, in a counter-attack on two companies of Vietnamese troops who were attacking the National Army from west of the city of Kok Kong and the Me Teuk River, more than 90 Vietnamese were killed or wounded, with the rest fleeing back to their stronghold.

The National Army and guerrillas in the provinces of Kompong Thom, Siem Reap, Preah Vihear, Mondolkiri, Kompong Cham and Kompong Speu have also attacked Vietnamese troops in coordination with the national army which was fighting on the western battleground.

[Text] Bangkok, December 24 (XINHUA) -- Vietnam has set up a new intelligence unit known as "K-10" in Phnom Penh to monitor the movements of the Heng Samrin "officials", today's NATION REVIEW quoted a senior Thai military source as saying.

The unit, staffed with about 50 to 70 Vietnamese officials selected from the Interior Ministry of Vietnam, will also monitor the activities of foreign officials working in Phnom Penh. The unit is also responsible for screening aides to senior "officials" of the Phnom Penh regime as well as reporting the activities of the regime to the Vietnamese.

"Vietnam has also been moving large numbers of Vietnamese to settle in and around Phnom Penh and other provinces near Tonle Sap," the source said. Tonle Sap is a major lake which provides Kampucheans with marine supplies and water for agriculture.

It was reported that Kampuchean people in Oddar Mean Chey, a province near the Thai border, have been forced to accept at least one Vietnamese into each family.

These are parts of the Vietnamese attempts to expand their influence over the Kampuchean people, the source said.

SRV Should Leave Nonaligned

OW241346 Beijing XINHUA in English 1142 GMT 24 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 24 (XINHUA) -- Radio Democratic Kampuchea today broadcast an open letter from the Kampuchean people to the people of the non-aligned countries, calling for the expulsion of Vietnam from the Non-Aligned Movement.

The letter points out that Vietnam has demonstrated by its behavior that it is not a non-aligned country. It signed a military treaty with the Soviet Union [and] it has allowed the Soviet Union to establish military bases on Vietnamese territory.

The letter says backed by the Soviet Union, Vietnam has sent troops to occupy its neighbor Kampuchea, one of the founders of the Non-Aligned Movement, and has thus seriously violated the sacred principles of the Non-Aligned Movement. The United Nations General Assembly has on four occasions and the Foreign Ministers Meeting of Non-Aligned Countries has twice adopted resolutions calling for the withdrawal of Vietnamese troops from Kampuchea. All these have been ignored by Vietnam.

The letter charges that Vietnam, while actively serving the Soviet expansionist strategy in Southeast Asia, has undermined the principles of the Non-Aligned Movement by trying to put the latter into the orbit of Soviet expansionism.

The letter urges the Seventh Summit of the Non-Aligned Nations to be held next March in New Delhi to expel Vietnam from the Non-Aligned Movement so as to safeguard the principles and purity of the movement.

Thai Official on Peace Efforts

OW240410 Beijing XINHUA in English 2101 GMT 23 Dec 82

[Text] Bangkok, December 23 (XINHUA) -- Thai Foreign Minister Sitthi Sawetsila told reporters today that ASEAN will not accept any new proposal which does not tally with the principles of the international conferences on Kampuchea.

Sitthi made the statement after seeing off Singapore Prime Minister Lee Kuan Yew at an air force base. Lee arrived here yesterday for talks with Thai Prime Minister Prem Tinsulanon on the Kampuchean problem, bilateral relations and matters related to the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN).

Asked about the new proposal on Kampuchea put by Belgium, France and Romania, Sitthi said a number of countries presented their ideas on the Kampuchean problem but these suggestions are different and run counter to the ideas of the international conferences on Kampuchea.

"We have not yet seem any common points between those proposals and ours, so they are not accepted," he said.

Now the Kampuchean Coalition Government is solid politically and it is seeking for support from other countries, he said, adding that it will seek more aid in food and medicine.

ZHAO ZIYANG CONTINUES VISIT TO MOROCCO

Talks With Prime Minister

OW272138 Beijing XINHUA in English 2111 GMT 27 Dec 82

[Text] Rabat, December 27 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang and Moroccan Prime Minister Maati Bouabid expressed in their talks today the strong desire to further develop cooperation between the two countries.

During the first round of talks held at the prime minister's office here this afternoon, the two leaders exchanged their views on international issues and bilateral relations.

Prime Minister Bouabid said Morocco firmly supports the just struggle of the Palestinian people and their demand for the recovery of Jerusalem occupied by Israel. He reiterated Morocco's non-aligned policy and its position on the questions of Afghanistan and Kampuchea. He condemned colonialism and supported the North-South dialogue and the establishment of a new international economic order.

The Moroccan prime minister gave an account of Morocco's domestic situation and its successes in the economic construction. He also referred to the effects of the war and Western economic crisis on the Moroccan economy and the measures the Moroccan Government has taken to overcome them.

On relations between Morocco and China, the Moroccan prime minister expressed his hope for further strengthening bilateral cooperation between the two countries. He said Morocco and China have already had good cooperation in certain fields and hoped such cooperation would continue.

Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang said there is no change in the independent foreign policy China has pursued. He set forth China's position on the Middle East issue and praised Morocco for its contributions to the strengthening of Arab solidarity and the achievement of positive results at the Fes summit.

Premier Zhao said the Organization of African Unity (OAU) has made contributions to safeguarding the solidarity between African and the Third World countries. He expressed the hope that African countries would treasure solidarity among them and iron out their conflicts and disputes through peaceful consultations. He said China and Morocco have identical or similar views on many international issues, including some Middle East, Afghanistan and Kampuchea questions.

Recalling the development of Sino-Moroccan relations, Premier Zhao held that the cooperation between the two countries has been very fruitful and has a great potential. He expressed the hope to find new ways to push ahead the cooperation effectively on the existing basis.

Present at the talks on the Morocco side were Minister of State in Charge of Foreign Affairs Mohamed Boucetta, Minister of State in Charge of Cooperation Mahjoubi Aherdan; Minister of Economic Affairs Tayeb Bencheikh and Minister of Equipment Mohamed Kabbaj. Present on the Chinese side were State Councillor Gu Mu, Minister of Foreign Affairs Wu Xueqian and other members of the premier's entourage.

Lays Wreath at Mausoleum

OW271912 Beijing XINHUA in English 1831 GMT 27 Dec 82

[Text] Rabat, December 27 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang laid a wreath at the mausoleum of King Mohammed V here this afternoon.

Accompanied by Moroccan Minister of Equipment Mohamed Kabbaj and Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs Abdelhaz Tazi, Premier Zhao and his party observed one minute silence in front of the king's coffin. He then toured the mausoleum which was built in the typical Moroccan style.

Premier Zhao's remarks in the visitor's book read: "With respect we cherish the memory of the exploits of His Majesty King Mohammed V, who devoted all his life to the achievement and consolidation of Morocco's national independence and made great contribution to the friendly relations between China and Morocco."

King Mohammed V (1909-1961) was a fighter for the independence of Morocco, a defender of her national interests, and a warrior against colonialism.

Egyptian President's Speech

OW220011 Beijing XINHUA in English 2311 GMT 21 Dec 82

[Text] Cairo, December 21 (XINHUA) -- Egyptian President Husni Mubarak gave a banquet in honour of Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang at the A'bdin Palace here this evening.

Speaking at the banquet, President Mubarak expressed his welcome to Premier Zhao Ziyang and members of his party for their visit to Egypt. He praised the Chinese people "as faithful brothers and sincere and honorable friends who have always remained true to their pledges, dedicated and genuinely committed to principles and values, while remaining bound to the very essence of solidarity among all peoples of the Third World, who are striving for a better world, where freedom, peace and equality prevail and where exploitation, oppression and aggression are no more."

He said: "The great people of China, while adopting such a principled and solid position, underline their adherence to their rich heritage of civilization" and "their genuine belief in solidarity of man in this drive along the path of peace and progress."

Referring to the friendly relations between Egypt and China, he said: "The people of Egypt will forever recall that People's China -- which stands for the largest human community and the oldest cultural heritage -- has sided with them in time of war and in peace, and that in all circumstances, People's China showed absolute integrity and lived up to the peak of responsibility, fully aware of the nature of the struggle we are waging, the objectives we aspire to and the vast horizons before the collective movement of developing countries."

He said: "In fact, this cohesion between the peoples of our two countries does not come from void. It is based on solid foundation, deeply rooted in the history of civilization and on a firm commitment to lofty ideals and sublime values, as well as on a comprehensive outlook of the very essence of life. Just as the Egyptian civilization has emerged on the banks of the Nile, thousands of years ago, to culminate a long human endeavor, the civilization of China was established on the banks of Yangtze River, to disseminate science and enlightenment, adding new dimensions to the great drive of man. It was natural for the human race to accomplish giant achievements through the dedicated efforts of the great people of China. As an example of the Chinese contribution to mankind we would mention, the paper industry, the discovery of press, architecture and the silk and textile industries.

"Therefore, the progress of the Chinese people today rests on solid ground and rigid fundamentals. The ability of the Chinese people to give is constant and ever present, since cultural awareness is renovating and creative potential echoed by all and every aspect of life in all epochs."

Hailing the efforts exerted by the Chinese people in the field of social and economic development, Mubarak said: "It is with pride and admiration that your people should achieve such progress within the policy of self-reliance and the consolidation of national economic together with the adoption of the open-door policy and the application of modern technology achieved in advanced industrialized countries. Thus you could reconicle elements that, to some, might appear conflicting. We fully share your outlook which views matters soundly; we endeavor to reach the same goals without discarding our cultural heritage and without jeopardizing the substance of our national economy."

The president said Premier Zhao's visit to Egypt "will open new prospects for the enhancement of relations between our two countries in all domains. The talks we held since your arrival have deepened the impressions we reaped from our tour of your friendly country; particularly well pronounced is the great similarity of our views on the role assumed by the Third World peoples at the present stage of history, as well as the need to achieve maximum solidarity among those nations, whether in their endeavor to establish a new economic order, or to consolidate their political, economic and cultural independence. Equally shared are our views on the importance of the collective confrontation by Third World countries of attempts at foreign intervention and domination, and on giving top priority to all forms of exchange within the family of developing countries."

He expressed appreciation of China's support for the just struggle of the Palestinian and other Arab people. He said: "As we glance at the areas where a bitter conflict rages between good and evil at the present delicate stage, we find that you never hesitate to side with right and justice and you reject injustice and aggression."

Referring to the situation in the African continent, the president said that "apartheid in the south defies the will and feelings of peoples on this continent, either through the notorious practices applied against the natives to whom the land and the rights belong or through the intransigence shown by that racial regime towards the independence of Namibia, a matter totally inconsistent with the universally accepted norms."

"By no means can we accept such conditions or slacken in confronting them. We attach great hopes to your principled attitude in support of African right," he stressed.

In conclusion, the president said: "It is our conviction that the fraternal cooperation between our two peoples furnishes an eloquent example of the solidarity of nations of the Third World for peace and progress. Our determination remains to pursue our drive for the consolidation of those bonds in all and every domain."

Premier Zhao also spoke at the banquet which proceeded in a warm and cordial atmosphere. (Zhao's speech has been released separately.)

RENMIN RIBAO Views Egypt Visit

HK270444 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 26 Dec 82 p 6

[Article by reporters Yu Chengxiu [0205 2052 4423] and Lin Jiaoming [2651 4109 2494]: "A Highly Fruitful Visit"]

[Text] Cairo, 24 Dec -- Premier Zhao Ziyang concluded his official visit to Egypt on 24 December and left for Algeria, the second stop on his Africa tour.

Premier Zhao's visit to Egypt was significant in carrying forward the cause and forging ahead into the future. Premier Zhao visited Egypt 19 years ago when he acclaimed the dawn of freedom rising over the land of Africa, called the "dark continent" by imperialists. Today Premier Zhao Ziyang has followed in the footsteps of Premier Zhou in coming to this land nourished by the River Nile, and he praised Africa for becoming a vigorous and vital force in the Third World. Nineteen years is a very short time in human history, but tremendous changes have taken place in the world during that time while the friendship and solidarity between China and Egypt -- two ancient yet young countries -- has become still firmer in the complex and changeable international situation.

In the president's study in the Al-Qubbah Palace, Premier Zhao Ziyang and President Mubarak held cordial talks on international problems of common concern and bilateral relations. Both sides felt extremely satisfied with the results of the talks. Premier Zhao Ziyang pointed out that the foreign policies of both countries had a whole series of points in common. Both countries pursue a foreign policy of acting independently and keeping the initiative in their own hands; both of them oppose imperialism and hegemonism; both oppose Israeli aggression and expansion; both support the just struggle of the Palestinian people and the antiaggression struggles of the Afghan and Kampuchean peoples; both advocate strengthening solidarity and cooperation in the Third World; and both hope to further strengthen and expand mutual economic and technical cooperation. The two leaders' talks undoubtedly will open up excellent relations for the further development of friendly ties between China and Egypt. Premier Zhao pointed out: "Our talks were highly fruitful." President Mubarak also said: "This visit of Premier Zhao will create a new situation in relations in all fields between the two countries."

As arranged with great hospitality by his host, Premier Zhao visited the ancient Saladin Castle, the Egyptian Museum, the Pyramids, the Sphinx, the tombs of the pharaohs at Luxor, the Karnak Temple and the Aswan Dam. The splendid and magnificent ancient Egyptian civilization and the tremendous efforts of today's Egyptians to transform nature made a profound impression on the visitors and strengthened the mutual understanding between the two countries. After visiting the Egyptian Museum, which stores precious treasures from ancient Egypt, Premier Zhao wrote: "In the past the hard-working Egyptian people created a brilliant and splendid ancient culture, making a tremendous contribution to world civilization; and today they certainly are capable of creating a still more beautiful future and advancing the progress of man." This was heartfelt praise and also sincere hope.

When Premier Zhao visited the Pyramids, he and State Councillor Gu Mu walked slowly round the magnificent Great Pyramid, sometimes gazing up at its pinnacle 138 meters above. They also asked the guides about its construction technique. When the visit ended, the governor of Gizah presented Premier Zhao with a gold key symbolizing friendship. Premier Zhao thanked the governor for his hospitality and added wittily: "With this key, I won't need a passport next time I come to visit the Pyramids." Everyone laughed at these words.

Little (Hafnavi), who demonstrated climbing the pyramid for Premier Zhou 19 years ago, is now more than 50 years old. Describing his meeting with Premier Zhou then, he said that on that occasion he took only 7 minutes to go up and down the pyramid. Premier Zhou walked up to him, felt his pulse, and asked if he felt ill at all. (Hafnavi) still can vividly remember Premier Zhou's bushy eyebrows, bright eyes and smiling face. He said: "In order to commend my performance, Premier Zhou presented me with a 'Hero' gold pen. I always kept this pen on me. But later it unfortunately was lost when I was climbing the pyramid." Maybe this pen is still somewhere on the pyramid now, a souvenir permanently marking Sino-Egyptian friendship.

The busy but happy 4-day visit is over. President Mubarak saw Premier Zhao off at the airport, but they will soon meet again, because President Mubarak will be visiting China next April. The mutual visits of the leaders of the two countries symbolize the friendship between the two countries and their peoples, which will flow forever like the waters of the Huang He and the Nile.

ZAIRE OFFICIALS LOOKING FORWARD TO ZHAO VISIT

OW242220 Beijing XINHUA in English 1256 GMT 24 Dec 82

[Text] Kinshasa, December 23 (XINHUA) -- Zaire's First State Commissioner Kengo wa Dondo said yesterday that "the Chinese premier's visit to Zaire would provide an opportunity for the Chinese Government and the National Executive Council of Zaire to review the most fruitful cooperation between the two countries."

When receiving Chinese Ambassador Li Shanyi here, Dondo said that the National Executive Council would give a warmest welcome to the Chinese premier. He also expressed his confidence in the prospect of cooperation between the two countries. He hoped that there would be a continuous development of friendship and cooperation between the two nations.

Kamanda wa Kamanda, commissioner of state for foreign affairs and international cooperation, told the Chinese ambassador today that "we have attached great importance to the friendly relations between the two countries." "China has always stood by the side of the oppressed peoples in their struggle in the political, economic and cultural fields."

Zaire has set up a commission headed by Kamanda to welcome the Chinese premier's visit.

FURTHER COVERAGE OF 11TH CYL NATIONAL CONGRESS

Wang Zhaoguo Address

OW210957 Beijing XINHUA in English 0702 GMT 21 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 21 (XINHUA) -- China's young people are being asked to work with a pioneering spirit and transform the country by their own efforts. Raising this call in his report to the Youth League Congress, Wang Zhaoguo, first secretary of its Central Committee, said the young generation would participate in the decisive state of China's socialist modernisation during their most creative years and should play a decisive role.

The nationwide emulation to become pace-setters in modernisation has already brought forward over one million outstanding young people in industry, agriculture, science and culture. The movement would go on, he said.

While the socialist principle is payment according to work, he noted, the advanced elements among youth should be encouraged to learn from the example set by many labor heroes working with a communist spirit, not looking for reward but taking to heart the interests and needs of the country and the people.

Working youth should make efforts to raise their educational and technical levels and develop into well educated workers who integrate work by hand and brain.

Wang Zhaoguo encouraged young people to be ever ready to answer the country's call to work in all parts of China, adding their effort to help less developed places move ahead. "When we strive for China to prosper, we foresee a prosperous China as a whole", he said. The attraction of a more comfortable environment should not lure young people away from the task of building the country, he said.

All labor that was needed by society was equally honorable. This was one of the principles that distinguished a socialist attitude from capitalist or feudal thinking. Young people should fight back against notions that some types of work had a lower status than others. Only by freeing one's mind from the shackles of the old society could one build a new life, he said.

Army youth should develop the spirit of self-sacrifice, discipline and the style of a soldier of the revolution, study modern weapons and be a vanguard in building China's modern revolutionary army.

Urges Young To Study Hard

OW211403 Beijing XINHUA in English 0708 GMT 21 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 21 (XINHUA) -- Today's students should set themselves the goal of becoming the best educated generation in China's history, armed with a knowledge of modern science. In his report to the Youth League Congress, First Secretary Wang Zhaoguo reminded his audience that this was an era of rapid scientific growth. China's road forward required the population of science and the emergence of great numbers of talented people. In effect this meant young people, particularly the students, should study hard to scale the peaks of knowledge.

Study was linked with the needs of the country, and this should give students an immense source of strength to carry out the work history set for them. As the socialist society provided education, the knowledge thus acquired was in anticipation of its being used to serve the people, not as a student's private property. Wang Zhaoguo cited a number of outstanding scientists who had worked to their last breath to serve China's needs in science and technology. They were honored examples for young people to emulate, he said.

"Study today to prepare for tomorrow's work," he said. "Education should not be viewed a means to depart from labor." There was a division of labor in socialist society, but no type of work was more or less worthy. Chinese students of the 1980's should free themselves of the attitude of the exploiting classes which looked down on labor and the working people.

Political understanding, moral integrity and a sound physique are equally important, he said. Besides general knowledge, students should study revolutionary theory and current affairs and make social investigations. Young working people should also make efforts to study in order to help the country modernize production. "Every effort in study contributes to the nation's drive for modernisation," he said.

On Moral Improvement Role

OW211413 Beijing XINHUA in English 0714 GMT 21 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 21 (XINHUA) -- Wang Zhaoguo, first secretary of the Communist Youth League Central Committee, says China's youth should take the lead in the nation-wide effort to improve social morals and develop socialist relations between people.

In his report to the Youth League Congress, Wang Zhaoguo commended young people who generation after generation since the 1919 May 4th Movement were "a vigorous force in transforming old ways." Young people were lively, and progressive youth always had the courage to accept new things and resist evil practices.

With the birth of New China, the party worked with a will to eliminate the decadent ways left over by the old society. Nurtured in the new socialist climate, young people began to flower. Young heroes, such as factory worker Xiang (?Xiuli) who gave her life to save state property in a fierce fire and the soldier Lei Feng who did numerous services for the people, were the pride of the nation.

With the ten-year turmoil (1966-1976) and certain circumstances that emerged following the new open policy, both "left" errors and bourgeois liberalization affected many young people who were in the process of discarding old ideas and accepting new ones. Young people want a new life, but are unprepared for the necessary hard struggle; they have the courage to explore, but have to learn how to distinguish good from bad; in general they are willing to break with old traditions, but do not raise their guard against the corruption of bourgeois ideas. During the period being discussed, many had doubts and wavered in their confidence.

This trend had for some time made some people over-anxious, he said. However, the party has persisted in a policy of uniting and educating the young people. As they saw the great changes being made in the country, how the party corrected "left" errors, tried to rectify its work style, cracked down on economic crimes and defended sovereignty, the younger generation began to understand things better and supported the party's line and followed it.

Good social relations such as those of the 1950's would surely be revived and developed, Wang Zhaoguo said. The important thing was to familiarize young people with communist ideeas and ethics so they could make them their own. The present campaign to improve decorum, manners, hygiene, discipline and morals, and to cultivate beauty of mind, language, behaviour and environment would grow. Young people would be organized to improve service work and traffic discipline and beautify the surroundings, and develop a sense of responsibility in their work.

He specially asked youth in commerce, transport, education, culture, public health, tourism and public security to take the lead in observing social ethics, and make their jobs a "window" of good social communication. Right now, he said, special attention should be paid to free choice in getting married and ending extravagant weddings, in respecting the old and caring for the young, advocating equality between men and women and forbidding maltreatment of old people and women.

Instructs CYL To Enliven Work

OW211417 Beijing XINHUA in English 0723 GMT 21 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 21 (XINHUA) -- The Communist Youth League should educate young people in communist ideas but should do their work in a lively and convincing way, said Wang Zhaoguo, first secretary of the Communist Youth League Central Committee.

Education of the younger generation should start with patriotism, he said. The youth should know more about China -- its long history of contributions to civilization, its sufferings for a century under oppression and its struggle for emancipation, the birth of New China, the fundamental differences between old and New China, between capitalism and socialism, what benefits socialism had already brought, the gap between China and the developed countries, and the responsibilities of young people today.

They should be made familiar with the outstanding work and attitudes of people living in their own times.

The league should unite the young people of the country, pay attention to questions involving their employment, study, marriage and recreation and help to solve their problems. This included aiding the several million young people entering the labor force every year with training and job opportunities and organizing spare time study.

Recreation and sports were also important, he said. The league should help set up children's youth centres at grassroot levels, organise the beautification of the enrivonment, help cultivate a taste for good literature and art and develop a socialist way of life.

The youth leagues would defend the rights and interests of youth guaranteed by the constitution, uphold justice when the legal rights of youth were violated or freedom of marriage impaired, while teaching young people to exercise their democratic rights correctly and respect the Constitution, obey the law and meet their social obligations and duties.

The youth leagues should concentrate greater effort on the rural areas, he stressed.

To build itself into a powerful center of attraction for the young, the league should work to rally young people of different professions, cultural backgrounds and experiences. It should unite both the advanced and the less advanced.

Gao Zhanxiang on Constitution

OW271542 Beijing XINHUA in English 1512 GMT 27 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 27 (XINHUA) -- The new constitution of the Chinese Communist Youth League passed here at its current 11th National Congress emphasizes the relationship between the Chinese Communist Party and the Youth League, and re-defines the league's function as the party's assistant and reserve force.

The new constitution, Gao Zhangxiang, member of the Secretariat of the Youth League Central Committee, said, stressed the studying of communism through practice. Communism, he pointed out, did not only mean a social system for the future. It also included the present movement to build communism, a movement in which young people were participating. By emphasizing the integration of theory and practice, the Youth League would guide young people in studying communism in real struggle.

Besides the general program, the new constitution has 33 articles in eight chapters: membership, organizational system of the league, central organizations of the league, local and army organizations of the league, primary organizations of the league, league cadres, the relationship between the league and the young pioneer, flag and emblem of the league.

The general program describes the Youth League as a mass organization of advanced young people under the leadership of the Chinese Communist Party. It is the party's assistant and reserve force. The general program also stipulates that the league must firmly uphold the general program of the party and fight for the ultimate goal of the communist system.

The fundamental task of the league, the general program states, is to educate and nurture young people to become the successors to the cause of communism, people with lofty ideals, moral integrity, education, discipline and good health.

A league member is expected to study hard and to work hard, be the first to bear hardship and the last to enjoy comfort. A league member should enthusiastically support good people and good actions and be bold in fighting against evil doers and bad actions. A member should keep the league informed of the demands and criticism of young people and play an exemplary role in study, manual labour and social activities.

The new constitution sets forth the principle of democratic centralism for the league organizations at all levels, opposing liberalism and anarchism.

A newly-added chapter on the league's cadres in the constitution stipulates that Youth League cadres have the advantage of youth, should become more revolutionary, better educated and more professionally competent. The league now has a total of one hundred and eighty thousand full-time cadres and millions of on-the-job grass-root ones.

The Chinese Communist Youth League, says the new constitution, should adhere to proletarian internationalism, strengthen its unity with the communist youth organizations and other progressive youth organizations of other countries and support all the oppressed throughout the world in the common cause against imperialism, hegemonism and colonialism and for world peace and progress.

Opinions on the revised draft were widely solicited at the grass-root levels half a year before the congress, and discussions and revisions were made by the delegates at the congress, said Gao Zhanxiang. The amendments are based on the experience of league work since its 10th national congress and addresses itself to current problems. Some new articles have been added and higher demands placed on league members and its cadres.

Many outstanding leaders and proletarian revolutionaries including Mao Zedong, Zhou Enlai, Deng Xiaoping, Nie Rongzhen and Deng Yingchao had once been Youth League members. Hu Yaobang, the present general secretary of the Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party, used to be a leader of the Youth League, Gao Zhanxiang recalled.

With regard to the paragraph about "educating youth in the communist spirit," Gao Zhanxiang explained that some young people, under the influence of Lin Biao and the gang of four during the "Cultural Revolution" and the influence of the bourgeois liberalism, had become confused. This made it all the more necessary to educate the young people with communist world outlook.

Gao Zhanxiang said that the age of league members had been extended to 28 years, three years more than previously since this conformed to the Chinese people's habitual concept of youth.

In keeping with the interval of five years between the party congresses, the Youth League Congress in future will also be held once every five years instead of the original four.

Telegrams, Letters Received

OW272108 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1502 GMT 22 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, 22 Dec (XINHUA) -- The 11th National Congress of the Chinese Communist Youth League has received congratulatory telegrams and letters from the Central Committee of the League of Socialist Working Youth of Korea, the Central Committee of the Romanian Union of Communist Youth and the League of Socialist Youth of Yugoslavia.

In its telegram, the Central Committee of the League of Socialist Working Youth of Korea warmly congratulates the convening of the 11th National Congress of the Chinese Communist Youth League.

The telegram points out: Chinese youth, following the road guided by the Communist Party of China and displaying the revolutionary spirit of being self-reiant and of plain living and hard struggle, are playing the roles of pioneers and shock brigades in order to build China into a highly civilized and democratic socialist country.

The congratulatory telegram says: Korean young men and women have heartily rejoiced at the various achievements made by the Chinese people and youth in their struggles to uphold the four fundamental principles and to strive for building the four modernizations. They regard these achievements as their own. Korean youth are determined to continue enhancing Sino-Korean relations, which have already been firmly established on the basis of intimate comradeship and the sharing of the same lofty revolution morality and justice. We believe the traditional friendship and unity between our two countries' peoples and youths will be further strengthened and developed in the struggles to attain our common goals and ideals of socialism and communism.

The Central Committee of the Romanian Union of Communist Youth said in its congratulatory telegram that Romanian youth, with a deep feeling of long-standing friendship and international solidarity, have been paying a good deal of sincere attention to the achievements made by the Chinese Communist Youth League and all Chinese youth. The telegram says: We would like to take this opportunity to express our belief that the friendly and cooperative relationship between our two countries' youth organizations will further develop on the basis of the firm cooperation between the Romanian Communist Party and the Chinese Communist Party. This will be useful in bringing about advancement in socialism, peace and cooperation among peoples of different countries.

The congratulatory telegram sent by the League of Socialist Youth of Yugoslavia says: The 11th National Congress of the Chinese Communist Youth League has special historical significance because it is convened at a time when the 12th National Congress of the Chinese Communist Party has set the great task of building "two civilizations" in China. We believe that by holding this congress Chinese youth will make new and enormous contributions in advancing China's socialist construction. The congratulatory telegram says: The existing friendly relationship between the two nations and their people and youth has laid a solid foundation for promoting relations between the Chinese Communist Youth League and the Yugoslav League of Socialist Youth. We firmly believe that the results of the 11th National Congress contribute toward bringing about your society's continued prosperity, especially in helping the younger generation of the friendly people's Republic of China to reach maturity.

GUANGMING RIBAO ON TASKS OF SIXTH 5-YEAR PLAN

HK530321 Beijing GUAMGMING RIBAO in Chinese 12 Dec 82 p 3

[Article by Wang Jiye [3769 4480 2814]: "Major Steps for Achieving the Grand Objectives -- On the New Characteristics of the Sixth 5-Year Plan"]

[Text] At the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC, Premier Zhao Ziyang made a report on the Sixth 5-Year Plan. The stipulations and measures of the Sixth 5-Year Plan are major steps for achieving the grand objectives put forward by the 12th Party Congress and the foundation for quadrupling production. The basic tasks of the Sixth 5-Year Plan are, in brief: Continue to implement the policy of readjusting, restructuring, reorganizing and upgrading; achieve a fundamental turn for the better in financial and economic conditions; and establish a solid foundation for subsequent economic development. It is a 5-year plan that will put our national economy on the path of healthy development. It is a new path to socialist modernization and economic construction suited to China's conditions.

It has many new characteristics compared with the five previous 5-year plans already carried out in our country, and the three most outstanding points are as follows:

In Guiding Ideology, Put the Stress on Raising Economic Results and Strive for an Appropriate Speed of Development

To achieve the grand objective of quadrupling production, first we must raise economic results; secondly, we must maintain an appropriate speed of development. Moreover, the former must be the prerequisite for the latter. Unity of speed and results, or seeking speed on the basis of results, is the basic demand of quadrupling production. It is also the basic guiding ideology as well as the most vital characteristic of the Sixth 5-Year Plan. The Sixth 5-Year Plan has stipulated that gross agricultural output value and gross industrial output value must both increase at an average of 4 percent a year, and we must strive for 5 percent in implementation. In gross industrial output value, an average annual increase of 5 percent is projected for the output value of heavy industry. Even though the speed of industrial development is not as fast as before, however, it presupposes higher economic results. This growth rate is more realistic and practical and will contribute to maintaining the sustained stability of the national economy and achieving proportionate and coordinated development.

The Sixth 5-Year Plan, which has put the stress on raising economic results and striving for an appropriate speed of development, is in keeping with China's actual conditions. After 3 years of readjustment, the proportional relations between agriculture, light industry and heavy industry in our country have greatly improved, the situation of too much emphasis on heavy industry and too little emphasis on agriculture and light industry has been reversed and the proportional relations between accumulation and consumption have become harmonized. However, the talk of readjusting the product structure, the technical structure and the enterprise structure is still very formidable, and requires more time and tremendous effort. If we one-sidedly go in for excessive speed in economic development without making a success of this work, we are bound to exacerbate the irrationality of the industrial structure, and, in the end, seriously affect the coordination of proportional relations and the consolidation of the positive results of readjustment and it will also be difficult for us to raise economic results.

The Sixth 5-Year Plan, which has put the stress on raising economic results and striving for an appropriate speed of development, is in keeping with the demand of the law of economic development. Socialist expanded reproduction is an intricate entirety. Its smooth function requires the links of production, distribution, exchange and consumption to be constantly balanced and dovetailed. Only on the premise of raising economic results and striving for an appropriate speed of development on the basis of proportionate development can unity of speed, proportion and results be attained and can the sustained and stable growth of the national economy be realized. Most 5-year plans of the past, with the exception of the First 5-Year Plan, could not give expression to this demand and economic results in particular were rather poor. The Sixth 5-Year Plan has made specific arrangements for raising economic results: Increases in gross social products and national income must be on the premise of raising economic results; production of all products must be in keeping with social needs; increase of production of all products must be achieved mainly by means of technical progress, vigorously lowering energy and raw material consumption and raising labor productivity; quality of industrial products must conform to the standard stipulated by the state, and efforts must be made to increase the proportion of quality products; capital construction costs and every means must be used to raise economic results, efforts must be made to restore the construction time of large and medium-size projects to the best historical level; commodity circulation expenses of state-run commercial enterprises must be lowered every year and the turnover time of floating capital must be correspondingly reduced.

In Making Plans and Arrangements Take All Factors Into Consideration and Concentrate On Key Development Projects and Technical Transformation

A very big problem faced by our economy is the serious backwardness of energy resources and communications which has become the major factor restricting the whole economic development. If there is no fixed scale of construction for energy resources and communications, there cannot be any impressive speed of economic development in the 1980's, nor can there be any vigorous development in the 1990's. During the period of the Sixth 5-Year Plan, apart from further making a success of readjusting, restructuring and reorganizing, we must resolve to carry out key development projects. Key development projects can neither supply output value nor give play to results in the near future, but they are extremely important to future economic growth. Only by carrying out key development projects can the speed of the near future and future needs be properly linked together, and economic results constantly raised. However, key development projects require more capital, their construction period is long and profit is low. Owing to the fact that local financial and material resources are limited, they are not easy to carry out. They must mainly rely on state investment for construction. The construction of a mine with a production capacity of 1 million tons a year requires an investment of nearly 200 million yuan and takes about 7 years to build. The construction of a hydroelectric plant of 1 million kilowatts requires at least an investment of 1 billion yuan and a construction period of about 10 years. The construction of railroads and ports will also require more investment. The Sixth 5-Year Plan has provided a total of 230 billion yuan for investing in capital construction with emphasis on the development of energy resources and communications, and proper arrangements have also been made for agriculture, light and textile industries, metallurgical industry, chemical industry, building material industry as well as education, science, culture, public health, urban construction, commerce and foreign trade. Investment for the development of energy resources is 58.6 billion yuan, of which 17.9 billion yuan is for the development of the coal industry, 15.4 billion yuan is for the development of the petroleum industry and 20.7 billion yuan is for the development of the electric power industry. Investment for the development of communications and transportation (including postal and telecommunications) is 29.8 billion yuan, mainly for the construction of railroads and ports. Investment for key development projects is 88.4 billion yuan and accounts for 38.5 percent of the total capital construction investment.

We should see that there cannot be a bigger increase in our energy resources during the period of the Sixth 5-Year Plan, because the role of the key development projects cannot be brought into play immediately. Therefore, vigorously cutting down energy consumption is the key to fulfilling the production tasks of the Sixth 5-Year Plan. This is also the only way of raising economic results. On the one hand, we must rely on further readjusting the industrial structure and set up a rational and energy saving style of industrial structure. On the other hand, we must rely on scientific and technical progress to lower energy consumption. Consumption of energy by industry is now too high and there is too much waste. Obsolete equipment and backward technology have a great deal to do with this. Therefore, we must pay close attention to key development projects on the one hand and to equipment replacement and technical transformation on the other. Giving prominence to technical transformation is one of the major characteristics as well as a brand new component of the Sixth 5-Year Plan. In the 28 years from 1953 to 1981, the amount of funds spent on technical transformation was 201.5 billion yuan, accounting for 20 percent of the total investment in fixed assets. The Sixth 5-Year Plan has taken a bigger step in this direction. The 130 billion yuan for equipment replacement and technical transformation of existing enterprises provided by the Sixth 5-Year Plan accounts for 36 percent of the total investment in fixed assets.

Both the scale of investment and the proportion accounted for are higher than previous levels. If we also take into consideration the increase in the depreciation rate of fixed assets, the scale of investment for replacement and transformation is very impressive. For the sake of giving full play to the results of technical transformation investments, the Sixth 5-Year Plan has exercised strict control over the use of technical transformation investments. Replacement and transformation investments must stress saving energy and materials, improve product composition, raise the level of product performance and quality, replace the equipment and improve the technology of existing enterprises, make rational use of natural resources and bring serious pollution under control. We must not only guard against the use of replacement and transformation funds on blindly expanding the production capacity of the processing industry in general, but we must also resolve to make available the funds used on blindly expanding the production of the processing industry in general for equipment replacement and technical transformation.

In the Planning System, Integrate Economic and Social Development With Scientific and Technical Progress So That They Promote Each Other

In the past, our national economic planning laid particular emphasis on economy, failed to attach sufficient attention to social development as well as to science and technology, and even less discussed close cooperation and mutual promotion. We must further perfect the planning system and implement the integration of economic, scientific and social development. Economic development must rely on technical progress and technology must be in the service of social and economic development. The Sixth 5-Year Plan has made a good start in this direction. The plan has stipulated the use of key problems of significant results in economic construction as major questions for scientific and technical research and for tackling. We must embody the achievements of scientific research into planning and draw up proper plans for the development of new products and mass production. We must carry out unified planning and strictly manage the technical development funds marshalled by the state, allocate funds for approved projects, guard against misappropriation and average use, increase the proportion of new products in the quota of major production plans and use administrative means to eliminate backward products. We must strengthen the examination of capital construction as well as replacement and transformation projects and guarantee the application of advanced science and technology. We must make use of the economic lever to encourage the development of new products and the adoption of new techniques by such means as price increases, credit and tax relief. We must organize the forces of various sectors to study the technical policies and applicable new techniques that are in keeping with China's actual conditions and draw up feasible plans for technical transformation. At present, most of the technical transformations carried out by some localities and enterprises in a decentralized manner have failed to achieve the desired results; therefore we must improve planning management. The Sixth 5-Year Plan has also put forward the demand that we energetically grasp the shifting of science and technology from the laboratory to production, from purely military use to military and civilian use, from the coastal region to the mainland and from outside the country to inside the country, so that the achievements of science and technology can give full play to their role in promoting economic development, and all departments of our national economy in future developments, including new construction as well as replacement and transformation of existing enterprises, can gradually shift to the new technical foundation in a planned manner. At the same time, the Sixth 5-Year Plan has laid down certain important items of scientific and technical achievements for popularization and major problems of science and technology for tackling, such as increasing the production of agriculture and the processing of agricultural products, the technique of storing and keeping food fresh, the new products and technology of the light and textile industries, the technique of saving energy nad developing energy resources as well as the new technologies of the machine building, electronic and raw material industries, chemical and pharmaceutical manufacture, transportation and postal and telecommunications.

The drawing up and implementation of the Sixth 5-Year Plan will enable the science and technology of our country to become a powerful productive force in this vast land.

The Sixth 5-Year Plan is a comprehensive plan for economic, social and technical development. Making social development planning a vital component is a major breakthrough in the interim plans drawn up by our country. The content of social development planning is complicated and closely related to the livelihood of the people. It covers such fields as population, labor, people's income and consumption, urban and rural construction and social welfare. The section of the Sixth 5-Year Plan on social development has laid particular emphasis on the importance of population planning and stressed the necessity of carrying out planned control of population growth so that it corresponds to the growth of material production. The lack of this in past 5-year plans should be called a shortcoming. China has a huge population, and, generally speaking, the level of the development of productive forces is still not high enough. The per capita national income is among the backward ranks of the world. This requires us to make planned arrangements regarding population growth. Controlling population growth through family planning is a fundamental national policy of our country. This strategic task has a bearing on the overall situation of our socialist construction. The Sixth 5-Year Plan has stipulated that in 1985 the total population of the 29 provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions must be controlled at about 1.6 billion. The birth rate should be controlled at about 1.9 percent and the natural growth rate at under 1.3 percent. It has correspondingly put forward various measures for controlling population growth. We must pledge to fulfill the population plan and must not top it. Otherwise, it will be very difficult for us, based on the per capita national income, to make the people comparatively well off by the end of this century.

Another important component of social development planning is the planning of people's income and consumption. During the period of the Sixth 5-Year Plan, we must continue to raise the income and consumption level of urban and rural people on the basis of developing production and raising labor productivity so there will be further improvement in the people's material and cultural life. Increases in peasant income can no longer mainly rely on raising the price of agricultural products or on lowering the base figure of requisition and assigned purchase and enlarging the extent of price negotiation, but must mainly relay on increasing agricultural production and developing a diversified economy and on the further development of rural household sideline production. By 1985, the net average income of a peasant will be about 255 yuan. This represents an increase of 33.5 percent compared to the 191 yuan of 1980, or an average increase of 6 percent a year. In the net income of the peasants, the proportion of income from collective production and household sideline production will rise, and there will be a greater degree of increase in the proportion of cash income. Increase in the wages of workers should proceed from the actual condition of our national economy, and we must appropriately determine the wage level of the workers in accordance with the demand of socialist economic law and the basic principle of "First, feed the people; second, build the country" guiding economic work. During the period of the Sixth 5-Year Plan, the total wages of workers in the whole country will increase from the 77.3 billion yuan of 1980 to 98.3 billion yuan in 1985, or an average increase of 4.9 percent a year. Following the development of industrial and agricultural production and the increase in income of urban and rural people, the average per capita consumption level of urban and rural people in 1985 will increase by 22 percent compared to 1980. This represents an average increase of 4.1 percent a year and is higher than the average rate of increase of 2.6 percent a year for the period 1953-1980. There will be a notable change in the forms of urban and rural consumption, and the means of consumption will be more diversified, richer in content and colorful. There will also be a greater increase in consumption of a cultural and service nature, and the goal of socialist production will be fully achieved.

23 ORGANIZATIONS ISSUE CIRCULAR ON ETHICS DRIVE

OW280005 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0104 GMT 22 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, 22 Dec (XINHUA) -- The Propaganda Department of the CPC Central Committee and 22 other organizations recently issued a circular calling on all localities, while further promoting the "five stresses and four beauties" in a comprehensive way, to focus on publicity and education in the "four advocates and four oppositions" in addition to continue activities to improve environmental sanitation to get rid of "dirtiness," improve public order, end "disorder," and improve service, which is "poor" at present, during the coming new year and spring festival of 1983.

The "four advocates and four oppositions" are defined as "advocate economy and oppose extravagance in weddings; advocate equality between men and women and care for the elderly, and oppose discrimination against, and maltreatment of, women and the elderly: advocate science and oppose feudal superstition; and advocate morally sound entertainment and oppose gambling."

In this "Circular on Further Developing Activities To Develop the 'Five Stresses and Four Beauties' Campaign During the 1983 New Year and Spring Festival," the CPCCC Propaganda Department and other organizations point out that the activities to promote the "five stresses and four beauties" are important components of our efforts to promote socialist spiritual civilization, and these activities should be sustained throughout the year, with several annual activity high points.

In the course of gradually bringing about a fundamental change in the social climate, there are currently a few things in which the masses urgently demand a change: 1) There are still instances of marriage on the arbitrary decision of a third party, mercenary marriage, interference in the freedom of marriage, exaction of money or gifts in connection with marriage and extravagance at weddings; 2) in a few localities, the heinous practice of disowning or abandoning female infants and of maltreating or molesting women who give birth to female infants still exists; 3) in various localities, there are still instances of feudal superstition, such as divination, fortunetelling, asking for "medicine" from immortals, curing disease by driving out evil spirits, and praying for rain to dispel disaster; and 4) there are also malpractices of gathering people for gambling and taking a percentage of the winnings. Furthermore, there are still instances of discriminating against helpless, lonely old men and maltreating parents in a small number of localities. In this connection, the circular calls on all localities to promote publicity of, and education in, the "four advocates and four oppositions" aimed at eliminating these malpractices, to check these unhealthy trends and evil practices, and promote the new socialist practices.

The circular points out: While promoting publicity of, and education in, the "four advocates and four oppositions," all localities and departments should stress doing a good job in ideological and educational work, in line with the actual situation in their own localities and units in order to have a definite object in view in solving problems. It is necessary to conduct education in communist ideals, morality, discipline and the legal system among the masses, and youth in particular. While publicizing the "Constitution of the People's Republic of China," it is necessary to continue with publicizing and implementing the "marriage law," and educate the masses in opposing, not only marriage by arbitrary decision of a third party, mercenary marriage and interference in the freedom of marriage, but also wrong acts of loving the new and loathing the old and of getting married in a perfunctory way. It is necessary to educate the masses in fostering correct ideas about love, marriage and family. Late marriage should continue to be advocated and family planning practiced.

Education should be conducted among the broad masses to abide by the constitution and the law, but clear explanation should be given them that it also violates the constitution and the law to interfere in the freedom of marriage, to arbitrarily decide on their children's marriage, to exact money or gifts in connection with marriage, to maltreat or molest women, children and old men, to drown or abandon female infants, to exact money from, or harm, people by practicing feudal superstition and to engage in gambling.

The circular says that, in promoting education in the "four advocates and four oppositions," it is necessary to pay attention to policies and the proper way to handle things, and it is also necessary to avoid, by every means, simple and rough ways of handling things. Wedding extravagance should be opposed, but getting married in a fair and reasonable way should be advocated, so that weddings can be "civilized, economical and merry." Feudal superstition must be opposed, but a distinction between feudal superstition and religious activity permitted by policy should be clearly drawn and the habits of minority nationalities and their traditions should be respected. Various gambling activities should be opposed, but legitimate, morally sound, recreational mass activities should be vigorously organized and supported.

The circular calls on party, CYL, trade union and Women's Federation organizations, as well as culture halls (stations) in various localities, to fully mobilize the enthusiasm of the masses -- young people in particular -- organize them in promoting joyous folklore activities performed on happy occasions, having local characteristics and the features of minority nationalities, as well as various cultural, recreational, public health, sports and popular science activities during the period between the new year and the spring festival. In localities with favorable conditions, places should be set up at workers' palaces (halls) or youngsters' palaces to regularly offer services to young people to celebrate their wedding by following the new practice. Continuous efforts should be make to do a good job in promoting family-style weddings offering only refreshment, and also small-scale group weddings at grassroot units. Attention should be paid to prevent the instances of holding group weddings on too large a scale or spending too much money in holding such group weddings, or holding another extravagant reception after returning from the group weddings by going on tour to distant places.

The circular calls on all localities to exclude the practice of extravagant weddings, of maltreatment or molesting of women, old men and children, of inequality between men and women, of feudal superstition and of gambling from the standard of conduct of every citizen. These should also be laid down in workers', residents' and towns' people's rules, as well as requirements for "five-good" households. They should be important items to be checked in examining achievements in promoting socialist spiritual civilization, as well as in promoting the "five stresses and four beauties" campaign in varous localities and at various units.

The circular points out that party and state organs, PLA units and schools at all levels, as well as cultural, arts and sports departments, should act as models in promoting socialist spiritual civilization. Communist Party members, CYL members, cadres and armymen should act as models in fostering new practices and stressing civility. Those who engage in mercenary marriage, extravagant weddings, feudal superstition and gambling should be criticized and educated, and their activities should be firmly halted. It is necessary to be bold in struggling against any violation of the law or of discipline. All departments in charge of newspapers, radio, television and literature and the arts should publicize the "four advocates and four oppositions" and models of new things, new people and new trends should be particularly publicized to support the right, eliminate evil and promote a change in the social climate.

In the circular, the CPCCC Propaganda Department and other organizations call on all localities to bring into full play the important role of the socialist legal system in checking unhealthy practices and evil trends, as well as in fostering a fine social climate. A small number of criminals who abduct and sell women and children, seduce, shelter and force women to engage in prostitution, produce and sell pornographic books or pictures, profit from gathering people for gambling or exact money or harm people by means of feudal superstition should be strictly punished in accordance with the law and according to the seriousness of the care. Furthermore, a few typical cases should be selected and publicized extensively to frighten criminals and educate the broad masses of cadres and people.

The circular says: Since the activities to promote the "five stresses and four beauties" were launched in various localities all over the country, fine results have been achieved this year and a new social climate is now being developed. While further promoting activities in the "five stresses and four beauties" in a comprehensive way, many localities have launched ideological education in warmly cherishing the motherland, socialism and the party. We should further advocate this ideological education and combine this with other activities into unified activities of "five stresses, four beauties and three cherishings."

The circular points out: Many activities of publicity and education will be held during the period between the new year of 1983 and the spring festival. All these activities in publicity and education are part of the concrete activities in implementing the guidelines of the 12th party congress. In order to create a new situation in the promotion of socialist modernization, it is necessary to put ideological work in the lead and do a lot more work in various fields. Under the unified leadership of the party committee, all localities should make overall plans and take all factors into consideration, share the work and cooperate, carry out work in order of importance and urgency, do the work of the same nature at the same time, but make proper arrangements for different jobs to be done at different times to achieve better results in various publicity activities.

The 23 organizations issuing the circular are the Propaganda Department of the CPC Central Committee, the Ministry of Culture, the Ministry of Education, the Ministry of Public Health, the Ministry of Radio and Television, the Ministry of Public Security, the Ministry of Justice, the Ministry of Civil Affairs, the Ministry of Forestry, the Ministry of Communications, the Ministry of Commerce, the Ministry of Urban and Rural Construction and Environmental Protection, the Ministry of Posts and Telecommunications, the Ministry of Railways, the General Administration of Civil Aviation, the State Travel and Tourism Administration, the State Commission on Physical Culture and Sports, the State Family Planning Commission, the Central Patriotic Sanitation Campaign Committee, the All-China Women's Federation and the Federation of Literary and Art Circles of China.

RENMIN RIBAO ON CONSTITUTION, DEMOCRACY

HK280937 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 20 Dec 82 p 5

[Article by Yu Haocheng [0060 3185 2052]: "The New Constitution Has Developed Socialist Democracy"]

[Text] The new constitution, for which the people throughout China have long yearned, has been adopted and promulgated by the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC. It was drawn up by the party on the basis of both positive and negative experiences gained in the past 32 years by the people under its leadership, especially the bitter lessons of the 10 years of internal disorder during which socialist democracy and the legal system were seriously damaged. Without democracy, there will be no socialism.

The party and the people have learned this truth through practice. The 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee achieved the great turn of bringing order out of chaos and carrying forward the revolutionary cause, and put forth the important task of developing socialist democracy and perfecting the socialist legal system. Since then, the CPC Central Committee has led the people to actively, steadily and gradually realize a series of reforms, which are imperative and of great historical significance, such as reforming the systems of overcentralized power and lifelong tenure for leading cadres, resolving the problems of making no distinction between the party and government and replacing the government with party organizations, extending the democratic rights of the people and so forth. The new constitution is, in reality, a crystallization of our experiences gained in revolution and construction over the past several decades and a record of successes and victories achieved over the past few years in strengthening socialist democracy and the legal system. Therefore, we have every reason to be convinced that this new constitution, which enjoys the support of the party and the people and conforms to the needs of our modernization drive, will be the best one to guarantee our country to be in good order and at peace for a long time to come.

The formulation and practice of the new constitution marks a new stage in our country with regard to the establishment of socialist democracy and the legal system. In comparison with the previous three constitutions promulgated since the founding of the PRC, the new constitution has really made a big step forward on the great road of democracy. The formulation and promulgation of the new constitution have further perfected, enriched and strengthened the socialist democratic political system of our country. In my opinion, the new constitution has developed socialist democracy in four main aspects:

1. The fundamental rights and duties of citizens have been attached greater importance and the guarantee of citizens' personal rights has been strengthened. In the new constitution, the fundamental rights and duties of citizens are arranged in the second chapter after the first chapter -- On General Principles -- while the original second chapter -- The Structure of the State -- is changed into the third. This is different from all three previous constitutions. This shows that our country now attaches greater importance to the fundamental rights and duties of its citizens and that our state organs of the people's democratic dictatorship have been established entirely for the people's interests. Thus, the ideology of "all powers belonging to the people" has been better displayed. In the chapter "Fundamental Rights and Duties of Citizens," the citizens' personal rights are more extensively guaranteed. In addition to the provisions of the previous three constitutions on the inviolability of citizens' personal freedom and homes, there are additional provisions in the new constitution, for instance that the personal dignity of citizens is inviolable; the insult, slander, false charge or frameup of citizens through any means is banned; citizens have the right to demand compensation, according to law, for losses due to violation of their rights by any state organ or functionary, and so forth. They were drawn up in response to the bitter lessons of the 10 years of internal disorder during which the people's rights and personal dignity were seriously violated.

Similarly, in this chapter, there are provisions on the universality of citizens' rights and duties. For example, Section 3 of Article 33 stipulates: "Every citizen enjoys the rights as prescribed by the constitution and the law and, at the same time, has the duty to abide by the constitution and the law." Article 51 stipulates: "In exercising freedoms and rights, the citizens of the PRC should not harm the state, social or collective interests or the legal freedom and rights of other citizens." They also were drawn up in response to the lessons of the 10 years of internal disorder during which the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary cliques incited anarchism and ultraindividualism and advocated more rights and less duties, or only the enjoyment of rights without carrying out duties, which brought great harm to the state and the people.

These new provisions show that while ensuring the legal rights and freedoms of citizens and allowing no organizations or individuals to infringe upon them, our state does not allow any person to abuse his freedom and rights to undertake counter-revolutionary and other activities that sabotage the order of our society, production or work. This is, obviously, of great importance to the development of socialist democracy and the perfection of the socialist legal system.

2. The people's democratic rights to manage state affairs, economic and cultural undertakings and social affairs have been extended. In the Article 2 of Chapter 1, On General Principles, in addition to the provisions that "all power in the PRC belongs to the people" and "the organs through which the people exercise state power are the NPC and the local people's congresses at all levels," there is also a new provision that "the people have the right to manage state affairs, economic and cultural undertakings and social affairs in various forms and through various channels according to law." This shows that besides exercising the democratic rights indirectly through the deputies they elect to manage state affairs, the citizens of our country also enjoy democracy directly; that is, they can exercise their rights directly in managing various economic and cultural undertakings and all social affairs.

Socialist democracy covers a wide range in the political, economic and social fields. The working class and the broad masses of people can not only manage state affairs through their representatives, but can also take part in the democratic management of all economic and cultural undertakings and social affairs in various forms and through various channels. Section 2 of Article 16 stipulates that "staff members and workers of the state-run enterprises participate in democratic management of the enterprises through workers' congresses and other forms prescribed by law." Section 2 of Article 17 stipulates that "the collective economic organization practices democratic management as prescribed by law," and that "its entire workforce will elect and remove management personnel and decide on important issues concerning operation and management." Article 111 stipulates that the chairmen, vice chairmen and members of the neighborhood committees and village committees are to be elected by the people. These are all examples of direct democracy. Besides, Article 97 of Chapter 3 also stipulates that deputies to the people's congresses at the county and township levels are to be directly elected by the people.

All this shows that the democratic rights of our citizens have been extended. Participating in the management of state and social affairs and various economic and cultural undertakings is a main symbol showing that the people in our country are masters of the country. Referring to the rights of the people, Comrade Mao Zedong once sharply pointed out that the people must have the right to participate in the management of the superstructure and that we must not take the people's rights to mean that the people can only enjoy the rights to labor, education and social insurance under the management of certain other people. The new contents of the new constitution show that the people's democratic rights have been extended. It reflect the fact that our socialist democracy is real and extensive democracy.

3. The people's congress system has been strengthened and the power and function of the standing committees of the people's congresses have been extended. The people's congress system is a fundamental political system in our country. In reality, it is impossible that all one billion people be engaged in the direct management of state affairs. They can only exercise this right through the deputies they elect. The people's congresses are organs through which the people exercise state power.

The superiority of this system, however, was not given full play due to insufficient attention. Due to the sabotage of the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary cliques during the 10 years of internal disorder, the elections were suspended for a long time and the people's congresses were not convened as scheduled. The existence and activity of the people's congresses became a mere formality.

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, in accordance with the directives of the central authorities on strengthening socialist democracy and the legal system, a series of important measures has been adopted to strengthen the work of the people's congresses at various levels. For example, the new constitution, which is a fundamental law of our country, stipulates that local people's congresses above country level shall set up standing committees and that deputies to these congresses be elected directly by the voters. It has also extended and guaranteed the power and function of the NPC deputies. In addition to the provisions in the 1954 Constitution on the rights to immunity of the NPC deputies and their right to address inquiries, the new constitution also stipulates that the NPC deputies shall not be subject to legal investigation for speeches or votes at various NPC meetings. In view of the fact that there are numerous NPC deputies in our country and the time for each meeting is short, during which important issues cannot be fully discussed nor important decisions made, the new constitution also extends the powers and functions of the NPC Standing Committee. It clearly stipulates that the NPC and its Standing Committee are organs that exercise the legislative power of the state. Laws are enacted by the NPC Standing Committee, except for the fundamental laws which should be made by the NPC.

The new constitution also stipulates that the people's congresses and standing committees of provinces and municipalities directly under the central government may formulate regulation of a local nature as long as these regulations do not conflict with the constitution, laws or administrative orders. The people's congresses in national autonomous areas have the right to make regulations on the exercise of autonomy and specific regulations. These new stipulations, which ensure that legislative work is carried out smoothly and the people's democratic rights in managing state affairs are exercised more effectively, have improved and strengthened the people's congress system and further developed socialist democracy in our country.

4. On the question of setting up state organs, in order to prevent overcentralization of power, the system of lifelong tenure for leading cadres, which has actually existed in practice, has been abrogated. In the chapter concerning state structure, the new constitution reinstates the post of state chairman, which was prescribed by the 1954 Constitution, sets up the Central Military Commission, which adopts the system of responsibility of the chairman, and stipulates that the state chairman, the State Council, the Central Military Commission, the Supreme People's Court and the Supreme People's Procuratorate have their specific duties and work and are elected by, responsible to, and supervised by the NPC. Thus, under rational division of work, state power will be more effectively exercised and the past shortcomings, such as overcentralization of power and occasional centralization of the power of the party, the government and the army to only one person, have been overcome. The new constitution also stipulates that the term of office for the state chairman, the premier of the State Council, the chairman of the NPC Standing Committee and other chief leaders in state organs is 5 years. They may be reelected but shall not serve more than two consecutive terms. In other words, they may hold the posts for a term of less than 10 years. In this way, the principle that leading cadres should not hold lifelong posts is affirmed in the constitution and prescribed in the form of law. These gratifying achievements in democratizing the political system will certainly have profound and lasting influence in the future.

Democracy is the foundation of the legal system, and the latter is a guarantee for the former. The legal system is systematized and legalized democracy. From the above analysis we can see clearly that the new constitution has, in reality, summed up the great achievements of democratization in our country since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, in the form of a fundamental law. Meanwhile, it also points out an orientation for further carrying out the democratic reform of our country's political system. In the "preamble" of the new constitution, it is clearly declared that one of the fundamental tasks for the people in our country is giving full play to socialist democracy, perfecting the socialist legal system and building China into a highly democratic socialist country. Let us make continuous efforts and do our part for the establishment of a high degree of socialist democracy and a perfect socialist legal system.

ZHICHENG-LIUZHOU RAILWAY OPENS 21 DECEMBER

OW260904 Beijing XINHUA in English 1156 GMT 21 Dec 82

[Text] Nanning, December 21 (XINHUA) -- The trunk railway running from Zhicheng, Hubei Province, to Liuzhou, Guangxi Zhuang Autonomous Region, via Hunan Province, formally opened to traffic today.

This is China's third north-south railway line. The other two north-south railways are Beijing-Guangzhou and Tianjin-Pukou.

The 883-kilometer new railway meets the main line from Taiyuan, capital of Shanxi Province, and at the southern end links up with the line from Liuzhou, to Nanning, capital of Guangxi.

Transport of Shanxi's coal to southern China will be facilitated as the new route cuts 200 kilometers off the Beijing-Guangzhou railway used formerly. The new railway will also help boost the economy of western Hunan and northern Guangxi areas inhabited by many Chinese minority nationalities.

Construction of the line began in October 1970 and trial operation started four years ago. The earth and stone work completed for the project are estimated at 105 million cubic meters, enough to build a one by one meter dike running three times around the equator.

LEADERS WATCH GUANGDONG OPERA IN BEIJING

OW241325 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1659 GMT 23 Dec 82

[Excerpts] Beijing, 23 Dec (XINHUA) -- "I am deeply excited returning to the Beijing stage after 16 years' separation during which we experienced the turbulence of the 10-year 'Great Cultural Revolution.' Premier Zhou praised Guangdong Opera as the 'love pea [kind of flower] of southern China.' Now, comrades of our troupe and I are willing to present this love pea of southern China to the Beijing audience." Guangdong Opera performing artist Hong Xian Nu made this statement as she led the Guangdong Opera troupe of Guangzhou to perform in Beijing.

The troupe premiered at the People's Theater on the evening of 23 December, starring Hong Xian Nu in "Princess Zhao Jun."

Xi Zhongxun, Yang Shangkun, Liao Chengzhi, Zhou Yang, He Jingzhi, Zu Muzhi, Wu Lengxi, Zhou Weizhi, Cao Yu, Wu Xue and Zhao Xun watched the performance and climbed the stage to congratulate the troupe for its fine performance.

FUJIAN'S XIANG NAN SPEAKS ON FAMILY PLANNING

OW231145 Fuzhou Fujian Provincial Service in Mandarin 1120 GMT 18 Dec 82

["Excerpts" of speech by Xiang Nan, first secretary of the Fujian Provincial CPC Committee, at 18 December provincial meeting to launch family planning campaign -- recorded]

[Text] The population issue -- or the family planning issue -- was presented by the 12th party congress as a fundamental national policy. The recent Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC also included this issue in the Constitution.

What we call the constitution is a fundamental law which everybody must obey. If our party, government, armed forces and mass organizations still fail to understand the importance of the issue of family planning, they certainly are not sober-minded leaders; and if our cadres still regard family planning as an ordinary task and (?fail to adopt effective) measures, short of making a few speeches, they certainly are not good leaders either. Unfortunately, however, many comrades and units today still fail to see the importance of this issue. Many units still fail to understand that this is a national policy and a major issue. For this reason, the party Central Committee, its propaganda department and seven other units have decided to publicize this issue for a whole month throughout the country, so that everybody will understand its importance.

Do you know, among our party and government organizations, the armed forces and the mass organizations, who has done the best job in promoting family planning? It is the armed forces -- our PLA. Therefore, I propose that we should learn from our PLA.

Among the party committees of the nine prefectures and municipalities in Fujian, who has done the best job in promoting family planning? It is Fuzhou. We should learn from Fuzhou.

Among the 69 counties and cities in Fujian, which county has done the best job in family planning? It is Nanjing County. We should learn from Nanjing County.

There are more than 13,000 production brigades in Fujian. Which one has done the best job in family planning? It is (Dingban) brigade in (Xiangkou) commune. Let us learn from (Dingban) brigade.

There are tens of thousands of medical workers and nurses in Fujian. Who has done the best job in promoting family planning? Comrades (Liu Xiue) and (Huang Rongshu), who are to be commended at this meeting. Let us learn from them.

These are the pace-setters in family planning in our province. Let us learn from these advanced units and personages. This is the first thing I wanted to talk about today.

The second thing I am going to talk about can be easily remembered as "one, two, three and five."

"One" means that, under our fundamental national policy of family planning, one married couple must give birth to only one child.

"Two" means that we must give special attention to two types of production, or responsibility. That is to say, we must give special attention to material production as well as population control. For many years, we have made the mistake of paying attention only to material production. Many people have appeared quite impressive when discoursing on industrial and agricultural production, but never on population control. This mistake must be corrected.

"Three" refers to "three do not's." This means that a worker, who already has one child, but has given birth to another for no special reason and without approval, shall not be promoted to cadre. Promotion of such people must be rejected. If this happens to a cadre, he shall not be promoted to a higher position. He will never be promoted to a higher post. Besides, no bonus -- no bonus whatsoever -- shall be given to such people. We will continue to study the situation in the rural areas, which is (?somewhat different).

"Five" refers to the five concrete measures we are going to take. These measures, which have already been mentioned by Comrade Hu Hong a while ago, are: First, we are going to launch a month-long propaganda campaign, which starts today.

Our task is by no means complete after this meeting, which serves only to launch the campaign. We hope our PLA, cultural departments, television and radio stations and theatrical groups will, from now on, do a good job in promoting family planning until this issue has been thoroughly understood by every family and individual. In the rural areas, in particular, the party committees of all prefectures, counties, communes and brigades must pay special attention to earnestly promoting family planning.

Second, we must train a technical force, which must be good and which must be able to make people feel convenient, safe and friendly -- just like Comrades (Liu Xiue) and (Huang Rongshu). I hope the prefectural and county party committees will handle this task seriously. In the future, we will ask them: Where are your technical forces? Are they good? Are they as good as Comrades (Lin) and (Huang)?

Third, there must be a system of responsibility. But who is going to take charge of this system? In the case of a factory, it is the job of its party committee secretary and the factory head. In the case of a school, it is the job of its secretary and the principal. In the case of a brigade, it is the job of the party branch secretary and the brigade head.

Fourth, a report must be issued every quarter. The first thing the provincial statistical bureau must do is to compile population statistics. If a problem happens in a prefectural or county party committee, or in a commune or brigade, the whole province must be notified. If a certain locality has done the best job in promoting family planning, the whole province must be informed. The report must be issued every quarter, and it must commend those who have done a good job. An annual report must also be issued, and it must be published in the press.

Fifth, a committee must be formed. Committees must also be formed in various localities. The committee must be headed by a secretary of the provincial party committee.

Because the issue is so important, we have no other alternative but to take these forceful measures.

SHANDONG'S BAI RUBING ADDRESSES RALLY

SK260514 Jinan Shandong Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 25 Dec 82

[Text] On the afternoon of 25 December, Shandong Province, the Jinan PLA units and Jinan Municipality jointly held a grand mobilization rally on Family Planning Propaganda Month at the Shandong Provincial Stadium. Bai Rubing, first secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, delivered a mobilization report at the rally. Responsible persons of the provincial CPC Committee, the provincial people's congress Standing Committee, the provincial people's government and the provincial CPPCC Committee including Bai Rubing, Su Yiran, Zhao Lin, Li Zhen, Gao Qiyun, Li Zichao, Wu Kaizhang, Wang Jinshan, Xu Jianchun, Wang Zhongyin, Xu Leijian, Zhao Feng, Zhou Zhenxing, Chen Lei, Zhu Benzheng, Zhang Fugui, Wang Jiechen, Wang Baomin, Liu Peng, Zheng Zijiu, Ding Fangming and Wang Zhe attended the rally. Also attending were Pan Qiqi, deputy political commissar of the Jinan PLA units; (Liang Desan), president of the provincial Higher People's Court; and Lu Shengyun, chief procurator of the provincial People's Procuratorate. Responsible persons of the Jinan Municipal CPC Committee and the municipal people's congress Standing Committee including Wei Jianyi and (Zhang Jun) attended the rally. A total of 7,000 cadres of the provincial organizations, commanders and fighters of locally stationed PLA units, cadres of Jinan municipal organizations and the masses attended the rally.

Comrade Wang Zhongying, Standing Committee member of the provincial CPC Committee and deputy governor, presided over the rally and spoke.

Comrade Bai Rubing delivered a mobilization report. He said: The CPC Central Committee and the State Council have designated the period from the new year to the spring festival as Family Planning Popularization Month in which nationwide propaganda activities will be carried out, with emphasis in the countryside. This is a matter of great importance for the whole party, the whole army and all the people across the country. This is also a concrete action of major significance for implementing the guidelines of the 12th national party congress. The rally we are holding today is precisely for implementing the instruction of the central authorities and mobilizing armymen and people across the province to actively respond to appeal of the party Central Committee, whip up an upsurge in the propaganda of family planning across the province, implement the guidelines of the 12th national party congress with practical activities and create a new situation for our province's family planning work.

Comrade Bai Rubing pointed out: The implementation of planned parenthood is an important guarantee for achieving the grand goal of our country's economic construction and building a highly developed material civilization. It is also an important part of the building of socialist spiritual civilization. Furthermore, it has great significance for developing the socialist legal system and ensuring the social stability of our country. We must approach planned parenthood from the high plane of a basic national policy, regard it as a long-term strategic task and attend to it accordingly and firmly and effectively control population growth.

Comrade Bai Rubing said: The implementation of the Family Planning Popularization Month activities and a successful execution of family planning work involves thousands upon thousands of households as well as all trades and all professions. This is a task for the entire party as well as a responsiblity for the entire society. He demanded that all departments concerned make concerted efforts under the unified leadership of party committees at all levels. It is necessary to utilize all means or forms of propaganda available to whip up public opinion and vigorously build up a momentum. While carrying out propaganda, efforts should be made to take action and integrate propaganda and education with the implementation of planned parenthood measures. The system of responsibility in planned parenthood should be extensively introduced and improved. Efforts should be made to assign the tasks of planned parenthood to the production team, household and individual. It is necessary to put stress on ideological education, contraception and frequent ideological work. Active efforts should be made to raise the rate of late marriage and deferred childbearing, the one-child rate and the percentage of couples applying for one-child certificates. We must make resolute efforts to lower the rate of multiple births and lay a good foundation for fulfilling the 1983 population plan. It is necessary to bring into full play the leading and exemplary role of party and CYL members and cadres in planned parenthood work. It is necessary to strengthen the sense of rule by law and resolutely crack down on criminal activities undermining planned parenthood.

Also speaking at the rally were Comrade Pan Qiqi, deputy political commissar of the Jinan PLA units; Comrade Wei Jianyi, secretary of the Jinan Municipal CPC Committee; and Comrade (Chen Yizhong), representative of the peasants and secretary of the general party branch of the (Qusheng) brigade, Zhangqiu County.

SHANDONG'S BAI RUBING ATTENDS CONGRESS MEETING

SK250745 Jinan Shandong Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 24 Dec 82

[Excerpts] According to our reporter, the fifth session of the fifth provincial people's congress held a plenary meeting at the Bayi auditorium of the morning of 24 December.

The meeting heard the report made by Chairman Zhao Lin on the work of the provincial people's congress Standing Committee, the report on the work of the provincial Higher People's Court made by President (Liang Desan) and the report on the work of the provincial People's Procuratorate made by Chief Procurator (Lu Zengming). Zhang Zhusheng, vice chairman of the provincial people's congress Standing Committee, made an explanation on the number of deputies to be elected to the sixth provincial people's congress and on some election issues. Zhao Lin, chairman of the provincial people's congress Standing Committee, delivered a report on the work done by the Standing Committee over the past year.

Vice Chairman Zhang Zhusheng made an explanation on the number of deputies to be elected to the sixth provincial people's congress and on some election issues. He said: Some 1,000 deputies will be elected to the sixth provincial people's congress, a reduction of 500 from the fifth provincial people's congress. The distribution of congress deputies is as follows: In rural areas, a deputy should be elected for every 24,000 persons. The number of deputies to be elected should be based on the figure of the third census conducted on 1 July 1982. Zhang Zhusheng said: Proper consideration should be given to the deputies of minority nationalities. The number of deputies of minority nationalities should be set at 25 and that of the PLA units stationed in Shandong Province at 40. Zhang Zhusheng said: The first session of the sixth provincial people's congress will open in April 1983. The election of deputies to the sixth provincial people's congress should be concluded before the end of February 1983.

Zhao Feng, executive member of the congress session, presided over the 24 December meeting. Attending the meeting were Bai Rubing, Gao Qiyun, Li Zichao, Wu Kaizhang, Xu Jianchun, Chen Lei, Zhang Zhusheng, Yang Jieren, Zhu Benzheng, Zhang Fugui, Zeng Chengkui, Zhou Zhijun, Wang Jiechen and Wang Baomin, executive members of the congress session. Attending the meeting as observers were members participating in the Fifth Session of the Fourth Provincial CPPCC Committee and responsible persons of various departments directly under the provincial people's government.

Beginning from the afternoon of 24 December, deputies to the fifth session of the fifth provincial people's congress and members participating in the Fifth Session of the Fourth Provincial CPPCC Committee discussed in groups the work projects of the provincial people's congress Standing Committee, the provincial Higher People's Court and the provincial People's Procuratorate.

SHANGHAI'S CHEN GUODONG ATTENDS CADRE MEETING

OW260710 Shanghai City Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 23 Dec 82

[Excerpts] At the meeting of party member-cadres which ended yesterday, the Shanghai Municipal CPC Committee made arrangements for implementing the guidelines of the national conference on party members' education and the national conference on ideological and political work in rural areas. The municipal party committee decided that beginning from now and through the first half of the next year, party organizations at various levels, using the new party constitution as the main teaching material, should educate party members in the basic theories of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought, in the ideal of communism and the party's line, principles and policies and in essential knowledge concerning the party and the requirements for party membership so as to get prepared ideologically for the consolidation of the party in winter 1983.

Leading comrades of the municipal party committee Chen Guodong, Hu Lijiao, Zhong Min, Xia Zhengnong, Yang Shifa and Chen Jinhua, attended the meeting.

The meeting opened on 15 December and lasted 9 days. Comrade Zong Min presided over the meeting. At the meeting, Chen Qiwu, deputy director of the Propaganda Department, (Gao Yang), deputy director of the Organization Department, and (Li Zueguang), secretary general of the Propaganda Department of the municipal party committee, transmitted the guidelines of the national conference on party members' education and of the national conference on ideological and political work in rural areas.

Comrade Chen Guodong presided over the last session of the meeting. Comrade Hu Lijiao made the concluding report. He hoped that in the new year every cadre and party member on all fronts and in each unit will show some new spirit and make some new contributions and achievements.

The meeting stressed that party organizations at various levels must strengthen leadership over ideological and political work and education of party members, free themselves from routine administrative work and put an end to the situation in which the party fails to take care of party affairs so that they will free themselves and devote more time to doing a good job in running the party and educating the party members.

CHEN GUODONG ATTENDS SHANGHAI GARRISON MEETING

OW261205 Shanghai City Service in Mandarin 1130 GMT 22 Dec 82

[Text] Since the beginning of this year, 529 advanced units and 3,060 advanced persons in building socialist spiritual civilization have emerged in Shanghai Garrison District. A large number of advanced militia units and advanced militia members in building socialist spiritual civilization have also emerged in Shanghai.

In order to enhance the achievements and commend the advanced, the Shanghai Garrison District this morning held the first meeting of representatives of advanced units and advanced persons in building socialist spiritual civilization. The leading cadres present at the meeting were Chen Guodong, first secretary of the municipal party committee and first political commissar of the Shanghai Garrison District; Han Zheyi, secretary of the municipal party committee and chairman of the municipal party committee's People's Armed Forces Commission; Wang Jingkun, commander of the Shanghai Garrison District; and Zhang Chen, political commissar of the Shanghai Garrison District. Commander Want Jingkun delivered an opening speech at the meeting. Ruan Wuchang, director of the Political Department of the district, made a report on the campaign to build spiritual civilization.

CHEN GUODONG DISCUSSES FAMILY PLANNING

OW241329 Shanghai City Service in Mandarin 1130 GMT 18 Dec 82

[Excerpts] In a written statement issued this morning to the press in Shanghai on the launching of the month-long family planning propaganda campaign, Chen Guodong, first secretary of the Shanghai Municipal CPC Committee, urged Shanghai's party and government leaders at all levels to pay great attention to family planning. He said comrades of all trades and professions and on all fronts must take active part in publicizing family planning during the month beginning from New Year's Day until the spring festival so that everybody understands the importance of family planning.

Comrade Chen Guodong said: We must realize that population control and the quadrupling of the gross annual value of industrial and agricultural output are two closely related tasks which must be carried out simultaneously, and that these two tasks are of particularly great strategic and practical significance in densely populated Shanghai.

Comrade Chen Guodong pointed out: An increasing number of married couples in Shanghai have decided to bear only one child, and 91.5 percent of newlyweds have received one-child certificates. At present, approximately 50 percent of Shanghai's total population are young people under 30; therefore, the number of marriages is expected to peak in Shanghai during the next 5 years. If we fail to do our job properly, pregnancies will probably also peak. Moreover, the production responsibility system of linking production contracts to output in the rural areas has given rise to a new situation and created certain new problems in family planning. For this reason, late marriage-late childbirth, children's quality and not quantity, and birth control measures must be energetically promoted throughout Shanghai so that within 1 to 2 years some 90 percent of the young people and newlyweds will practice late marriage and late childbirth.

ZHEJIANG'S TIE YING REPORTS ON NPC GUIDELINES

OW230457 Hangzhou Zhejiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 1030 GMT 18 Dec 82

[Text] A meeting of cadres was held at the provincial gymnasium on the morning of 18 December to hear reports on the guidelines laid down by the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC. The meeting urged the people throughout the province to promptly go into action in studying and implementing the new constitution and to work hard to carry out the Sixth 5-Year Plan.

Attending the meeting were responsible comrades of the provincial party committee, the Standing Committee of the provincial people's congress, the provincial people's government and the provincial CPPCC Committee as well as deputies to the Fifth NPC who happened to be in Hangzhou and cadres of provincial and municipal party and government organizations totaling more than 5,000 persons.

Comrade Li Fengping presided over the meeting at which Comrades Tie Ying and Wang Yaoting made reports on the guidelines laid down by the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC.

The reports say: Giving full scope to democracy, the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC proceeded in a lively and vigorous atmosphere. It was a very successful meeting. The Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC adopted the best new constitution since the founding of the PRC and approved the report on the Sixth 5-Year Plan. All of this is of great significance.

The reports deal with the main characteristics of the new constitution and the Sixth 5-Year Plan. On the new constitution, the reports state: This is a new constitution with Chinese characteristics and suited to the needs of socialist modernization in the new historical period. Its implementation will bring lasting stability to the country. The new constitution has three distinctive characteristics: 1) it upholds the four fundamental principles and includes clear and definite guiding principles; 2) the leftist influence is eliminated from the constitution which records the great successes in setting things right; and 3) the new constitution, which reflects the basic characteristics of the new historical period, suits the needs of socialist modernization.

On the Sixth 5-Year Plan, the reports say: Premier Zhao's report on the Sixth 5-Year Plan is realistic and inspiring. It is the program of action for achieving the strategic objective set by the 12th party congress. Now, it is most important for us to do our work in a down-to-earth manner and conscientiously carry out the major measures set forth by Premier Zhao to fulfill the Sixth 5-Year Plan in an all-round way.

The reports call for leading cadres at various levels to do a good job in studying, publicizing and implementing the important documents adopted by the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC. First, it is necessary to implement the new constitution as a major task and to vigorously study and publicize the new constitution in order to make it known to every household and every person. Large numbers of cadres, party and CYL members and deputies to the people's congresses should take the lead in publicizing the new constitution and set an example in abiding by it. Local people's congresses at various levels should effectively supervise the implementation of the new constitution.

Second, it is necessary to conscientiously study and implement Premier Zhao Ziyang's report on the Sixth 5-Year Plan and grasp its essence in order to unify our understanding of it. At the same time, we should work out a Sixth 5-Year Plan for Zhejiang and a plan for economic and social development in the province in 1983 in accordance with the requirements set forth in Premier Zhao Ziyang's report and the actual conditions of our province. We should carry out various measures in this regard. Large numbers of cadres and people should work hard in high spirits in order to contribute to fulfilling the Sixth 5-Year Plan and building a socialist material and a socialist spiritual civilization.

GUANGZHOU CPC CADRE JAILED FOR SELLING SECRETS

HK240130 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 1354 GMT 22 Dec 82

[Report: "Dai Zhen [2071 2650] Jailed for 12 Years for Stealing and Selling State Secrets"]

[Text] Guangzhou, 22 Dec (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- For many years, Dai Zhen, former deputy head of the office of the Guangzhou Municipal CPC Committee's United Front Department, by making use of his functions and powers, stole a large number of CPC and state secrets and sold them to Wen Hui, general editor of the Hong Kong magazine CHENG MING for money, amounting to over HK$10,000 and some goods. Conclusive evidence has proved the serious counterrevolutionary crime that Dai Zhen has committed by stealing and selling state secrets. Thus Dai Zhen has violated the criminal law. Recently, in accordance with Article 97 of the PRC criminal law, the Guangzhou Intermediate Level People's Court sentenced Dai Zhen to 12 years' imprisonment and confiscated all his illegal properties.

In March 1978, soon after making the acquaintance of Wen Hui, general editor of the Hong Kong magazine CHEN MING Dai Zhen accepted Wen Hui's request to contribute to the magazine. He then offered China's internal secrets to Wen Hui and accepted wen Hui's things. In 1979, Wen Hui sent his wife to see Dai in Guangzhou, expressing satisfaction over the material offered by Dai and promising to give Dai HK$500 each month as a reward. On this occasion, Dai required Wen to buy a refrigerator, a high-class radio-recorder set and other articles for him. Since then, blinded by a lust for gain, Dai Zhen redoubled his effort and used every means to steal or to inquire about party and state secrets according to Wen Hui's demand. He abused his functions and powers to conduct dirty deals secretly with Wen Hui and his like, and thus degenerated into a criminal offender.

GUANGDONG LEADERS DISCUSS HONG KONG, MACAO

HK260246 Guangzhou Guangdong Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 25 Dec 82

[Text] This morning Guangdong Provincial CPC Committee First Secretary Ren Zhongyi and Governor Liu Tianfu held a forum with Hong Kong and Macao compatriots attending the fifth session of the fifth provincial people's congress and the fifth session of the fourth provincial CPPCC, and answered questions they raised. The atmosphere was warm and lively.

The Hong Kong and Macao compatriots are very concerned over the construction of a nuclear power station in Guangdong. Governor Lui Tianfu said on this topic: Energy is a weak link in Guangdong. By building a nuclear power station we can ease the province's pwoer shortage. It is of major economic and political significance. The Hong Kong compatriots are worried about pollution and safety problems of the station. I can tell everyone that these probelms absolutely do not exist. The station will be built on the Dapeng Peninsula on Daya Bay, which is far from Hong Kong. There cannot be any pollution in Hong Kong from the station. Some people hold that the project is unsafe, mainly because they lack knowledge in this respect.

Governor Liu Tianfu said: The relations between the province and Hong Kong and Macao should be brought a bit closer. We should support and help and cooperate with each other. This is what we have done in the past few years, and we should further develop this in the future.

During the forum, the Hong Kong and Macao compatriots were very concerned about construction in the motherland and Guangdong, and put forward many good suggestions on the reform of the economic system.

Comrade Ren Zhongyi thanked them for this. He said: With everyone contributing his efforts and strategies and working in concert to build our country, the pace of our four modernizations will be greatly speeded up, and the Central Committee's call to create a new situation in socialist modernization will be translated into reality.

Comrade Ren Zhongyi said: People need not worry on this point: The fundamental policy of the Central Committee and State Council is unchanging. There will be no change in the policy of shifting the work focus to economic construction. There will be no change in the guiding principle of opening up to the world and enlivening the domestic economy. There will be no change in practicing special policies and flexible measures and trial-operating special zones in Guangdong. The new constitutions and the 6th 5-Year Plan adopted by the 12th party congress and the 5th Session of the 5th NPC represent a number of big tranquilizers. The Fifth Session of the Fifth Guangdong Provincial People's Congress is also a tranquilizer. Given these tranquilizers, people's minds and the political situation will become more and more stable and our economy will become more and more prosperous. We should redouble our efforts to work for the future.

GUANGDONG'S REN ZHONGYI DISCUSSES RURAL WORK

HK260307 Guangzhou Guangdong Provincial Service in Mandarin 2350 GMT 25 Dec 82

[Text] The Guangdong Provincial CPC Committee held a conference of prefectural and municipal CPC Committee secretaries in Guangzhou from 17 to 25 December to study and implement the spirit of the National Conference of Agricultural Secretaries.

The conference stressed: The system of contracted responsibilities with payment linked to output that has appeared in the rural areas represents a change of great significance. The party committees at all levels must further emancipate their minds, relax the policies, promote contract specialization, vigorously develop rural commodity production, and socialize economic and technical services, so as to further develop the new situation that has already been created in agriculture.

Provincial CPC Committee First Secretary Ren Zhongyi presided over and spoke at the meeting. Comrade Ren Zhongyi pointed out in his speech: At present, we should further emancipate our minds on the question of agriculture. The main weapon for emancipating the mind is the series of recent important instructions and speeches of leading central comrades on the question of agriculture, and the spirit of the conference of agricultural secretaries.

Comrade Ren Zhongyi said: In emancipating our minds, we must further eliminate leftist influence. To further emancipate our minds and enhance our understanding of the current great change in agriculture, we must organize the cadres and masses to seriously study the spirit of the National Conference of Agricultural Secretaries and the important speeches of leading central comrades on the question of agriculture.

This transmission and study represents major education in theory and policy for the cadres and masses. Comrade Ren Zhongyi said in order to make the rural economy prosper still more, the cardinal link is to continue to relax the policies and further promote the tremendous change that has occurred in the rural areas as a result of instituting the system of linking payment to output. The contents of this change are very extensive, and they involve very many issues. In outline, we should concentrate on grasping three cardinal links:

1. On the basis of promoting everywhere various forms of the responsibility system linking payment to output, we should further organize contract specialization. In particular, we must give prominence to specialized contracting based on the peasant household.

2. We must vigorously develop rural commodity production and turn more and more agricultural products into marketable commodities. We must adopt appropriate policies to vigorously stimulate the development of rural economy from a natural self-sufficient economy into a commodity economy, and continually increase the commodity rate of agricultural products.

3. We must socialize economic and technical services. After the peasant households engage in specialized contracting, we must gradually socialize the various service work tasks.

Comrade Ren Zhongyi also stressed in his speech: We must further strengthen ideological and political work and improve management. He said at present the stress in rural ideological and political work should be on conducting education in the party's current rural policies. We must eliminate suspicion and resistance regarding the responsibility system linking payment to output, and ensure the implementation of the party's current policies.

REN ZHONGYI INAUGURATES QUANGDONG ART ACADEMY

OW250716 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0016 GMT 22 Dec 82

[Excerpts] Guangzhou, 22 Dec (XINHUA) -- The main building of modern design of the Guangdong Art Academy was recently completed along the scenic Liuhua Lake in Guangzhou.

The 8-story building of the Guangdong Art Academy covers an area of 700 square meters. The ground floor is a spacious grand hall for academic lecturing, artistic exchanges and receiving guests. The second and third floors are exhibition halls. The fourth floor and the floors above that contain special studios and dormitories for painters. All the windows of the studios are facing north so that the sunshine will not irritate the painters' eyes when they work. Also included in the building are rooms for mounting pictures and paintings, reference material rooms and store rooms for paintings.

On 18 December, Ren Zhongyi, first secretary of the Guangdong Provincial CPC Committee, attended the ribbon-cutting ceremony to mark the completion of the art academy building, and cut the ribbon. Also attending the ribbon cutting ceremony were other party and government leaders in Guangdong and people in the field of fine arts.

HUBEI GATHERING CONVEYS NPC SESSION SPIRIT

HK260634 Wuhan Hubei Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 25 Dec 82

[Text] The Hubei Provincial CPC Committee held a gathering of cadres at and above deputy section chief level in the provincial organs on 25 December.

Lin Musen, vice chairman of the provincial people's congress Standing Committee and deputy leader of the Hubei delegation to the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC, conveyed the spirit of the session. Provincial CPC Committee Second Secretary Han Ningfu presided over and spoke at the rally. He stressed: We must seriously study and implement the spirit of the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC. We must devote considerable time to studying the new constitution. Leading cadres at all levels must take the lead in study. We must integrate studying the new constitution with studying the new party constitution.

He said: Ensuring the implementation of the new constitution is the solemn duty of every citizen. The party organizations at all levels must regard ensuring the implementation of the constitution as a major affair in political life.

Speaking on seriously studying Premier Zhao Ziyang's report on the Sixth 5-Year Plan, Comrade Han Ningfu said: We must pay attention to linking study with the work reality of the province and of all fronts, departments, units and individuals, seriously sum up experiences and solve problems in good time. We must do a thoroughly good job in all work and make contributions to fulfilling and overfulfilling the province's Sixth 5-Year Plan.

MAO ZEDONG'S BIRTHDAY CELEBRATED IN HUNAN

OW261348 Hong Kong AFP in English 1322 GMT 26 Dec 82

[By Charles-Antoine de Nerciat]

[Text] Shaoshan, Central China, Dec. 26 (AFP) -- While the anniversary of Mao Zedong's birth passed virtually unnoticed in the rest of China, his native town Shaoshan was today bustling like every year to honor its greatest son.

Women of all ages were meticulously sweeping the main square in front of the museum dedicated to Mao, a yellow ochre building in the traditional Chinese style, stopping occasionally to draw breath and look up at the surrounding snow-covered hills, glistening in the winter sunshine.

"What a shame you can't stay here today," a young woman sweeping the pavement said to this correspondent. "There will be a big show tonight, like every year, put together and acted by Shaoshan residents themselves. A lot of people always come here to see it.

"The schools don't get the day off, but today they do things to honor the memory of Chairman Mao Zedong instead of lessons," she added.

While Shaoshan, where local officials said 30 per cent of the 50,000 residents are surnamed Mao, was getting ready to celebrate the 89th anniversary of the birth of the founder of Communist China, municipal authorities were still engaged in the difficult process of "demaoisation." The Deng Xiaoping regime is pushing this in the countryside.

Shaoshan peasants only adopted the responsibility system, which basically relates salaries to productivity in defiance of the egalitarian system Mao wanted to build, in 1981, two or three years after the hundreds of millions of other Chinese peasants.

According to officials of the people's commune which contains the house and former land of Mao's family, the responsibility system has stimulated the peasants' enthusiasm for work and increased their productivity.

But they added that two categories of people were still causing problems: local officials trying to hinder reforms and some peasants whose "private greed" has quickly revived despite over 30 years of socialism.

As a result, political education campaigns to reassert the principle of collective ownership of all land had to be stepped up.

Tang Ruiren, who cultivates a 1/15 hectare rice-paddy next to the farm once owned by the young Mao's wealthy family, adopted the responsibility system valliantly. As the nine other members of her family have dispersed, 52-year-old Mrs Tang is the only one left to work the land. "Now the peasants here have more to eat," she said, but admitted it was not easy to find farm laborers to help her with the harvest. She pays them 2 yuan (one dollar) a day, and gives them meals and some cigarettes -- all of which Mao, who died in late 1976, would have considered near-heresies.

Asked why the responsibility system was not introduced earlier if everyone considered it such as success, Mrs Tang merely relied: "It really depends on party policy." In her simple but relatively spacious farmhouse she still has a photograph of Mao joking with a group of peasants, herself among them, taken on his last visit to Shaoshan in 1959.

The post-Mao regime has had some difficultly in imposing its policies -- undoing the radical leftism of Mao's last 10 years -- on Hunan Province which was for a long under Hua Guofeng's control. Mr Hua rose up in the hierarchy during the Cultural Revolution (1966-76) and Mao later chose him as his successor. But Hua was then ousted from power by Mr Deng's associates.

The PEOPLE'S DAILY recently said that the attacks on Mao since his death had seriously upset people in Shaoshan, where it said leftist influence only began to decline last year when the Chinese Communist Party adopted a resolution praising Mao's merits as "primary" and his mistakes as "secondary."

Now Shaoshan peasants sing "Thanks to Deng Ziaping, everyone is happy. Thanks to Hu Yaobang (party general secretary and Mr Deng's right-hand man) every family is building granaries. Thanks to (Premier) Zhao Ziyang, every household has more grain than it needs."

Last night, on the eve of Mao's anniversary, a film watched by young officials who had made a pilgrimage to Shaoshan from other parts to China was preceded by the showing of a color photo of Mao's house with the following appeal: "Let us celebrate grandly the 89th anniversary of the birth of Comrade Mao Zedong -- of Mao Zedong, Marxist-Leninist thinker, who is also the source of the socialist reconstruction and the four modernisations. We must continue to study Mao Zedong Thought."

During the Cultural Revolution, several dozen million fanatical Red Guards flocked to Shaoshan daily. Now it receives only 100 or 200 visitors a day, and the Mao museum abruptly closed its exhibition of the 1949 communist takeover.

Official Beijing historians still find it hard to write the life of Mao, who was among the greatest influences on the 20th century but who plunged China into one of the most bloody and chaotic periods of its history.

However, local officials have found a solution to the problem of what to do with the factory built in Shaoshan during the Cultural Revolution to churn out the metal Mao badges, which millions of men and women used to wear.

It has been retooled to make plastic products.

CHI BIQING ATTENDS GUIYANG CIVILIZATION RALLY

HK250630 Guiyang Guizhou Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 24 Dec 82

[Summary] Guiyang Municipality held a mobilization rally on 24 December to promote the civility and courtesy drive and the planned parenthood propaganda month. Responsible comrades of the provincial and municipal CPC Committees Chi Biqing and (Xia Yewen) delivered mobilization speeches. They demanded that the municipality continue to get a good grasp of solving problems of dirt, disorder and poor service, launch the masses to exterminate rats and carry out a big clean-up, and improve environmental sanitation. In addition all departments and sectors must attach importance to planned parenthood and do a good job in propaganda work.

SICHUAN PREFECTURE FIGHTS ABDUCTION CRIMES

HK250904 Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 24 Dec 82

[Text] Political, legal and public security departments at all levels in Daxian Prefecture have taken resolute measures to strike blows at criminals who abduct and sell people, in order to protect the masses' personal safety and maintain social order.

Since last year, under the pretext of the recruitment of workers, tours and matchmaking, a small number of criminals in some places in Saxian Prefecture, who abduct and sell people, have deceived and seduced a small number of girls, married women, girls who are under age and students who attend school outside the province and have sold them in far-away places to obtain money through deception. Some criminals first have illicit sexual relations with the deceived women and girls, then sell them and indiscriminately humiliate them so that the victims are seriously hurt both physically and mentally.

After these women and girls are abducted, some of their families are broken up, some members of their families are killed, some of their children scatter and some families and neighbors are no longer friendly. Some people are even suspicious of each other, resulting in fighting and killing. This seriously jeopardizes social order and the consequences are extremely serious.

To resolutely strike blows at the criminal activities of abducting and selling people, organs at all levels of the party and the government and political, legal and public security departments in Daxian Prefecture have, on the one hand, strengthened ideological work for the masses, educated them, heightened their ability to distinguish right from wrong and dared to expose the scheme and activities of criminals so as to enable them to avoid deception. On the other hand, they have taken resolute measures to strictly and severely strike blows at criminals in accordance with the law.

From January to October this year, the whole prefecture heard 68 cases of abducting and selling people and passed sentences on 83 criminals.

XIZANG'S YIN FATANG SPEAKS AT TECHNOLOGY FORUM

HK250558 Lhasa Xizang Regional Service in Mandarin 1130 GMT 24 Dec 82

[Text] On the afternoon of 23 December, leading comrades of the party and the government in the region, including Yin Fatang, Yangling Duoji, Basang, Song Ziyuan, Yang Zongxin, Zhang Zengwen and (Tao Xu); and some scientific and technological workers in Lhasa happily gathered to hold a forum to discuss the important duties which scientific and technological workers will shoulder in creating a new situation in the coming year.

This forum of scientific and technological circles, which will greet the new year, was jointly sponsored by the regional Science and Technology Committee and the regional Science and Technology Association. In their speeches, in light of the realities of their own departments, representatives from the agricultural, animal husbandry, industrial, communications, geological and public health fronts talked about the plans and measures for scientific and technological work of their own departments. They unanimously declared: Under the leadership of the party and the government, like Comrades Jiang Zhuying and Luo Jianfu, we must establish a firm communist belief, strive to master modern scientific and technological knowledge, settle down on the plateau, work in a down-to-earth manner, establish ambition, bravely scale heights and devote all our energy to the speeding up of our region's socialist construction and to the achieving of the target of increasing the annual total industrial and agricultural output value by 400 percent by the end of this century.

At the forum, Yin Fatang, regional CPC Committee first secretary, highly praised scientific and technological workers in our region for their achievements scored on all fronts. He extended New Year greetings to all scientific and technological workers throughout the region. He said: The great target of increasing the output value by 400 percent by the end of this century cannot be achieved in our region without science and technology. Therefore, our scientific and technological workers and intellectuals must clearly understand the important duties which they are shouldering.

Comrade Yin Fatang pointed out: In the future, we must continue to eliminate the leftist influence and prejudice against intellectuals in society by dispising and discriminating against them. All departments must attach importance to the employment of intellectuals, resolve their practical difficulties and give full play to their role. We must further stabilize, consolidate and promote the existing scientific and technological force. We must vigorously train qualified personnel of our own nationality and other minority nationalities to meet the needs of the four modernizations.

In conclusion, he encouraged them to unite, make concerted efforts, score more achievements and fill the gaps in science and achieve even greater results in the coming year.

YUNNAN AFFORESTATION -- Since the smashing of the gang of four, 26 firewood supply bases throughout the province have planted trees covering an area of more than 3 million mu and the preservation rate of trees has reached 91 percent. Those trees planted before 1980 are now grown and a number of forest farms of production brigades and communes have begun to fell and utilize these trees. To speed up the construction of firewood supply bases, over the past 6 years, the province has allotted more than 14 million yuan to supporting production brigades and communes in carrying out afforestation projects. Forestry and financial departments at various levels of the province, prefectures and counties have closely cooperated with each other to do much beneficial work to promote afforestation. NEI MONGGOL'S ZHOU HUI AT BIRTH CONTROL RALLY

[Excerpts] According to our reporter (Wu Xinmin), the mobilization rally on the birth control propagation month campaign of the departments directly under the regional people's government and of Hohhot Municipality was held on the afternoon of 24 December at the Nei Monggol gymnasium. The rally urged efforts to mobilize the people of various nationalities across the region to vigorously popularize and practice birth control and make new contributions to resolutely and effectively controlling population growth.

This rally was jointly held by the regional and Hohhot Municipal People's Government. Attending the rally were regional and Hohhot municipal party, government and army leading comrades, including Zhaou Hui, Kong Fei, Bu He, Zhou Beifeng, Zhang Debin, Li Zhenghe, (Su He) and (He Xinge). Bu He, deputy secretary of the regional CPC Committee, spoke at the rally.

Comrade Bu He stressed: At present, our population problem is very serious and our task of controlling population growth is very arduous. CPC committees and people's governments at all levels should earnestly strengthen their leadership over the propagation month campaign and make use of the 1983 new year and spring festival periods to conduct penetrating and extensive popularization and education in birth control among the large numbers of cadres and the masses, with stress on rural areas. Ideological and educational work should be integrated with practical action in birth control work.

Comrade Bu He urged party members, CYL members, PLA commanders and fighters, intellectuals and cadres throughout the region to take the lead in studying, popularizing and practicing birth control and to lead the masses in working hard for fulfilling the strategic objective of controlling our region's population under 23.3 million by the end of this century.

Zhou Beifeng, deputy director of the regional planned parenthood leading group and vice chairman of the regional people's government, presided over the rally and spoke. Also speaking at the rally were Li Zhenghe, deputy political commissar of the Nei Monggol Military District; (Sha Lun), director of the Hohhot Municipal Women's Federation; (Hu Rui), a peasant of (Xitaiyuan) brigade in (Xitaiyuan) commune in suburban Hohhot Municipality; responsible persons of various regional departments, commissions, offices and bureaus and of various trade unions, CYL committees and women's federations; workers and staff members of various plants, mines and enterprises; cadres at grassroots units; the PLA commanders and fighters and the masses of various nationalities in all circles, totalling 5,000 persons.

BEIJING DENIES SUBMARINE MISSILE THREAT TO TAIWAN

OW280227 Beijing in Mandarin to Taiwan 0130 GMT 24 Dec 82

[Random talk by (Liu Wei)]

[Excerpts] Listeners, friends, I am sure that you must have learned that our motherland successfully launched a carrier rocket from a submerged submarine last October. The launching of the submarine-based rocket has triggered strong worldwide response.

Friends in the military and political circle, while people were happily discussing China's success in launching a submarine-based rocket, certain Taiwan authorities said that the Chinese Communists' rocket-launching test was aimed at showing off military might and creating tensions in Taiwan, creating chaos there and undermining social stability. Such remarks are really hard to understand.

Friends, any knowledgeable and intelligent person would be able to make a clear distinction between right and wrong and between truth and falsehood. I think such a claim by the Taiwan authorities can hardly be convincing.

Friends in the military and political circle, you all know that the current world situation is unpredictable, that the threat of war still exists, and that our motherland, which is at the center of this situation, must have a peaceful and stable environment. To preserve such an environment, naturally we must develop our own defense so that we have powerful backing. This is just common sense. In view of the current world situation, many foreign friends have also expressed their earnest hope that China would become a powerful country. For example, former U.S. President Nixon once said at a meeting that if China were weak, it would invite aggression, and that if China were strong, it would become a strong force, contributing to the peace and stability of the world. For this reason, he said, China should be a country with a strong economy, strong military power and a strong determination to oppose aggression and hegemonism.

Listeners, friends, how do you feel after listening to Mr Nixon's remarks? Is not this American statesman's view more intelligent than that of certain people in the Taiwan authorities?

By saying that China was showing off its military might and creating tensions in Taiwan to create chaos there and undermine social stability, the Taiwan authorities were slinging mud at us intentionally; if not, they believed in their own misconceptions and were not talking like members of the same family.

To realize the motherland's peaceful reunification through friendly negotiations is the Chinese Government's unflinching policy. China's purpose in developing its own nuclear weapons and guided missiles is to deter potential aggressors, so they will not dare to invade China. For this reason, the development of such weapons is a necessary means of defense. I believe that friends in the military and political circle in Taiwan are able to distinguish right from wrong and will not be deceived by demagogic rumors.

FINANCE MINISTER OUTLINES AID FOR OVERSEAS TRADE

OW280319 Taipei CNA in English 0249 GMT 28 Dec 82

[Text] Taipei, Dec. 28 (CNA) -- Finance Minister Hsu Li-teh said Monday the Government of the Republic of China has started to take a series of measures to support this country's multinational enterprises in their operations abroad.

Speaking at a dinner party in honor of scholars and experts to the second Sino-Japanese multinational enterprises symposium, Minister Hsu pointed out that to coordinate with the promotion of foreign trade and to encourage the development of multinational enterprises, the government is promoting internationalization of banking operations in this country.

The Executive Yuan has approved a plan on the development of overseas banking organizations here to encourage domestic banks to set up branches abroad in order to support the business operations of this country's multinational enterprises, Hsu said.

He added that the Ministry of Finance has also asked the Export-Import Bank of China and the Bank of Communications to help domestic enterprises to issue corporate bonds abroad to open new channels for raising capital.

In addition, Minister Hsu said the government will continue to review its regulations and policy on taxes and banking in order to create a favorable tax and monetary climate to facilitate the development of multinational enterprises.

ECONOMICS MINISTER ON REINVIGORATING ECONOMY

OW280325 Taipei CNA in English 0257 GMT 28 Dec 82

[Text] Taipei, Dec. 28 (CNA) -- Economic Affairs Minister Chao Yao-tung Monday stressed his determination to change the nation's economic structure so as to reinvigorate the economic development.

Speaking to the Constitutional Research Council meeting of the National Assembly at the Taipei City Hall, Chao said the current economic difficulties of this nation are rooted in the weak economic structure, marketing disorder, and backward technological development.

To solve these difficulties, the government will have to develop the kind of industries consuming less energy and material while utilizing more technology and research in order to add values to the products.

Under the impact of international economic changes, the Republic of China will have to adjust its economic structure through the promotion of strategic industries, emphasis on comparative profitability, fair competition and communication of ideas.

The government will also focus on raising the income of farmers, establishing an overall economic system, adopting a feasible investment policy, assisting the small and medium industries, and expanding international cooperation.

He called on the people of the nation to sacrifice their personal interests for the sake of developing the whole economy of the nation.

"If our nation has bright future then the people will definitely get benefits," he asserted.

CHENG MING EDITOR DENIES 'SECRETS' ALLEGATIONS

HK240132 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 24 Dec 82 p 1

[Text] The Guangzhou official recently sentenced to 12 years in jail for allegedly selling state secrets had never asked for anything more than his deserved payment for contributions to Hong Kong publications a spokeswoman for a local magazine said yesterday.

The NEW CHINA NEWS AGENCY reported yesterday that the former deputy director of the United Front Department in Guangzhou, Dai Zhen, was jailed for stealing state secrets and selling them to a respected leftist magazine in Hong Kong.

The agency said Dai had for several years been "stealing large quantities of state secrets and selling them to Mr Wen Hui, chief editor of the Hong Kong magazine, CHENG MING, and others." In return, it said, Dai had received more than $10,000 and a "batch of commodities."

Mr Wen was not available for comment. A CHENG MING editor, who declined to be identified by name, said the charges were "groundless." He admitted that CHENG MING and its sister publication, TREND, had paid $250 each to Dai as a monthly retainer fee for contributing articles.

According to the NCNA report, Dai received a monthly payment of $500 from Mr Wen, and also reportedly asked for refrigerators and expensive radio-recorder sets.

The CHENG MING editor yesterday denied that Dai had sold the magazine any state secrets, saying "all his articles are factual, known to most people in China." A spokeswoman for the magazine added that Dai had never demanded anything like a refrigerator or tape recorder from the magazine's management.

However, she could not say whether Dai has asked for those items from anyone else, or if he had been contributing articles to publications other than CHENG MING and TREND. She said CHENG MING would run its own version of the story in its next issue, which goes on sale at the end of this month or early next month.

An article by Dai will also be published to show that no state secrets had been revealed. However, she said that as a general editorial principle, the magazine reserved the right, as did other local publications, to sub-edit stories contributed by freelance writers.

CHENG MING, a Chinese-language magazine, is sympathetic to the communist cause, but has been highly critical of China for its lack of democracy.

NCNA did not say when Dai was sentenced, but sources close to the communists here said he was arrested in July last year.

The United Front Department is a Communist Party organisation responsible for winning over to its side all Chinese political parties on the mainland and elsewhere.

CHENG MING started publication in 1978, and at one time, journalistic circles here believed it was funded by top leaders in China to be used as a tool for purging hardline communist officials. However, in August last year, the monthly was banned from China.

U.S.-USSR TIES AFTER BREZHNEV REVIEWED

HK290242 Beijing BEIJING REVIEW in English No. 51, 20 Dec 82 pp 7, 8

[Article by Wang Chongjie: "Has the Tango Begun?"]

[Text] United States President Ronald Reagan, speaking at a nationally televised news conference hours after the Soviets' release of the news of President Leonid Brezhnev's death, called on Moscow to "tango" with the White House, meaning the two superpowers should work together to improve their relations.

Has the dance begun? How will Soviet-U.S. relations develop after the change in the Soviet leadership? This is a question that concerns the whole international community.

Tuning Up

For the last few weeks, the White House and Kremlin have exchanged a variety of signals. President Reagan, in offering condolences on the death of President Brezhnev, said his administration had "a strong desire to work towards an improved relationship with the Soviet Union." The White House sent Vice-President George Bush and Secretary of State George Shultz to attend Brezhnev's funeral.

Reagan also took the opportunity to announce the lifting of sanctions against American and other firms involved in the Soviet natural gas pipeline project. Shortly thereafter, a number of U.S. congressmen headed by Senator Robert Dole visited Moscow and more than 250 American businessmen attended the U.S.-USSR Trade and Econonic Council in Moscow, the first session of the council to meet in four years.

At the same time, the Reagan administration has pressed ahead its plans to expand the U.S. military build-up. In their talks on November 15, Reagan and West German Chancellor Kohl reiterated their loyalty to the NATO "two-track" decision, including deployment of U.S. medium-range missiles in Western Europe by the end of 1983. On November 22, Reagan announced the U.S. plan to deploy 100 intercontinental MX missiles in "densepack" formation at a Wyoming base. In recent statements, both Reagan and Shultz insisted that arms reduction agreements and economic cooperation with Moscow are only possible if the new Soviet leadership makes substantive changes in Moscow's policies, particularly on the arms race, Afghanistan, Kampuchea and Poland.

Andropov Responds

On the Soviet side, Yuriy Andropov, the new general secretary of the Central Committee of the Soviet Communist Party, met with Bush and Shultz in Moscow and stressed that the Kremlin was prepared to build relations with the United States on the basis of full equality, non-interference, mutual respect for the interests of the peoples of both countries and the improvement of the international situation.

Soviet Premier Nikolay Tikhonov met with the American delegation to the Soviet-U.S. trade session and said that Moscow was open to developing trade and economic relations with Washington. Vasiliy Kuznetsov, first deputy chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet, conferred with the U.S. congressmen.

At the same time, Andropov in several important speeches expressed the new Soviet leadership's determination to continue pursuing the strategic line in home and foreign policy worked out under Brezhnev. Unmistakably directing his remarks at the U.S. moves to expand nuclear arms, Andropov stressed that the Soviet Union must maintain its defence capability at an appropriate level.

Moscow was ready to reach an agreement on reduction of arms with Washington and other Western nations, Andropov said, but he warned that no one should expect his country to make military cuts unilaterally. He said the Soviet Union hopes to ease tensions and broaden co-operation between Moscow and Washington, but that his government will not make unmatched concessions in all fields as the White House demanded.

No Abrupt Changes Yet

What do these signals mean in this severe winter of U.S.-Soviet relations? Could the Reagan administration be moving towards a "new beginning" in U.S.-Soviet relations? Can the world view Moscow's moves as a prelude to dramatic changes in Soviet policy? Neither is likely, at least at present.

The latest issue of the weekly MOSCOW NEWS quoted President Reagan saying "it takes two to tango" and urging the Soviet leaders to show willingness by actual deeds to dance with Americans. The weekly said that inviting someone to dance should not be conditional on the partner changing his hair style, let alone his ideology. However, the weekly continued, Washington retained its habit of raising prerequisites by demanding that the Soviet Union improve its behaviour according to a U.S. point of view. This was not the gesture of an equal partner issuing an invitation, MOSCOW NEWS said.

Summing up Soviet specialists' views on the present state of and prospects for Soviet-U.S. relations, MOSCOW NEWS said that since the American diplomatic recognition of the Soviet Union in 1933, relations between the two countries have never been worse than they are today. Some think that a turn for the better can occur only when there is a change of hands in the White House, the weekly said. Others are inclined to believe that the Reagan administration could possibly adopt a reasonable position on the Soviet Union and on East-West trade in particular, after it suffers from the defeat of its economic policies and the obvious setbacks in the mid-term elections.

It is still too early to predict how things will develop, but so far no changes can be discerned in either Soviet or U.S. positions or in their relations. As facts show, it will not be easy for Moscow and Washington to tango in the near future. Even if they do, they will unavoidably step on each other's toes.

RENMIN RIBAO ASSESSES PRC-THIRD WORLD COOPERATION

HK241336 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 22 Dec 82 p 6

["Special Commentary" by Shi Lin [4256 2651]: "Strengthen China's Economic Cooperation With Third World Countries"]

[Text] After achieving national independence, Third World countries are confronted with the important tasks of actively developing their national economy and consolidating their political independence with economic independence. Therefore there is great significance in developing economic cooperation among Third World countries. Among developing countries, this not only is advantageous to assisting one another and learning from others' strongpoints to offset one's own weakness, but also it helps strengthen the unity of Third World countries, breaking through the monopoly of world markets and the manipulation of international commodity prices by international monopoly capital and promoting the establishment of a just, peaceful and rational new international economic order.

Many Third World countries have made gratifying achievements in economic construction. They possess a rather advanced and applicable technology and have accumulated considerable capital. Many of their experiences can be used as references for other countries. It is absolutely possible to develop mutual cooperation among Third World countries. From a certain point of view, the results of this cooperation by no means are inferior to cooperation with developed countries.

China is a developing socialist country and she belongs to the Third World. We have experienced suffering similar to that of the developing countries. We also face the common task of opposing imperialism, colonialism and hegemonism and developing the national economy. In our economic contacts with Third World countries we always have adhered to the five principles of peaceful coexistence and the principle of internationalism, sympathized and supported one another and regarded the strengthening of economic cooperation with Third World countries as an unflinching principle.

Since the founding of the People's Republic of China and along with developing its economic construction, China has scored positive achievements in the economic cooperation with the Third World countries. In 1981 China's trade with the Third World countries amounted to U.S. $9.2 billion, 23 percent of the total amount of China's exports. This has played an active role in giving play to the superiority of each respective country and promoting the economic development of all countries. China also has offered aid to friendly Third World countries and has had fruitful economic cooperation with these countries in the spheres of agriculture, industry, transportation and communications, water conservation, electric power, civil buildings, broadcasting, telecommunications, handicraft weaving, public health, medicine and so on. Up to the end of 1981 China undertook 1,317 construction projects in 76 developing countries -- of which 987 already had been put into operation -- projects playing an effective role in the economic construction of these countries. Take, for instance, the following projects aided by China: the Mbalali Farm of Tanzania has yielded over 1,000 jin of rice per mu for years running; the cigarette and matchbox factory of Guinea has been stable in its production since it was put into operation in 1964 -- this factory made profits for years and was honored with the title "red flag factory" by the Guinean Government; the deep well project in Hargeisa City in Somalia has brought prosperity to the region. This made Hargeisa develop into a city with a population of 300,000 from the former population of 50,000. The number of experts and technicians sent successfully by China to Third World countries totalled 180,000. They worked together with the local people, commonly shared their weal and woe, unreservedly passed on their techniques and won praise from the local government and people. Not a few of our comrades have devoted their valuable lives in this cooperation.

Moreover, since 1963, China sent medical teams one after another to 41 Asian and African countries. More than 6,200 medical workers worked in these countries. They have practiced the revolutionary humanitarian spirit of healing the wounded and rescuing the dying, enthusiastically served the local people, cured large numbers of common and frequently occurring diseases, treated many complicated cases and saved the lives of a number of critically ill patients. Thus they were greeted by the respective government and people.

We constantly have maintained that support is interrelated. By supporting the Third World countries we increase the friendship between the people of China and of the Third World countries and also promote the development of our economic construction, train and temper our ranks of technicians and create conditions for further developing international economic and technical cooperation.

We never will forget that the revolution and construction cause of the Chinese people always has been sympathized with and supported by the friendly countries of the Third World.

In order to continue to develop economic and technical cooperation with the Third World countries, China recently has extended the spheres of cooperation with the developing countries in accordance with current international practices and the demands of friendly countries and further has developed contract projects, labor service cooperation, exchanges of techniques, cooperation in production, operations and other forms of cooperation.

At present the Western capitalist countries are in an economic crisis situation. They have affected the developing countries by shifting their crisis, thus slowing down the economic development of these countries and putting them in serious economic difficulty. Under such circumstances it is particularly important vigorously to strengthen "South-South cooperation" and to develop economic relations among the Third World countries. We hold that the tentative plan of the Group of 77 to strengthen multilateral cooperation among the developing countries, including their global economic cooperation, is applicable and appropriate, and it has great significance in changing the structure of the world economy and international economic relations. We firmly support the Third World countries in their struggle to establish a new international economic order and to promote "South-South cooperation" actively. We must strengthen bilateral cooperation with the developing countries and, where subjective and objective conditions permit, actively support and participate in multilateral economic cooperation with the developing countries.

China shares the same fate and breathes the same air as the Third World countries. In the days to come China will, as always, continue to strengthen trade and economic cooperation with the Third World countries and to make necessary contributions to enhancing the collective self-reliance capability of the developing countries.

XINHUA LOOKS AT SOUTH-SOUTH COOPERATION IN 1982

OW281648 Beijing XINHUA in English 1620 GMT 28 Dec 82

["Year-ender: South-South Cooperation in 1982 -- by XINHUA correspondent Tang Tianre" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, December 28 (XINHUA) -- The passing year has witnessed the growing economic cooperation among Third World countries in the face of the severe economic crisis in the West.

Most Third World countries believe that with North-South negotiations deadlocked, strengthening the cooperation among the Third World nations, namely, the South-South cooperation, is the most realistic and effective means of promoting the independent national economy of the Third World countries, of combatting the shift of economic crises by the West and of striving to establish a new international economic order.

Proceeding from this belief, Third World nations are trying to strengthen the South-South cooperation on bilateral, multilateral, regional and transcontinental basis.

In order to shift the economic crisis on to other countries, the Western countries have adopted protectionism, lowered raw material prices, enforced high interest rate and cut down development funds to Third World countries. In this context, the Third World countries have taken since the beginning of this year a series of measures to combat the shift of crisis as well as to safeguard their economic interests. This has borne fruit.

-- Having realized that protectionism prevails in the West with imports sharply reduced, a number of regional organizations for cooperation among Third World countries have reduced or remitted tariffs on imported goods among countries in a region or between regions so as to expand their markets and promote trade. Among the countries of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations, for example, commodities under preferential tariffs have increased from 71 in 1977 to over 8,560 items now. The 18-nation Preferential Trade Area of eastern and southern African States (PTA) has decided to cooperate on customs to reduce or remove obstacles to their trade. The five ASEAN nations this year signed a lot of trade or cooperation agreements with different countries in Asia, Africa and Latin America, including agreements on tariff remission and on offering favorable trade status to each other. With the cooperation in this respect growing steadily, the trade volume among the Third World nations has increased year after year.

-- The economies of the great majority of the Third World states have been seriously hit as the Western countries sharply lowered the prices they will pay for raw materials and primary products. In this context, a number of economic organizations for cooperation among Third World nations have acted together to deal with the issue with a view to safeguarding the economic interests of the member states. In the spring of this year, the West took advantage of the decreased demand for oil in the world market to lower oil prices. The Organization of Petroleum-Exporting Countries, therefore, cut oil production to maintain the price, thus standing up to pressure from the West.

The Cocoa Producers Alliance and Inter-African Coffee Organization held meetings respectively to study the unsalability of cocoa and coffee in the world market and decided to close ranks and take concerted actions to protect the economic interests of the producers.

-- While the Western nations have adopted a high interest rate and cut down development funds to the developing countries, some Arab nations and international monetary and financial organizations offered low-interest loans or loans under preferential terms. The Arab states provide loans of more than 740 million U.S. dollars on an average to over 40 African countries every year, of which more than 80 percent were offered under preferential terms. The funds offered by the OPEC members to the developing nations stand at 1.44 percent of their gross national products, much higher than those of the Western developed countries, which register 0.34 percent. The recent meeting of the African Development Bank has decided to increase agricultural loans to the developing countries in the next five years.

To cast off their dependence on the West's multinational cooperations, the Third World countries have developed mutually beneficial cooperations and strengthened their capability of collective self-reliance by taking a series of measures, such as joint-ventures.

Starting this year, Malaysia and oil-producing countries in the Gulf region have developed manufacturing industries through joint-ventures. The and Saudi Arabia recently signed many agreements on economic cooperation in the fields of industry, agriculture, transportation and architecture. Thirty nations are planning to increase agricultural cooperation and to seek raising a three-billion-dollar fund to create grain buffer stocks in Turkey, Bangladesh, Mexico and Malaysia.

However, there are still many difficulties and barriers in such economic cooperations in the Third World. Many Third World countries have kept single-product economies and depend on developed countries. They are restricted by the developed countries so far as capital, trade and technology are concerned.

Third World countries differ from one another in the level of their economic development. They too are varied in interests and needs, with political differences and other contradictions left over by history often bringing them into confrontations or even armed conflicts. All this stands in the way of South-South cooperation.

Developed countries have been making use of these clashes to control the Third World economy, undermine their cooperation and push such cooperation onto a track in their favor. The superpowers' expansionist pursuits and their rivalry for supremacy have posed an even worse threat to their independence and sovereignty and their peace and stability, hindering their mutual cooperation most seriously.

Therefore, the economic cooperation of the Third World still falls short of what they had planned, but South-South cooperation is ultimately irrevocable and irresistible.

PRC TO REPAY DOLLAR ASSETS UNBLOCKED BY U.S.

OW301152 Beijing XINHUA in English 1116 GMT 30 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 30 (XINHUA) -- The State Council has authorized the Bank of China to settle repayments of U.S. dollar assets unblocked by the U.S. Government which have already been recovered by the bank from the United States and other countries of the Hong Kong-Macao region.

On September 9, 1979, the State Council issued a decree authorizing the Bank of China to act on behalf of account owners for recovery or withdrawal of their assets blocked by the U.S. Government. The authorization was given after an agreement on the settlement of claims on assets was signed between the Chinese and U.S. Governments on May 11, 1979.

The Bank of China began recovery and settlement of U.S. dollar assets as soon as the U.S. Government announced the unblocking of Chinese assets on January 31, 1980. The bank, entrusted by individuals who had assets directly deposited in the United States, has repaid all that have been recovered.

From now on, according to the State Council announcement, the Bank of China will settle repayments of unblocked U.S. dollar assets already recovered by the bank from the U.S., the Hong Kong-Macao region or banks of third countries with government organizations, state enterprises and undertakings. The bank will also start to settle repayments of recovered U.S. dollar assets unblocked in the U.S. and other countries or in the Hong Kong-Macao region with previously privately-owned enterprises, and repay individuals and the above-mentioned organizations their U.S. dollar assets deposited in previously privately-owned banks or in the Bank of China itself after liberation that were indirectly blocked by the U.S. action.

COMMENT ON 'DISPUTE SWIRLING AROUND' MX MISSILE

OW281155 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1131 GMT 24 Dec 82

[Current events talk by Ji Zonghe, exclusively for FUJIAN RIBAO: "The Dispute Swirling Around the MX Missile"]

[Text] Beijing, 24 Dec (XINHUA) -- U.S. President Reagan, in a television speech on 22 November, announced that the United States would produce 100 MX missiles and deploy them in a "dense pack" fashion in the mountain region of the western state of Wyoming in "supersolid" underground silos clustered within an area of 52 square kilometers. These missiles would replace the more than 1,000 land-based Minuteman guided missiles which were built "before the age of the chips" and are now "antiques," in order to deal with Soviet nuclear "superiority."

The announcement evoked an uproar in U.S. public opinion as soon as it was made. Reagan repeatedly stressed the importance and pressing need of deploying the MX guided missile, saying that even after the MX guided missiles were deployed it "would still take another 5 years to reach the same level as the Soviet Union." In spite of this the House of Representatives voted down Reagan's request for funds to produce the first five of these guided missiles. This made Reagan furious. He said that the house was committing a "serious mistake," was "daydreaming about the future" and had "dealt a serious blow to us in our efforts to safeguard the security of the country." He did not accomplish anything with these statements although they bordered on threats. Finally he had to accept a compromise plan which had the support of the Senate.

The compromise plan approved the appropriation of nearly $1 billion for the production of the first five of these guided missiles but it stipulates that the fund cannot be used before a new basing mode is approved by Congress. Now the storm has died down for the moment. Actually, the MX missile deployment plan once again is being shelved.

The MX missile deployment plan was first suggested by the United States as early as 17 years ago. But because of costly expenses involved, difficulties in deciding on the mode of deployment and disputes about the effectiveness of the MX guided missile, it was repeatedly pigeonholed. Former Defense Secretary Schlesinger once said that the MX missile would be the most effective weapon not only for the present but also until the end of this century. The missile weighs about 98 tons; each is equipped with 10 warheads and each warhead is equivalent to 350,000 tons of TNT. Moreover it is said to be superior to all current nuclear weapons in terms of accuracy. However, disputes about the deployment mode have been going on for as long as 9 years and more than 30 plans have been suggested. One proposed by former President Carter called for a "mobile mode." Now Reagan has suggested a "dense pack mode." Both plans have been considered "ridiculous."

Reagan's proposal to deploy the MX missile represents still another round in nuclear contention between the United States and the Soviet Union. Immediately after he announced the deployment plan, the official Soviet News Agency commented that this was "a step to aggravate the danger of an arms race." Soviet Defense Minister Ustinov made it known that the Soviet Union too would deploy a new ICBM of the same class, whose performance would be not an iota inferior to the MX missile. Just around the time this statement was made the Soviet Union test-launched 4 SSNX-20 guided missiles in a row. This Soviet guided missile carries 12 nuclear warheads each. It has a range of 8,000 kilometers, which is 1,000 kilometers more than that of the most advanced guided missile the United States possesses, the Trident. Observers wonder what the meaning is of the Strategic Arms Reduction talks held in Geneva. They are nothing more than a "long, time-consuming farce" jointly staged by the United States and the Soviet Union. The talks are held for the purpose of developing nuclear weapons, and nuclear weapons are developed for the purpose of holding the talks. Thus they are caught in a vicious circle trying to catch up with each other. Instead of "destroying the existing nuclear weapons," they are bringing nuclear calamity to mankind.

REAGAN IN U.S. TV PROGRAM ON ASSASSINATION ATTEMPT

HK300813 Beijing GONGREN RIBAO in Chinese 23 Dec 82 p 4

[Report excerpted from GUANGBO DIANSHI ZAZHI [BROADCASTING AND TELEVISION MAGAZINE] No. 12: "Reagan Relives an Actor's Life for a Short While"]

[Text] To mark the anniversary of the attempt to assassinate President Reagan, the United States recently produced a television play entitled "Saving the President," which tells about what happened during the hours after Reagan was shot.

The greater part of the television play was played by an actor who looked like Reagan. Reagan was very interested in producing this play. He agreed to act personally for several minutes at the end of the play. The part he acted was about a visit at the White House of three doctors who had given him medical treatment after he was wounded. Reagan welcomed them at his home and talked for a short while with these three surgeons, to thank them for their efforts to save his life. Reagan said, "I think I have been very lucky. I would like to extend my hearty thanks to all the people who worked hard to save my life."

JAPANESE FOREIGN MINISTER CITES TIES WITH PRC

OW291330 Beijing XINHUA in English 1255 GMT 29 Dec 82

[Text] Tokyo, December 29 (XINHUA) -- Japanese Foreign Minister Shintaro Abe told foreign reporters here this afternoon Japan will strengthen its political and economic ties with China.

He said, "In the next ten years we must work for the furtherance of the good and stable relations with our neighbor China." China and Japan have had normal relations for ten years, he noted.

Abe stressed that the Nakasone Cabinet attaches great importance to relations with China and that he is in full agreement with the prime minister in this regard.

JAPAN, PRC FRIENDSHIP UNITS SEND NEW YEAR WISHES

OW290453 Beijing in Japanese to Japan 2130 GMT 24 Dec 82

[Text] Liao Chengzhi, president of the China-Japan Friendship Association, and Tokuma Utsunomiya, president of the Japan-China Friendship Association, issued their New Year messages in the 23 December issue of JAPAN AND CHINA, official journal of the Japan-China Friendship Association.

In his message President Liao Chengzhi said:

This past year, the Chinese and Japanese peoples celebrated the 10th anniversary of the normalization of Sino-Japanese relations with overflowing joy, realized a visit between the prime ministers of the two countries, held the first private-level Sino-Japanese conference, and made splendid progress in friendship visits and cooperative exchanges between the two countries in various fields.

This year marks the beginning of the second decade since the normalization of Sino-Japanese relations. It also marks the fifth anniversary of the signing of the Sino-Japanese Peace and Friendship Treaty.

At a time when the international situation is undergoing turbulent changes, it not only benefits the two countries' economic prosperity but also is a key factor in maintaining and safeguarding peace in the Asian-Pacific region and the world, for China and Japan to establish a lasting, stable friendship -- which can withstand international storms -- on the basis of the joint Sino-Japanese statement and the Sino-Japanese Peace and Friendship Treaty.

We may encounter many difficulties in the development of friendly ties between the two countries. But if our two peoples strengthen their unity and work together to remove obstacles, we are sure that Sino-Japanese friendship will develop further.

In his New Year message, Tokuma Utsunomiya, president of the Japan-China Friendship Association, said:

The year 1983 will be a memorial year, marking the fifth anniversary of the Sino-Japanese Peace and Friendhsip Treaty, which will serve as a bond of friendship between the two countries for generations to come.

Needless to say, Sino-Japanese friendship is an important pillar for peace in Asia and the world and the foundation for Japan's security and prosperity. Sino-Japanese relations were normalized 10 years ago for a lasting friendship, and the new year will mark the fifth anniversary of the peace and friendship treaty which was concluded by efforts of the people of our two countries as a bond of that lasting friendship.

Fellow citizens across the country, let us join in our efforts to fight for the security, peace and prosperity of the Japanese and Chinese peoples!

INDIAN READERS REFUTE NGUYEN CO THACH'S APPEAL

OW291020 Beijing XINHUA in English 0801 GMT 29 Dec 82

[Text] New Delhi, December 29 (XINHUA) -- Indian readers recently refuted Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach's appeal to keep Kampuchea's seat in the Non-Aligned Movement vacant.

Thach paid a 3-day visit to India recently.

A reader wrote in today's INDIAN EXPRESS that Thach cannot be unaware of the growing support for the Sihanouk-led coalition government. Efforts to prevent the Sihanouk government from getting the U.N. General Assembly seat was scuttled when as many as 105 member countries voted in favor of the Sihanouk regime. Even India which has recognized the Heng Samrin regime abstained from voting.

Another reader said in his letter that Nguyen Co Thach asks with the pretended innocence of a child how can Vietnam unilaterally withdraw its forces from Kampuchea. But who else is there to make such a withdrawal look bilateral? Can Democratic Kampuchea's resistance forces by any stretch of imagination be considered foreign forces which should also be required to withdraw from Kampuchea? And if so where should they go?

Thach has also raised the China bogey. But does he mean to suggest that Chinese forces were also operating there? The truth of the matter is that there are no foreign troops in Kampuchea except those of Vietnam. The whole world knows it. The U.N. knows it. That is why it has called for the immediate withdrawal of the Vietnamese occupation army from there so that a favorable atmosphere could be created for the Kampuchea people to exercise their inherent right of self-determination to decide what form of government they want to have, the letter said.

It would be disgraceful for India if, as the host country, it accedes to the Vietnamese demand of keeping the Kampuchean seat vacant in the non-aligned summit meeting. It rightfully belongs to Democratic Kampuchea, the letter added.

ZHAO ZIYANG CONCLUDES VISIT TO MOROCCO

Zhao, Bouabid Hold More Talks

OW300408 Beijing XINHUA in English 0347 GMT 30 Dec 82

[Text] Rabat, December 29 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang and Moroccan Prime Minister Maati Bouabid held their second round of talks here this afternoon.

Present at the talks on the Chinese side were State Councillor Gu Mu, minister of Foreign Affairs Wu Xueqian, Vice-Minister of Foreign Affairs Wen Yezhan and Vice-Minister of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade Lu Xuejian.

Present on the Moroccan side were Minister of State in Charge of Foreign Affairs M'Hamed Boucetta, Minister of State in Charge of Cooperation Aherdan and Minister of Equipment Mohamed Kabbaj.

The participants first heard a briefing by Moroccan Minister of State Mahjoubi Aherdan on his working session with Chinese State Councillor Gu Mu this morning. Aherdan said that at the working session, both sides noted with satisfaction the economic cooperation between the two countries in all fields and decided to further enhance this cooperation. Morocco will send a high-level delegation to visit China so as to work out a general guideline for trade between the two countries.

He said the Moroccan side put forward a number of concrete proposals for developing economic and technological cooperation between the two countries involving agriculture, equipment, power, mining, communications, health, handicrafts, sports and personnel training.

He said China agreed in principle with the Moroccan proposals but at the same time explained that the mode for implementing economic cooperation could be decided upon through the Sino-Moroccan Mixed Committee, diplomatic channels or consultations between the two sides when the Moroccan economic delegation visits China.

Premier Zhao Ziyang expressed satisfaction with the results of the talks between Aherdan and Gu Mu. He said there are enormous potentials and broad prospects in the field of economic and technological cooperation between the two countries. He pointed out that his talks with King Hassan II in Marrakech yesterday was friendly, sincere and fruitful. Recalling the successful February visit of Prime Minister Bouabid to China, he said during his current visit, both sides have further pushed forward the friendly relations and cooperation.

Prime Minister Bouabid said Premier Zhao's visit is one of great significance to the continuous development of economic cooperation between the two countries. Premier Zaho's visit, he said, is fruitful and has promoted friendship and understanding between the two countries.

Premier Zhao said during his stay in Morocco he has been accorded a warm welcome everywhere. This is a vivid expression of the profound friendship between the two peoples, he said.

Gu Mu, State Minister Confer

[Text] Rabat, December 29 (XINHUA) -- Chinese State Councillor Gu Mu and Moroccan Minister of State for Cooperation Mahjoubi Aherdan exchanged views on further development of bilateral economic and trade relations here today.

During their talks held this morning, the two sides expressed satisfaction over the economic and trade relations between China and Morocco in recent years and maintained that there are broad prospects for further development of the relations. It was learnt that the two sides also discussed cooperation on some specific projects.

Among those present on the occasion were Lu Xuejian, Chinese vice-minister of foreign economic relations and trade, and Mohamed Kabbaj, Moroccan minister of equipment.

After the talks, Chinese State Councilor Gu Mu, accompanied by Minister Kabbaj, inspected the Rabat Sports Complex jointly built by China and Morocco. Situated on the shore of the Atlantic in southwest suburbs of Rabat, the Rabat Sports Complex has a stadium and a gymnasium with the capacity of holding 60,000 and 8,000 spectators respectively. Construction of the project began in May, 1981 and will be completed next June.

At the site of the stadium, Gu Mu extended greetings to the Moroccan workers and urged the Chinese engineers and technicians to finish the project on time and with good quality.

[Text] Rabat, December 29 (XINHUA) -- Moroccan Prime Minister Maati Bouabid expressed his hope to further develop the Sino-Moroccan friendly relations and cooperation at a banquet held here today in honor of the visiting Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang.

On the turbulent international situation at present, the prime minister said that tension is not only confined to the political sphere of international relations, but has also stretched to the economic field.

The gap between the rich North and the poor South keeps widening and there exists a sharp imbalance between them both in the means and the opportunities they possess, he said.

"Only by strengthening its unity and making unified efforts could the Third World change this situation and successfully safeguard its own interests," the prime minister said.

He said that Morocco has taken action to realize Arab unity at a particularly critical time when the Arab people and the Palestinian people in Lebanon are confronted with continuous Zionist aggression.

Morocco will continue to spare no effort to ensure the victory of the just Arab cause, to recover the occupied Arab territories and to enable the Palestinian people to freely exercise their right to self-determination and to the establishment of an independent state under the leadership of the PLO.

Morocco will continue its efforts so that the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Lebanon and the right of its citizens to live in peace and security are respected, he said.

As chairman of the 12th Arab Summit Conference, King Hassan II of Morocco will always support the just struggles of the Arab world, he stressed.

Stressing the importance of African unity, the prime minister pointed out that Morocco has dedicated itself to the maintenance and enhancement of the Organization of African Unity since its establishment and hoped that the already gain [as received] of Africa should be defended.

He said, exchanges between the two countries have been incessantly strengthened in the interests of the two peoples. He expressed the hope that the level of economic cooperation between the two countries will be raised to that of political relations. The evolution of their technological cooperation has also been satisfactory, he added.

"We are satisfied with the results of our cooperation in the domains of agriculture, health, youth and sports. However, we wish that such relations will be extended to other domains such as energy, maritime fishing, hydraulic, handicraft and cultural affairs as well as to other sectors in which our two countries can carry out fruitful cooperation," he said.

In conclusion, the Moroccan prime minister expressed the conviction that Premier Zhao's visit will deepen mutual understanding, strengthen the friendly relations and enlarge the sphere of cooperation between the two countries.

Zhao Speech at Banquet

OW300230 Beijing XINHUA in English 0215 GMT 30 Dec 82

[Text] Rabat, December 29 (XINHUA) -- All countries are duty bound to promote a reasonable settlement of the Middle East problem and should not make obstacles and carry out sabotage, said Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang here today at a banquet given in his honor by Moroccan Prime Minister Maati Bouabid.

Premier Zhao expressed appreciations of and support for Morocco's effort in the Middle East question. He said, "the peace and stability of the Middle East are not only closely bound up with the interests of the people of the Middle East countries, but also affect world peace and security.... The struggle of the Arab and Palestinian people are just and have the sympathy and support of the peace-loving countries and fair-minded world opinion. We are convinced that no matter how difficult and tortuous the struggle may be, the Arab and Palestinian people are sure to win final victory by remaining closely united and persisting in struggle."

He said that the eight-point proposal for the settlement of the Middle East issue, which was adopted at the 12th Arab Summit Conference presided over by His Majesty King Hassan II, is reasonable and realistic, and provides a good basis for a comprehensive and just settlement of the problem.

On Sino-Moroccan relations, Zhao said: "The visit of your excellency to China in February this year made a new contribution to the friendship between the two peoples.

"During my current visit to your country, his Majesty King Hassan II had a cordial meeting with me and your excellency and I held friendly and fruitful talks. Our two sides share identical or similar views on many important international issue.

"Both China and Morocco are developing countries of the Third World. Today, our two peoples long for a peaceful and stable international situation so as to build our countries. The development of the friendly relations and cooperation on the basis of equality and mutual benefit is in accord with the common interests of our two peoples. We have come to your country with a mind to promote understanding and friendship, strengthen unity and cooperation, and learn from the Moroccan people. We sincerely hope that through the visit and our cordial talks, the friendly relations and cooperation between China and Morocco will further develop."

Interviewed on World Affairs

OW301144 Beijing in Mandarin to Southeast Asia 0900 GMT 30 Dec 82

[Text] In an interview with a news reporter from the Moroccan television station in Rabat in the afternoon of 29 December, Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang said the expected objective of his visit to Morocco has been fulfilled. The visit has deepened the understanding and friendship between the two countries, strengthened unity and cooperation, and further promoted friendly and cooperative relations that already existed between the two nations.

In answering questions by the news reporter on the Sino-Soviet relations, he said: China's foreign policy is, first, to oppose hegemonism and safeguard world peace and, second, to develop relations with other countries on the basis of the five principles of peaceful coexistence. It is also on the basis of this principle that China handles its relations with the Soviet Union.

He said: China is willing to improve relations with the Soviet Union, and its desire [yuan wang] is sincere [zeng cheng di]. It also hopes that the desire of the Soviet side is sincere. He hoped to see the actual deeds [shi ji di xing dong] of the new Soviet leadership in removing the obstacles [zhang ai] to Sino-Soviet relations.

On the nonaligned summit conference to be soon held in New Delhi, Premier Zhao hoped that this summit conference will make fresh contributions to safeguarding the principle of nonalignment, strengthening unity among Third World countries and preserving world peace.

Premier Zhao said: I would like to see Samdech Sihanouk attend this conference in the capacity of chairman of Democratic Kampuchea or in the capacity of a founder of the Nonaligned Movement. He said: To exclude Samdech Sihanouk from the New Delhi conference is beyond one's comprehension.

Premier Zhao also answered questions put forward by the news reporter on the establishment of a new international economic order, on Middle East issues and on African solidarity.

Comments on PRC-Moroccan Ties

OW300728 Beijing XINHUA in English 0718 GMT 30 Dec 82

[Text] Rabat, December 29 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang said here today that his visit to Morocco will further promote the friendly relations and cooperation between China and Morocco.

In an interview with Moroccan radio-television tonight, Premier Zhao said that the Moroccan prime minister paid a successful visit to China last February and he was now visiting Morocco at the end of the year.

He said that during his visit he had a cordial meeting with King Hassan II and had friendly, sincere and fruitful talks with the prime minister.

The objective of his visit has been fulfilled: The visit has deepened the understanding and friendship between the two countries, strengthened unity and cooperation, and offered an opportunity to learn from the Moroccan people. He expressed the conviction that his visit will further promote the relations between the two countries, which have been developing after the Moroccan prime minister's visit to China last February.

About his impression on his current visit to the country, Premier Zhao praised King Hassan's contributions to the development of Sino-Moroccan relations. "I have the honor to have met King Hassan during the current visit and we had very useful discussions on international issues and other problems of mutual concern. This left a deep impression on me," he said. "Morocco is a country with a long history and ancient culture and it has made great achievements in construction, from which I have learned a lot," he added.

Views Mideast, Africa Issues

OW300828 Beijing XINHUA in English 0817 GMT 30 Dec 82

[Text] Rabat, December 29 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang reaffirmed that China unequivocally appreciates and supports the Fes proposal adopted at the recent Arab summit meeting for the settlement of the Middle East issue.

In an interview with Moroccan radio-television tonight, Premier Zhao said that the Fes confernce "has brought about Arab unity. The Fes proposal is rational and realistic, and provides a solid foundation for a comprehensive and just solution to the Middle East issue."

He stated that "China's consistent position is: To respect the choice made by the Arab countries and the Palestinian people in seeking a comprehensive and just resolution to the Middle East issue. We believe that it is the duty of all countries to promote implementation of the proposal. There is no justification whatsoever to impede or undermine it."

"Resolution of the Middle East problem basically depends on the unity of the Arab states and the Palestinian people," he added.

On the situation in Africa, Premier Zhao said an earth-shaking change has taken place in the African continent since the 1950s, with most of the African nations having achieved political independence. Now, he added, the task facing the African countries is to develop their national economies, raise their living standard and consolidate their political independence with economic independence. Africa is full of vitality and has a bright future.

He noted that "there exist certain disputes and controversies among the African countries, many of which were left over by colonialism in the past. China has always held that such problems should be solved rationally through patient and peaceful consultations without outside interference, by which I mean, interference by big powers." He said China respects the achievement of solidarity and unity by the people of various countries according to their own wishes.

Comments on Nonalignment, USSR

OW300855 Beijing XINHUA in English 0838 GMT 30 Dec 82

[Text] Rabat, December 29 (XINHUA) -- Zhao Ziyang, Chinese premier who is now on an official state visit to Morocco, reiterated Chinese Government's stand on the Non-Aligned Movement and the Sino-Soviet relations in an interview with Moroccan radio-television tonight.

On the 7th Non-Aligned Summit Conference to be held next March in New Delhi, Premier Zhao said, "I wish to see Samdech Norodom Sihanouk attending the grand meeting in the capacity of chairman of Democratic Kampuchea, a founding member of the Non-Aligned Movement, or in the capacity of a founder of the Non-Aligned Movement."

He said, "Samdech Sihanouk is the only living founder of the Non-Aligned Movement. It is unjustifiable to exclude him from the movement."

He said, "China has always highly appraised the contributions of the Non-Aligned Movement to safeguarding the interests of the Third World countries and maintaining world peace. China has always supported the Non-Aligned Movement's independent and non-bloc principle and its position of anti-imperialism, anti-colonialism, anti-racism and opposition to all forms of foreign rule and hegemonism."

"I hope," he said, "new contributions will be made by the non-aligned summit conference to be held in New Delhi next March to safeguarding the principles of non-alignment, strengthening solidarity and cooperation among the Third World countries and preserving world peace and security."

On Sino-Soviet relations, Premier Zhao reiterated the principled stand of the Chinese Government. He said he hopes "the new Soviet leadership would take practical actions in removing the obstacles to Sino-Soviet relations."

He said, "China is sincere in its desire to improve relations with the Soviet Union and she hopes that the Soviet attitude is likewise sincere."

Premier Zhao went on to expound the basic points of China's foreign policy: "First, to oppose hegemonism and safeguard world peace, and second, to develop state relations with other countries on the basis of the five principles of peaceful coexistence. We shall handle our relations with the Soviet Union in conformity with these two principles."

Views New World Economic Order

OW300910 Beijing XINHUA in English 0845 GMT 30 Dec 82

[Text] Rabat, December 29 (XINHUA) -- Visiting Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang said today that the Third World should strive for a new equitable and rational international economic order and pledged Chinese efforts to the "South-South cooperation."

In an interview with Moroccan radio-television tonight, Premier Zhao said China regards promoting "South-South cooperation" as an important task of hers.

"Development of South-South cooperation not only is of strategic importance but also has broad prospects," he said.

"To strive for transforming the old international economic relations and to establish an equitable and rational new international economic order is a very important task facing the Third World countries today," he said.

"The aggravation of the current world economic crisis has added to the importance and urgency of the problem," he said.

To establish a new international economic order, he said, "First, the developing countries must unite and strive for extensive international support so as to press the developed countries to begin global negotiations within the framework of the United Nations as soon as possible. The developed countries should adopt a positive attitude in supporting the developing countries to develop their national economy. This is not only in interests of the developing countries but is even more in those of the developed countries. We are against the shifting of the economic crisis by the developed countries onto the developing countries. Secondly, the developing countries should strengthen cooperation among themselves so as to enhance their collective capability for self-reliance.

Referring to China's strategic goals by the end of this century, Premier Zhao said, "China's construction will mainly rely on the efforts of the Chinese people themselves. We shall take a road suited to China's conditions. At the same time, we shall pursue an open-door policy and welcome cooperation in economy and technology with the countries of the world, attaching special importance to cooperation with African and other Third World countries."

Final Moroccan-PRC Meeting Held

LD292150 Rabat Domestic Service in Arabic 2000 GMT 29 Dec 82

[Text] The final meeting of the expanded Moroccan-Chinese Committee took place in Rabat this evening under the chairmanship of Moroccan Prime Minister Maati Bouabid and Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang. The meeting was also attended on the Moroccan side by Minister of State in Charge of Foreign Affairs M'hamed Boucetta, Minister of State in Charge of Cooperation Mahjoubi Aherdan, Minister of Commerce, Industry and Tourism Azzedine Guessous, Minister of Equipment Mohamed Kabbaj, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs Abdelhaz Tazi, and Secretary of State for Youth and Sports Abdellatif Semlali.

Discussions during the meeting covered the results of the Chinese premier's visit to Morocco and the talks held on the level of the two committees -- the expanded committee and the committee of experts.

The two sides expressed satisfaction at the results of the talks in the political, economic and social fields. It was pointed out that the audience that King Hassan II gave to the Chinese Premier revealed a proximity of views on the international situation, the Middle East question, and the crises in the African and Asian continents.

Moroccan Prime Minister Maati Bouabid affirmed to the Chinese premier that the visit he paid to Morocco was a new step along the road of bolstering the existing friendship and cooperation between the two countries. The visit by the Chinese delegation provided an opportunity to review the possibilities of cooperation between the two countries and to express the sincerity of mutual feelings between the Moroccan and the Chinese peoples.

It was noted during the meeting that the talks between the Moroccan and Chinese delegations made it possible to review all aspects of Moroccan-Chinese cooperation and their future prospects. The review centered on various projects to be implemented for the good of both countries in the fields of agriculture, equipment, energy, transport and health, as well as traditional industries, youth and sports, and cadres. The method of implementating these projects will be determined during the meeting of the mixed Moroccan-Chinese Committee to be held in Rabat as well as during the visit which a Moroccan economic delegation will pay to China.

Meanwhile, the Chinese premier expressed his gratitude to King Hassan and the Moroccan Government and people for the great welcome shown to him and members of his delegation.

He also expressed gratitude for the audience he was accorded by King Hassan II. It was evident from his talks with the king that the views of both countries are identical on international and bilateral questions.

The Chinese premier expressed his admiration for the development and progress he has witnessed in Morocco. He also spoke of the sports project China is helping to implement in Rabat. He said that the project embodies the development of Moroccan-Chinese cooperation and noted that work on the project is proceeding as well as possible so as to host the Mediterranean Games.

At the end of the meeting agreement was reached on the minutes of the expanded Moroccan-Chinese Committee.

Chinese Minister of Foreign Affairs Wu Xueqian, who is visiting Morocco as a member of the Chinese official delegation, said today that the talks between Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang and the Moroccan officials were fruitful and were held in an atmosphere characterized by sincerity and cordiality. Addressing journalists, Wu Xueqian said that the views of both sides are identical on many international issues. He expressed satisfaction at the common desire of both sides to develop bilateral relations for the benefit of a better future.

With regard to the invitation addressed to King Hassan II to pay an official visit to China in the near future, Wu Xueqian announced that the king accepted the invitation and that the visit will take place at a convenient time.

He described the talks held the day before yesterday between the Moroccan and Chinese premiers as important. He said that the two sides had discussed international issues of common interest and ways to bolster bilateral cooperation -- the subject discussed by the Moroccan-Chinese ministerial committee.

On the Middle East problem, The Chinese foreign minister reiterrated his country's support for the Fes summit resolutions, which constitutes a sound basis for a just and lasting settlement of the problem. In this context he said that the visit to Beijing by the Arab Seven-Member Committee under the chairmanship of King Husayn was successful and that his country is satisfied with the explanations made by the Jordanian monarch concerning the eight points of the Arab peace plan. He said China is sure to support this plan at the UN Security Council.

He also expressed his country's appreciation for the efforts exerted by King Hassan II to establish Arab unity and support the Palestine question.

On the OAU crisis, he said that his country believes that Africa must be for the Africans, who should settle its problems by themselves without any foreign interference. He said his country follows with the utmost concern the problems facing the OAU, which made an important contribution toward speeding up the liquidation of colonialism and intensifying the struggle against imperialism and racism.

The Chinese foreign minister blamed the racist regime of South Africa for the continuation of the Namibian problem by refusing to implement the UN resolutions. He reiterated his country's support for the Namibian people who are struggling for independence under the leadership of SWAPO.

The Chinese foreign minister also spoke about the Nonaligned Movement and Sino-Soviet rapprochement.

In this respect he pointed out that the Soviet leaders have expressed a desire for the normalization of relations with China and that efforts are continuing by both sides to achieve this through the elimination of obstacles standing in the way. He affirmed, however, that the normalization of relations with the USSR depends on respect for some of the principles which guide Chinese policy and which lie in particular in the rejection of all forms of hegemony. Wu Xueqian criticized the Soviet leaders for not taking any tangible steps to demonstrate their readiness to withdraw their forces from Afghanistan.

Reporter Reviews Visit

OW300652 Beijing in English to North America 0000 GMT 30 Dec 82

[Excerpts] Premier Zhao Ziyang leaves Rabat on Thursday for Conakry, capital of Guinea, to continue his African tour. Our correspondent (Mali Liu) filed back a commentary from Rabat on Premier Zhao's 10-day visit to the 3 North African countries, Egypt, Algeria and Morocco.

The commentary says that the premier's visit has promoted understanding between Chinese leaders and the leaders of these countries and has made significant contributions to strengthening the relations of friendly cooperation between China and the 3 North African countries.

Later, Premier Zhao answered questions raised by Moroccan TV reporters. On Sino-Soviet relations, the premier said China is sincere in its desire to improve relations with the Soviet Union and hoped the Soviet side will be sincere, too. The premier hoped that the new Soviet leader will take concrete actions to eliminate the obstacles in Sino-Soviet relations. He said China's foreign policy is, first, to oppose hegemonism and to safeguard world peace and, second, to develop relations with other countries on the basis of the five principles of peaceful coexistence. He said China will handle its relations with the Soviet Union on the basis of these principles.

On the forthcoming nonaligned summit to be held in New Delhi, he said he hoped the meeting will contribute to upholding the purpose of the Nonaligned Movement and to strengthening Third World unity, as well as to safeguard world peace. He said he hoped Prince Norodom Sihanouk, president of the Democratic Kampuchean Coalition Government, will be able to attend the summit. The premier said it would be incomprehensible to bar the prince from the summit, since he is the only founder of the Nonaligned Movement who is still alive.

The premier also answered questions on the setting up of new international economic order, on the Middle East and on China's policy of opening to the outside world.

Zhao Leaves Morocco for Guinea

OW301114 Beijing XINHUA in English 1101 GMT 30 Dec 82

[Text] Rabat, December 30 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang left here for Conakry, Guinea, this morning after rounding up his three-day official goodwill visit to Morocco.

During his stay, Premier Zhao was received by King Hassan II and held two rounds of talks with Moroccan Prime Minister Maati Bouabid. They discussed the current international situation and bilateral relations. Both sides shared identical or similar views on many international issues, including the Middle East, Afghanistan and Kampuchea.

Meanwhile, Chinese State Councillor Gu Mu held talks yesterday with Moroccan Minister of State for Cooperation Mahjoubi Aherdan on further developing bilateral economic and trade relations.

Moroccan Press Praises Visit

OW291140 Beijing XINHUA in English 1105 GMT 29 Dec 82

[Text] Rabat, December 28 (XINHUA) -- The Moroccan press has published articles acclaiming Premier Zhao Ziyang's visit to the country.

Reviewing past Morocco-China exchanges and their present economic relations, an editorial of LE MATIN DU SAHARA today said, "Both countries hope to draw the necessary strength from history to help bring about a new era in the friendly Morocco-China relations and expand the fruitful and mutually beneficial cooperation between the two countries. This is certainly in the interests not only of both countries but also of international detente, understanding and cooperation."

The editorial said, "This wish is strengthened by the convergence of views on many international problems of common interest. The latest instance is the Middle East problem and the Fes proposal. When the Seven-Member Committee of the Arab League led by King Husayn of Jordan visited Beijing, People's China praised the Fes proposal as a wise and realistic one positive toward peace."

In a commentary yesterday, the Maghreb Arabe Presse said Premier Zhao's visit to Morocco is a new milestone in the friendly relations that existed between the two peoples for many centuries. Apart from the traditional friendship that links the two peoples, the commentary said, there exist great possibilities and potentials for developing this cooperation between the two countries.

"Morocco is a developing country, and China considers itself the same as Morocco and pursues a Third World policy. To this end, both countries have made a positive contribution to the common cause of the Third World," the commentary stressed. It noted, "The role they play in this regard finds expression particularly in their militant and sustained action for the establishment of a new international economic order."

LE MATIN DU SAHARA yesterday carried a headline in large Chinese characters on the front page, which reads: "Welcome, Premier Zhao Ziyang." Premier Zhao thanked the paper for its welcome when it was shown to him at the airport by Moroccan Prime Minister Maati Bouabid.

Moroccan newspapers attached great importance to the Chinese premier's visit and gave it wide coverage the scale of which was rarely seen.

XINHUA Commentary

OW301246 Beijing XINHUA in English 1220 GMT 30 Dec 82

["Commentary: Premier Zhao Comes to Vigorous Africa -- by XINHUA orrespondent Wang Wei" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Rabat, December 29 (XINHUA) -- Premier Zhao Ziyang concluded his official and friendship visit to three North African countries -- Egypt, Algeria and Morocco -- today and begins his visit to a number of countries south of the Sahara tomorrow.

Premier Zhao's trip to North Africa is believed to have been very fruitful. His talks with leaders of the three countries not only demonstrated the trust of the African people in China and their sincere friendship for it, but also showed the fact that China has attached great importance to its solidarity and cooperation with other Third World countries.

This trust is well founded and deeply rooted. In the past 19 years since Premier Zhou Enlai paid a visit to Africa, great changes have taken place in the African continent. Today Africa is a vigorous continent and has an immense bright future. From Premier Zhao's visit to the three countries, one can see that the Arab and African peoples have faith in China's foreign policy for independence and against hegemonism and colonialism, and believe that China, as a member of the Third World, is their faithful and reliable friend, whose friendly cooperation with them is consistent and will remain unchanged, and that China supports the just struggle waged by the Arab and African peoples.

At a banquet in honor of Premier Zhao Ziyang, Egyptian President Husni Mubarak said that China has "always remained true to their pledges, dedicated and genuinely committed to principles and values, while remaining bound to the very essence of solidarity among all people of the Third World, who are striving for a better world."

Such an assessment is not accidental. China has had long-standing friendly relations and deep militant friendship with the three North African nations. The Egyptian people will never forget that during the Suez War, China supported Egypt's fight to recover its sovereignty over the Suez Canal and that the Chinese people had always stood on the side of the Arab and African peoples in the Mid-East wars.

Since the first day of "Aures uprising" by the Algerian people in 1954, China has become their comrade-in-arms. The Chinese people supported the Moroccan people's struggle against colonial occupation and for the recovery of Ifni and of the jurisdiction over Tangier. All this has left an unforgetful impression in the minds of the African people.

Likewise the Chinese people will never forget the support given by the people of the three North African nations for the restoration of China's legitimate right in the United Nations and the great cause of the reunification of China.

This mutual trust is established on the basis of sharing a common fate. It is precisely because of this trust that the leaders of China and the three North African nations have had many identical or similar views on the current major international issues.

During his visit, Premier Zhao expounded China's position on the Middle East issues, the Palestine question in particular. The three countries highly appreciated China's position.

On December 26, Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) leader Yassir 'Arafat made a special trip to Algiers from Tunis to meet the Chinese premier. During the meeting, Premier Zhao reaffirmed the Chinese people's firm support to the Palestinian people's struggle. He said that the road is tortuous but the future is bright. He had full confidence in the Palestinian people's final victory.

The Chinese premier also toured Luxor and Aswan in Egypt and the ancient city of Marrakech in Morocco. It is found that the three North African countries and China have very similar ancient traditions. The Pyramids in Cairo and the Great Wall in China are symbolic of the ancient culture in the continents of Asia and Africa. The ancient civilization along the Nile and the Yellow River indicates that both the Egyptian and Chinese peoples have made immortal contributions to the world civilization.

Marco Polo is well-known to the Europeans. But Ibn Battuta, a great Moroccan traveler of Marco Polo's times, is equally well-known to the Arab people. He is believed to be one of the earliest Arab African envoys to China. The contacts between China and North Africa can be traced back to the seventh century.

Today, the African countries have entered the stage of developing the national economy to consolidate their political independence. Therefore, Premier Zhao's current visit has provided an opportunity for exploring new channels and areas of economic cooperation between China and African countries. After the exchange of information and briefings on achievements and experience between the Chinese premier and the leaders of the three countries, each side has learned from the strong points of the other side and learned how to offset each side's own weaknesses. The three African countries have showed keen interest in China's experience in economic construction.

The Algerian president told Premier Zhao that Algeria had taken a roundabout course in developing her national economy and must in future shift from the emphasis on the petrol dollar to reliance on agriculture.

These three countries are confronted with certain economic difficulties because of their own economic structures and the impact of the economic crisis in the West. They are summing up experience and readjusting their economy. At the same time, they are struggling for a new international economic order and working to promote North-South dialogue and strengthen South-South cooperation. They wish to cooperate with China in the development of agriculture, medium-size and small industries, energy, communications and transportation, and public utilities so as to attain experience for South-South cooperation. Premier Zhao highly appraised Algeria's contribution to the efforts to bring about a new international economic order and to promoting South-South cooperation.

Premier Zhao's remarks that one of the purposes of his African visit is to learn from the African people has aroused strong response in Morocco. A Moroccan newspaper said, "These remarks by a leader of a great power not only give expression to his modesty and virtue but also bring honor to the people he represents."

PRC, GUINEA SIGN PROTOCOL ON MEDICAL TEAMS

OW291012 Beijing XINHUA in English 0728 GMT 29 Dec 82

[Text] Conakry, December 28 (XINHUA) -- A protocol was signed here today for China to continue sending medical teams to Guinea.

The protocol was signed by Guinean Minister of Health Mamadou Bah Kaba and Chinese Ambassador to Guinea Kang Xiao on behalf of their respective governments.

Kaba said at the ceremony that the signing of the protocol on the eve of Premier Zhao Ziyang's visit to Guinea shows the furtherance of the profound and valuable friendship between the two countries. The medical team to be sent to Guinea will be the eighth sent to this country.

FURTHER COVERAGE OF 11TH CYL NATIONAL CONGRESS

Leaders Meet Delegates

OW282140 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1611 GMT 27 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, 27 Dec (XINHUA) -- Since the opening of the 11th National CYL Congress, many delegates have -- with high respect -- called on some old comrades. Many old comrades have managed to find time to hold cordial discussions with the young people at the delegates' quarters and have encouraged them to surpass the oldtimers.

On the afternoon of 27 December, the Sichuan Room of the Great Hall of the People was especially bustling with noise and excitement as Comrade Nie Rongzhen was very happily meeting with the Sichuan provincial delegates to the 11th National CYL Congress.

He said to the delegates: You are nice young people trained by our party and our successors. The hope of the motherland's four modernizations is pinned on you. I believe that your generation can accomplish this glorious mission.

He said: We people of the older generation have experienced the 25,000-li Long March, fought bloody battles and founded the New China. Now, you young people have begun the new Long March to undertake the four modernizations and we -- two generations -- are marching forward hand-in-hand and working in close cooperation on the road of the new Long March. As in the 25,000-li Long March, we will encounter various difficulties in the new Long March. However, no difficulty is insurmountable and we surely can reach our victorious destination in the new Long March as long as old and young people cooperate well.

He said: In order to undertake the four modernizations, you must have scientific and cultural knowledge. You should lead other young people in studying hard to grasp more scientific and technological knowledge, which is the strength and the capital for building the motherland.

Comrade Wang Zhen, who worked and fought in Xinjiang for many years, visited the Xinjiang delegates' quarters on the morning of 27 December. He happily said hello in the Uygur language to the delegates dressed in national costumes.

He said: Young people are the motherland's future. When we see vigorous young people, we old people are fully confident in the creation of a new situation in the socialist modernization.

Wang Zhen said: In the years when the Chinese nation was deeply distressed, many outstanding members of the Chinese Communist Party spread sparks of revolution in Xinjiang. After liberation, many party and state leaders inspected Xinjiang. The CYL members and youth in Xinjiang should keep our revolutionary traditions and the concern shown for the work in Xinjiang by the revolutionaries of the older generation firmly in mind. You should hand down the revolutionary traditions from generation to generation; study, study and restudy; consciously maintain the unity among nationalities; and be shock workers in undertaking the four modernizations.

On the afternoon of 27 December, Comrade Ulanhu visited the members of the Nei Monggol, Xizang, Ningxia and Xinjiang delegations successively.

Comrade Ulanhu said: The people of various nationalities throughout the country support the line, principles and policies laid down since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. The situation in the minority nationality regions is becoming better and better year by year. After you return home, you must do youth work well.

He said: Young people are the motherland's future. The task of building socialism and realizing communism is more arduous than the task of democratic revolution. With a very heavy responsibility on your shoulders, you young people must be worthy successors to the older generation and carry on our cause.

On the afternoon of 26 December, Comrade Chen Pixian visited the Shanghai and Hubei delegates successively.

He said: To achieve the strategic objective of creating a new situaton in socialist modernization proposed by the 12th CPC National Congress relies on young people. You should have a very high consciousness and do your utmost to accomplish this historical mission. You should go deep into the reality of life, conduct more investigations and studies and strive to gain more experience in China's revolution and construction. You should know how to summarize your own experiences, seriously study and work hard as vanguards in accomplishing various tasks put forward by the 12th CPC National Congress.

On 22 December, the delegates of Hunan Province called on Comrade Tan Zhenlin in a hospital where he is a patient.

Tan Zhenlin said to the delegates: Your congress is very well convened. I hope that you will not disappoint the expectations of the older generation and that you will study well, work hard and carry on our revolutionary cause.

On the morning of 27 December, the delegates of the offices directly under the central organs called on Comrade Li Weihan. Comrade Li Weihan urged the young people to study Marxist philosophy and use the Marxist stand, viewpoint and method as a guide; be models in consciously observing discipline and in implementing the party's policies and decisions; keep contacts with the masses of workers and peasants and constantly conduct investigations and studies among them; inherit and carry forward the party's tradition of hard struggle.

On 20 December, the delegates of Hunan Province called on Comrade Wang Shoudao. Comrade Wang Shoudao urged the youth to carry out the activities of learning from Lei Feng in a still better way and be individuals as useful to the people as Lei Feng.

In last few days, Comrade Hu Qili, member of the CPC Central Secretariat, alternate member of the Secretariat Comrade Hao Jianxiu and State Councillor Comrade Zhang Jingfu also met with or held discussions with the delegates. In a discussion with some CYL cadres among the delegates on the afternoon of 27 December, Comrade Hu Qili encouraged them to lead CYL members and youth on various fronts to study hard, work hard and promote the current national economic reform.

He said: If we had not set things to right, there would not have been the current political situation of stability and unity. Likewise, if we do not make a series of reforms, it will be impossible for us to achieve the four modernizations.

He urged the CYL cadres to take the lead in studying scientific and cultural knowledge and to be outstanding CYL workers.

On the morning of 26 December, Comrade Hao Jianxiu cordially met with Shangdong delegates and encouraged them to keep the earnest hope of the party Central Committee and the revolutionaries of the older generation firmly in mind and be qualified successors to the revolutionary cause.

On the morning of 24 Decmeber, Comrade Zhang Jingfu visited Anhui delegates. He hoped that the young people would carry forward the glorious traditions developed since the May 4 Movement, work with courage, study hard, do pioneering work, play the role of shock workers and add luster to the motherland's four modernizations.

Li Xiannian's Letter

OW281251 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1317 GMT 27 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, 27 Dec (XINHUA) -- The Hubei delegates to the 11th CYL National Congress wrote to Comrade Li Xiannian on 22 December and expressed their hope to see him during the period of the CYL Congress. On 25 December Comrade Li Xiannian, who was traveling out of town, wrote them and all other delegates joyfully extending his warm greetings to the CYL congress. The text of his letter follows:

The Hubei delegation and all delegates to the 11th CYL National Congress:

I have received the 22 December letter from the Hubei delegation. Thank you for your regards. I cannot come to see you because I am not in town, but I know that your congress is proceeding well. With great joy I would like to extend my warm greetings to you and to the congress.

The 11th CYL National Congress is a very important meeting. With their glorious revolutionary traditions, the Chinese youths, working under the CPC leadership, play the role of vanguards and shock workers in our revolution and construction. I believe that this congress will surely further mobilize the youths to join the people throughout the country in seriously implementing the guidelines of the 12th CPC National Congress and the 5th Session of the 5th NPC and in making still greater contributions to creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization.

Deng Liqun Addresses Meeting

OW291235 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1522 GMT 28 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, 28 Dec (XINHUA) -- Deng Liqun, member of the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee and head of the Propaganda Department of the CPC Central Committee, pointed out in his report which he made to all the delegates attending the 11th CYL National Congress this afternoon that a qualified CYL member should be a young communist. To shoulder their own task assigned them by history, the young people must arm themselves with communist thinking and guide all their actions and work with this thinking.

Deng Liqun said: The 1980's represent a decade of historical significance with the younger generation cooperating with the older and succeeding them. The growth and efforts of this younger generation will decide China's future and destiny. You will shoulder a heavy task but live a militant life filled with happiness. We shall cheer you onward.

Deng Liqun said: Chinese Communists are the country's most loyal patriots, as history has confirmed. Going through all types of explorations and all kinds of difficulties, those patriots who are unswervingly determined to save the nation will definitely become the communists' close friends and firmly march onward, and finally become communists themselves. Therefore, China's communists, including Communist Party members and CYL members, must rally all patriots to go forward together. This is the only correct guideline which helped our revolution in the past to score victories. This is also the only correct guideline to make our future socialist construction a success and guide all our undertakings to forge ahead.

Deng Liqun said: In China there are now more and more young communists. Perhaps we can say there are more and more young people who believe in communism among the broad masses of young people in the country. However, we still cannot say that they are a majority. In spite of all this, the majority of young people are patriotic, and they can be good friends of the communists. We must conduct education on patriotism, whip up the enthusiasm of the young people for patriotism, help and guide them to link their own destiny and future with those of the state and integrate the destiny and future of the state with those of the party.

Deng Liqun pointed out: Patriotism has different contents in different historical periods. Our motherland is now going through a stage in which the nation is undergoing socialist construction after going through socialist revolution and completing socialist transformation of the means of production. If we talk about patriotism at the present stage, we are unable to deviate from communism. Communist society is divided into the primary stage and the advanced stage. We have now entered the primary stage of communism. If we liken communism to a mansion, we are no longer outside the gate of the mansion; we are already inside the gate. Therefore, to carry out communist ideological education, it is necessary to make everyone understand that our socialist society has already entered the primary stage of communism. During this stage, a large number of communist factors are being created and developed every day, and in various fields of endeavor there have continuously emerged many heroes and typical characters who radiate with the glory of communist thinking. We must correctly handle the relationship between the communist attitude toward labor and the principle of distribution according to work, and promote communist ethics in the socialist society. In implementing the policy of opening to the world and enlivening the domestic economy, we must maintain the purity of communism.

Deng Liqun said: The transition from patriotism to communism may be regarded as a law of development in modern Chinese history. It is a path taken by people for a few previous generations. It will also be the path to be followed by the young people of the existing generation. In the past few years, the broad masses of CYL members and young people have demonstrated warm enthusiasm in the study of science and general knowledge, and have become even more confident in Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought. They have heightened their communist moral standards and become even more enthusiastic in working hard for the four modernization program. All this has indicated that the CYL organizations at all levels have carried out their work effectively, and our CYL members and young people are able to develop their ability to the full and have boundless prospects.

He asked the young people to work hard to develop China's socialist modernization, and, through several decades of strenuous efforts, truly succeed in building a type of socialism with Chinese characteristics and to contribute to the development of the international communist movement.

Deng Liqun said: The future belongs to the young people who create the future. Your new life which you have created by working hard yourselves will definitely be better than that of today. We believe that your lofty ideals can certainly be realized.

Deng Liqun's report won warm applause from among the delegates.

Chen Haosu, secretary of the CYL Central Committee, presided over the plenary session of the session of the 11th CYL National Congress this afternoon.

Yu Qiuli 25 Dec Report

OW300440 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0742 GMT 29 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, 29 Dec (XINHUA) -- Dedicate Youth and Strength to the Modernization of National Defense -- a report delivered at the 11th CYL National Congress on 25 December 1982 (excerpts)

[By] Yu Qiuli

The 11th CYL National Congress is a very important meeting following the convocation of the 12th CPC National Congress. It is a major event in the political life of the young people and people in general in the country.

Convened at the crucial historical time of the succession of the young to the old party and government cadres and their cooperation, the CYL congress will definitely promote the rapid growth of hundreds of thousands of young cadres who have both ability and political integrity and the smooth transfer of the victorious red banner from the hands of the older generation to those of the younger generations. On behalf of the Military Commission of the CPC Central Committee and all PLA commanders and fighters, I extend warm congratulations on the congress and sincere and best regards to all representatives from all localities and fronts and PLA units from various parts of the country and to young people of all nationalities throughout the country who are studying and working hard for socialist modernization.

Young people are shock troops in building socialism in China and also guardians of the security of the motherland. The power of the People's Liberation Army and consolidation of China's national defense hinges on young people. The broad masses of young people ardently love the socialist motherland and pay keen attention to the modernization of national defense. With great enthusiasm, they want to dedicate their youth, wisdom and strength to the motherland for they believe that the modernization of national defense not only concerns China's security, dignity and prestige but also represents an important factor for reinvigorating the Chinese nation.

As you know, due to the corrupt and incompetent reactionary ruling class in modern Chinese history, our country was defenseless and the Chinese people were bullied and oppressed by foreign aggressors over a long period of time and endured all sorts of hardships. It was only after the founding of the Communist Party of China and the new people's army under the leadership of the party that the Chinese people could take the destiny of the country into their own hands. After protracted armed struggles, our motherland obtained independence, the nation was liberated and the Chinese people finally rose to their feet! The historical experience over more than a half century has proved a truth: "Without a people's army, the people have nothing." By the same token, under the socialist condition, without a powerful people's army and modern national defense, it is impossible to safeguard the country's independence and the smooth achievement of socialist modernization.

It should be noted that the 1980's is still a decade of turbulences and crises because of aggression, expansion and fierce contention by imperialism and hegemonism in various parts of the world. Opposing hegemonism and safeguarding world peace is the most important task facing the people of countries throughout the world. Our socialist modernization is being carried out at a time when the world is still in turmoil and our country's security seriously threatened. We will need a peaceful world environment for a long time in order to build up our country. Only when we are fully prepared against a war of aggression can we help maintain peace in the present world. We must strengthen national defense on the basis of vigorous economic development and strive to build the People's Liberation Army into a modern and regular revolutionary army and further increase the army's self-defense ability under conditions of a modern war. A powerful People's Liberation Army will be a reliable guarantee for the security of the motherland and the fulfillment of the gigantic goal of socialist modernization. We must vigorously carry forward the spirit of patriotism and revolutionary heroism and heighten the concept of national defense so that the people of all nationalities and broad masses of young people in the country will understand that the safety and danger of the country is closely linked with the interests of every Chinese citizen and thus will be prepared for danger in times of peace and pay keen attention to and support the modernization of national defense.

Since the convening of the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, especially since Comrade Deng Xiaoping took charge of its Military Commission, we have scored great progress in building a revolutionary, modern and regular army.

The commanders and fighters of the whole army have markedly raised their political consciousness, understanding of policy and military training skills. We have also achieved breakthroughs in improving weapons and equipment and conducting scientific research and experiments and laid sound foundations for the construction of military engineering projects and mobilization of militiamen. As in the whole party and country, the situation in army building is one of the best since the founding of the country.

In his report at the 12th CPC National Congress, Comrade Hu Yoabang called for turning our army into not only a great wall of steel guarding our country but also an important force building socialist material and spiritual civilization. Guided by the spirit of the 12th CPC National Congress and under the leadership of the party Central Committee and its Military Commission, the army is advancing with big strides to create a new situation in army building.

Our national defense still lags behind modern science and technology and cannot meet the requirements of a modern war. We must rouse ourselves to narrow the gap. To build a strong modern and regular revolutionary army is the core of the modernization of national defense. The modernization of the army as a whole requires three main things: first, people with a high degree of political consciousness, advanced military knowledge, a good education and command of modern weapons, equipment and fighting tactics; second, first-rate modern weapons and equipment; and third, a rational and scientific military system and structure base on good use and strict training of men and arms. To serve this end, efforts must be made from now until some time in the future to solve the following major questions:

First, the study of the guidelines of the 12th CPC National Congress must be deepened. It is necessary to further eliminate the influence of "leftist" erroneous ideas and, at the same time, heighten vigilance against and resist the tendency toward bourgeois liberalism in order to enable the commanders and fighters of the whole army to maintain ideological and political unity with the party Central Committee, further emancipate their minds, dare to bring forth new ideas and bring into full play their enthusiasm and creativity. This is the ideological and political foundation for creating a new situation in army work and building a modern and regular army.

Second, it is necessary to streamline and reorganize the army and build a crack army in accordance with the policy adopted by the party Central Committee concerning the restructuring of organs and the arrangements mapped out by the Military Commission. This is an important strategic measure for implementing the guidelines of the 12th CPC National Congress, building a modern and regular revolutionary army, and raising the army's combat capability. After the streamlining and reorganization and striving hard for some time, we will be able to build our army into a crack army with a simple but effective organization, flexible command, first-rate equipment, good training, quick mobilization, high efficiency and strong combat capability. It will become a sharp sword for defending the motherland.

Third, it is necessary to pay keen attention to making the army cadres more revolutionary, younger in average age, better educated and more professionally competent and to raising the level of science and culture in the army. The average age of cadres is a common problem facing the whole party, whole army and country. The problem is especially pressing in the army. As we live in an age witnessing progress in science and technology in our everyday life and as scientific and technological inventions are often first applied in the military field, it is necessary for the commanders to acquire a certain level of science and other modern knowledge in order to effectively command battles and lead fighting. We have adopted various measures to raise the educational level in the army. We will also recruit college graduates from various localities to join the army. We hope the CYL will mobilize many outstanding college graduates to join the ranks of the People's Liberation Army every year.

Fourth, develop and improve our armed forces' weaponry independently and self-reliantly. To build a modernized army, we must establish our footing in developing our own military science and technology and defense industry. We must have this lofty ambition. We have already laid a reasonable foundation for our fair-sized military science and technology and defense industry, built a relatively comprehensive system of defense research and industry, and trained a large number of researchers, technicians, administrators and skilled technical workers. Led by the guidelines of the 12th party congress, with the solicitude and support of the whole party and from all quarters of the country, and following the development of our national economy, our armed forces' weaponry will be further improved and a brand new situation will appear in the modernization of our national defense. We are fully confident in such prospects.

Modernization of national defense depends on modernization of our industry, agriculture, science and technology. For this reason, it is not the task of one or several departments, nor is it the task of the armed forces. It is the objective of struggle for the whole party and the whole nation. This objective can only be attained through the common efforts of the whole nation, under the unified leadership of the party Central Committee. The efforts exerted for socialist modernization by our workers, peasants and intellectuals, working in various posts of economic, scientific, technological and cultural construction, are direct or indirect contributions to the modernization of defense.

The broad masses of young people are shouldering a particularly heavy responsibility in the modernization of national defense. Our young people today are a generation which will step from this century into the next. The heavy burden of socialist modernization has thus historically fallen on young people of this generation. Young people today are full of vigor and vitality. They are also better educated, quite capable of receiving new knowledge and innovations, good at thinking and daring to create, and so they are a highly promising generation, having the potential to develop their abilities to the full. Young people are a vital new force in socialist construction. They are also a vital new force in realizing modernization of national defense and safeguarding the motherland. Young people are needed to inherit our army's glorious tradition of being brave and skillful in battle and to scale the heights of modern military science and technology. They are needed so that the armed forces can choose their cadres from among those young people who are outstanding, and so that our armed forces can be steadily replenished. Young people, who represent 80 to 90 percent of the people in the armed forces, are playing the role of being the shock force in accomplishing various missions. Therefore, it is completely true, in a certain sense, that modernization of national defense cannot be achieved without the young people's heroic struggle.

Now I would like to express my hopes:

First, I hope young people will vie with one another to join the army and strive to be outstanding conscripts.

Performing military service in the PLA is a sacred obligation for the broad masses of young people, prescribed in the constitution. It is also the glorious task of young people to defend their motherland. To modernize, our armed forces must select a large number of young people who have good political thinking, are educated and physically strong. This task requires the CYL's energetic assistance and support. All sorts of activities must be carried out so that the previous long-standing, fine social habit of cherishing the army and considering it glorious to join the army can be inherited and fostered.

Today, a small number of young people think that "it is disadvantageous to join the PLA." Young people with such thinking must be educated and clearly told that performing military service is young people's dutybound obligation. We must admit that, when a young person is serving in the military, his family's income and his education in a higher school may be somewhat affected.

But the spirit of sacrificing certain individual benefits to safeguard and develop the whole nation's fundamental interests is lofty and glorious. The party and the people not only give the political honor to enlisted young people which they deserve, but have also prescribed all sorts of policies, giving special care to disabled servicemen and to family members of revolutionary martyrs and servicemen. We must not only pay attention to our own economic benefits, but always think of our historical responsibilities as being the masters of our country, and of the interests of our country, people and all society. Some fighters have put it well: "Joining the army to fulfill our obligations enables us to safeguard the motherland's security and socialist modernization, and the happiness and peace of our parents and brothers at the same time. We should not only see that we are fulfilling our obligatory service in the interests of other people, we should also see that other people are fulfilling obligatory services in our interest."

After joining the armed forces, there is also the question of keeping the young people's minds on performing their military service. After joining the armed forces, young people still have all sorts of ties with their families and society. Whether our men can keep their minds on performing their military service is closely related to family and social influence and their work. On the one hand, the party and they CYL organizations and cadres must intensify education among the young fighters and be concerned with their growth; on the other, the local party and government organs and CYL organizations and the fighters' relatives must also assist the armed forces to do their work well among the young fighters. During her son's term of military service, four members of the family of Zhao Yanni, who is known as "the good mother of the people's own army," died one after another, and her livelihood was beset with difficulties. However, to let her son perform his military service with ease of mind, she kept the grief to herself, shouldered the family burden all by herself and kept encouraging her son to keep his mind on performing his service. She once said sensibly: "A son who is a soldier must do his best to be a good soldier, and one who is a mother must do her best to be a good mother." When her deeds were publicized, a widespread response was triggered in the armed forces and the broad masses of young fighters were greatly inspired and educated.

There are also some young people who worry that, after joining the army, they can "learn nothing, just waste time." This shows that they do not understand that the PLA is a big revolutionary melting pot and a big school where they can learn politics, military affairs, science, general knowledge, technical knowhow and all sorts of practical skills, and where they can build a high sense of organizational discipline.

Everybody knows that in the past the PLA has produced many people well versed in civil and military affairs. During the war years, many ordinary workers, peasants and educated youths, after a certain period of study in the army and after being tempered in war, became highly qualified personnel who not only understood revolutionary theory and how to fight a battle, but also became capable of doing various kinds of practical work. Ever since the compulsory military service system was put into effect in our country, a large number of young people have joined and retired from the armed forces each year. A considerable number of retired servicemen feel that, after serving in the armed forces for several years, they have been greatly benefited in many ways. A person's youth is the most improtant time for him to mould his world outlook and to build up his physique, knowledge and capabilities; and a few years of training in the service will be highly beneficial to his whole life.

Some young people say that military life is too hard and too intense. Military life certainly is hard and intense in certain respects, but it is specifically such hardships and challenges that can produce the qualified personnel. On the industrial, agricultural, cultural and educational, scientific and other fronts, only those who have a firm and strong will can succeed, and a man's will can be tempered by the hard and challenging military life.

If a man wants to lead an easy and comfortable life, he can never withstand winds and waves. The military is a highly centralized militant collective which has strict organizational discipline. Our young comrades should particularly treasure this hard-won opportunity to be tempered and mature in this militant collective.

During the past 2 years, certain military units, after fulfilling their military and political training and various assignments, have organized their cadres and fighters to study science, general knowledge and various types of professional skills in accordance with the principle that "the fighters are interested in learning them, the military units have the resources and the skills are useful after the cadres and fighters retire from the service," and have achieved very good results in training dual-purpose personnel who can fight with weapons and who can contribute to local construction after retiring from the military service. This is a new thing that has appeared in building our armed forces during the new period. Today the training of such dual-purpose personnel is widespread throughout the armed forces. It is hoped that the CYL organizations in all localities will energetically support this project.

Second, I hope for the further strengthening of army-government and army-people unity.

It is the glorious tradition of our party and army for the army to cherish the people and the people to support the army. In carrying out its various tasks, our army has received enormous support from local party and government offices, mass organizations and the broad masses of people. Party and government offices and the broad masses have also shown concern about and given support to such things as the transfer to civilian jobs and the retirement of large numbers of cadres and fighters, the settlement of disabled soldiers, the rendering of special care to families of revolutionary martyrs and servicemen, and the arrangements for the cadres' dependents and children to stay with their army units, to go to school and to find jobs. Among the broad masses of young people in various localities, there have been a great number of moving instances of warmly cherishing and supporting the PLA.

Strengthening the unity between the army and the people is of great importance to the consolidation of our national defense. The army should support the government and cherish the people, play an exemplary role in abiding by discipline and law and put itself under the supervision by the government and the people at all times. It is hoped that local comrades will criticize the army's shortcomings, if any. "When the army and the people are united as one, who in the world can beat them." We must wholeheartedly treasure the unity between the army and the people and strengthen this unity with various concrete actions. The unity among hundreds of millions of armymen and people is a real Great Wall, a Great Wall of steel that no force can break through.

Third, I hope for the strengthening of the building of militia and perfecting of the reserve system.

Strengthening the building of the militia and the reserve service's system is an important measure to prepare for a war against aggression. China has a traditional militia system. The militia is not only a component of the armed forces, but also a basic organizational form of reserve service in our country. The broad masses of young people are requested to actively join the militia organizations so as to greatly boost our reserve forces for coping with the needs of modern war. We hope that the CYL organizations in various localities will play an active role in strengthening the building of the militia and in perfecting the service's reserve system.

Fourth, I hope for great efforts to publicize people's war.

Any future war against aggression will be a people's war under modern conditions. On the basis of China's characteristics of a large population and a vast territory and in view of our fine traditions, when we are invaded by enemies from outside, we still have to wage a people's war no matter how well the weaponry has developed or how complicated modern warfare has become. This means that we must firmly trust and rely on the broad masses of the people and combine field armies and regional forces with militia, armed masses with unarmed masses, military struggle with struggles in the political, economic, cultural and other fields under the CPC leadership to carry out a war of the whole people. We must strengthen our modernization of national defense and continuously improve our weapons and equipment, but the people are invariably the main factor in a war, and the appearance of any new weapons whatsoever can in no way change the fundamental law of people's war. Comrade Mao Zedong's great thinking on the people's war is still a magic weapon [fabao] for us to conquer the enemy and win victory. Of course, in any future war against aggression, the enemy, weapons, equipment and form of warfare will change; and because of these changes, we must study the new features and new problems of people's war, make continued efforts to develop and enrich the thinking of people's war and give wide and in-depth publicity to this thinking among the youths and other people throughout the country.

In national defense as well as economic construction, the broad masses of youth and other people are required to carry forward the high degree of self-sacrificing spirit. In the past, had it not been for the hard struggle and heroic sacrifice made by generation after generation of idealistic youths and other people, our revolution would not have triumphed, and it would have been impossible for our motherland and people to be reborn. In the numerous revolutionary wars of the past, many of the martyrs who sacrificed their lives were young Communist Party members and CYL members. They either charged forward and advanced wave upon wave under heavy fire on the battlefields or remained staunch, faithful and unyielding and died a hero's death on the enemy's execution ground. Among them, Liu Hulan, Dong Cunrui and Huang Jiguang were stirking representatives; they represented the glory and pride of the Chinese youths. It was precisely these young people who used their blood to water our flower of victory and to gain the happiness for our hundreds of millions of people and the prosperous future for our socialist motherland.

Today there are still difficulties and obstacles of one kind or another on our road of socialist construction. We must actively carry out communist ideological education among the broad masses of youths and other people, aimed at promoting and carrying forward the high degree of self-sacrificing spirit. Building China into a modern socialist powerful country is a great and difficult pioneering project in the history of our country. Our young people should emulate the examples of revolutionaries of the older generation and courageously dedicate themselves to this great cause.

Of course, by promoting the high degree of self-sacrificing spirit, we do not mean to say that life and health are not important, and that one may rashly give his life. Still less do we mean to encourage risky reckless acts or unworthy sacrifices. What we mean is that it is necessary to use this kind of revolutionary spirit to wage struggle and deal with difficulties for the sake of the motherland and the communist cause. Confronted with difficulties, we must boldly step forward, courageously struggle and be the first to bear hardships and the last to enjoy comforts. We must toil and work selflessly. When our individual interests conflict with the interests of the state and the people, we must be able to subordinate the former to the latter on our own initiative.

Great communist fighter Lei Feng was a model with a high degree sprit of self-sacrifice. In socialist construction, as long as more and more individuals among our youths and other people have this dedicated spirit, there will be no hardship that we cannot overcome and no height that we cannot scale. We all long for a good life, but a good life can in no way come just because we are sitting here and waiting for it. Instead, it is created by our untiring hands, and it comes after our struggle with blood and sweat. We must struggle not only for our own happiness, but also for the happiness of the generations to come. Only with such struggle continued generation after generation can our society develop and progress and can the people enjoy peace and happiness.

Among the delegates to the 11th CYL National Congress are many heroic models who possess a spirit of self-sacrifice. This is an indication that the communist ideology and ethics are very attractive to the new generation, and that the mental outlook of Chinese youths is undergoing a gratifying change. What the CYL should do is to actively support such socialist healthy trends in society and use communist ideological education and propaganda as well as lively, meticulous ideological and political work in training a new generation with ideals, morality and education and the ability to observe discipline.

Leading comrades of the party Central Committee and the Military Commission have placed ardent expectations on the young generation. Recalling the past, these leading comrades have often told the young people earnestly that they should realize that our revolutionary victory was hard-won, and that they should therefore cherish the party, the motherland, the people and the army all the more and should display even higher spirits in working hard in a down-to-earth way to make our country stronger and more prosperous than ever. The 12th CPC National Congress has placed a great program of socialist modernization before the people across the country, and they, including the young people, are now working arduously for the realization of this program. We are very hopeful that our socialist modernization cause will succeed. Both our motherland and our young generation are full of promise!

May the 11th CYL National Congress enjoy complete success!

May all delegates make even greater achievements at their respective work posts!

Central Committee Elected

OW291828 Beijing XINHUA in English 1503 GMT 29 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 29 (XINHUA) -- The Chinese Communist Youth League elected its 263-member and 51-alternate-member 11th Central Committee by secret ballot here today. One thousand nine hundred and fifty-two delegates to the current league congress took part in the election in the Great Hall of the People, where the congress has held seven plenary meetings since it opened December 29. Thunderous applause echoed through the magnificent 10,000-seat auditorium when the names of the elected were announced after the votes were electronically counted.

The average age of the new Central Committee members and alternate members is 31.5, which is 1.7 years younger than the previous Central Committee. The youngest member is 18 years old. Among the newly elected, 24.8 percent have a college education, 41.7 percent have a senior highschool education, 39.6 percent have a junior highschool education. Women account for 26.4 percent of the committee members, while 12.4 percent are of minority nationalities. Both percentages are the highest on all Central Committees elected since 1949.

RENMIN RIBAO ON 'EATING FROM THE SAME BIG POT'

[Editorial: "It Is Essential To Distinguish Between Right and Wrong -- Second Comment on the Need To Do Away With 'Eating From the Same Big Pot'"]

[Text] Most people have reached a consensus that there are many defects in the practice of "eating from the same big pot." However, there are still some people who treat it as reasonable. Why? Because they still hold that there are many advantages in the practice of "eating from the same big pot." It is, therefore, essential to distinguish between right and wrong.

Some people say that the practice of "eating from the same big pot" and "ensuring stable yields despite drought or excessive rain" means security. This practice of "ensuring stable yields despite drought or excessive rain" gradually leads staff and workers to become dependent on enterprises which in turn become dependent on the state. Depriving enterprises and staff and workers of motivation to progress is not only harmful to the enthusiasm of enterprises and staff and workers, but also "lures" lots of people to join the ranks of "eating from the same big pot" by every conceivable means. This method of distribution may seem to offer security to individual staff or workers, but it actually puts the state and enterprises in an increasingly passive position, and means the staff and workers cannot increase their income either. Therefore, we absolutely cannot adhere to the practice of "eating from the same big pot" any longer.

Some people say that more people can be placed in jobs by practicing "eating from the same big pot." That is the so-called "five persons eating the share of three persons." This is also wrong. The practice of "eating from the same big pot" was the only possible method developed under the specific historical conditions in the past. Labor force is the most active element in developing production and creating social welfare. The purpose of placing unemployed people in jobs is to develop the economy, not to partake of others' shares by inserting people in enterprises. Blindly inserting people in enterprises inevitably leads to overstaffing, low work efficiency and even the situation of "three monks have no water to drink." We must correct our guiding thought and realize that only by vigorously developing commodity production and exchange, especially by giving free hand to developing the collective economy of labor intensive and individual business operation, is it possible to bring into full play the labor force and create more social welfare.

Still some people say that as everybody has his share in the practice of "eating from the same big pot," it is relatively "fair" and can reduce conflict between staff and workers. This is also wrong. The method of "eating from the same big pot" looks "fair," but it is not fair at all. It encourages lazy people and dampens the enthusiasm of the diligent ones. In reality, wherever the practice of "eating from the same big pot" is prevalent, the staff and workers have confused ideas; conversely, wherever the practice of "eating from the same big pot" has been eliminated and the responsibility system established, the staff and workers have a fresh and new spiritual appearance.

While assessing whether or not a form of distribution has advantages, we must see whether or not it stimulates production or circulation. The distribution method of "eating from the same big pot" seriously hampers the development of production and circulation. The idea that "the practice of 'eating from the same big pot' has its advantages" is absolutely groundless.

In our country, the development of the practice of "eating from the same big pot" was due to relatively complicated social and historical reasons.

Wage reforms were carried out on two occasions in 1952 and 1956 in China; a distribution system which basically corresponded with the principle of distribution according to work was established. Since 1958, influenced by "leftist" ideology, the free supply system was one-sidedly advocated, the wage system was depreciated, the piece rate wage was abrogated and the principle of material interest was denied. All these gave impetus to the trend of upholding the practice of "eating from the same big pot." During the period of the 10-year turmoil, due to the sabotage caused by the extreme "leftist" line, the principle of distribution according to work was criticized, thus causing more serious ideological disturbance among the people and making the practice of "eating from the same big pot" more and more prevalent.

The essence of the practice of "eating from the same big pot" is equalitariansim, which has nothing in common with Marxist socialism. A socialist society must implement the principle of distribution according to work. This is an objective law independent of man's will. Only by observing this law can we fully arouse the enthusiasm of enterprises and staff and workers and develop commodity production and exchange. It is clearly stipulated in the newly promulgated constitution: the socialist public ownership eliminates the exploiting system and implements the principle of from each according to his ability, to each according to his work. This is the concrete reflection of the superiority of the socialist system.

The new appearance of the vast rural areas resulting from the elimination of the practice of "eating from the same big pot" has made more and more people alive to the fact that the economic responsibility system must be implemented in industry, commerce and all trades. Only by thoroughly eliminating the system of "eating from the same big pot" can the Marxist principle of material interest by implemented, the sense of responsibility of all laborers as masters be strengthened and production be developed. We place hopes on the implementation of the economic responsibility system.

PLA AIR FORCE PROMOTES 1,500 YOUNG CADRES

[Unattributed report: "Party Committee of the PLA Air Force Promotes 1,500 Middle-aged, Young Cadres to Corps, Divisional, Regimental Leading Bodies"]

[Text] The party committee of the PLA Air Force has promoted many outstanding middle-aged and young cadres who can open up a new situation, and put them in important positions. Now more than 1,500 middle-aged and young cadres have been respectively promoted into leading bodies at the corps, division and regiment levels in all units. With the help and concern of the old comrades, these middle-aged and young cadres have rapidly improved their attainments in the art of political and military leadership. Most of them have been proved equal to their work. Chairman of the Central Military Commission Deng Xiaoping has praised the air force for their good job in rejuvenating the cadre ranks.

This work has been taken up personally by Zhang Tingfa, first secretary of the party committee and commander of the air force and Gao Houliang, second secretary of the party committee and political commissar of the air force. When they went down to the units to make investigation and study, they not only helped elderly cadres to enhance their consciousness, but also enthusiastically helped and gave guidance to middle-aged and young cadres. In February this year, when Comrade Zhang Tingfa led a work group to inspect units' work in the northwest region, he paid consistent attention to the building of leading bodies of all the units he inspected, commended middle-aged and young cadres who had scored achievements and repeatedly explained the great significance of promoting middle-aged and young cadres to the elderly comrades in the leading bodies. He also popularized the experience of some units which had done a good job in this area.

Thanks to the initiation of the leading organs and leading comrades of the air force, since last year, all units of the air force have formed 530 work groups consisting of more than 2,000 cadres at all levels led by old cadres to examine and assess all leading bodies at and above regiment level so as to lay a foundation for correctly choosing and promoting cadres. In the course of choosing and promoting middle-aged and young cadres, the party committee of the PLA Air Force has consistently followed the requirements laid down by the party central leadership and has paid great attention to correctness in this work.

The party committee of the air force also gave commendation to middle-aged and young cadres who have scored achievements at their work posts and encouraged them to enhance their abilities in practice.

The marked development in the rejuvenation of the cadre ranks has played a promotive role in three aspects in the building of the people's air force: 1) The leading bodies have become more vigorous. 2) Leading cadres' role as vanguards has become more distinct. With the average age of leading bodies becoming younger, they find it easier to go deep into reality and play a vanguard's role. Last year, in the air units participating in the north China military excercise and review, nearly 100 cadres at division and regiment levels took the lead in piloting planes. This has won universal acclaim both within and outside the army. 3) The fighting capacity of the units has been markedly enhanced.

LEADERS ATTEND MEETING ON ENTERPRISE LEADERSHIP

OW291449 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1504 GMT 28 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, 28 Dec (XINHUA) -- A national meeting to exchange experience in improving the leadership system of enterprises, which ended on 28 December, stressed that "collective leadership by the party committee, democratic management by workers and staff and administrative command by the director" is the fundamental principle for the success of socialist enterprises and that implementing this principle in an all-round manner by establishing an enterprise leadership that reflects both democracy and centralism is an important guarantee for fulfilling the strategic goal put forth by the 12th CPC National Congress and the 5th Session of the 5th NPC.

After summarizing the practical experience in the leadership system of enterprises in China, the party Central Committee and the State Council last year successively promulgated three important documents: the "Provisional Regulations Concerning Congresses of Workers and Staff Members in State-Owned Industrial Enterprises," the "Provisional Regulations Concerning the Work of Directors of State-Owned Industrial Plants," and the "Provisional Regulations Concerning the Work of Grassroots Organizations of the Communist Party of China in Industrial Enterprises." The meeting participants exchanged and summed up in particular the experience in implementing these regulations by various localities and made arrangements for future work.

The meeting pointed out: Since the promulgation of the three documents, factories, mines and enterprises that have conscientiously implemented the regulations have raised their economic results. In these factories, mines and enterprises, the party committee concentrated efforts on major political policies, pplitical and ideological work and party building, while the production management command and technical management system headed by the director greatly strengthened and the system of workers congresses continuously improved. The enthusiasm of the workers congresses continously improved. The enthusiasm of the workers and staff in being their own masters has heightened, bringing close the relations between the party and the government, the party and the masses, and between the cadres and the masses. All this marks a new era in the development of the leadership system in China's industrial and transport enterprises.

However, in some enterprises the leading cadres still have confused ideas and are hesitant to implement these regulations. They interpret party leadership as the party taking charge of everything, are afraid of exercising administrative command for fear of repeating the error of the "system of one-man leadership" and are unwilling to introduce democratic management for fear that things may go astray or deviate from party leadership. Thus, in their practical work, these enterprises fail to draw a distinction between the party and the government while the party committee tends to take charge of administrative affairs.

The meeting urged leading cadres of industrial and transport enterprises in all localities to further study the guidelines of the documents promulgated by the party Central Committee and the State Council, enhance the consciousness of cadres and masses in implementing the documents by first clearing the confusion, regard the implementation of the documents as an important task in the overall reorganization of the enterprise, and improve the enterprise leadership system according to unified plans and arrangements.

The meeting was held in Beijing from 19 to 28 December under the joint auspices of the State Economic Commission, the Organization Department of the CPC Central Committee and the All-China Federation of Trade Unions. Attending the meeting were responsible persons of party committee organization departments, industrial and transport departments, economic commissions and trade union councils of all provinces, municipalities directly under the central government, and autonomous regions; responsible persons of party Central Committee and State Council departments concerned; party and government leading cadres of some industrial cities; and party, government and trade union cadres of some enterprises, totaling some 250.

Hu Qili and Hao Jianxiu, respectively member and alternate member of the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee; Zhang Jingfu, chairman of the State Economic Commission; Ni Zhifu, chairman of the All-China Federation of Trade Unions; Zeng Zhi, deputy director of the Organization Department of the CPC Central Committee; and Yuan Baohua, vice chairman of the State Economic Commission, attended the closing ceremony on 28 December. Hao Jianxiu and Zhang Jingfu spoke at the ceremony. They stressed that implementing the three documents promulgated by the party Central Committee and the State Council is an important component of the economic management reform and organizational restructuring in China. The three documents supplement and support one another. It is necessary to implement them together and in an all-round manner and to continuously sum up new experiences in practice in order to further perfect and develop the documents.

YUAN BAOHUA URGES BETTER USE OF LABOR FORCE

OW291101 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 26 Dec 82

[Text] At the national forum today on the work of consolidating labor organization, Yuan Baohua, vice minister of the State Economic Commission, emphasized: It is necessary to grasp the task of consolidating labor organization as an important strategic task and to truly score achievements in this regard. He said: The party Central Committee and the State Council have decided to regard the consolidation of labor organization and the organization of production by fixing the number of workers and production quotas as one of the five major tasks in consolidating enterprises in an overall manner. This decision was made from a long-term point of view in building enterprises and in the light of the present major problems among our enterprises.

Yuan Baohua said: To improve economic results means to use a minimum amount of labor and raw materials in turning out more social products. As far as the situation in China is concerned, a fundamental way to use a minimum amount of labor is to consolidate labor organization, organize production by fixing the number of workers and production quotas, make rational use of the labor force and gradually increase production quotas.

Our potential in this regard is tremendous. Let us take the machine building industry as an example. In 1980 the percentage of wages of the total production cost was 13.2 percent. If this percentage could be reduced to 8 percent, the percentage during the First 5-Year Plan, the profits made by the industry could be increased by 2 billion yuan.

He added: In doing economic work, we have long been neglecting labor-saving measures. Fixing the number of workers and production quotas has become a weak link in enterprise management. There is an enormous waste of labor. According to surveys made in various departments and areas, our enterprises have in general a 10 to 15 percent surplus of manpower. Some even have 30 percent more manpower than needed. In general, the rate of labor utilization is only about 50 percent, while in some enterprises it is even less than 30 percent. In many enterprises, the production quotas for a specific number of workers are quite low. They are still below the previous highest levels in history.

Yuan Baohua further pointed out: There are two malpractices in socialist economic life. One is the practice of advocating an "iron rice bowl" in using manpower in various enterprises, and the other that of egalitarianism in distribution. These two malpractices must be gradually eliminated. The consolidation of labor organization must be conducive to restructuring. For example, in using manpower, we must employ regular workers, contract workers, and other types of workers in such a way that we can hire as well as discharge them, and eliminate the practice of making all jobs secure ones. It is also necessary to adhere to the principle of relying strictly on proficiency and hiring only those who are competent. The efforts to consolidate labor organization, eliminate surplus manpower and weed out those who have sneaked into enterprises just to make a living are aimed preliminarily at correcting the irrational situation at present and laying the foundation for a complete restructuring. As for the distribution system, we must from now on reform the wage system and further implement the system of distribution according to work while overcoming egalitarianism. To consolidate labor organization and organize production by fixing the number of workers and production quotas now, it is essential to increase the number of steps between one grade and the next higher one, and to reward those who are diligent and punish those who are lazy. All this is aimed at creating conditions for reforming the wage system.

INDUSTRY EXPECTED TO GROW BY 7 PERCENT IN 1982

OW291206 Beijing XINHUA in English 1112 GMT 29 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 29 (XINHUA) -- China expects total industrial output value for 1982 to be seven percent higher than last year, topping the original target of four to five percent, a State Economic Commission official announced here today. Total output value will run more than 550 billion yuan, with heavy industry increasing nine percent and light industry five percent. Speaking at a meeting attended by leading industrial production officials from departments under the State Council, Zhao Weichen, member of the State Economic Commission, said that in 1982, China has focused national economic readjustment on better economic results, leading to a steady rise in industrial production. All-time records have been set in output of coal, electricity, rolled steel, cement, soda ash and chemical fertilizers as well as in freight and passenger volume by water and railways.

Salient features of this year's industrial production are improved product variety and quality and reduced energy consumption, he said. This year saw 56,000 new varieties of light industrial goods put on the market. This was a record for the light and textile industries.

Quality of 59 out of 75 major industrial products remained stable or improved during the period from January to October this year. Over 20 million tons of standard coal is expected to be saved as a result of energy conservation measures during the year.

Continued production of market-oriented commodities was an important aspect in China's industrial development in 1982. Output of such items as wrist-watches, sewing machines, television sets, cameras and refrigerators rose anywhere from 14 to 70 percent. The output of radio recorders and washington machines has been more than doubled.

Zhao said the ample supply of manufactured goods has enlivened the market. Gross retail sales volume for the year is estimated to have increased 8.9 percent and a buyer's market has appeared for some commodities.

He said that during the year, heavy industry rose steadily. Products such as rolled steel, steel, soda ash, caustic soda, cement and plate glass are expected to be up by four to 14 percent and walking tractors 31 percent. The vigorous growth of heavy industry has provided agriculture and light industry with a good supply of equipment and spare parts. The machine building industry, for example, has turned out 2,000 sets of equipment, 200 more than last year.

Zhao Weichen said that good performances by the transportation and energy sectors contributed to the healthy development of the national economy. Coal production is expected to reach 650 million tons, 4.5 percent more than last year, petroleum remained steady at 102 million tons and electricity is expected to be 325,000 million KWH, 5.1 percent more than last year.

Progress has also been made in management, technical transformation and regional economic cooperation, the State Economic Commission member said.

NEW RAILWAYS, IMPROVEMENTS PLANNED FOR 1983

OW291048 Beijing XINHUA in English 0741 GMT 29 Dec 82

[Text] Beijing, December 29 (XINHUA) -- The Ministry of Railways will build four new rail lines while speeding railway projects to transport more coal and aid development of industry and agriculture, the ministry said today. A ministry official said China will electrify 695 kilometers of railways, build 252 kilometers of new lines and 209 kilometers of double-track lines in 1983.

Priority in railway construction, the official said, should be given to those projects listed by the state as key, particularly the 379-kilometer electric, double-track railway from Datong, a major Shanxi Province coal-producing center, to Beijing's suburban Fengtai District; the 280-kilometer double-track, electric railway from Beijing to Qinhuangdao; the 355-kilometer electric railway from Datong to Taiyuan; and the 630-kilometer electric railway between Guiyang and Kunming, a transport artery in southwest China for coal and phosphorus.

Construction of a 164-kilometer line between Xinxiang in Henan Province and Heze in Shandong Province will begin in the first quarter of 1983, the official said. The line will cross the Yellow River, China's second largest, and provide Shanxi with another coal transport artery.

The second line to be built next year is 128 kilometers long from Daye, an iron center in Hubei Province, to Shahejie in the north of Jiangxi Province, through Yangxin and Ruichang Counties. The railway runs from central China to southeast China through rich copper and iron areas.

According to the ministry, construction will continue on the 79-kilometer Houma - Yumenkou railway to strengthen trade between Shanxi and Shaanxi Province, and aid construction of an aluminum plant and development of a coal mine in the region.

The fourth railway to be built next year is 37 kilometers from the city of Ningbo, Zhejiang Province, to Beilun Harbor, China's first 100,000-ton-class modern ore transit port in the province. Beilun is a transshipment point for mineral ore for Shanghai's Baoshan iron and steel complex.

WENZHAI BAO EXCERPTS QINGHUA STUDENTS' INTERVIEW

HK300852 Beijing WENZHAI BAO in Chinese No 63, 14 Dec 82 p 1

[Reprinted feature from issue No 23 of DUI WAI BAOGAO CANKAO [FOREIGN REPORTS REFERENCE]: "Qinghua Teachers, Students Answer Questions of Foreign Correspondents"]

[Text] Not long ago, 40 foreign resident correspondents in Beijing held an interview at Qinghua University. Excerpts of the interview follow:

Question: (from a West German correspondent) Do you make special preparations for meetings as the one we are having today, such as previews and rehearsals?

Answer: As many foreign guests visit our university, we do not make preparations of this kind. If there is any "preparation" at all, it is a notice in advance asking us to put on tidy clothes for the sake of politeness.

Question: (from a French correspondent) Feng Daxing was executed by shooting for murder. Why is it that Jiang Qing has not been executed although so many people were killed under her orders?

Answer: In committing crimes, Jiang Qing did not kill anybody directly. She can live on as a teacher by negative example.

Question: (from an American correspondent) Are you allowed to tune in to the BBC and Voice of America?

Answer: Yes. But we mainly listen to domestic broadcasts such as that by the Central People's Broadcasting Station.

Question: (from a Canadian correspondent) I would like to know your appraisal of Qin Shihuang, first emperor of the Qin Dynasty.

Answer: Qin Shihuang made his contribution to the unification of China.

Question: How was Qin Shihuang compared with Mao Zedong?

Answer: Qin cannot be compared with Mao Zedong at all. Both of them unified China but their purposes for doing so were entirely different. Qin Shihuang aimed at extending his scope of rule and enslavement; whereas Mao Zedong led the revolution in order to overthrow the rule of imperialism and feudalism and to put an end to the system of exploitation.

Question: (from a Norwegian correspondent) Can you air your views freely during political discussions, that is, can you put forth different opinions?

Answer: Yes.

Question: (from a Canadian correspondent) Why then are all answers the same?

Answer: I think that if it is a truth, everyone's answer will be the same.

Question: I am afraid that such truths are not products of your own thinking but are given to you by the party.

Answer: We have received the same education and we have the same ideological foundation. It is natural that we share the same views. However, these views and conclusions result from our own thinking.

NATIONAL ARCHIVES WORK CONFERENCE HELD IN BEIJING

OW180857 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1210 GMT 14 Dec 1982

[Excerpts] Beijing, 14 Dec (XINHUA) -- The national archives work conference, which ended today in Beijing, called for collecting and preserving those archives related to Chinese history and accumulated after the founding of the PRC and for scientifically classifying them to serve the building of socialist modernization. The conference opened on 4 December. Those who addressed the conference were Hu Qili, member the CPC Central Committee Secretariat, and some responsible persons concerned including Yang Dezhong, Kang Yimin, Wang Fulin and Zeng San.

The conference called on all party, governmental and military organizations at various levels as well as mass organizations to embark on and perfect the work of documentation and to turn over to the archives in a planned and systematic manner those documents which are required to be turned over. Special efforts should be made to ensure the smooth transferal of documents from those organizations to be dissolved or merged into others during the reorganization process. The archives at various levels should do a good job in taking over and managing these documents. They should also do their best to enrich the collections, improve their work and do a good job in making the historical documents available to the public. The central, provincial, municipal and autonomous regional departments in charge of specialized trades and professions should work out specialized and unified ways to govern the work of documenting scientific and technological information in the enterprises and trades under their jurisdiction.

The conference expressed the hope that archives at various levels intensify their research work on theories and techniques of documentation and raise the standard of archives preservation and administration. It called for efforts to establish, before 1990, a network of archives departments that have a wide range of collections, rational structure and scientific management in order to create a new situation in archives work.

HU QIAOMU PROPOSES PUBLISHING 'CONTEMPORARY CHINA'

OW211115 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0757 GMT 13 Dec 82

[Excerpts] Beijing, 13 Dec (XINHUA) -- According to a report by GUANGMING RIBAO, the Propaganda Department of the CPC Central Committee, the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences and the Chinese Social Science Publishing House under the academy are organizing people in various fields to write and compile a large, multivolume series of books entitled "Contemporary China."

Comrade Hu Qiaomu proposed the compilation and publication of this series. In May this year Comrade Hu Qiaomu suggested at a discussion meeting of young social science workers that a scientific summation be made of the historical experience of our work in various fields since the founding of the People's Republic. He pointed out: This will not only provide material for the research of China's modern history but also guide us in doing our work.

The whole series will contain more than 100 volumes, and each volume will contain about 300,000 characters. The volumes will be divided according to the work of the various ministries and commissions of the State Council and deal for example with China's contemporary agriculture, textile industry, metallurgical industry, coal industry and educational work.

Deng Liqun and Ma Hong will be the chief editors of the Editorial Committee of "Contemporary China." Members of the Editorial Committee include Yu Guangyuan, Wang Huide, Zhu Muzhi, Xu Dixin, Du Runsheng, Zhang Youyu, Zhou Yang, Lin Jianqing, Fang Weizhong, Hu Sheng, Yuan Baohua, Mei Yi and Xue Muqiao.

FUJIAN CIRCULAR ON FAMILY PLANNING PUBLICITY

OW290253 Fuzhou FUJIAN RIBAO in Chinese 17 Dec 82 p 1

[Excerpts] The Fujian Provincial CPC Committee and the Provincial People's Government issued a circular on 16 December 1982 urging implementation of family planning publicity month activities.

In accordance with written instructions by the CPC Central Committee Secretariat and the State Council, while approving a "Summary of the Minutes of the National Conference on Family Planning," the CPC Central Committee Propaganda Department and the State Family Planning Commission recently held a national conference on publicizing family planning and made arrangements to launch the family planning publicity month throughout the country. In line with these instructions, the provincial party committee and the provincial people's government hereby decided to kick off the family planning publicity month in the urban and rural areas of the province on 18 December. The following are things to be done during the publicity month:

Family planning is a basic policy of our state. Activities in publicity month should be conducted in accordance with the guidelines laid down by the 12th party congress. It is necessary to carry out extensive education on this "basic national policy" among the cadres and masses, in order to make it known to every household and to have it take root in the hearts of the people. Leading cadres at various levels should fully understand the strategic significance of family planning. Large numbers of cadres and people should be made to understand that it is a citizen's duty to practice family planning. They should conscientiously respond to the call for a couple to have only one child. Communist Party and CYL members, as well as cadres at various levels, should have a stronger sense of responsibility in carrying out the basic national policy and take the lead in publicizing family planning, doing away with feudal ideas, marrying and bearing children late, bearing fewer children and raising them better. While conducting such publicity activities, we should also lay a sound foundation for regular family planning work. Every effort should be made to keep the province's population at the 31.7 million level by the end of this century and to ensure that the family planning task for 1983 is fulfilled.

During the publicity month, it is necessary to make full use of various propaganda media, such as newspapers, periodicals, radio, television, films, drama, theatrical singing and other performances, posters, special columns, slogans and leaflets in order to prepare public opinion for family planning. It is necessary to organize and train lecture teams and send them out to disseminate to the masses. Wide publicity should be given to the CPC Central Committee's and the State Council's principles, policies and instructions on family planning, especially the policy of one couple, one child. Efforts should also be made to disseminate scientific knowledge on birth control and eugenics.

[Text] The Presidium of the Fifth Session of the Seventh Shanghi Municipal People's Congress held its first meeting this afternoon. Comrade Chen Guodong presided over the meeting, which elected Chen Guodong, Hu Lijiao, Zhong Min, Zhang Chengzong, Di Jingxiang, Su Buqing, Wang Tao, Liu Jingji, Wu Ruoan (female), Zhou Gucheng and Li Peinan executive chairmen of the session presidium. The meeting approved the namelist of executive chairmen for the session's group discussion and the agenda of the session. It also approved the appointment of Zhang Chengzong, Di Jingxiang, Zhang Shizhu, Cai Beihua, Xiao Che, Wu Jian and (Yan Zheng) (female) as deputy secretaries general of the session.

To ensure that deputies will be able to exercise their democratic rights and that the Motions Examination Committee will have sufficient time to examine opinions on the handling of motions, the presidium meeting decided that the deadline for submitting motions will be 1800 on 27 December.

SHANGHAI: CHEN GUODONG VISITS PLANNING EXHIBIT

OW261006 Shanghai City Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 24 Dec 82

[Text] Municipal party and government leaders Chen Guodong, Hu Lijiao, Han Zheyi and Zhong Min visited the Shanghai municipal overall urban planning exhibition on 24 December. After viewing the exhibition, Chen Guodong and other leading comrades said it is necessary to solicit opinions from more people's deputies, CPPCC members and experts, as well as the people in general, in mapping out the overall urban planning of Shanghai. The construction of the country, including the work of Shanghai, should be done by pooling the efforts of all.

NEI MONGGOL'S ZHOU HUI ON RESPONSIBILITY SYSTEM

HK230417 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 18 Dec 82 p 2

[Article by Zhou Hui [0719 1920], first secretary of Nei Monggol Regional CPC Committee: "Further Implement and Perfect Various Production Responsibility Systems Including the 'All-round Contract System'"]

[Text] The 12th CPC Congress treated agriculture as the first important strategic task in achieving the goal of development by the end of the century. How can we, proceeding from the reality in Nei Monggol, further speed up the development of agriculture and animal husbandry? In accordance with both the positive and negative experiences of so many years, the successful experiences since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee in particular, we must, on the whole, still rely first on policies and second on science. The most important thing at present is that we must seriously carry out the system of contract responsibility with payment linked to output, go deep into practice to conduct investigations and surveys, modestly learn from peasants and herdsmen of various nationalities and continue to implement and perfect various systems of contract responsibility with payment linked to output, including the "all-round contract system", according to local conditions.

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the "double contract system," particularly the various systems of contract responsibility with payment linked to output which takes the "all-round contract system" as its major form have been implemented gradually in rural and pastoral areas in Nei Monggol and have been warmly supported by peasants and herdsmen of various nationalities. Practice has more and more clearly shown that the "double contract system," particularly the "all-round contract system" is really a great creation of the peasants and herdsmen of various nationalities in the practice of production. It not only plays an important role in creating a new situation in agriculture and animal husbandry, but also has produced and is producing an enormously stimulating effect on enlivening economy and promoting reform. However, in the process of carrying out the contract responsibility system with payment linked to output including the "all-round contract system," we met with quite a few obstacles, mainly from a handful of responsible cadres. Quite of few of them, influenced by "leftist" ideology, fell short of the demands of the times due to their insufficient study and contact with reality. However, there are indeed a very few who had a vested interest in the "leftist" stuff. The controversy over this issue, we should say, is not totally finished.

A review of the process of implementing the "all-round contract system" and other responsibility systems in rural and pastoral areas in Nei Monggol over the past few years shows that it was fraught with the hardships of bringing order out of chaos both ideologically and practically. For example, when we began implementing the responsibility system, some people still thought that the previous practice of "mass extensive production" was more secure and the system of "assigning production contracts for each household" was risky. They intimidated peasants, saying: "If you do not implement the contract system, you may eat 'resold grain' due to crop failure; but if you implement the contract system, you'll have no way out when there is a poor harvest." They even went as far as to create obstructions by such means as "settling repayment within a stated time," "granting no loans" and increasing burdens. As peasants liked the contract system from the bottom of their hearts, some communes and brigades have publicly or secretly adhered to it despite "prohibition" at the initial stage and the subsequent "correction." Practice over the past year or so shows that it is better to implement the contract system than not to implement it; it is better to implement the system of assigning production contracts for each household than for each group; and the "all-round contract system" is better than other systems.

In areas where the contract system was implemented, the output of the originally less fertile land greatly surpassed that of the more fertile land in the areas where the contract system was not implemented. Even when there was various natural disasters, they could reap a bumper harvest after a small disaster, maintain production after moderate disasters and reduce losses to a minimum after a large disaster. Some brigades and teams which were poor for decades have swiftly changed their appearance. Practice has given powerful support to the contract system. When the news spread, some areas where the contract system had not been implemented,one after another implemented the contract system. Some areas where the system of "land of grain ration" and the system of "awards and schedules" had been implemented subsequently developed toward the "all-round contract system." But some people again said that it was not in line with socialist orientation to increase production by implementing the "all-round contract system." That is the so-called contradiction between the vast majority of peasants who care about "output" and a handful of people who stick to "orientation." What is wrong with "orientation?" They said: 1) farm animals and farming tools cannot be kept well; 2) the task of the procurement of grain cannot be accomplished; 3) difficulties of "four-belonging households" cannot be solved; 4) the construction of arable land and pastureland fizzled out. As a result, resistance to the contract system appeared in some areas. Practice has once again given a good reply: In most of the areas where the "all-round contract system" has been implemented, farm animals and farming tools have been increased; the procurement of grain by the state has been carried out in large quantities, best quality and at a fast speed. Most of the "four-belonging households" which implemented the contract system to a certain extent have increased their grain output and cash income; as for the minority of households suffering from difficulties, they have also received better treatment as a result of the development of the whole production. The construction of arable land and pastureland has been carried out more properly. In Ih Ju Meng where the "all-round contract system" was implemented early, the construction of small irrigation works and small grass towns has been carried out rapidly. Less investment yet rapid results and the construction on mu after mu have played an important role in fighting natural calamities. Although problems of one kind or another have existed in some areas, they can be rapidly solved provided cadres get their thinking straight, genuinely carry out the spirit of the third plenary session and earnestly consult the masses.
Numerous facts have indicated that the vast majority of peasants and herdsmen are willing to take the socialist road under the leadership of the Communist Party and want to get rid of the "leftist" stuff such as "mass extensive production" and "eating from the same big pot" and the blind command and unreasonable burden of some cadres. They do not wish to take the deviation from the socialist road. The "output" increase achieved by peasants and herdsmen after implementing the "all-round contract system" is what the socialist "orientation" expects.

Following the progress of the work of bringing out of chaos and the testing by practice, we have now virtually made a breakthrough in the double-contract system, particularly the "all-round contract system" which is being implemented and improved. Responsibility systems for vegetable growing production teams on the outskirts of cities are being adjusted, and those for forestry production are just beginning. Although we have responsibility systems for animal husbandry, a considerable number of them are the continuation of methods adopted before the Cultural Revolution. Herdsmen are not satisfied with them. Responsibility systems for many commune-run and brigade-run enterprises are yet to be established, summarized and improved. Contract systems will ultimately be applied to the exploitation and utilization of large areas of waste beaches, mountains, sands and water surface by scattered manpower, funds and technical forces.

Most of the responsibility systems for agricultural production were implemented gradually after 1980 and many of them have been implemented halfway. In addition, the implementation of the "all-round contract system" and other responsibility systems is a new thing and the "leftist" influences are deep rooted. There are not many areas where responsibility systems have been implemented in a fairly perfect manner. Therefore, we must not only note the trend of the "all-round contract system" and other responsibility systems being implemented, perfected and consolidated, but also realize the arduous and protracted efforts we should exert to continuously implement, perfect and consolidate them in the future. The ideas that the responsibility systems have been perfect and the feeling of satisfaction with the achievements of the systems which leads to a refusal to improve the systems are divorced from reality and are harmful.

The major question on current responsibility systems is whether or not we should regard the double contract system, particularly the "all-round contract system," as a revolution, and continue to improve and carry it out.

1. Are the "all-round contract systems"and other responsibility systems a revolution in the realm of agricultural economy? The process of implementing the "all-round contract system" in the region over the past few years is worth study and summarization. The production teams in the region which have implemented the "all-round contract system" account for the vast majority of the total of production teams to date. It is absolutely groundless to say that this is the result of unanimous action because peasants and herdsmen have not established ties and contracts with each other and the central and regional authorities also have not made any stipulation as to the proportionate rate which the "all-round contract system" should constitute. As a matter of fact, the timing and concrete methods in implementing the "all-round contract system" vary in different areas. It is more appropriate to call it the "all-round contract system" of a great variety. Anyhow the "all-round contract system" does have a common characteristic, that is, the thorough severing of the shackles of the "leftist" stuff, the elimination of "eating from the same big pot" and the implementation of diversified economy on the household basis under the unified leadership. This is adherance to the principle of seeking truth from facts and doing things according to local conditions. This practice has vividly shown us that the double-contract system, particularly the "all-round contract system," is so far the most effective measure to fully arouse the production enthusiasm of the peasants and herdsmen of various nationalities in the rural and pastoral areas of Nei Monggol. People say that the "all-round contract system" has not only emancipated the people's minds, given peasants a free hand and made the land andnatural resources more exploitable, but also educated the masses of cadres. Like a key, it has opened the door to broad prospects for Nei Monggol's agriculture and animal husbandry. In the meantime, after summing up both the positive and negative experiences of several decades, particularly the experience of the past few years, we have adhered to the public ownership of the land and the principle of proper retention for the collective and have organized production mainly with individual households as a unit under the guidance of the state plan in our efforts to develop agriculture, forestry, animal husbandry, sideline production and fishery in the vast rural and pastoral areas. Generally speaking, this is in conformity with the current development of productive forces in rural and pastoral areas and conducive to production. With regard to the procurement and allotment of farm and sideline products, we should, of course, educate cadres and commune members to adhere to the principle of simultaneously taking into account the interests of the state, the collective and the individual. The circulation links in agriculture, forestry and animal husbandry, and the superstructure should be in accord with this principle. These are profound changes brought about by the "all-round contract system" in the realm of agricultural economy.

2. Has the role fo the "all-round contract system" and other responsibility systems "reached its limit" already? Our answer is: The power of these systems is much greaterthan had been expected. In Nei Monggol, most production teams have adopted "all-round contract system" for only 1 or 2 years and the small number of teams that adopted this system earlier have practiced it for not more than 3 or 5 years. After massive extensive production has been in practice for a long time, it takes a few years to restore soil fertility and to breed female animals. The process also requires all necessary small and medium-sized farm tools and farm animals. The construction of farm fields and grazing land is only possible when the people have enough to eat and the technical contracting and business management system can only be practically established and perfected step by step. This means that, with the continuous development and achievement of the above-mentioned aspects, peasants and herdsmen's production enthusiasam will run higher and higher and results of production will continuously increase. Thus, the superiority of the "all-round contract system" will become more and more obvious. Therefore, the active role of the responsibility system in the form of "all-round contracts" is far from having reached its limit, rather it has just begun to work and is now in the ascendant. Its potential and superiority are far from having been completely displayed. This is the same as peasants and herdsmen saying that "the best is yet to come!"

3. Though we are practicing the "all-round contract system," shall we have to once again merge things together some time in the future? This is the question with which peasants and herdsmen are most concerned at present. A peasant in Shengfeng Commune, Wuyuan County said that during the 12th party congress, every day they gathered around radios to listen to the news about the congress. What they paid attention to was whether the policy toward the "all-round contract" responsibility system would be changed or not. This shows that our previous policies were so apt to change and so unstable that peasants and herdsmen were always in a state of anxiety. They did not set their minds at rest until they heard that Comrade Hu Yaobang guaranteed in his report that this policy would not be changed for a long time to come. Why were they always afraid that policies would change? Because in recent years, agriculture and animal husbandry have obviously developed in Nei Monggol and the problem of food and clothing has been basically solved. From their past experiences, peasants felt that it was perhaps the time to change the policy. Therefore, when the 12th party congress declared that the agricultural production responsibility systems will "not be changed for a long time to come," the peasants and herdsmen felt reassured. This is also the most effective way to mobilize peasants and herdsmen of all nationalities to further develop the range and quality of production. We shall make the "long-term invariability" of the responsibility systems one of our basic policies toward agriculture and animal husbandry and adhere to this policy for a long time to come.

Without any doubt, the responsibility systems including "all-round contract system" will continuously develop along with the development of productive forces. Diverse occupations which are now mainly based on household operation will inevitably develop into integrated operation of different forms step-by-step along with the development of commodity production. In particular, integrated bodies in the trades which are oriented to production and which are in the links of circulation will inevitably increase on a daily basis. Among them, some will be temporary expedients and others will be more regularized and institutionalized; some will be loosely and others more tightly integrated; some will take a form of association while others will completely merge themselves together. The tendency of development will be to realize integration according to trades. This is precisely the way for us to realize agricultural modernization. We should enthusiastically welcome this development and give shrewd guidance according to circumstances. This development must certainly never retrogress and the integration should never be the same as the previous system of "three-level ownership with ownership by the production team as the basic form."

According to the actual conditions in Nei Monggol, at present and in a few years to come, the "all-round contract system" and other responsibility systems should continue to be put into effect and be perfected. After that, these systems will remain unchanged for a long time. As for cooperation in the process of agricultural, forestry and animal husbandry production, including specialized, long-term and seasonal cooperation, it has existed in practice for a long time wherever cooperation is necessary. For example, animals are shared by a few households for tillage; a shepherd tends sheep for a few households; several households jointly use a ditch or a well for irrigation; a few households cooperate in building a haystack or share a tractor; in the harvest season, a few households thresh grain together for one of them after another; and so forth. In future, with the development of production, we should actively lead and help peasants and herdsmen to properly cooperate in doing those things which are difficult for a single household to accomplish, such as the cultivation of good strains of seed and fine animal breeds, the building of large-scale farm fields and grazing land, the development of processing production and the use of science and technology.

No matter how the responsibility system of contracts with payment linked to output develops and what kind of combination appears, we must comply with two fundamental principles: 1) it is necessary to show great respect for the right to self-determination of the vast number of peasants and herdsmen; and 2) it is necessary to gradually improve the masses' economic benefits. Henceforth, we must adhere to the principle of voluntary participation and mutual benefit and should never force the masses to do what they are reluctant to do. In dealing with everything, we must always respect the practical experience of the masses and earnestly listen to their opinions so as to strengthen our leadership. For many years, our cadres have indeed worked hard, but some of them, though motivated by good intentions, have done quite a few things that were at variance with the interests of the masses. They tried to do those good things which would be possible only after many years and their good intentions did not achieve good results. We should seriously sum up these experiences and draw lessons from them.

In the course of implementing and perfecting "the all-round contract system" and other production responsibility systems, we need to further deepen our understanding and unify our thinking on the above-mentioned questions. These questions involve both theoretical and practical aspects. To properly resolve these questions, we need to study the relevant basic theories of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought, rely on practice and taking the mass line and continuously sum up and popularize new initiatives and experiences of peasants and herdsmen of all nationalities. The central authorities have laid down correct and explicit principles and policies for developing agriculture. The most important thing at present is that we should effectively put them into practice in accordance with our local conditions. This by itself is one of the fundamental principles of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought. Therefore, we plan to train grassroots cadres in rural and pastoral areas in a planned and big way this winter and next spring. Through this training, we will set their ideology to rights and will promote to leading posts those who have resolutely implemented the party central leadership's line, principles and policies since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. We will also organize them to study technology and management skills.

Therefore, we should, in connection with the study of the 12th congress documents and the theory of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought, thoroughly sum up the experiences and lessons of our party in giving guidance to agricultural and animal husbandry production over the past two decades and particularly since the party's third plenary session, further eliminate leftist influences, seek truth from facts, emancipate our minds, enhance our awareness in implementing the line adopted since the party's third plenary session, further eliminate leftist influences, seek truth from facts, emancipate our minds, enhance our awareness in implementing the line adopted since the party's third plenary session and continue to implement and improve the system of "all-round contracting" and other responsibility systems of linking payment with output according to contracts. In our opinion, as long as we do so, we will be able to further develop the new situation which has already been created in agriculture and animal husbandry.

TIANJIN'S CHEN WEIDA DELIVERS SPEECH TO NPC GROUP

SK290752 Tianjin RIBAO in Chinese 29 Nov 82 p 1

[Text] Chen Weida, NPC deputy and first secretary of the Tianjin Municipal CPC Committee, delivered a speech at a group discussion meeting of the Fifth Session of the Fifth NPC on 28 November. He said: Party committees at all levels, all cadres of the party and party members must take the lead in enforcing the constitution and be models in safeguarding the authoritativeness of the constitution. No party organizations or party members should place themselves above the constitution.

He said: The construction clearly stipulates that "the people of all nationalities, all state organs, the armed forces, all political parties and public organizations and all enterprises and undertakings in the country must take the constitution as the basic norm of conduct, and they have the duty to uphold the dignity of the constitution and ensure its implementation." Although this is directed at all organizations and individuals, it is all the more necessary that the Communist Party and all its members observe and safeguard the constitution. The Communist Party is the governing party, and many party members have assumed very important leadership work. If all party organizations and party members can take the stipulations of the constitution as their norm and can serve as examples among the people, it will be easier to cultivate the concept and habits of observing and safeguarding the constitution among the people.

Chen Weida said: The constitution was formulated by taking the four basic principles as its guiding ideology. It is a fundamental general law reflecting the fundamental interests of the people of China and was formulated by the party and the people under its leadership. Observing and ensuring the implementation of the constitution on the part of our party committees at all levels means safeguarding the party's leadership and the interests of the people of China.

HEILONGJIANG'S YANG YICHEN ON RESPONSIBILITY

SK270906 Harbin Heilongjiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 25 Dec 82

[Text] At the meeting of secretaries of the various prefectural, municipal and county CPC Committees held on 24 December, the provincial CPC Committee called on all departments on the industrial, communications, transport, capital construction, commercial, catering and service fronts to implement the various forms of the economic responsibility system and the system of taking responsibility for management based on contracts next year so as to further break away from the conventional trammels of the iron rice bowl and of eating from a big common pot and to genuinely implement the principle of "more work, more pay; less work, less pay and no work, no pay."

There are 10 specific measures for implementing the economic responsibility system, which can be summarized as follows:

1. Do a good job in implementing the system of taking responsibility for one's own finances at each level. The provincial authorities should supervise the various municipalities and counties which, in turn, should supervise the various relevant departments to implement this system so that this system will be implemented by enterprises at at early date.

2. Implement the system of assuming sole responsibility for one's own profits or losses among large money-losing enterprises. Enterprises which are ensured regular supplies and are operating soundly as regards production and marketing should learn from the system practiced by the Shoudu Iron and Steel Company which calls for an increase by degrees in profits turned over to the state, with the enterprise taking responsibility for its own finances so that enterprises can retain some profits while the state is ensured revenues whether or not there is, so to speak, drought or excessive rain.

3. Among the many money-losing enterprises, the system of taking responsibility for one's own losses should be adopted. A system of partial compensation of losses may be introduced when the losses are progressively reduced. Enterprises currently running in the red because of mismanagement but having the potential to improve earnings should be instructed to halt deficits in a prescribed time. Enterprises which have the potential to end deficits but fail to do so because of incompetent leadership should have the leaders changed. Enterprises which are unlikely to halt deficits should be resolutely closed, ordered to suspend production, merged or transferred to other lines of production.

4. Small state-run enterprises may adopt, step by step, the management systems practiced by collectively-owned enterprises or the system of management responsibility based on contracts. Management of these enterprises may be turned over to collectives or individuals under contracts. The enterprises may also be rented to collectives or individuals, with the enterprises subject to state taxation, capital and management [zhijing] sharing profits on mutually beneficial basing and management taking sole responsibility for profits or losses.

5. Small state-run restaurants with a payroll less than 30. Photo studios, barber shops, public bathing houses and repair shops may, in principle, adopt the system in which the establishments are owned by the state, operated by a collective, subject to state taxation, responsible for their profits or losses and managed in a democratic way. They also may adopt the system of responsibility based on contract by turning over management to the staff members and workers on a collective or individual basis.

6. Efforts should be made to gradually turn enterprises in the second light industrial and other sectors into genuine independent accounting units which assume sole responsibility for their profits or losses, practice the principle of "to each according to his work" and adopt democratic management.

Staff members and workers may become shareholders, draw dividends and elect and recall leaders. It is necessary to popularize the experience of the (Xingua) arts and crafts factory in Harbin and to reform the management practices characteristic of enterprises owned by the state or big collectives. It is permissible in some cases to reduce the accounting unit by dividing it into several smaller ones, introduce the system of responsibility based on contracts among them and let each take responsibility for its own profits or losses.

7. Communications, transport and contruction enterprises should also proceed from their actual conditions to actively implement the economic responsibility system and the system of responsibility for management based on contracts.

8. Rural supply and marketing cooperatives should accelerate their structural reforms. Active efforts should be made to popularize and implement the experience gained by the (Limin) supply and marketing cooperative in enacting the system of responsibility for management based on contracts.

9. State-owned farms and pastures should reform the fixed-wage system, adopt a floating wage system or the system of computing remuneration according to output and assigning output quotas and pay some attention to developing the collective sector of the economy and family sideline production.

10. All enterprises should establish or perfect a system of internal economic responsibility as the one practiced by the three paper mills in Mudanjiang, Jiamusi and Qiqihar, in which production quotas are divided and assigned to workshops, work groups and individual workers. It is necessary to check the tendency toward egalitarianism in the distribution of bonuses.

The provincial CPC Committee urged the localities to earnestly study these methods. The provincial economic commission, financial and trade office and relevant departments will work out measures for implementing them. However, the various prefectures, municipalities and counties must not wait. They should go ahead with any of the aforementioned measures they think fit and do their best to have the economic responsibility system implemented among the enterprises by the period around the Spring Festival.

The aforementioned measures and requirements were set forth by Comrade Yang Yichen in a speech entitled "New Progress for the New Year." He said: In the past few years, agriculture has taken the lead in implementing the various forms of the responsibility system. An excellent situation rarely before seen has emerged in the countryside. As we see it today, the system of computing remuneration according to output and assigning output quotas, besides being further developed in the agricultural sector, will certainly make inroads into the industrial, commercial, service and scientific and technological sectors. The system is spreading from the countryside into urban areas. We must have a sharp insight into this new situation and keep pace with it. We must fully evaluate the great significance of implementing the various forms of the economic responsibility system, which in fact does not pale by comparison with the transformation of privately owned industrial and commercial enterprises. Agriculture is radically different from industrial, communications, financial and trade enterprises. Nevertheless, the implementation of the economic responsibility system and, among a number of state-owned enterprises, the system of responsibility for one's own profits and losses, is conducive to implementing the Marxist principle of material interests, enhancing the workers' sense of responsibility and being the masters of their own affairs and pushing forward the development of production. The practice of the countryside, as well as that of the Shoudu Iron and Steel Company and other industrial enterprises, has shown that the orientation of implementing the economic responsibility system is correct and can yield tangible results.

The 2-day meeting of various prefectural, municipal and county CPC committees concluded on 25 December. Responsible persons of the various provincial departments attended the meeting.

In his speech, Comrade Yang Yichen also called for executing planned parenthood work well and strictly controlling population growth. He urged party committees at all levels to have a clear understanding to the great importance of this strategic problem, to place this work on their agenda and to earnestly strengthen leadership over this work. He said: In the past 2 months, the provincial CPC committee has heard on two occasions reports on the situation of planned parenthood and has done some research. The provincial CPC committee and government have decided to convene a broadcast mobilization rally. The specific requirements of this work will be outlined at the broadcast mobilization rally.

JILIN'S QIANG XIAOCHU MEETS ARMY UNITY DELEGATES

SK280549 Changchun Jilin Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 27 Dec 82

[Text] On the evening of 27 December, leading comrades of the provincial and Changchun municipal organs, including Qiang Xiaochu, Zhang Gensheng, (Zhao Xiu), Yang Zhantao, Feng Yingkui and (Xin Jianlin); officers from the PLA units stationed in Changchun and the provincial military district, including (Zhu Dunfa), (Wang Qingyu), (Hou Degang), (Lu Liangyun), He Youfa and (Liu Jianbin); and responsible comrades from departments concerned visited our province's delegates who had just returned from the report meeting sponsored by the Shenyang PLA units on supporting the government and cherishing the people as well as supporting the army and giving preferential treatment to servicemen's families.

During the visit, they were briefed by Comrade (Hou Kai), deputy director of the provincial civil affairs department, on the grand occasion of the report meeting sponsored by the Shenyang PLA units.

Comrade Qiang Xiaochu extended a warm welcome and greeting to the province's delegates. He urged all delegates to make sustained efforts to continuously develop the achievement scored in the campaign of supporting the government and cherishing the people, as well as supporting the army and giving preferential treatment to servicemen's families and to further strengthen unity between the army and the government and between the army and the people so as to bring about a new level in the mutual support campaign across the province.

JILIN'S QIANG XIAOCHU ON PLANNED PARENTHOOD WORK

SK290230 Changchun Jilin Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 28 Dec 82

[Text] According to JILIN RIBAO, at a recent important meeting held by the provincial CPC committee, Qiang Xiaochu, first secretary of the provincial CPC committee, stressed the importance and urgency of a successful implementation of planned parenthood work.

He said: Planned parenthood is a basic policy of the nation. It is an extremely arduous task. We must strive to keep the national population under the 1.2 billion mark as of the year 2000. To achieve this target, we must bring the population growth rate down to 9.5 per thousand or less. Our province's 1981 population growth was 9.79 per thousand. At present, we are experiencing a relatively prolonged peak of births. Therefore, we can only strengthen the leadership over planned parenthood work and not slacken it even a little bit. Organizations in charge of planned parenthood work and their ranks of cadres can only be reinforced, not weakened. We must regard planned parenthood work as an important part of the five-stress and four-beauty campaign as well as the building of spiritual civilization. Efforts should be made to popularize the three-popularization education.

LIAONING'S GUO FENG AT MEETING OF INTELLECTUALS

SK260537 Shenyang Liaoning Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 25 Dec 82

[Excerpt] The provincial Trade Union Council convened a forum of intellectuals today in Shenyang. This forum is unprecedented in our province in the sense that it was sponsored by the provincial Trade Union Council. This makes the intellectuals feel they are really members of the working class. Leading comrades of the provincial CPC committee and government including Guo Feng, Li Huang, (Zhu Weiben), Chen Beichen and Zhang Zhiyuan attended the forum and spoke. Leading comrades of the provincial level departments concerned also attended the forum.

Zhao Qi, chairman of the provincial Trade Union Council, spoke. He said: Intellectuals are [word indistinct] of the state and part of the working class. From now on our trade unions should also become homes for intellectuals.

I wish all of you to, so to speak, spread wings like a roc and soar to great heights in the new year and make more contributions to the four modernizations of the motherland.

Attending the forum were representatives of intellectuals of all professions from the various municipalities and prefectures. Among them were professors, research fellows, engineers, doctors and literary and art workers. They spoke out freely at the forum and expressed their boundless love for the party and the motherland.

LIAONING DECIDES TO REMOVE INCOMPETENT MANAGERS

OW250840 Beijing XINHUA in English 0717 GMT 25 Dec 82

[Text] Shenyang, December 25 (XINHUA) -- Factory directors and party secretaries may resign or be removed from their posts if they have no ability to stop their enterprises from incurring operating losses, according to a joint decision made by the Liaoning provincial party committee and the local government.

The vacant posts will be filled up by competent people and those removed from office will not be permitted to hold the same posts in other units, the decision said.

Leaders who distinguish themselves in improving management will be awarded, and some even promoted to still higher posts.

BRIEFS

JILIN GRAIN OUTPUT -- With the implementation of the production responsibility system, Changling County, Jilin Province, reaped a bumper agricultural harvest this year despite being afflicted by a serious drought. Total county grain output reached 518.3 million jin, a record. This year some 52.9 percent of the production teams instituted the system of contracting responsibility with payment linked to output. QINGHAI GOVERNOR ZHANG GUOSHENG RESIGNS

BK300534 Xining Qinghai Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 29 Dec 82

[Excerpts] The 5th Qinghai Provincial People's Congress Standing Committee convened its 22d meeting on the morning of 29 December. The meeting adopted a resolution on accepting the resignation request of Governor Zhang Guosheng. At the same time, in accordance with the proposal of the Qinghai Provincial CPC Committee, the meeting adopted a decision that (Huang Jingbo) should be acting governor of the province.

On 12 December, Comrade Zhang Guosheng wrote a report to the provincial people's congress Standing Committee on resigning from the governorship. His report stated: The measures approved by the 12th party congress on reforming the leadership structure and cadre system constitute a great strategic policy decision. The cooperation of new and old cadres and replacement of old by new is a major affair related to the question of successors to the socialist cause. This is an extremely correct party reform decision, and I sincerely support it and will resolutely carry it out. I am now more than 70 years old. I request that my resignation from the Qinghai provincial governorship be approved.

Comrade (Huang Jingbo) spoke at the meeting. He declared that under the leadership of the provincial CPC Committee and people's congress Standing Committee and with the help of the comrades, he would unite and work with the cadres and the people of all nationalities to build Qinghai.

Chairman Zhaxiwangxu presided and spoke at the meeting. He said: Comrade Zhang Guosheng has worked in Qinghai for nearly 20 years and has made very great contributions to building Qinghai. Now he has responded to the party's call and withdrawn to work in the second line. All of us should learn from this spirit. Comrade (Huang Jingbo) is also an old comrade with relatively abundant work experience. In believe he will make his proper contributions to creating a new situation in the four modernizations in Qinghai.

Present at the meeting were provincial people's congress Standing Committee Vice Chairmen Wu Shengrong, Liu Chengyun, Xiarongyabu, Xie Gaofeng, Ma Wending, Shi Jinxian, Guo Ruozhen, Yang Wenjin, and Zhuojia, and members of the committee. Also present were leading comrades of the provincial CPC Committee Zhang Guosheng, (Huang Jingbo), and Song Lin. Present as observers were Vice Governors Yabulong, She Ling, Liu Shulin, Han Fucai and Yang Maojia; and provincial CPPCC Vice Chairmen Zhou Rong, (Cao Huairen) and (Zhan Yabin).

[Summary] The Ningxia Regional CPC Committee held a telephone conference on 29 December to arrange activities in the five stresses and four points of beauty during the New Year-Spring Festival period. Regional CPC Committee First Secretary Li Xuezhi made a speech in which he called on the region to launch propaganda in advocating four things and opposing four as outlined in the circular issued by the Central Committee propaganda department and other units.

Li Xuezhi also said: We must respond to the call of the Central Committee, State Council and Central Military Commission and whip up an upsurge of the drive to support the army and cherish the people.

PREMIER SUN ADDRESSES CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCE

OW291213 Taipei International Service in English 0100 GMT 27 Dec 82

[Text] Premier Sun Yun-hsuan said recently the central character of Chinese civilization fits the social and natural needs of the nation in the process of development as it seeks to solve its problems. He noted that through this essence we are able to obtain prosperity in a way that is acceptable to all Chinese people. Sun said that we must abide by the principles of democracy, which are the crystallization of all the thoughts and aspirations of the nation and the basic spirit on which the nation is founded.

Premier Sun was addressing the 17th constitutional research conference of the National Assembly. He also said when the nation is faced with an emergency we must be flexible enough to make changes in order to develop our democratic ideas and maintain political stability. He emphasized that the unification of China under the three principles of the people will surely be successful. And the dignity of the Constitution of the Republic of China must be preserved at all costs, according to Dr. Ku Cheng-keng. He told the committee on constitutional research at the National Assembly yesterday, as the 17th plenum of the committee officially got under way in Taipei. Speaking in his capacity as deputy chairman of the committee, Ku outlined the tasks of the plenum during the discussions that were held and which continue today.

In a speech entitled "Armed With the Constitution, Safeguarded By the Will of the People," Dr Ku said that these few individuals who have called for a new basic national law to replace the five-power Constitution are unwittingly or wittingly singing the tune of the Chinese Communist regime and aiding the united front tactics employed by that regime for the purpose of overthrowing the Government of the Republic of China.

Nevertheless, Ku said, the will of the vast majority of the people both here in Taiwan and overseas is solidly behind the government and the constitutional government [as heard]. He said the main purpose of the plenum is to study ways to coordinate the public opinion of all the political parties, religions, races and social groupings under the direction of the constitution and national reconstruction goals of the three principles of the people.

PREMIER SUN ON 1982, 1983 IN TV INTERVIEW

OW300349 Taipei CNA in English 0259 GMT 30 Dec 82

[Text] Taipei, Dec 30 (CNA) -- Premier Sun Yun-hsuan Wednesday asked people in this country to meet new challenges and harsh difficulties that will confront them in the coming year.

In an interview with the press on "Retrospect and Prospects," a year-end TV program jointly sponsored by the three television networks, TTV, CTV and CTS, the premier urged his countrymen to go all-out working on three specific areas in the next year: acceleration of economic recovery, preservation of social peace and tranquility and completion of the central parliamentary elections (legislators, Control Yuan members and national assemblymen).

In a general review of the past, he said 1982 was a year full of uphill struggles. But all those hardships were fortunately surpassed under the strong leadership of President Chiang Ching-kuo together with the strenuous efforts of the entire Chinese people at home and abroad.

Looking forward to the coming new year, the premier expected confrontations with numerous difficulties and new challenges, particularly in the speeding up of economic recovery, the maintenance of law and order and the smooth completion of the central parliamentary elections.

In further analysis, he noted that despite the continued global recession in the past year, investments made by foreign firms and overseas Chinese in this country rose by 24 percent over the preceding year. This reflects their overall confidence in the Republic of China on Taiwan. He urged businessmen and industrialists here to take positive steps in making further capital investments in a move to help an early recovery of the nation's economy.

On preserving law and order, he said the government will in the next year exert its utmost in the crackdown on rising crime. The premier urged the general public to observe law and order and help law enforcement officers maintain peace and tranquility in society.

Concerning the coming central parliamentary elections, the premier expressed hope that the forthcoming exercise at the ballot box will be an impartial, fair and clean one that would serve as examples of democracy. However, the degree of its success will depend on the performance of the voting public, he said.

At the same time, the premier took the opportunity during his TV appearance to convey his best wishes to his countrymen for a happy new year.

CHU FU-SUNG ON ACTIVE DIPLOMACY,' U.S. TIES

OW300356 Taipei CNA in English 0306 GMT 30 Dec 82

[Text] Taipei, Dec. 30 (CNA) -- Foreign Affairs Minister Chu Fu-sung Wednesday reaffirmed to safeguard the basic national interests with active diplomacy.

Reviewing the development of the world situation in the past year, Chu said that this nation will never enter into talks with the Peiping regime, adding that the endeavor of the Republic of China is to further strengthen the substantive ties of cooperation with other friendly nations around the world.

He said the basic structure of bipolar conflicts between the Free World and the communist bloc has not changed and that the Chinese Communists will continue to use a large sum of money in launching the united front tricks against this country.

Under the difficult circumstances of world economic recession and international uncertainty, the ROC has been able to maintain and expand its relations with the countries in Europe and the Asian-Pacific region, he said.

At present this nation has set up 14 trade offices in Western Europe, while 10 European countries have also established their offices here.

As to the Sino-U.S. relations, Chu said that cooperations in trade, culture, technology and other fields continue to make headway between the two countries during the past year.

The U.S. is now the biggest trading partner of this country, with business volume reaching U.S. dollars 14 billion, accounting for about one-fourth of this nation's total foreign trade.

However, the Peiping regime has not abandoned its attempt to force the U.S. to stop selling arms to the ROC and to recognize the Chinese Communist claim of sovereignty over Taiwan. But the U.S. has continued to refuse to submit to the Peiping regime's blackmail by reaffirming to sell arms to the ROC at the time when the so-called August 17 communique between Washington and Peiping was announced.

Chu stressed that the ROC, with its strategic position, prosperous economy and domestic stability, is not a nation without strength, and that it should play a more active role in the international community. He called on the people to assist the government in developing the total diplomacy with other countries around the world.

PRESIDENT RECEIVES PRC AIR FORCE DEFECTOR

OW300332 Taipei CNA in English 0248 GMT 30 Dec 82

[Text] Taipei, Dec. 30 (CNA) -- President Chiang Ching-kuo Wednesday received Major Wu Jung-ken at the presidential office.

Wu, former Chinese Communist Air Force MIG pilot, fled to freedom in South Korea last October. He was promoted to the rank of major in the Air Force of the Republic of China by the Chinese Government after he returned to Taipei.

President Chiang highly praised Wu for his wisdom and determination in seeking freedom in the motherland, and his determination to denounce communism and join the Air Force of Free China.

During the talks, President Chiang asked the major about his recent life here. The president urged him to read more books at his leisure to enrich his knowledge, thus enabling him to become a distinguished officer in uniform.

Major Wu, in response, said it was his great honor to be received by President Chiang. He said he was also excited about the encouragement and concern that President Chiang showed him.

He assured President Chiang that he will do his best to devote himself to destroy the Chinese Communists' tyrannical regime and to work for the final reunification of China through the three principles of the people.

SOVIET EMBASSY HOLDS CONCERT IN BEIJING

["HSIN WAN PAO dispatch: "Soviet Embassy Holds Concert -- Huang Hua, Qian Qichen and Others Attend"]

[Text] Beijing, 28 Dec -- Sinyavskaya Marchenko, Maerpeike [7456 1422 0160 4430], Weikeduoluofu [4850 0344 1122 5012 1133] and Silabajiangnike [2448 2135 1572 3068 1441 0844], famous soviet opera artists, gave a brilliant performance last night at a concert held by the Soviet Embassy for Chinese officials.

These famous artists have come to Beijing as guests of Shcherbakov, Soviet Ambassador to China. According to reports, a group of Chinese musicians also visited Moscow earlier this year as guests of Yang Shouzheng, Chinese Ambassador to the Soviet Union, and performed there.

Among the Soviet artists, soprano Sinyavskaya is this year's winner of the title of "People's Artist of the Whole Soviet Union." Her lovely singing voice and stirring performance won rounds of applause from the Chinese guests. She had to give several encores for the enthusiastic audience and also sang the Chinese folk song "Kangding Love Song" in Chinese.

Among the Chinese officials who attended the concert were Qian Qichen, vice minister of foreign affairs and chief Chinese delegate to the Sino-Soviet talks, and his wife, Lu Zhixian; Vice Minister of Culture Ma Jisheng, Director of the East European Affairs Department of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and also State Councillor Huang Hua and his wife He Liliang. Such public figures of Chinese cultural circles as Wu Zuqiang, Wang Kun, Guo Shuzhen, Guo Lanying, Zhao Qing, Yang Mo and Lei Jia also attended the concern last evening.

ZHANG AIPING CITED ON REPLACING OLD CADRES

HK280759 Hong Kong WEN WEI PO in Chinese 26 Dec 82 p 3

[Dispatch from Beijing: "Zhang Aiping Meets Hangzhou Military Officers, Urges the Old Comrades To Do Three Things"]

[Text] In his recent remarks at Hangzhou to the cadres of the Zhejiang Provincial Military District, Zhang Aiping, minister of national defense, earnestly urged old comrades to do three things in the present period when the old comrades are replaced by the new.

1. To select able and virtuous people. It is necessary to select those comrades who are really able and virtuous, who are in the prime of life and are competent at their jobs. We must attach importance to their ideological and political quality. This is what "virtuous" means. However, we must not neglect their ability, that is, their scientific and cultural level and their ability in management, organization and their ability to command.

2. To make way for the able and virtuous people. Since the old comrades have been working for the party for a long time, they certainly cherish a deep affection for the revolutionary cause. However, we must proceed in all cases from the interests of the party and the overall construction of the army.

3. Not to be jealous of the able and virtuous people. Since the young and middle-aged comrades are full of vigor and enthusiasm and have knowledge and plenty of guts, we must cheer them on in their achievements, enthusiastically encourage them and support their work so that they can score even greater achievements in the future. It is necessary to actively recommend able and virtuous people rather than being afraid of arousing suspicion.
